I am most sorry to say that Bob died 30 August 1982, after a short illness. Bob and I roomed together at Princeton during our sophomore, junior, and senior years, and we later married sisters so that our relationship was very close in succeeding years.

The Class of '39 leads off under the Elm Arch

After graduating from Princeton, Bob joined the Navy as an officer on an LCT in the Atlantic. After the war, he went to work for the investment banking firm of Dillon Reed, becoming a partner in a few years. He was responsible for most of the municipal bond financing undertaken by the firm, and was very active in the financing of the New York Port Authority and the financing for various bridge and public works throughout the United States. He retired from Dillon Reed some 4-5 years ago, and settled in Florida at the Village of Golf in Palm Beach. He is survived by his widow, Mary Norton Christie, and three children, Jean Gestell, Robert E. Christie IV, and Neil Christie, as well as ten grandchildren.

Reunion Notes: Hi Girls! This is your substitute reporter, Bill Kaiser, writing under a spousal arrangement — that means I write this column while your Class Secretary is attending the Abbot tea and doing all the other things Class Secretaries should do on Reunion Weekend which was great. As Mary Woodman O'Hagan said, "A fantastic experience — everyone is so friendly." She won first prize at the Alumni/ae meeting for travelling the greatest distance (South Africa), just a tad further than the next attendee from Taiwan. The PA boys decided that Abbot should lead (you knew that all along, eh, girls?), so Mary and Barbara Bellows Kaiser carried the "1939" banner in the alumni/ae parade. There were two Class cocktail parties (one at the spacious home of David and Sumida Cobb), an all school dinner under the elms, several interesting seminars, and a special 1939 dinner-dance on Saturday night at the Lanam Club in Andover.

Several alumnae unable to attend, sent messages which were passed on to all reunion participants of approximate '39 vintage. We heard from Carolyn Fisher Cadman (youngest son, Frederick, graduating from Suffolk Law School) and Kiki Skinner McCanna (tied up at Dartmouth's commencement). Connie Smith Templeton (daughter visiting her from Oregon) sent a picture of her husband and herself. Audrey Rugg Shanaberg reported that she is remodeling a summer home in Granville, Ohio, while GINNY RICE KNELLER warned that blankets and sweaters might be in order. But you know New England weather — it hit 92° all three days! Thanks so much for your responses. You missed a super weekend with the Andover campus never looking better — take that from this correspondent, a real outsider, from Deerfield Academy '39!

I wish to alert all my classmates to the fact that in 1985 we will have our 45th class reunion. Please mark your calendar for 7-9 June so you can join the group celebrating this important anniversary. I will contact each of you and ask that you reply to my request for information.

Mary Spaulding Powell and her husband were part of the Virginia Delegation to the Treaty of Paris Bicentennial celebration in Paris in September '83. A really gala occasion. Their son Bolling III is a professional photographer in Boston. Son James Spaulding is in law school in Williamsburg, VA at Marshall-Wythe.

Our class extends its sympathy to Connie Cross Robbins whose sister, Frances Cross Jones died 27 February 1984 after a brief illness. Frances, Abbot Class of '39, lived in Morristown, TN. Connie is Mrs. Roger Robbins, 1341 South St., Geneva, Illinois 60134.

I thought you might be interested in some class statistics. 195 men graduated in June of 1942. As of April 1984, 27 classmates have died, 21 classmates are missing, i.e. no known address, and 5 have requested they be considered inactive. Reducing the graduated figure by the three groups mentioned, gives 145 active members at present. In fact we have 146 active members, since Bruce Calder currently listed as the class of '41 has requested being listed as a member of our class. He entered Andover as a junior in 1938 and was scheduled to graduate in June 1942. Instead, he left Andover in the spring of 1941 and went to Yale. Andover listed him in the class of '41 even though his classmates were in '42. I have not heard from Bruce directly, but as of August 1983 he was President of Bruce Calder, Inc., oil and gas operations, in Dallas, Texas. Welcome to the fold, Bruce; we are greatly pleased to have you with us.

A recent article in the sports pages of the New York Times informs us that on 6 May 1984 on Princeton's Lake Carnegie, John Biglow, 26-year-old Yale grad and son of Loosh and Nancy Biglow of Seattle, WA, won won the singles sculling race at the U.

S. Olympic Trials, thus becoming the first oarsman chosen for the team. We join Loosh and Nancy in wishing all success to John in the Olympic games this summer in Los Angeles.

Bill and Marcie Saunders will have achieved a notable double by the end of 1984. On 13 May 1984 their youngest son Ned, graduated from New England College in Henniker, NH. Thus all of their six children, four daughters and two sons, have now completed college. On 15 September 1984 youngest daughter, Lee, will marry Stuart Gaw at Bill's home in Darien, CT. With this wedding, all four of Bill's daughters will have married. He and Marcie currently enjoy six grandchildren. Bill continues as Vice-President with J. P. Stevens Textile Co. in New York City.

John Macintyre writes from Dillon, CO where he and his wife live in a pre-cut cabin which they built themselves, complete with wood stove for heat, indoor plumbing and electricity. John and his family take full advantage of the good skiing available in their area. The U. S. Ski Team was training for the Winter Olympics at a nearby resort and John's two daughters raced against some of the members.

The American Institute of Architects in Washington, DC announced that on 6 May 1984 John A. Carter of Nashua, NH will be invested as a member of the College of Fellows of the American Institute of Architects. Fellowship is a lifetime honor bestowed for notable contributions to the profession. Carter is the first active practitioner in the State of New Hampshire to become a Fellow. He is presently a trustee of the Nashua, NH Foundation. He also serves on the board of Eaglebrook School, Deerfield, MA, for which he has done the dining facilities and other major projects. His firm has received nine national and state design awards and has currently under construction the Lane Library in Hampton, NH and the additions and alterations to the science building at St. Paul's School in Concord, NH. We congratulate John for this fine professional recognition and honor.

Carter S. Bacon writes us from Coopersville, Michigan that his son Carter, Jr. '68 and wife produced Carter S. Bacon III on 18 March 1983. Congratulations grandpa!

Bill Bauman, M.D. writes from South Salem, NY, that as time passes he appreciates friendships begun at PA more and more. He and Dr. Bob Hall, a neighbor, got together recently for a superb lunch at a local restaurant. Bob, practicing psychiatry in Pound Ridge, NY, is a country squire. Bill corresponds annually with Martin Horner and believes him healthy enough to mix martinis. All expressed their sadness over Obie's untimely death.

A welcome note from Henry W. See of Wayzata, MN states that he is now Senior V.P. of Marketing of Apache Corp. Only one of three children married and no grandchildren yet, "although my golf game looks like I should have great-grandchildren." Hank's wife, Gail's bookstore continues to grow and she is on the board of the American Booksellers Association. Nate Cartmell passed on to me a note from Elliott Vose informing us that on 11 October 1983 he was married to the former Ann Cogswell Murphy of New York and has inherited three fine step-daughters ages 24, 23, and 18. For the past eight years Ellie has been working in the international side of Grumman Corp. living in NYC part-time and the rest on Long Island's East End trying unsuccessfully to play golf.

Finally, I must share with you part of a letter Winfield Smith wrote to Obie last year regarding the death of our classmate, Bill Hessey in 1975, which has not been reported. "Survivors were his wife, Peggy (Ehmann), and two daughters, Mrs. Andrea Heintz of Mandovi, WI and Miss Pamela Hessey of Sarasota, FL. After World War II I heard Bill had settled down to a first marriage and life in the English Dept. of some place like Dartmouth. All that came apart, apparently, and when I ran into him in the early 1970s he was co-owner and operator of Mr. Mike's bar, a neighborhood and student hangout on Chicago Avenue near the downtown Loyola campus here, and was about to remarry.

It's interesting how many people who found themselves in Chicago in the 60s and 70s decided that what their neighborhood needed most was a decent bar modeled along Eastern lines. It still does, but not quite so badly, thanks to the splendid missionary work of many people with extensive experience in the better watering spots along the Eastern seaboard." Many thanks to Win for his insightful research and writing. Many thanks to all of you who have corresponded since the last issue went to press. Best wishes for a healthy summer and please write — it is great to hear from you.

Gretchen Roemer Gayton writes, "My husband, Fordyce, died in July '82 after a five-year battle against cancer. I have kept busy with Family-Happy Hawn, Riverdale, NY; son Fordyce, Ft. Betty Jean England Olsen writes, "Bought a condo at Nob Hill Court. Teaching visually impaired in San Francisco Unified School District. Daughter Luellen graduated Cal Berkeley with honors in science; M.S. in Environmental Health. Now working and living in Toulouse, France after two years in Paris. Son Ted working and going to college. Love living in San Francisco where I've joined Andover/West. Please phone and visit when you're in S.F. The editor requests brevity as this is the reunion issue. That is easy as not much news comes my way. How about a little help for the September issue?

From Grand Rapids, Michigan comes word from Mike Keeler that he has sold the family business and retired but keeps busy as the director of a bank and an art museum. Mike would like to own one of Andover's own Frank Stella's, but had to settle for an Alexander Calder.

Peter Pinkham was shown in the New Hampshire Union Leader seated at the piano with a serious look and playing a selection from his new musical, "OOPS." Pinkham has worn a variety of occupational hats: former owner of the Eastern Slopes Inn, realtor, selectman, originator of free style skiing, and occasional writer of songs and plays. According to the newspaper he just always enjoyed the creative. I believe it.

From the missing person bureau a note from Jim Ennis, for many years the night manager at P. J. Clarke's in New York. Although it is an "in" spot, Jim doesn't see too many from the class, but Fred Jordan stopped in with the late Ernie Obermeyer '42 and Bill Mellor used to be a regular. Jim saw Dick O'Leary at Dick's liquor store in Hartsdale, NY a while ago and reported little change except for Dick's pure white hair which we hope is not the result of too many hold-ups.

From the telephone: Decius Veasey in Haverhill, MA, my old home town, reports that he has sold his nursing homes and is content with a life of eating, drinking and tennis. He also says that Haverhill has risen from last to third from last in the list of worst cities to live in in the USA. Dick, why not step up your quality of life with a move to Lawrence? Nick Taintor of West Hartford, CT tells me that he is Chairman of the West Hartford Taxpayers Association, a time consuming volunteer post, and he is also on the Investment Committee for the Connecticut Institute for the Blind. Nick has a third unusual avocation, but unfortunately it is not for publication. Contact Nick direct for more information.

Bardwell Smith, Dean of College, Carlton College, Northfield, MN, could not be reached by phone. Reason, he has taken a year's leave of absence and is overseas. Nice deal. Hank Simpson from Huntingdon Valley, PA is the Managing Director, or in other words the chief honcho of an outfit in Philadelphia called Tasty Baking Co. which apparently is the largest sweet baker in Philly. Hank, an ex-newspaperman on the Bulletin, especially recommends his Butterscotch Krinter cake. If you write him, who knows, you might get a freebie. Hank will retire shortly to become a short story writer. Good luck.

Sad to say, I close with news of the death of a classmate. Bob Daley died in February of this year in Milton, MA. Bob was a teacher of classics and modern languages at Milton Academy. He is survived by his wife, Jennie-Lee, and two children. Donations may be made to Milton Academy, Milton, MA 02186. The class extends its sympathy to his wife and family.

Reunion Notes: The report of the 1944 40th Reunion was received too late to be included in this issue, but will be printed in the Fall Bulletin. I have just inherited this job, so I haven't much input yet, but will start with my own update. Have seven children (five mine, two my wife's). Own an advertising agency in my hometown of Louisville, KY ($8,000,000 in billings). My main interest outside the agency is Shakespeare in the Park, which remains only one of three free festivals in the country.

Did hear from some of you when the notice went out. Arthur Wensinger's only comment was astonishment that forty years had already passed since we left Andover. Frank Zagorski retired from the Air Force in 1979 and is now with Webster University in Colorado Springs. Donald Sterling is assistant to the publisher of the Oregonian in Portland, Oregon. He has a daughter at Barnard and a son at Whitman College in Walla Walla Washington. About as far apart as you could get them. Pete Stevens also has seven children in almost the same proportion (five his and two theirs). Is a professional fund raiser. Wife is practicing psychologist. They live in Bucks County (lovely country!). Ed Hayes is also on the West Coast, in Portland, OR, and heads up CWS Corp. there. Daughter is on a three-year tour of Paris with lawyer husband, and son teaches at the Lakeside School in Seattle.

Dwight Rockwell is in New York doing something that has his name on the door. He tells me that Bidgood is in Danville, VA and Peter Roome is in Stamford with Bache. I will not be there with you in June as you will have figured out by the time you read this. I'm sorry about that, but would love to hear from you.

And that goes especially for my old roomie Dan Carroll who is counselling businessmen out of Ann Arbor and Chicago. At least I think that's what the Carroll Group does.

Editor's note: In the '44 Class Notes in our spring edition we listed Whitney Stevens as Chairman of the Board of Burlington Industries. He is, of course, Chairman of the Board of J. P. Stevens & Company. We sincerely regret the error.

Reunion Notes: "Thanks for the Memories" (on key)." I quote from a note left by Marge Travis Atwood on the "Abbot floor" of Bishop Hall when she slipped away on Sunday morning at 5 a.m. Marge, along with Molly Hubbard Mercer, Betty Reid Buzby, Betty Colson Tierney, Gil Rich Ferguson, Edgar and I, spent two sweltering nights in the dorm during our reunion. Other returnees weren't so brave. Fritz Lange Dempsey, Elinor Cahill Georgopulo, Nancy Nicholas Wengert and husband Harlan, opted for air conditioned motels. Can't imagine why. It was so hot in Boston that weekend, that the railroad tracks buckled. Aagot Hinrichsen Stambaugh and husband, Stam, Edie Walker Filliettaz and spouse, Robert, Shirley Rhodes Lowe, Charlotte Trow Young and Charlotte Leland had friends, relatives, or homes nearby. Pat Damon Niswander could only be with us for Saturday's picnic lunch and Betty Bertuccio Martuscello for dinner. But it was wonderful they came.

Julia Tavares Alvarez was the only no-show and we were all disappointed. As a U.N. Ambassador, her insight into Central America would have been much appreciated, particularly during the Foreign Affairs Seminar.

Abbot '44 was superbly represented

It was a memorable weekend and many thanks go to Charlotte Leland for help in planning. I came back with many notes on our lives — the joys, sorrows, successes and failures which were few. Those of us who returned seemed to feel great affection for one another and Abbot, and great regret over not having seen one another more often. We were and are a small class totaling 42.

Frankly, being with PA men cut in on our time, and we thought in the future we should plan one dinner and lunch on our own. We needed Miss Hearsey and a John Paul Jones to mix us up.

Fritzie Dempsey (a social worker) and Shirley Lowe won the long distance award, coming from Huntsville, Alabama and Houston, Texas, respectively. Fritzie still has those gorgeous eyes and warm heart. Thank you Ellie for persuading her to come.

Betty Colson Tierney has been working for the Harvard Law Fund for five years and commuting to Marblehead, MA. Marge Travis Atwood had a whirlwind tour and lunch with Miss Baker in Bath, England, last February. This nonogenarian is as spritely and knowledgeable as ever. Edie Walker Filliettaz and her husband spend four months in St. Simons each year. Although Edie graduated from Farmington, her loyalty is to Abbot. Molly Hubbard Mercer, President of our class from '40-'44, has just completed three years as President of the Auxillary at Metropolitan Hospital in Rocky River near Cleveland. Still a leader. Our guest of honor on Saturday night was Miss Tucker. She forgetteth nothing and made us all feel particularly welcome.

At our class meeting we discussed the Abbot campus, much of it now in disrepair. The Trustees are seeking solutions to its disposition having made the decision not to sell it. There was a consensus to express to the Trustees our hope for a more useful and socially conscious recycling. One thought was to create a retirement community similar to Pennswood in Pennsylvania near the George School. Such a facility would be available to retired faculty and alumni. One final note: Marion Stevens Harris finally wrote from Darien. She would have joined us but they had made plans months ago to visit friends in Portugal. "Sorry to be so silent all these years. . . My husband is general counsel for Pitney-Bowes. . . two children are in teaching and research and one in marketing. I am a housewife and enjoy volunteering, etc." A full life as many of us know. One more final note: Our son Malcolm will be taking his 14½ shoes to Andover next fall for a post-graduate year.

The Bulletin is calling for these notes, so I'll save some news for next issue.

I received the spring edition of the Bulletin Saturday 12 May which jogged my lame brain to look up the deadline for these notes which was the day before! It's reminiscent of an old habit we all had — postponing the exam cram until the night before. Anyhow I begged an extension so here goes.

I received a newsy note from Don Dunbar of the Exeter faculty. Don and Dot spent a year in Australia on a teaching exchange in Melbourne. "It was a great experience — drought for over two years followed by floods, brush fires, an unbelievable dust storm" (sounds great so far) — "The Americas Cup — attended the grand finals in Aussie Rules football, and called the lines in 25 matches at Kooyoran in the Australian Open (tennis). We got around from Sydney to Perth at Christmas time and Melbourne to Darwin in May including climbing Ayers Rock. Life seems tame now, but we are building a home just five miles from Exeter." Surprisingly they didn't run into Reg Collier.

Talked to Ed Mead this a.m. in Erie, PA. Mugsie is just fine and reports the family is grown up — one son at Vanderbilt — no grandchildren yet. He was with Otis Chandler '46 at a newspaper convention in Washington last week. He plans to be back for the 40th and is serving on the attendance committee for our party. Brother Jim '47 is out of brokerage and into money management in New York City — commutes to home in DC on the weekends. Ed ran into our classmate Dick Scobell who is living in Fairview, PA also.

Bill Saltonstall, Dick Welch, Jack Thorn-dike and Bill Moore have agreed to act as a committee on arrangements for the fortieth reunion. They all live near the Hill and are enthusiastic about having another memorable weekend.

I have asked Pete Hetzler, Lee Bergstrom, Ed Mead and Reg Collier to spearhead the attendance drive and hope you will make their task easier by setting aside the weekend of 7-9 June 1985 for a visit back to Andover.

The plan, will be to ask as many old friends from the faculty to join us as is possible. Most of our activities will be co-ed, but there will be special events for our ladies as well.

We're all getting a little "long in the tooth" at this stage of the game; so let's not put it off 'til next time, let's all zero in on early June '85 for a real reunion!

I'm sorry to report the death in the spring of 1983 of Sherman Fitzsimons. Sherm was a bachelor and was survived by his mother to whom we extend our sincere sympathies.

The school has asked for help in locating the following classmates: Elmer Adams, Lucius Anderson, Clark Bramwell, Fred Bushnell, Ray Hurley, Gordon Lacy, Harry Moss, Brian Owens, Norm Sper and Walcott Younger. Can you give a clue?

John Blake is still laboring in the vineyards for the Alumni Fund and is trying valiantly to raise our participation each year. The 1985 drive represents an important milestone for our class; so let's give John an extra boost for his efforts.

Write if you get work (or even if you don't).

She is also delighted that she became a grandmother for the first time when daughter Bonnie had a girl in September '83. Her eldest son is a dermatologist in San Francisco, son Neale lives in Pasadena, Chris is a travel agent in San Francisco and their youngest, Beth, is a junior at U.C. San Diego.

Congratulations to Esther Bufferd Watstein who has been appointed Director of Alumnae and Public Relations of the Katharine Gibbs School, Inc. Barbara Beecher Carl's husband retired from the book business enabling them to spend last February and half of March traveling in Australia and New Zealand. They really liked the people and the life style "down under."

As reported in the last Bulletin, my youngest daughter applied for admission to Andover. Happily, she was accepted and will enter as a junior in the fall of '84. As a parent, I'll be able to keep you all up-to-date on what's happening on campus.

When you have finished shaving, towed down, almost dried off, and look into that "ceiling-to-floor reflector" — absolutely "Harry Starkers" — do you look 40 years older than in 1946? Of course not!

Less than 22 months from this reading Martin and I, and Dick Phelps and Wally Pratt and all the old reunion regulars will be waiting for your arrival (return) to PA to join a surprisingly large and congenial clutch of beautiful classmates assembled to celebrate survival — 1986. Mark it down, and try to come back for your 40th reunion. I for one, shall guarantee you will have a wonderful weekend with Kodak impressions galore!

The success of the '46 share of the '83-'84 alumni fund drive is in no small way attributed to Begien's support staff. What we owe Bill Dahling (Detroit), Bob Wexler (Sutton Place), P.K. Fisher (The Grand Banks), Dick Phelps (the Catskills, Kitty Hawk and Catalina), Ed Jones (The Bowery), and Waldo Pratt (Greater Boston and the Harbor), will never be properly assessed — but, it's probably much more than a few hundred G's!

P.K. and Audrey of the above lot, are retired year round in Islesford, ME where they love isolation and their overlook to the fields and the Atlantic from their 1831 Cape farmhouse. The P.K.'s have four grandchildren, one of whom should be a "first" for our class.

At the annual phonathon in NYC, I loved chatting with a bunch of you guys and thanks for your generosity. I chatted with Doug Shaw (New Canaan), Cy Heard (Sewickley), Parker (on the Cape), Anderson (Gold Coast), Mellor (Scottsdale), Wheeler (Mystic), and Johnny Dupree (Cinci), among many others, not including Ed Jones. Ed was at the Williams Club the night before.

News from all over that you have been holding your breath for and . . . O.J. Anderson was honored by the senior class, of '83 of St. Edward's School, Vero Beach, when they dedicated their yearbook to John, noting his "dedication, love, enthusiasm, and sensitivity" as an instructor of economics.

Sheila and I endured the ho-hum performance of the lackluster herd in the Wood Memorial on the great screen of the Yale Club with anything but a lackluster Heard, in town for a brief stopover during one of Cy's numerous "swings" through the East. He was great. Said he had enjoyed seeing Arden Sperry one evening. Sheila, Kyle and I were so pleased to have Cyrus join us for Easter dinner after Cy had done his strolling down Fifth in the Easter Parade.

A few weeks later I had lunch with John Friday. The "turtle" is deep in fine art. He is the marketing/finance honcho of a new business venture called The Museum Fund. They market contemporary art of top quality to corporations. If you are ready to rotate your Rockwell reprints or otherwise redesign your corporate foyer, ring John up. He'll be there in a flash.

Bill Pollard has taken early retirement from Reliance Insurance where he was CEO. Good luck, Bill!

The Mel Kendrick sculpture, "Behind the Cross," that we gave to the Addison in memory of Lindsay Bradford, was on loan for two months to the Museum of Modern Art last spring.

Bill Dahling, President of the Great Lakes Council, presided at a meeting of the Upper Mid-West Regional Council. Good turnout for Ted Sizer's provocative and incisive remarks on his A Study of High Schools. This was held at Macalaster College.

His current work is on the social and legal response to genetic engineering. In a recently published article concerning genetics and the law he has written, "Although ethics and law follow development, there are no ready answers to the questions we know must be addressed. There are two perspectives thoughtful persons may maintain. First, to understand the promise of the new and the cost of the decision it offers. One may constantly strive to see beyond terminology and statistics to persons whose lives are at stake. . . feel their hope at conception, their anguish at decision and their despair at birth or abortion." Secondly, he writes, "One can neither comprehend the devotion of researchers to invent the new or fathom the passionate resistance of others to its use. Both researcher and critic are responding to their perception of the proximity of ultimate control of a biological destiny which these new capabilities portend. The researcher marvels at each new opportunity science and technology offer, bearing hope of a better life. The critic objects either because man should not aspire to such proximity or because he believes that these are violations of nature risking possible devastating results for humankind."

I am still sitting under my mail slot waiting for news of you to drift through. "Mo" Jones, bless her, sent me some old news from Lee Booth Witwer which will be even older when you see it. From Lee, "The highlights of '83 were one new grandson and one fabulous trip to Taiwan to see Sally and Jim Liley (my sister and her husband). He heads our delegation there." Mo's new news is that Jeremy's Little League "is the hardest thing I've had to cope with so far as a single parent!"

With the "world class" runners distracted by the Olympics I am going to be working hard at trying to win some road races around here. If I break a record or a leg I'll have something to write about next time.

Hang by your thumbs and write!

Reunion Notes: Our 35th Reunion was highlighted by the now traditional, and increasingly outstanding, performances of banjo players Stu Ingersoll and Artie Doran. Artie's voice has improved with age (was there another way it could have gone?) and Stu added luster to the setting with his newly acquired, mint condition 1929 Ford station wagon. It is in perfect running order (provided Mort Collins and I are around to push it fast enough to enable it to start) and does 45 miles per hour on the Interstates. Stu's wife, Jane, wins the patience award for her role as good shepherd in the follow-up car.

Other attendees included Bruce and Nancy Bates, Mac Beatty (long distance prize winner from Portland, OR), Derwood and Johanna Chase, John Chittick, Zvi and Debby Cohen, Mort Collins and Janet Bradley; Federal District Court Judge Peter Dorsey and Connie, Howie and Edith Finney, Neil Flanagan, Dick Foxwell, Peter Grant and daughter Deidre now living in Boston and working in Andover in the home decorating field, Don Goss, Clem and Maria Hastie, Bob and Maria Hattemer, Don Husted, Aldie and Joan Johnson, Lou and Kathy Kane, Duncan and Jean Kidd, Alan and Marianne Lazarus, Harmon and Betty Leete, Buddy Linn, who finished strongly (he lapped everyone in the class of '34) in the 2.2 mile, all alumni class run held in 95 degree heat and Lynn and daughter Amy, Fred McDougal, Frank and Julia Moore, John Muldowny and son David, Ed Packard, Ben Potter, Neil Rolde, Bones Spencer, Dave and Harriet Swenson and Ted and Connie Torrance. Returning for the first time was Dick Collins, whose Andover High School track teams are perennial participants in the New England High School Championships. Dick's team won this year as it did in 1970.

Barry Phelps interrupted his round-the-world trip to stop by for lunch on Saturday. He no longer has the time or energy to devote to being class agent and requests release. We are certainly indebted to Barry for his tireless efforts and fantastic results over these many years, but his resignation leaves a large void. We need volunteers to pick up the load — one volunteer to be a coordinating agent, many volunteers to each solicit twenty to twenty-five classmates, and one volunteer as the Non Sibi agent to handle potentially large gifts. Please contact Connie LeMaitre, Director of Annual Giving, in the next month or so if you can help us out.

Finally, our most grateful thanks to Jim Messing, Reunion Chairman, and his wife, Ellen, and Ed and Margaret Smith and the other classmates who so ably ran the reunion. Their enthusiasm and energy made it a rewarding weekend for all.

We missed all of you who were not able to attend, but look forward to visiting with you five years hence.

I have news from the worlds of politics, art, books, business, education, and sport.

John Havelock appears to be the unopposed Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate from Alaska. John reports that, as he used to write home, "I'm fine but I could use some money."

Ivan Chermayeff's exhibition "Works and Process" opened 27 April at the Addison Gallery and will run to 17 June. The opening invitation reminds me of the elegant divider pages Ivan did for the 1950 Pot Pourri. The exhibition, according to the Addison, "combines a rigorous examination of the artist's thinking and working methods with a presentation of completed works of art."

A number of members of 1950 helped the Addison Gallery Campaign go over the top with more than $5 million. Allan B. Stone was on the Campaign Executive Committee and Edmund B. Thornton was on the Major Gifts Committee. A member of the Committee for the 50th and the Special Gifts Committee, William M. Drake, Jr. also served as Chicago Area Chairman, while Paul B. Kopperl was Connecticut Area Chairman. Many of us also contributed to the Memorial Fund for Pat Morgan, whose inspired teaching largely accounts for 1950's lively interest in the visual arts.

After teaching history for several years at St. Mark's School, Dr. Caleb R. Woodhouse this year became Chairman of the History Department at Worcester Academy, where John Bloom PA '54 is headmaster. Caleb, Martha and their children live in Little Compton, RI, where he has done some tennis coaching, served as vice president of the local PTA, and continues to work on a textbook history of Europe from the Roman Empire to the French Revolution.

In 1978, after several years as Associate Dean at California State University, Long Beach, Professor Charles W. Austin returned to full-time teaching in mathematics. Three of their children having graduated from Stanford, Charlie and Carol marked their youngest's graduation in 1983 by summering in Spain. Their son David is doing graduate work in mathematics at Yale, Tom is an engineer for NASA, and John has joined the Navy's nuclear power program.

Another major supporter of American education, Francis T. Lombardi, reports from Syracuse that he now has six children in college and private schools. Alan and Nikki Tool's son Edward graduated from Yale in 1983, with a major in architecture. J. Erick Mack's oldest son graduated from Stanford in 1983, his next son and daughter are at the University of California at Berkeley, and his youngest, Peter, is still at home. Erick is now Vice President of the Geothermal Division of Union Oil of California.

Last winter in San Francisco I had dim sum with my Andover and Yale roommate, John A. Kohler II, at the Yank Sing in the North Beach section where John lives and works. John manages his investments (with enough real estate to put him in the rentier class), writes plays, and does occasional Hollywood script-writing.

From a separate sept of the Kohler clan I have a report from Walter J. Kohler III that he and his brother Peter (PA '52) operate their own machinery and manufacturing firm, Kohler General Corporation, in Sheboygan Falls, Wisconsin. The firm caters to the woodworking and plastic industries, which have been slow, but Wally is optimistic about the economic outlook.

Elsewhere in the world of commerce and industry, Norman S. Matthews was recently promoted to Executive Vice President of Federated Department Stores, which takes him to Cincinnati, Ohio. After six years in the savings bank industry, John S. Whinston last July became Real Estate Appraisal Consultant to Manhattan Life Insurance Co., a company with $850 million in assets, for whom he negotiates and appraises mortgage loans on large commercial properties.

On the sporting scene, Philip A. Brooks writes "It's tougher to get into shape each year, but I still enjoy high altitude skiing in the Rockies."

Last fall Ralph Blum published The Book of Runes: A handbook for the Use of an Ancient Oracle: The Viking Runes (St. Martin's, $19.95 with a set of ceramic rune stones). The Washington Post's reviewer identified Ralph as an anthropologist, novelist and founder of the New Oracle Institute, headquartered in Hawaii, which will send you a quarterly newsletter on developing rune lore for a $5 membership fee. "If oracles were relevant for Socrates and Julius Caesar," the same reviewer concluded, "perhaps they have something to say to us."

If you haven't read Nora Johnson's book, The Two of Us, you still have a treat coming. It's an entertaining and well-written novel — funny yet full of insight into sibling and parental relationships.

Lee Flather Edwards has been a busy woman since 1950. After raising a son and two daughters, she returned to school, graduating from Brown University in 1969. In 1976, she graduated from Andover-Newton Theological School and for the past five years, she has been the minister of The United Congregational Church in Little Compton, RI. Her husband, Charles, commutes to Providence where he practices law. Lee reports that she actually went to our 30th reunion in 1980 and was the only Abbot alumna there!

Betsy Goodspeed Fellner has lived in New Canaan, Connecticut since 1960. Her husband is with IBM and Betsy has worked for a doctor for twenty years. The Fellners are great boating enthusiasts and are counting the days now until they can get their boat into Long Island Sound for the summer.

A wonderful letter came from Gette Davis Ferrante a couple of months ago. She and her husband were divorced in 1979; Gette still lives in the same house she's been in since 1957, but is anticipating a move soon because a highway is planned to go through her property. Her seven (!) children are all prospering. One son is marrying in June and the twenty-year-old "baby" is at Rutgers.

Please write and share your news. We all love to hear from our classmates.

Sorry for the hiatus. We will try not to let it happen again.

Frank Yatsu is now the Chairman of Neurology at the U. of Texas Medical School at Houston. I got lost trying to follow the trials and tribulations of Tony Quinton as he tried to anticipate when that fellow in the White House was going to zig and when he was going to zag in Central America. Tony has now left Managua after a two-year stint as our Ambassador. Doug Adkins was married in September to Rapeepun Jaissard in Phillipston, MA. His note contained a great deal of information about Phillipston and the church he was married in, but none about the bride or himself. Win Adkins, who has been on the board of YMCA of Greater New York for many years, went on a three week trip to China as a guest of the Chinese government to try to reestablish relations between the Y's of the two countries. He saw Billy Lee in San Francisco on the way out. Ron Ansin was sworn in last August as Massachusetts State Commissioner of Commerce and Development. Ron lives in Harvard, MA, and is president of Anwelt Corp., a footwear manufacturing firm in Fitchburg. Everett MacAskill is a retired naval officer living somewhere in the state of Washington.

My two older children spent a delightful evening with Steve Yamamoto and his family in Tokyo last summer. I am sorry I do not have room to print in toto. Steve's letters about raising his children to think for themselves in a culture where obedience to parents is the norm and where teaching students to learn "how to be" rather than "how to do" is the exception.

Last week Jerry Lasley left a message with my secretary that he was in the middle of a take-over fight, and going crazy and has no other news.

I will become President of the North Carolina Bar Association in June of this year, so that I will be doing a lot of traveling and shaking a lot of hands.

Let us hear from some of you who have "disappeared."

Early in May I spoke to Shelia Swenson Weil in Rutherford, NJ, and we covered our lives over the last three decades. I have not seen her since our year together on Miss Tucker's corridor. After graduating from Connecticut College, Shelia went on for some graduate work before starting a professional opera singing career. Early in the 1950s she won the Griffith Award. She then moved into lighter work, "Green Willow," by Frank Loesser, "Ginger," and then "Camelot," from August 1960-62 in New York City. Congratulations, Shelia for your work in our musical world.

In '61 she married Wayne whom she had met several years before through work. He was connected to the creative side of an advertising firm. After their marriage they settled down and had several children. The youngest has been accepted by early decision to his father's college, Dartmouth, this fall.

Now that the children have grown up she has done some television advertising and sings for organizations in the nearby area. Shelia said recently she was elected president of the Womans Club of Rutherford, a position her mother held back in the early 50s. Since their home is only 20 minutes from New York City I hope to see her in the near future. Please note the correction of her address as printed in the latest Andover Alumni Directory: Shelia Swenson Weil, 139 Woodland Avenue, Rutherford, NJ 07070.

Does anyone else like the idea of meeting in NYC for lunch — our 1951 class reunion? There are quite a few of us nearby, and I am open for suggestions.

I spoke to Ruth Denoyelles Diefenbach early one morning before she left for work. Ruth is now an independent fashion consultant which she loves! Wish I had asked more info so that I could let you know where she works. She said they have three grandchildren. Her husband, Bob, is a '48 graduate of Andover.

Our daughter Sybil AA '71 remarried back in February of '82 to Paul Oakes. They live nearby at 6 East Lake St., Skaneateles, NY. Sybil works for her father here in Syracuse. It's a wiring device company, Pass & Seymour Inc. Paul is with General Electric.

Begin with a pithy, rhetorical mid-life question from Harris Faigel: "The kids are off in college, and the dog died last summer; that's supposed to mean that 'life' has begun. So where is it?"

Add that Earle Taylor of Litchfield, CT, has been appointed to the Board of Directors of CONN SAVE, the state's non-profit, comprehensive program of residential energy inspections. Earle has been with Northeast Utilities for 23 years and presently is their Director of Consumer Research and Load Forecasting.

Applaud Tony Fisher's role in commissioning Morton Gould to produce a new work in honor of the composer's 70th birthday. Gould's Quotations received its World Premier with the New York Choral Society in Carnegie Hall last January. Tony and Beth have cruised the Caribbean and the Mediterranean this past year; their children Madison and Morgan are active athletes, musicians, and students.

Remain intrigued by Tom Jensen's mystifying associations with the Baker Street Irregulars and last year's American Chemical Society conference where Tom gave a paper on the unusual defense raised at a trial for elicit drug manufacture; a highly ingenious young man claimed to be making human interferon (but failed to convince the jury).

Share the fascinating letters from Suzy and Steve Charnas, as Steve enjoys a year's sabbatical from his Albuquerque law firm. S&S are engaged (and thoroughly engaging) observers of the art, culture, society and politics of Italy.

And chuckle over Steve Charnas' archaeological find, an early poem from the pen of Henry S. F. Cooper, inspired by the '52 Student Deacons' discovery (33 years ago) that each PA student was contributing an average of $.06½ to the Sunday collection in Cochran Chapel. Henry's "Chapel Jabberwock" contains this immortal stanza:

Remember, my children, it is wreat,
'More blumfle to glump than glip.'
So when the Deacons pass the hat,
Glip, my flock, reglip!"

You would think it was enough that Ron Darling was a great pitcher, but it turns out that when he was at Yale, he was also the team's best hitter. I didn't know this, I got it from Don Shapiro who is very knowledgeable in these things. It had interested Don because Ron Darling was now pitching for his team, The New York Mets, and also because the hitting records that Ron broke as a Yale all belonged to Ray Lamontagne. This Don got from Ray himself, and it reminded Don of just how good a hitter Ray was (and for that matter may still be). It also recalled the greatest catch that Don ever made.

The game took place in back of Rockwell. Don's team had a slight lead in a very tight game that was in the last of the ninth. Ray came to bat with a chance to win and hit a ball that would have cleared the center field wall at Yankee Stadium but instead hit a tree somewhere short of Lawrence. As the ball started to fall from branch to branch Ray rounded the bases and Don ran to the tree. The ball cleared the last leaf as Ray crossed home plate with the winning run, or what would have been the winning run had not the ball fallen into Don's glove.

Thirty-three years later, the catch was still clear in Don's mind. But Ray, who had a hundred hits like that, whose records at Yale had held for over three decades until Ron Darling came along to break them, who had turned down a sizable bonus from the Boston Red Sox to go instead to Yale Law School, had forgotten all about it.

Bill Sayad, according to Bill Sayad, is alive and well in Miami, practicing law, specializing in things maritime, and no longer taking flying lessons. He also spoke enthusiastically about his 15-year-old son, and, in general, couldn't have been in better form, throughout a lengthy phone conversation we had this April. Likewise Merv Gaskin, who was in Michigan. The auto business, which his company supplies, seems to be picking up and, as if that weren't enough, he still seems to be basking in the pleasant memories of our 30th reunion.

"Constantly travelling," writes Tony Lopez, "between Tenn., Wisc., and Mexico City. Daughter Linda, her husband, and our only grandchild, at Hofstra U. on Long Island; son Rick (PA '77) married and working in Maryland; son Michael, graduated from U.C.L.A. and doing graduate work at Michigan State; son Anthony to graduate from U.C.L.A. this coming summer."

The Danus Elizabeth Chusy Kopf Chair, it turns out, is held by none other than James Rayen, Professor of Fine Arts at Wellesley. His latest painting exhibitions took place at the Kendall Gallery in Wellfleet in July '83 and the Chapel Gallery in Boston this May.

The word is that Bill Joseph has been kicked upstairs. But, fortunately, not by his law firm, Reavis & McGrath. He's just moved to a penthouse in New York's mid-70s and if it ever gets finished I know he'll be inviting the whole class over to see it.

What else? I saw David Kaplan at a birthday party and he mentioned that the furniture business, especially that of Kaplan & Fox, was embarrassingly good. Flor Kist, I discovered, has moved back to the Netherlands after a few years as Consulate General in San Francisco. On his own, but hardly begging for business, is Neal McCornie, who just left Glendenning after more years than anyone can remember. I have it on the best authority (from the same person who cuts Robert Redford's hair and mine) that John Scranton has just bought a NYC loft. I don't know if Jamieson & Co., where John is a partner, will handle the insurance, but I'm sure that John's wife, Brenda, one of the truly great chefs of anywhere, is already planning a 2,000 sq. ft. kitchen. Joan and Dutch Wolff's daughter, Melora, will be going to graduate school at Columbia next year. May you all have a wonderful summer.

So grateful for the news that has been sent, and wish there was more. It is not the purpose of this column for the Secretary to fill up the spaces with her news, and yet you may be subject to a bit if I don't hear from more of you by September. Ann Zuill Williams writes from England that she is now Grannie Annie (a grandson) and loving every minute of it. Ann is traveling with her husband, Colin, to Jordan, Egypt, South America, Greece and Possibly Singapore. How's that for an island child? She saw Julie Gains Phalen last summer, and visited the old Abbot Campus. She says she stirred up quite a hornet's nest by writing Andover Trustees about the disgraceful condition of Abbot property. Julie's second daughter, Ellen, is finishing her junior year in London, and according to Zoo, having a ball and studying too! Julie had hoped to fly Peoples Airline over to visit her daughter this spring and spend time with Colin and Zoo, but we have to wait for the fall issue to hear. Julie enclosed an article from the Manchester Times which featured a picture of Polly Jackson Townsend receiving the Gold Leaf Award for the Friends of Manchester Trees Inc., Polly Townsend, President. Manchester has received several awards for its work in saving some of the large elms and arranging for replacement of the diseased elms, thus improving the quality of life now and in the years ahead in that community.

Carol Hardin Kimball hates writing news but did it, and writes that daughter Jennifer '80 is a Junior at Amherst, majoring in English and deeply involved in music, both classical and contemporary; Andrew is a freshman at Hamilton, playing varsity soccer. Carol is enjoying immensely her second year as Associate Director of the Metropolitan Opera's $100 Million Centennial Fund. After 18 years of renting her apartment in NYC, it has gone co-op and Carol is awash in the joys and perils of ownership. I tried to have Carol come see me at our house in Florida this spring, and the timing was not good. Next year we'll do it, as Carol's cousin is a next door neighbor of ours on Captiva, and says she MUST!

A wonderful letter of news arrived from Elizabeth Bravinder Yost living in Tucson, AZ. With a Ph.D. in Counseling Psychology, she is presently Associate Professor of Counseling and Guidance at the University of Arizona and Research Associate in the Dept. of Psychiatry at U. of AZ Medical School in Tucson. She has just co-authored a book: Understanding Human Behavior, A Guide for Mental Health Practitioners, to be published soon. She has been working for the past several years on grants comparing the effects of cognitive therapy with those of XANAX (a new drug) on the depressed elderly. Her children are both in school, a son at Hastings Law School in San Francisco, and a daughter completing a degree in Dance at San Francisco State College. On a sabbatical leave last fall, she bought a computer which has changed her life, and she writes more than ever, and to which we owe all this wonderful news! Liz hasn't seen any Abbot Alums since 1951 when she visited Dee Schoonmaker and learned that the only dog to own is a German Shepard!

Liz enjoys reading about those classmates who send news to this column, so keep it coming.

Patricia Earhart writes from Sydney, Australia that she was sorry to miss the 30th just a year ago, but wants to make it to the East coast in June '84 — or some day! Now, you must bear with news of your secretary. We had a counseling session with a school placement counselor the other day with our 15-year-old son. Andover was referred to as a school to "reach" for or the "crem de la crem" of secondary schools. How fortunate we all are to have a strong link with such a great institution. Let's keep in touch. I just spoke on the phone with Julie Gains Phalen to make plans to meet with the Phalens and Polly and Jerry Townsend for dinner while Bill and I are attending a function at the Harvard Business School at the end of May. I will also write Liz Bravinder Yost regarding her expertise, as her field strikes close to home with aging parents. Let's hear from more of you about any and everything you are involved in, as well as your youngsters, now mostly adults. Who knows where our paths could cross or we could be of help to each other.

Reunion Notes: The turnout for our 30th reunion was smaller than expected. Nineteen classmates, many with wives or significant others, took in all or part of the wonderful hospitality the school put on — the blistering 95 degree heat, Les Blank's new film about the making of the movie Fitzcarraldo, called Burden of Dreams, and enough clams and lobster to keep a Maine-iac happy for the entire solstice. It was good to hear Dan Woodhead praised from the podium by Alumni Chairman Steve Clarkson ('55) for Dan's generous contribution of T-shirts for all alumni who gave or pledged $1,000 or more to the Non Sibi fund. Speaking of that special fund, Dave Underwood did an outstanding job as Non Sibi fund chairman for our class. Dave and Lynda were slated to attend the reunion, but a last minute business matter got in the way, Dave told me. And while kudos are being sprinkled about, one of the grandest for Ted Probert, who turned in a perfect performance as a regional class agent. Ted secured Alumni Fund contributions from 100% of his team.

A happy fact was that Andover and Abbot classes of '54 shared all the reunion goings on together, and I'm pleased to report that coeducation is a good idea at Andover, even if it came 30 years too late for us. Getting to know those women whom most of us only saw walking at a great and shadowy distance is a delight. For those of you who weren't able to attend the reunion, some news of those who did . . .

Ken Sanderson is editing the Mark Twain papers at U. of C. at Berkeley . . . Leon Gane is an international banker, looking for countries where loans will be safe (he says the list is dwindling) . . . Charlie and Ann Fagan were up from Ligonier, PA, where Charlie runs a very successful management consulting and executive search business . . .

Park Weaver has opened another real estate office in San Diego, because he likes to spend time there; he has one in Phoenix . . .

P.D. and Judy Block are on their way to the Olympics this summer, while son Flip, 12, whacks away at tennis camp in Carmel, CA, and daughter Margie, 10, weaves and fishes at camp in Wisconsin . . . Joel Shyavitz, who has a law office near Andover, says he has begun serious studies of Judaism . . . Jim Spencer is chief of pathology at Mount Vernon, NY Hospital . . . Bob Feldman proposed a special memorial fund to be established for our class, recognizing those classmates and friends of ours who have died. Bob and Dave Mackenzie are exploring the idea with the Development Office. If you would like to make a contribution to the Alumni Fund in the name of a classmate who has died, you should so designate on your contribution form. When there is a level of $10,000 in this memorial fund, it will be given a special name, and will then qualify as an official and separate 1954 Class Fund . . .

Bob Carmody brought one of the only two known-to-exist felt banners trumpeting the 1952 drubbing Andover gave Exeter (59-0), and suggested that it be auctioned off at the Saturday night dinner. It was, and Hayes and Clem Clement were high bidders at $500, which will go to the class contribution for the 30th Reunion. Dave Mackenzie (whose wife, Nancy, ranks as one of the great joke tellers of our extended class) reported that through your generosity, the class of '54 has raised more than $40,000 for the Alumni Fund as of reunion time, and Dave expects more to have come in before the 30 June deadline. Our target: $50,000 and 70% of the class giving. Hal Davis, who lives near Andover in Groton, MA, showed up in time for the Saturday night clambake, where he acquitted himself with distinction and gusto . . .

Tim Hogen's active in the fund raising field, spending a lot of time out West these days . . . Bob Carmody teaches government sleuths how to uncover and prosecute contract fraud in Washington. Bob and his wife just returned from a wine tasting vacation in France, and he was an immense help to your obedient Reunion Chairman in helping to organize the wine and other libations for the parties over the weekend . . .

Mal Swenson's house in New Hampshire has been proposed for a Saturday night party at the 35th reunion. This is an early hint to get ready, Mal . . . Neil Henry didn't tell me what he's up to these days; we just had a good time talking . . . Doug and Lynnie Ayer, residents of Greenwich, CT, will leave those verdant spaces this summer to visit friends in England, Sweden, Finland, and Russia, if they can only find a dog-sitter . . . Art and Susan Neyman drove over from their home in Andover; Art's a urologist at Lawrence General Hospital . . . Another local couple who came for the whole weekend was Chuck and Mary-Ellen Oberhauser.

Chuck, the only beard-wearer at the reunion, is a senior executive at Waters Association, a high-tech firm in Cambridge. As for me, it was a great pleasure to be able to introduce my fiancée, Linda Fields, to my old friends. Linda is a singer and actress who's very busy in radio and TV commercials in New York. I'm equally busy growing my three-year-old public relation/public affairs firm in New York. A few notes about friends who couldn't make the reunion: Jerry Donovan had just returned from Africa, where he is currently doing a lot of legal work for his clients, and couldn't spare the time away . . . Ted Pobert, likewise, was in the grip of travel fever, and felt like home was where he needed to be . . . Al Boyer lives in San Francisco, has a new wife and a new business — he runs a sport shop in South San Francisco . . . Dave Goodman also resides in North America's most beautiful city, and, as a partner in Morgan Stanley, runs the firm's San Francisco office. Dave has a second home in Eleuthra, and flies his own plane, so while it may be easier to get there, he isn't piling up any Frequent Traveler benefits . . . Sid Unobskey, our real estate maven, continues to compile fortunes, nowadays in Far East properties . . . and Pete Mohr, I'm told, chose the tropic breezes of Sanibel Island with his offspring instead of the record-breaking temperature and humidity of Andover reunion weekend.

D. Hayes Clement '54 and Barbara Hattermer (Bob '49)

Finally, a sad note, passed along by Dave Mackenzie. During his fund raising call he learned that Merrill Carlsmith died this spring from cancer. The deepest sympathies from our class go to his family, together with memories of a warm, happy and true friend.

You who peruse these pages on a quest for the class notes of '54 may be surprised and startled actually to find them here. Seems like they are becoming an annual event, almost like the Festival of Worms. Not a great deal of news has accumulated since the last notes, which leads one to believe that each of you is off privately tending his own garden, and not sharing the fruits thereof with your obedient servant. However, here's what the mailbox reveals . . .

Paul Kearney has been appointed Dean of the Community School in Naples, Florida, a garden spot if ever I saw one. In what Paul calls "a professional opportunity that comes to few educators," he will be responsible for designing the campus, setting the curriculum, hiring the faculty, and recruiting the 400 male and female students for this new kindergarten through grade 12 school. . . . Ken MacWilliams has moved from Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company to the senior vice presidency of PruCapital, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of the Prudential Insurance Company of America. Ken notes that PruCapital and Prudential Bache Securities are sister institutions, and together represent a financial services spectrum which covers commercial banking, merchant banking and investment banking. Ken's specifically responsible for Pru Capital's business in the Western half of the U.S., which means, I suppose, that he gets to run the Pru's next Gold Rush. . . . Les Blank has been lecturing at Dartmouth this year, and attended the Sundance Institute in Utah last month (June). Sundance is an operation run by Robert Redford, and provides film directors with an opportunity to find producers and other support for new feature film projects. Les's award-winning film about the making of the movie Fitzcarraldo, entitled Burden of Dreams, was shown to admiring classmates and alumni at the reunion in June.

Dr. Skip Elsas says that he is reliving many of his Andover memories through his son Jake who will graduate next June. Skip is running a growing Human Genetics division at Emory University. He had a lively time reminiscing with Dr. Ken Pruett at their 25th Reunion at Harvard this spring. . . the Reverend David Glendinning, who is rector of St. Paul's Church in Concord, NH, was the first guest preacher to address the All Saints' Episcopal Church's (Wolfeboro, NH) "Outstanding Preacher Series" during Lent this past spring. Dave, his wife, Dorothy, and their five children, moved to Concord after serving as rector of St. Mark's Church in Waterville, Maine.

Bob Semple, Op-Ed page editor of The New York Times, recently was my guest as a speaker before a group of senior public relations officers euphemistically called Wisemen. He was roundly applauded as the outstanding speaker of the season, and one of the group's leaders suggested that Bob go on the Chautauqua circuit. Earlier in year Bob journeyed to Henniker, NH to speak on the administration's role and policies in Central America, before a group of students and faculty at New England College. . . . Jerry Donovan very kindly sent along a clipping from a Phoenix newspaper, reporting that Bark Hickox is on the stump again, campaigning for election as sheriff of Maricopa County in Arizona. Bark first ran for the post in 1976. This time he's campaigning against an incumbent who he characterizes as "a dried up water hole when it comes to management." When he's not concerned with law enforcement Bark runs a telephone marketing company with offices in several U. S. cities.

Ollie Whipple, a Marine colonel, recently got the chance to explain the origin of "ARUGAH." For those of us who have pondered the meaning of this arcane phrase, Ollie responded to a newspaper columnist that ARUGAH is ". . . a Marine expression of spirit, enthusiasm and esprit de corps. . . it is normally heard as an ear-shattering, primal scream between 'grunts' (U.S. Marine infantrymen), as a running chant, an expression of euphoria, a plea for renewed drive and determination, a long-range salutation, etc. . . I have it on my license plate because it identifies the driver as a Marine. You'd be surprised how many times I hear ARUGAH yelled as I drive along — a Marine saying hello to another Marine." Ollie's deputy director for Marine Corps history at Marine Corps headquarters in Washington.

Progeny in progress. . . my daughter Kirstin graduated from PA in '83 and I think I may say without fear of contradiction, that she was the loveliest graduate in the Grand Circle. She now arranges special events for Sax & Matison in New York City, so anyone in need of a whizbang special promotional program should call her.

Dave MacKenzie thanks all of you loyal classmates who have continued to contribute so generously to the Alumni Fund, and asks that you keep the contributions coming; ditto for news of your comings and goings and doings. Please send them directly to me, or to the school.

Finally, we end on a note of sadness. Hollis Frampton passed away on 30 March after a brief illness. Called an "influential avant-garde filmmaker" by The New York Times and Variety, Holly began making experimental films in 1962 and within 10 years was considered to be one of the leading underground filmmakers in the U.S. He taught at Hunter College in New York City between 1969 and 1973, and at the time of his death was a professor at the State University of Buffalo's (N.Y.) Media Study Center. Our thanks to Tom Lawrence '55 for sending the news of Holly's passing. I am sure I speak for the entire class in sending our sympathies to Holly's survivors.

Unable to attend Friday's activities because of our daughter Sandy's graduation from Shady Side Academy, the following account of those festivities comes to you by report from Marti Belknap Brenner. Her report to me was precise, concise, and humorous in detail. Marti, N. J. Smith, Valjeanne Brodeur Paxton, Peggy Moore Roll, and Wini Johnson Sharp, husband Joel, and two daughters attended a lovely lawn cocktail party hosted by Joe and Sandi Mesics where they were serenaded by the 8 'n 1, now a student/faculty singing group. The party progressed to a chicken buffet supper on Flagstaff Court.

Our only disappointment during the entire weekend was that we arrived too late to attend the service in Cochran Chapel where our own classmate and reunion chairperson Reverend Valjeanne Brodeur Paxton was a participant in the service conducted by Rev. J. Phillip Zaeder, husband of Sylvia "Sam" Thayer. Ferd and I did arrive in time to make a hasty baggage drop in Bartlett Hall and hustle to the Addison Gallery for the parade to the Gym! Kent McKamy, Andover '54 "wizard of amazing class favors," did it again! We were presented with a gorgeous blue and white, Abbot/Andover golf umbrella which provided abundant cover from the sultry sun (and did I hear someone say liver spots?) while marching once again to the MacPherson Bagpipe Band. Following the meeting of alumni/ae, class photos and luncheon on the lawn surrounding the Bell Tower, were the gathering points for Paula Prial Folkman, Valjeanne, Sam Thayer, Marti Belknap, Wini Sharp and family, and Ferd and me.

The Abbot Tea followed our brief class meeting — Frannie Nolde Ladd and Maris Oamer Noble and handsome son Steve, caught up with us there in time to chat with Miss Sullivan, Miss Judd, Miss Ritchie, and Miss Goodwin who, I must tell you, all look absolutely fabulous! Ice tea and talk flowed — Miss Goodwin and I discussing which was the greatest struggle, teaching me to knit argyle socks or geometry!

Saving the very best for the very last: The Class Dinner. Kent McKamy is certainly the Pearl Mesta of the '54s. . . . Graham House was the perfect setting for the steamed clams, lobster, chicken, and corn cookout, and it literally was cooked out — on the sidewalk — while inside we all glowed with a trio playing golden oldie tunes around a postage-stamp sized dance floor, as we remembered tea dances of years ago. We sang and danced and were gloriously hosted by the Andover '54s. We truly wished that you all had been there.

Breakfast in the Commons at 9:00 a.m. with Marti Belknap was a sentimental reflection of events past, present, and future, too numerous to relate here in this column, but including all our class. Marti is stunningly lovely and radiant in her new joy of marriage to Bill. I know you join me in wishing them well. . . In the present, we who returned found a strong bond of renewed friendships, while in the future we can only hope that you, too, will come to our 35th Reunion to experience this profound camaraderie and class loyalty in all of those grand Andover Alumni/ae. Happy summer to all.

The class has its second headmaster in Bill Houley who is Commanding Officer of the Naval Submarine School in Groton, Connecticut. The school has a staff of 800 and teaches everything from tactics to technical equipment maintenance. Bill and Judy live in nearby Ledyard and have two youngsters in college at Syracuse and Vanderbilt and three more closing in on college careers.

Carl Horn has become attorney-advisor with the Staff Judge Advocate of the United States Marine Corps at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina. David Ream is serving a four-year term on the City Council of Evanston, Illinois. Having defeated three opponents in the 1983 elections, Dave copes with everything from street lights to street gangs.

John Daly has signed on with Salomon Brothers in New York as the manager of their special sales unit. Ed Veazey commutes 150 miles a day to his job at ORI, Inc. in D.C. from his home on the Potomac between Fredricksburg and Dahlgren, Virginia. Ed reports Al Shinn looked fine when he encountered him at the National Science Foundation recently.

If you thought you saw me helping to torture a young earthling only to be lasered to smithereens on the NBC miniseries V last May, you win the 1984 Trivia Cup and we both owe Dan Blatt a hearty thank you. I for a good stretch of gainful employment and you for some rip-roaring sci-fi entertainment.

It's time to start thinking about reserving the first weekend of next June for our thirtieth reunion. There will be more details later of course but don't schedule any elective surgery for that time of year. . . Y.

We unfortunately missed each other in England when she was over. Do hope that doesn't happen with anyone else. Would love to see any classmates who are in the U.K." Thanks for Phoebe Estes Bryan has returned to teaching English at the University of Vermont and is loving it. Down South in Knoxville, Sheila Prial Jacobstein writes that all is well. She continues to teach biology at The Webb School, a private day school. Her son Peter is a freshman at the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University; daughter Cynthia is in the eleventh grade; and her youngest, Douglas, is in the eighth grade. Jane Tatman Walker (in addition to all her Andover activities) keeps on with her work at the Children's Museum in Indianapolis, which she finds very challenging and satisfying. She does research for school tours as well as developing and giving tours. She also writes that she had a lovely visit with Sue Kauer Mimno and her husband in Marblehead following last fall's Alumni Council meeting.

I plan to stay put this summer for once to keep an eye on a sun porch addition to our house. The family traveller this year is daughter Sandra (Andover '81), who has a summer job on the London Stock Exchange. We are counting on her to keep us in style in our old age!

Going through the throes of high school graduation for the second time almost makes me a pro, but I didn't realize how much more expensive it was from child one to child two — and I have one more to go. Worse is the college tuition routine. If it were just the tuition, I could manage; it's the "extras" that call for consideration of Chapter 11. . . . Dave and Anita Catron dropped me a line from Austin, Texas, my neighbor 165 miles from Houston, to let us know that Dave is with the University of Texas Press, a marvelous publisher (this opinion), while Anita is selling real estate. John Finney, who for years has been involved in theatrical enterprises, decided to take a short leave of absence this year to teach French on Nantucket in a small, private school. . . . Still enjoying his role with local government, John Hansman writes from Montgomery City, Maryland, that he is still very involved with cable television in their area. The first part was selecting a firm, and phase two is planning the public use of the system, including telecommunications and a local TV station. . . . Fred Shuman, entrepreneur from New York, tells me that he loves married life; and daughter Abby graduated from Andover this June. . . .

Tom Fox wrote a marvelous letter from Washington to let us know what a tremendous job all his troops did on the fund raising campaign this year. Among the stalwarts were Dan Adams, Bill Babcock, Jim Blackmon, Peter Broadbent, Bill Cox, Ben Field, Lew Girdler, John Hurlbut, Lew Neisner, Rick Steinkamp, Dan Tracy, and Bill Penny. Tom feels that this year was our best ever, particularly in the area of participation where our class has been outstanding for years. Many thanks to all of you who did your part, and welcome back to many of you who have been dormant for a while. . . . Tom adds that he had a good visit with Lew Girdler who is with the State Department covering the Portuguese Desk, while Phil Olsson, who has his own law firm in Washington, is planning to have a clam bake along with Tom for Andover's benefit this summer. . . . Ben Field, who is the Chief Financial Officer for Bemis in Minneapolis, and Foxie had a tennis game in Washington the last time Ben was there — and Tom complains about Ben's svelte physique. However, Ben's son Rusty is slated to attend Andover this fall. So the tradition lives on. . . . Working with corporate involvement and encouraging private foundations in international work, Tom is really enjoying his new role in life, having left the Agency for International Development a couple of years ago. With two in high school and his wife working as a social work administrator, Foxie keeps busy. And by the way, thanks for all that you have done for our class and Andover as well. Till next time. . . .GEE

Reunion Notes: It was with some fear and trepidation that I suggested, last winter, that you all come back to Andover for our 25th Reunion to bury some ghosts. But the thought seemed to have struck a solid chord — more of us came back to this reunion than any in recent years, and some ghosts, as well as an awful lot of beer and lobster, were buried.

In fact, nearly 200 of us — including Abbot '59 spouses and kids — caroused and talked for three days. I won't be able to do justice to everyone in this column, so stay tuned to the next issue for more details. First, though, a big thanks to the 200 and to Kitty Sides Flather, Abbot '59, for her tremendous help in making the weekend such a success.

There were also some wonderful stories — how Jim Hayman found happiness with family and job; how Michael O'Donoghue went from Wall Street to running a Blues Club; how Bob Nassau ended up running American Hoist and Derrick; how Dick Goodyear helped pull Chrysler through the past three years — just to mention a few.

Another great story was how Artie Rogers, Bill Snyder and Garrett Kirk managed to coax over $115,000 out of us as our class gift — a fabulous achievement on all our parts, especially, again, contrasted to recent years' efforts.

One of the greatest surprises of all was Val Mayer's pulling in from Southern California with 25 enormous blow-ups of photos that he had taken while working for the Pot Pourri in 1959. Some incredible portraits — one of Patrick Cary-Barnard (now lost); one of Perry Miller (now rock star Jesse Colin Young); one of Rennie Maier (now sporting the class' best license plate: "ZZZ DOC" — he's an anesthesiologist). Several group shots — one of Bruce Coffey (now white-haired); Lea Pendleton and Duffy Hughes (now little hair); one with Ed Shapiro (now with beard); several with many of us taken in the football stand, and more. The Addison Gallery gave Val wall space, and the exhibition was one of the hits of the Reunion.

We turn out to be quite an athletic class: Jay Nelson looked terrific just off coming in second in the national squash championship (over 40s); Geoff Martin placed third in the mini-marathon won by some child from the class of '79, while John Howland came in 5th, and Dick Goodyear's wife, Connie, was the only '59 spouse to enter and finish.

We came to the reunion from all over the country and indeed the world — Cuyler Shaw and wife, Abie, flew in from Honolulu, and Ned Grew came all the way from Helsinki, Finland. All looked terrific — in fact, as a whole, we were an extremely attractive group.

Although the oldest of the class of '59 kids is 23, and the average age is about 12, there were some remarkably cute little ones there: Beck Gilbert's three-and-a-half year old is sensational, though she got a lot of competition from Sam Goodyear and six-month-old Nell Cox. Aking best behaved honors, however, was Maureen's and my little boy — of course he won't be born until October. . . .

But these are just some of the stories — and certainly not all of the highlights of the reunion. More to come in the next issue, as well as an in-depth report on the unsung hero of the reunion — your fabulous questionnaires! Stay tuned.

Reunion Notes: 8-10 June will go down in the Abbot annals as one of the most wonderful reunions ever. Many came for the first time, and at last we had the relaxed opportunity to get to know our Andover counterparts. Jean Roundy Sullivan gets the long distance (Houston) and the most family award. She drove with Dixie, who is at SMU; Mark, at Northfield-Mt. Hermon; and Lizzie, a sophomore in high school. Peter joined them here after he got away from his cancer clinic. Jean never did like the cold weather at Abbot, but even she admitted that three days here at 95 degrees was a little much.

Betsy Harriman Tannen dropped by the Abbot Tea at Morton House. She's in Ann Arbor with husband, Dick, and three children in their teens, and has nearly completed her law degree. Judy Agor Aydelott has been a lawyer for a number of years and specializes in malpractice suits. Her husband and she have played in the National Tennis Open and both daughters are crack-jack players also. Gale Barton Harch's sons are ranked junior tennis players and she finds tennis motherhood practically a full-time profession, although she manages to teach some biology. Her work with the elderly and fellow vestrymen at her church has been very rewarding. Ann Morris Stack and son Chris, 11, travelled from Indianapolis. They've had a busy time since Ann's husband changed professions at age 34 and went to medical school. He's just finished his residency, and to celebrate, the family is going to Switzerland this summer. Ann has started an Arts Newsletter, and the networking that her publication encourages in a part of the country that doesn't have a deep arts support base, is really having an impact.

Their slogan: If it's '84, it must be '59

Connie Jones Gephart brought husband, Dale, a physician in Windsor, VT, and Emily and Sarah, both at Hanover High School. Connie is involved with a handicraft shop. Susan Goodwillie Umphrey came out of Boston on her way to Barnstable. She's president of her consulting firm which she started five years ago after leaving the Ford Foundation; she's getting her second masters, and running the Great Cities of the World Conference for Boston's 350th birthday. Zelinda Makepeace Douhan introduced us to husband John, a Baptist administrator and minister. She's teaching 6th grade as well as running Friends' Academy development. It turned out that John was in Charlie Flather's class at Harvard. Lolly Bell Hetherington has finally packed up her family to join Bob in Richmond where he has begun his new ministry. Alex will finish his senior year at Nichols but Liza and David are eager to start their new schools, St. Catherine's and St. Christopher's. Lolly has had three years as Director of Guidance at a small, girls' Catholic high school but it's too soon to tell if she's staying in the same field in Richmond. She chauffeured Mlle. Baratte to our delicious lobster-clambake where we were also joined by Shirley Ritchie and Dorothy Judd who retired the prior week, and Carolyn Goodwin.

Elsie Kellog Morse came up from Providence where Doug has a Chair at Brown to set up a graduate program in ecology. The academic life has afforded the Morses wonderful years in Oxford, England and Uppsala, Sweden, as well as Maine summers for research and pleasure. Elsie is an enthusiastic and supportive as ever—even when she noticed the tennis fence had been taken down by the Andover maintenance department just before our tennis brunch, she said that no one should be playing in 95 degree heat anyway. Joan Ardrey Synnott brought her two sons and Jim (Hotchkiss) who had the best time being mistaken for Andover '59 by Andover '59 and played it to the hilt. Winkie Ward Keith and Allan brought us all up to date on Nona Porter's new husband, also Lynn Mahoney Edelstein, and Dearing Ward Johns whom we sorely missed.

Susan Bradley Trayser and Mac brought Jeffrey, 5, and Sarah, 2, to part of the reunion so that we could meet the youngest family in the class that I am aware of. Preschool and kindergarten readiness vie with the Duxbury Yacht Club and the Museum of Fine Arts for Sue's time. We missed Sue Wholey Field who worked so hard on the fund drive (a death in her mother's family on Friday kept her from joining us). The combined Class of '59 gave the school $115,000, a 25th class record. Thank you all! We also appreciated, so much, hearing from those who called or wrote to wish us good cheer: Betsy Hall Carton who was demonstrating in NYC against U.S. intervention in Central America (she has been an organizer and her two sons were also involved); Sandy Moulton Burrigide, who sent along her Abbot Banner and Griffen Flag, and wonderful pictures from The Importance of Being Earnest and our Talent Show; Jane Thompson Mudd who was taking one child to camp in Colorado and the other to a tennis tournament in Nebraska (Whew!); Dearing, whose husband was ill (speedy recovery please), and Dianne Gerros who left for Spain a day too soon.

All agreed it would be madness to wait for the 50th, so come in 1989. It is special to be a part of a group that is growing, broadening, diversifying, and yet all stemming from the same base. The questionnaire showed how much we shared many of the same concerns, plusses and minuses, and how closely they corresponded to the Andover men's. You are all terrific and should see each other more often! One of you even knew that "Mack the Knife" was the most popular song of 1959.

Elsie (now Ellie) Taylor Cummings has checked in and brought us 25 years up-to-date. She became Ellie at the University of Wisconsin and then married Don Cummings and moved to the Chicago area. Her kids, Kate, 15, and Christopher, 18, are now freshman and senior, respectively, at the high school in Batavia, Ill. where they moved after Ellie's divorce; Donald, 20, is a junior at Ellie's alma mater in Madison, Wis. For the past five years, she had a three-hour-a-day commute in and out of Chicago where she was an account executive at First Chicago, but, happily, now she has begun a new position as Director of Marketing and Planning for a small local hospital (only 15 min. away). Smart lady!

Laura (Missy) McGehee McCloy spent five years in Munich before returning to Greenwich. Her sons, 9 and 12 years old, are avid hockey players and skiers while Laura is a residential decorator.

Sherry Weymouth Morison lives on a 650-acre farm, "Welbourne," in Middleburg, VA, and runs her husband's family home as a bed and breakfast. Her son Joshua is the 7th generation living there.

Faith Critchley is now Mrs. Walter Miller and has moved to Quincy from Boston while word from Virginia has it that Sue Calnan Bates graduated with a masters in counselling from UVA within days of son Ben's high school graduation.

Holly Robertson Chalmers has been in Austin, TX for three years now and finally discovers it is a wonderful place to live and work (they built their own home—not an experience they recommend). The first two years, however, she was commuting back to Washington, DC, to her export firm job, alternating three weeks in DC with nine days in Austin. What a strain—imagine just the laundry, to say nothing of family, relaxation, etc. But that madness is past and Holly is in the job market. John's Librarian of the Humanities Research Center at the University of Texas. The collection of rare books and manuscripts is one of the best in the country. She has two children, Carrie and Sarah.

The Bulletin's editor is a drill sergeant for meeting deadline, and he requests that those of the non-reuning years "incline toward brevity." Our Class's relative silence, the threat of deadline, and polite requests/demands from the School make brevity easy.

Remember: our 25th is a year away. Mike Scharf, and what will probably be a relatively large contingent of co-chairmen, will organize, host, and otherwise be planning on an interesting reunion. Plan on it. Now.

Whitney Foster, after twelve years in Africa for the United Nations Development Program in Ghana, Morocco, Tunisia, and most recently the Southern Sudan, has returned to Washington, DC at the World Bank as the co-ordinator for UNDP for the Middle East. Whit spent Christmas '83 with his children Chris (14) and Sasha (11) at his family's home in Hanover, New Hampshire, and was then off to the ski slopes at Mad River, Vermont. His address: 1664 C Beakman Place, N.W., Washington, DC 20009.

Larry Gillis, sporting a handsome salt-and-pepper beard and twinkle in his eye, was recently pictured in the Hampton Union of Hampton, NH (and Portsmouth Herald and Foster's Daily Democrat Dover, among others) with an accompanying article announcing his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Rockingham (NH) county attorney. Larry, who has run twice before for the county attorney position, was the Concord City prosecutor for 2½ years and formerly prosecuted for the Seabrook Police Department. He has had a principal hand in enacting a New Hampshire law requiring that pre-sentencing reports given to the judge in criminal cases must include input from the victim. Larry has been a practicing trial attorney for almost 13 years, is presently in private practice in Hampton, and is in a minority position as a Democratic politician in his area.

Martin Quinn writes that he is thrilled to have his daughter Alexandra as a junior at Andover this year. Marty joins, among others, Bill Sherman, another San Francisco lawyer, as a classmate/parent of a current PA student. Terry McMullen, his wife Grace, son Stuart, 7, and his daughter Audrey, 4, "have settled in nicely in tinsel town." Terry writes that "I'm the VP/AT of National Medical Enterprises and having a great time. If Taft Albright will contact me directly. I won't tell the Alumni Fund where he is."

A major tragedy occurred to Dave and Liz Kennedy in late February when their daughter Carol, 17, was killed in an auto accident in Florida. The 29 February issue of the Tampa, Florida Tribune contains an article entitled "Goodbye, golden girl," which, in describing Carol Kennedy in life and death, brings a total sadness: "In my 13 years of ministry," the family pastor was quoted as saying, "this is the finest home I have ever seen. And Carol, well, she was a perfect child, a model." She was accepted to Princeton on the early-admission program, a practicing Christian, a great softball and volleyball player, beautiful — an event, in short, for which Dave and Liz must test every fibre of fortitude that their experience and background, including Andover, was designed to build. Dave returned to Tampa approximately eight years ago, and has been extremely successful there in real estate development, as well as civic and athletic activities.

Brief, this all is. Make your plans for the Reunion.

Well, here it is again, my tenth springtime in the Rockies. It seems like only yesterday that I left the cement and the steel canyons of New York for the great western outdoors. Isn't it amazing how quickly the time goes by? Is it really only two years until our 25 reunion?

I do not have very much from you, so this column will be pretty short. Remember, only you can prevent short columns.

Dan Perin was in Denver with his wife, Laura, a couple of months ago and was nice enough to take the time to drop in and visit. He is Vice Chairman of the Arizona Bank and looks as young and chipper as a 20 year old. It must be that Phoenix weather. Jim Perry writes that he had lunch with Dave Gibson recently in Scranton, PA. He also reports the new record for having kids at PA, announcing that his two daughters, classes of '86 and '87, will be at PA next fall.

Dave Kellogg reports that he and his wife, Jean, along with three children, have returned to Singapore where Dave is in charge of Citicorp's merchant banking activities in the southeast Asia region. Dave sounds greatly excited about his return to Asia, but made sure that when he made his generous gift to the Alumni Fund he claimed his Andover t-shirt. When you are in downtown Singapore be on the lookout for it.

Dennis Cross kindly forwarded a letter and the most impressive resume I have ever seen from Gage McAfee. Gage is with Coudert Brothers based in Hong Kong. He is a senior partner of Coudert, First Vice President and Chairman of the Energy Committee of the American Chamber of Commerce in Hong Kong, and has had extensive experience with banking, oil and gas, and joint venture transactions in China, Taiwan, the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, Australia, Korea, Japan and India. His list of publications and other significant accomplishments made me wonder what I, myself, have been doing for the past ten years. Gage, I would like to hear more from you about your life.

Sorry, but that's all folks! I would appreciate a flood of letters, telegrams, postcards, telephone calls or jungle drum messages. The number in Colorado is (303) 480-1000.

I've been so busy this winter that my news-recruiting efforts have not been valiant. A very full-time job is keeping me in full sail. After eight months I'm still trying to find a good balance in my life between work demands and family concerns. A tough juggle. Am the academic program administrator for the Department of Landscape Architecture at the Harvard Graduate School of Design. I like that paycheck but still feel there must be a better way than nine to five. My sons are fourteen and twelve now, and are definitely five sheets to the wind between BMX bicycle, tennis, soccer, music, and their school pals. They're at a great age — independent enough, but not off with the family car yet. My free (?) time is spent with them, or playing tennis, studying massage, and dreaming about traveling — to someplace warm for a change!

Like Florida — where Andrea Lynch Cole lives. Andrea is terrific about sending updated news. This year, she says, she and her husband, Carlton, have been traveling a lot — to Los Angeles, San Francisco, and to the Kentucky Derby. She reports that she has passed her real estate broker's exam and is learning real estate appraisal.

Molly Bidwell Radley has returned from Vienna. I happened to be in Andover for part of the weekend on Co-Education and discovered that she was giving the sermon at the Sunday evening vespers.

As Co-Chairman of the Andover Class Reunions, I'm gearing up for a good reunion weekend in June. It's fun even when my class isn't "reuning." Andover throws a great party.

Abby von der Heyde Summersgill is doing very well two years after her treatment for arthritis. Her son Christopher will be going to Middlebury in the fall.

Claudia Kerr Grose was full of news. Her daughter Carolyn will also be going to Middlebury this fall. Her daughter Kim is a sophomore at Horace Mann and is active in gymnastics and plays the flute. Claudia's husband had a well reviewed book, Israel in the Mind of America, published this year, and has just been made managing editor of Foreign Affairs magazine. Claudia is working in Gary Hart's campaign.

energies to the homefront and her two children, Nathan, 13, and Anna, 10.

Barbara Stone Smith is living in Charleston, SC and is very enthusiastic about her adopted city. She is branch manager of a bank. Barbara has one daughter, Maggie, 14.

Sue Mallory Roberts is working for Pan Am and was recently promoted to project leader of a group working on advance seat selection. Sue is enjoying her work very much and has found her management responsibilities to be interesting and challenging. Sue is looking forward to a business trip to the Far East in the fall. Sue's husband has recently set up a home photography business. The spring printing deadline is upon me, and still no word from 90% of you! I returned last night from Austin, Texas, where I spent three days at a software users group meeting. I had dreams while there that back in Portland little postcards from Abbot Rabbits were dropping into my mail chute. Imagine my disappointment when I found on my return only the usual stack of junk mail!

I owe special thanks to Ann Harris Furgerson who has put in a tremendous effort this past year-and-a-half to reach all members of our class. I trust you have received Ann's communiques and are aware that she is putting together an up-dated 1963 Abbot Directory with current addresses, "pursuits, passions, affiliations . . . careers" etc. Ann also has in her possession THE Binder, the results of her effort for a 100% participation reunion. The Binder contains photos, letters, collages, notes, pictures. . . and Ann will check it out to anyone who is interested. Ann's address is 9321 Chapman Ave. #1, Garden Grove, CA 92641.

Last February I struck gold — three letters from Abbot Rabbits. The first was from Jackie Van Aubel Janssens. She and husband Erick and sons Oliver and Gaeton had skied deep powder over the Christmas holidays as planned. When she wrote she was busy with a Marketing Management course that is part of the Master in Science Management program which Boston University offers in Brussels. She also was pursuing a possible job opportunity. She will be back in the States briefly during the summer for her brother's wedding in Seattle and plans to visit the North Cascades and Banff/Lake Louise before returning to Brussels.

Bettina Proske Walker wrote and enclosed a darling picture of Robert, Junior, who was almost one year old. He started walking at ten months, and Bea said life was QUITE busy, but that she is enjoying him immensely.

From Delaware came a long letter from my old roomie, Helen Watson Collison. Helen had hoped to join us at the 20th last June, but life was just too hectic in the Collison household and so instead, she was with us in spirit. Helen is still working for Digital Equipment on full assignment to DuPont, where she is in charge of the support center for 37 remote systems. Her oldest son Blaine is now 16 and driving himself and younger brother Chandler, 14, back and forth to school each day, and, beginning to think about . . . college. I'm sure that day will come only too soon for the Knoll family, but it still boggles my mind when I think of our progeny in high school and heading off to college!

Our big plan for the summer is to take Julie and Jessica (now nine and six) on a four-week car camping trip. We will get as far east as Chicago, taking the Canadian route out, and the Yellowstone route back. I vacillate, at times thinking it's a fantastic idea, then wondering if we've lost our sanity. I will report back in the fall!

I wish you all a relaxing and fun-filled summer. Send me a picture postcard along the way, and I will compile a "Summer Profile" of the Class of 1963 for the fall Bulletin.

Reunion Notes: The awards ceremony at the 20th Reunion Dinner ran so late that few, if any, newspapers that weekend carried the winners' names and the categories for which they were honored. Here, for those who missed it, are some of the honorees of a hot and humid 8-10 June at Andover.

First to Arrive: Tony Bryant, Toronto, Ontario. By coincidence, the runner-up was also from Toronto: Steve Harker.

Last to Arrive: Al Look, West Tisbury, MA, who waded into Saturday dinner looking like a spiffy Thor Heyerdahl off his raft.

Hardest to Recognize: (tie) Sandy Greene (edges rounded off), Destin, FL, and Gary MacElhiney (a bigger stick), Hartford, CT.

Least Changed: George Bush, Midland, TX.

Least Confusing Twins: Nat (who made it) and Bill (who paid but didn't show) Semple, Washington, DC.

Briefest Appearances: John Gage and Skipper Lee, who commuted together from New York for the Saturday cocktail hour only.

Best Athletes (Despite the heat): L.E. Sawyer, Midland, TX, put in two days of running, and Tom Seligson, NYC, played tennis both days and ran with Sawyer and Randy Roden on Saturday.

Best Sports: The wives of '64.

You're right: at about this point those in attendance fell asleep (despite the noise from the Class of '74), and the other classmates never found out what they won. In all, sixty of us, a quarter of our class, showed up for part or all of the weekend and we were joined by more than fifteen of our contemporaries from Abbot. As you can see from our rather compressed class reunion picture, the school was surprised by such a showing.

Tony Sapienza, who did all the work and made the weekend happen, kept the Taylor Hall Common Room fully stocked with booze, soft drinks, ice and background music. That was the headquarters for drinking and rapping both nights, and for the kids to watch cartoons Saturday morning, after Messrs. Cowan and Sawyer finally went to bed. The 95-degree heat, plus John Axelrod's hospitality, turned the Sheraton Rolling Green — with air conditioning and two swimming pools — into our second headquarters as well as Sunday morning brunch site. When your correspondent finally departed at 2 p.m. on Sunday, Dan Cooper, Sean Kennedy, Randy Roden and Axelrod were ensconced in the Gazebo, laying plans for the 25th.

For many, the weekend began with gin and tonics Friday at the cocktail hour hosted by Scotty Royce. Dave Mason, one of the minority without spouse or date, helped break the ice with our Abbot friends, while Hugh West became the first of quite a few dear old friends whom I recognized by reading their name tags.

The school provided two picnics — a chicken barbecue on Flagstaff Court Friday night, and a delicious salad buffet Saturday noon under the Bell Tower. The latter was the appropriate setting for the arrival of our carillonneur-of-old, Dick Howe.

Four members of the New York contingent, Bill Matassoni, John McCullough, Jay Heard and Steve Learner, checked in at Saturday lunch, but at the same time we were saying goodbye to others, such as Peter Smith, who had a political appearance at a stock car rally and two commencement addresses in Vermont to fill the rest of his weekend.

Saturday afternoon was pool time for children, and Axelrod helped assorted parents beat the heat with complimentary poolside strawberry diaquiris. Clay Johnson, out of Dallas heat and into the frying pan, borrowed Almquist's sneakers for tennis, while Houstonian Henry Hobson commandeered volleyball equipment from the athletic department in case the heat wave snapped, which it didn't.

Howie Cutler, representing the arts, visited the Ivan Chermayeff exhibit at the Addison Gallery. Was it Don Grinberg who brought a Pot Pourri to the Taylor Common Room for us to leaf through — and for Randy Elkins, whose name was on the cover, to claim if he showed up? (Twenty years later, incidentally, the senior poll in that book rings remarkably true.)

At our class meeting we failed to elect Class Agents, but we did vote against ties and jackets for our supposedly formal dinner Saturday night. A catered affair in Commons Upper Left, the dinner featured numerous mushroom dishes that sounded better in Larry Darby's New York law office when we picked the menu, capped by a flaming baked Alaska that was just right. Amid the potluck, some private reunions flourished by obvious prearrangements, including a dinner table of Jon Morey, John Craford and Bjorn Lange. After dinner, Jon Hay lit up a cigar, which made him — is that possible? — the only smoker of the weekend.

There was a disco in the hockey rink and a swing band in the cage, but more people felt like talking. Marv Kendrick's wife, Kathy, noted that cliques had formed that evening, but I suspect that was due to the accumulating size of our gathering and long-buried habits revived by having to choose a table in Commons.

On Sunday morning John Volk and I discussed world hunger as we drove to Axelrod's feast ("the chocolate cake," he insisted), where we caught up with Bob Nahill between his rounds and had the pleasure of meeting our new headmaster, Don McNemar. Visits to and from former teachers who looked the same — Regan, Krumpke, Edmonds, McKee, Hulburd, etc. — made us feel young. It was only on leaving, when we met a headmaster our age, that some of us started to feel that years had quietly slipped by.

And by way of belated apology to all the charming, friendly and understanding wives, mothers and traveling companions, who were very much a part of our weekend, but whom I have had to bypass for the cruellest of space reasons, I will report the warm feeling I received from a cheery goodbye from Pam Gallagher as I prepared to return to New York. Pam had held together two children and a husband named Paul from the first gathering Friday to the final function Sunday.

Tony and I hope you all had fun and are looking forward, as we are, to another reunion, even bigger and better, in 1989.

Reunion Notes: It is a phenomenon, something like comets, that every five years brings together a brief conjunction of forces of brilliance and darkness. For a moment these forces receive all attention, before passing on into another long period of silence and distance. This phenomenon is known as the Class Reunion. The Andover '69 Fifteenth this year was one brief weekend, and for me it had the quality of watching something very extraordinary on a warm summer's night.

Who was part of this? I'm sure I'm about to forget more than one person. You have my apologies, but you already know that you did not go unnoticed. In fact, a very large number of you who were not even there did not go unnoticed. Many of you were conjured and missed.

Paul Tittmann received an award. Of all the people from all the reunion classes, Paul had travelled farthest — arriving from Hong Kong where he is busy in the trading business. Crosby Kemper couldn't make it. Word is that he and Kate are teaching somewhere in China.

But a surprising number of folks made it from far away. Architect John Malick, now of Skidmore, Owings and Merrill's SF office, was there. Seattle sent sporting goods person Lock Miller, and also Carl "Soapy" Williams. Carl and his wife, Lydia, are running their own clothing stores, and are expanding into mail order. Tad Brockie and his wife, Kathleen, are recent West Coast transplants who are now living in NJ. Tad has started his own business — insurance brokerage of a specialized sort. I think. I hope Tad and others will forgive if some of the details are a little off. It was a weekend when it was easier to carry a beer than a pen.

From Houston came developer John Knapp, who, over the years, has been doing such tough and outstanding work raising dollars for the school. Boss fund raiser Nate Cartmell who last year billed over 3,000 hours for his law firm (all legit) couldn't make it from SF. He called me a week beforehand, and I think I heard young Nathaniel IV gurgling in the background.

Also from Houston came oil man Whitt Cline and his wife, Mellie. Without getting too rhapsodic, I do want to say that being with Whitt and Mellie — and it was only brief, a picnic dinner, a few stray moments — was exactly the sort of experience that made the weekend so worthwhile for me. There is nothing like seeing someone from long ago and finding him, and his spouse, to be thoughtful, interested, kind.

Let it just be said that there were some very decent people present for the weekend. Again and again I was impressed with how mature people seemed. Not stuffy, but alive and grounded.

Rick Stewart brought his blonde brood of four from Iowa, and Jeff Kilbreth and his wife, Gail, were there with their kids. Lots of very beautiful children were there. A comic moment occurred when Charlie Kitteredge, with two or three kids in tow, dashed out of nowhere into the class picture. Then, as far as I could tell, he disappeared again. Back to Vermont, perhaps, where Mark Snelling has, among many other things, been learning about the plumbing of antique houses. My own work as an apprentice plumber seems to be largely responsible for making this past year my most satisfying in a long time. It's too bad the trades don't have more social legitimacy, because I think many "educated" people could find a good life within them.

One case in point might be John Hosken, who was recently featured in TV ads for Boston Magazine as "The Harvard-Trained Auto Mechanic." John looked wise and healthy. His wife, Nancy, gets my vote for appearing in the tee-shirt with the most controversial reunion aphorism: "He Who Has The Most Things When He Dies, Wins."

At the dinner on Saturday night, Rev. Chuck Jones gave a thoughtful invocation. Jessie Leuenberger Butler AA '69 read just about the funniest and most poignant poem you could imagine about the travails of the Andover/Abbot, male/female relationship. Computer man Jeremy Bluhm gave a little talk on the nature of success, and his thoughts were seconded by banker Doug Griggs.

I missed the softball game, but the consensus was that the MVP was the Army's Andy Raymond out of Ft. Dix. A close second was NY banker Bill Schink's wife, Renee. Somehow I have the impression that DC environmentalist Steve Parcells had a lot of hustle out there on the infirmary field.

There were many people you just didn't get enough time to talk with. Ben Gruber, sinewy and strong, is still running and working in computers. I believe I saw one of the Pfeifles there one night. Drs. Roger and Marilyn Steinert were there, yet I never got to ask how Roger's mom is. Hello, Mrs. Steinert. Another local boy turned MD is Rick Randazzo, now of New Haven, but we missed seeing Irv Heifitz who, when last heard from, was practising at U. Mass. Medical in Worcester. Worcester was also the scene, that very weekend, where Jim Shannon won the state Democratic Party's endorsement for U.S. Senator. What an extraordinary and deserved achievement. I think Jim's going to be one of the great ones. His next hurdle is the Democratic Primary in September, followed, I expect, by a victory over Republican Elliot Richardson in November. Stay tuned.

The political activist who was there was Howard Lim, who runs U.S. Senator D'Amato's NYC office. Also arrived from NY was Peter Gallett, who works for the phone company, has written an opera, and looks like he could be the finest flamenco dancer in all the boroughs. When Bill Spitz is not directing research for a Manhattan investment bank, he's at home in Connecticut — a home where much of the renovation work was done with his own hands, and hands which also build models of schooners and other elegant ships. National Public Radio's Alex Van Oss stayed at my place one night following the weekend, and he showed me some remarkably delicate ceramic work done by Wayne Barron, who teaches at Milton Academy and spends part of his free time sailing Boston Harbor. Teaching up in NH is parent Howie Murphy, the head of a public school's science department. While the Boston Celts were defeating LA, Howie sat by the tube and proved that Johnny Most should step aside as the world's most partisan sports commentator.

Scott Dalrymple is busy in the construction and renovation business in Boston. From Ohio came photographer and medical student Craig Copeland. Fred Adair is a consultant near Boston, and Henry Dieterich of Ann Arbor writes for Catholic periodicals and has also been doing some TV production. Chicago's Dave Marshman is, I think, in the retail clothing business, but what I recall most is his sincerity and curiosity. Seeing Dave was another of those only-at-reunion epiphanies. The thought: I wish there was a way to spend more time with this very fine man. And Jim Hearty, sporting a relaxed-looking straw hat, is about to become a dad. Jim is now VP for bonds at Bank of Boston, and at our class meeting was elected by acclamation as the person to run our future fund raising efforts. Bill Fuller, ever animated and energetic, will be teaching Russian History at Harvard beginning this fall. I'll do a small stint teaching there in the writing program over the summer.

To all of you, thanks for being there. Reunions, like comets, have at times been experienced as terrifying occurrences. May I speak for us all and say that ours was bright and quiet and inspiring. Shine on.

Reunion Notes: Our reunion was a great time to greet old friends from Abbot, as well as a chance to make new friends from PA. Interestingly, only the PA alums brought families with them!

The weekend was a busy one with receptions, picnics, softball, dancing, etc. It was only by skipping some of these events that one had a chance to walk into town (yes, Yankee Lady and the Andover Bookstore are still there) or to read the Phillipian. Those who came were: Barbara Allen, who is an arts fund raiser at MIT and is also an avid sailor with her husband; Janie Heifitz, neighbor of Peggy Howes, who works with mentally disturbed youngsters; one-year newlywed of sexy Dan Gilbert, Alice Petree who lives in Arlington, VA where she is VP in Dan's financial consulting business. Alice and Dan recently returned from a five-month honeymoon in the Pacific. Mother of two gorgeous kids, Lindsay Whitcomb was there. Lindsay is a real estate associate of luxury estates in NY and is married to her "mad, mad Argentine," Stephen Habiague. Nancy Ettele is an environmental engineer living in Hanover, MA with her two daughters. Former teacher, Sara Gray Stockwell, Jessie Leuenberger Butler, and I, Dale Woods Dingleline, a former interior designer, are all busy at home raising the next generation of sensitive, perceptive, intelligent children. Bettye Huhn AA'70 also stopped by because she remembered our class fondly and just wanted to see us.

Saturday also brought Julie Stichnoth Truelove, who is now an independent CPA, trying to work around the schedules of her two children, ages three years and nine months. Julie brought Frankie Hoff with her from the Boston area. Frankie is involved in the architecture department at Harvard. Carol Loebel Kinzler, a management consultant, and Madelon Curtis Finnegan both came for the dinner Saturday. Madelon is a dancing instructor at PA who delights in revealing to her students that she is an Abbot grad. An aspiring actress, Madelon is on her way to Hollywood to try out for Marine Power. Mary Schiavoni Wnek regaled us with her stories of sailing around the world.

The Friday p.m. meeting was spent reminiscing. Do you remember these Abbot traditions? Food: heavenly goo, Anadama bread, floating island pudding, steamed pudding and hard sauce, Abbot bananas, Sunday luncheon ice cream. Ritual of the Re-past: singing grace, announcements, table assignments, Shennango plates. Places: Baronial, Crane's Beach, Suicide Hill, Maple Walk, Sacred Circle, approved walks. Class: banners hung in McKean auditorium, sweater, ring ceremony in Draper courtyard. Occasions: Gargoyle-Griffin field days, snow day, Abbot Bazaar, vespers and white dresses. Other: Sr. advisors, morning chapel and Sunday PA services, gifts of flowers in mailboxes, and "O Abbot Beautiful."

It was fun to share all of this with our PA counterparts who were unaware of the richness of our lives at the little school down the hill.

Later, all of our yearbooks and even the '69 Pot Pourri were brought out, much to everyone's delight. Many of us, AA and PA, stayed up that night playing what we called "Stump the Class Secretaries." What we found out about the rest of you will appear in the next issue of the Bulletin.

One of the highlights of Saturday was the Abbot Tea at Morton House (now a dorm). Vivacious Jean St. Pierre, Mary Minard, Shirley Ritchie, Carolyn Goodwin, Dorothy Judd, and the indefatigable Jane Sullivan were there. I called Mlle. Baratte, who loves teaching in town, and Don Gordon, who also lives in Andover. He regretted not being able to attend because of son Jamie's graduation (now I DO feel older). All faculty sent their deep-felt affection and asked after many of you.

Finally, I'm sure many of you are wondering about the Abbot campus. It is depressing and deeply painful to see Draper and McKean virtually abandoned, being used for storage. However, what is alive is the Abbot name and spirit, as exemplified in graduation's prestigious Madame Sarah Abbot Award, the substantial Abbot Wing addition to the gym, the ebullient Abbot Bazaar and the Abbot Academy Association which has high impact with the grants it bestows. So, our Abbot "of the mind and spirit" is alive and thriving, and I suppose, proves that there is, indeed, life after death. If any of you have feelings/ideas you'd like to express concerning the Abbot campus, please share them with me.

That's about it (did I mention skinny-dipping Saturday night?). It was a wonderful and active weekend marked by a sincere concern for one another and whether we found our lives meaningful, fulfilling and happy.

I'm thrilled to be your new Class Secretary and thank Sandy Waugh Winans for her capable job as past Secretary. As many of you know, my method of communication is usually via AT&T, so don't be surprised if and when you hear my voice over the wire. . . much love to each of you. Ciao.

Almost 15 years have passed since our last tearful look at the Bell Tower through the rear window of a loaded station wagon. Personally, my net worth has shown little improvement since that day, but I look forward to seeing how many of you turn out for our reunion next June. One of the greatest reasons for coming will be for the chance to select a new Class Secretary — someone with new ideas. Or perhaps even to run for the office! Remember, however, that the corporation will not accept any proxy votes. More information on the reunion will be forthcoming, so please keep your schedule open for the second weekend in June, 1985.

Down here in Florida, Laura and Nick Leone enjoyed a tremendous, shining reception following their wedding in Hollywood last February. A large group of family and friends arrived from all parts for the celebration. The Leone's now live in Bonaventure, FL.

Last fall, Jim Munroe was appointed the priest-in-charge of St. John's Episcopal Church in Northampton, MA. Jim had spent four years on the staff of the Grace Church in Manhattan, after serving with the Marines in Vietnam and studying theology in England and Virginia.

Brian Clark, at last word, played a doctor on General Hospital. . . . Peter Cahill is completing his residency at Columbia Presbyterian in New York. . . . Peter McCallum has been proffered a vice-presidency at the Bunge Corp., also in New York. . . . Walter Snickenberg was married last fall. He is the head of personnel for the commercial Union Assurance Co., and lives in Brookline, MA. . . . Elmer Rynne, up in Lowell, manages his family's sporting goods business. . . . Steve "Rhino" Marshall is a white-shoed real estate man in Atlanta. . . . Richard White became VP and Manager of the New England office of Security Pacific in Boston. . . . Steve Taylor '69 serves as director of information systems at the Boston Globe.

Leca and Chip Boynton had a second child while they were busy moving both home and office over to Needham, MA. Chip went to last year's Harvard-Yale game with Norm Selby and Burr Tweedy, and in the Yale '74 tent they chatted with Peter Kibbe, now a practitioner of medicine in Hartford.

Rich Samp has been still another attorney in Washington for several years. He is actively involved in attempts to bring baseball back to the Capital. He writes that he sometimes sees such fellow Washingtonians as Steve Samuels, David Cohen, Chris Tow, and Norton Cutler. Rich worked on the Andover Phonathon last spring, and I am indebted to him for providing the following news from his evening on the phone: Rob MacIver practices real estate law in Philadelphia. Jeff Rosenzweig is a criminal lawyer in Little Rock. Both Milt Gearing and Ernie Lange are doctors. Milt works in Dallas, while Ernie lives in the Adirondacks. George Rutherford is a member of a Baltimore law firm.

John Tolan lives near San Jose, and has a two-year-old child. . . . Rhys Townsend teaches art history at Clark University. . . . Dan Craig is a key member of Senator Inouye's staff in Washington; and Craig Nordeen is an engineer for Deere and Co. in Cedar Rapids. . . . Rob Christie runs a fuel reprocessing company in Houston. . . . Nick Harris is an oil geologist in Oklahoma. . . . Dave Sagaser got married in May, and works for an insurance company in Schaumburg, IL. And finally, Steve Vine was changing diapers when Rich called.

A brief public service announcement — the Alumni Office classifies Steve Anderson, Blair Kitching, Joe Leonardi, Bill Newman, Charles Peck, and Levi P. Smith as "lost alumni." Their addresses would be greatly appreciated.

I do hope to see many of you Yankees next June. In the meantime, preppers like Chip Boynton should come down for the Gator-Georgia game, to see how the sport can be played.

Please make a note of my new address.

Class of 1970:

Alas, I am late sending this new in so please bear with me — this is going to be a bit terse. Here's the news: Lisa Sweitzer has moved to Portland, ME where she is working for the CBS affiliate, reporting and anchoring the weekend news at WGME-TV. Pam Huttenberg Bergin reports that she and her husband, Brent, are really enjoying Hong Kong. Pam is working for Arthur Anderson as a consultant and has been traveling to Thailand, Singapore and Malaysia often on business. She highly recommends the Far East and encourages anyone visiting the area to give her a call. On the other side of the world, is Prissi Sandford-Wade in London. Prissi is currently an AVP at Morgan-Guaranty doing ship financing. Happily, her job takes her to interesting parts of the world, including a two day cruise in the Caribbean! Prissi got together with Chris Steele last fall but it was not reported where the meeting took place. It's to be hoped that Chris got a fun trip out of it! Returning from distant places is Nina Salam who is back in Boston after spending three years in Switzerland working for an international aviation organization. In Boston, Nina is working for Middle East Airlines, the national carrier of Lebanon. Not surprisingly, Nina's job has been hectic of late with her office acting as travel/ticket agent, social services, diplomatic affairs, communications and information bureau, etc., etc. Other at-home news comes from Sylvia Joseph Galambos who is currently a post-doctoral fellow in the Dept. of Psychology at Yale University. Sylvia's husband recently became an Exec. VP of an educational software company, CompuTeach. That's really it for the news. Hope to hear from more of you in the future. Have a great summer.

Pierce Rafferty writes that he has settled in Manhattan, "After travelling with Atomic Cafe, the movie I made with my brother, [Kevin '65] and partner Jayne Loader. My latest project is a film and video archive. There's room for some fairly strange items: I'd especially appreciate Fred Pepin as a two-year old, or Chris Gardella as a budding teenager." Both sure hits: contact Pierce at POB 438, Canal Street Station, NY, NY 10013 (phone 212-966-6561). Also in New York, Doug Buxton is a resident at New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, his first of three years there. Sam Coleman writes, "Joined First Boston's Merger and Acquisition Dept. after Tuck School, where the legend of Rick "Fred" Pepin lives on. Bryant Seaman is also at First Boston, doing international deals. Tom Foley and Steve Sherrill can be found squiring elegant ladies by night, and no-name companies by day, as teammates at Citicorp's Venture Capital Group (aka The Andover Club). Peter Sachs recently started his own architectural firm, which he runs from his apartment in Soho. Saw Dave Winton in Raoul's; he's "making movies and advertisements."

Chien Lee notes that he has moved back to Hong Kong to take part in the family business there. He resigned from Morgan Stanley after four years in the Corporate Finance Department.

Fred Johnson and Jennifer have moved East from Dallas to take advantage of further opportunities with Pepsico. He attended an alumni/admissions get-together in Dallas which was an example of "Academic Easterner meets Oilpatch Westerner — quite a show!"

Tom Chamberlin works in the lumber business in New Hampshire. He lives in Exeter, while his wife, Patience, is expecting a child, their second.

In the way of antique lumber comes Jim

Bakker (370 Broadway, Cambridge). He's recently opened an antique shop in Cambridge, MA.

Maybe it's the squeak in the wooden floors, or else it's the smell of leather and wood that reminds me of our academic days gone by. But sitting here in the Harvard Club in Manhattan composing these notes I could almost feel as if I were in Oliver Wendell Holmes Library again.

But instead I am here in this bastion, shielded from the city outside, whiling away the minutes before my early morning meeting; searching for the words that will best tell you the stories of our lives. I want you to hear the bells chime in May when Sandy Reynolds marries David Lawrence Wasco in Santa Barbara. But of course, the honeymoon will long be over by the time you receive this missive.

We went canoeing the other night with Joy Beane Brieant's husband, Charlie. Two little three-year-olds, my husband, Charlie, and me . . . running the Croton River during high tide pulling through the white water ripples, paddling easily through the calm. The herring is out now, and the bass and pickerel. All the while, Joy was putting in yeoman hours in Brooklyn trying to codify the legal opinions developed in the Agent Orange case. A case that will make its mark in the history books. While not canoeing or working, Charlie and Joy are starting to build their own home in the woods near the Hudson River in Ossining, NY.

Then there's Karen Awad Tyler, who, with husband, Kel (a Bowdoin graduate), have already gone through the process of building an "English country cottage" in Lyme, Connecticut and are now in the trying phase of "decorating." Karen has channeled her degree in zoology from Connecticut College into a position at Yale Medical School where she is responsible for lab experiments related to kidney research.

Marna Parke Borgstrom is also in New Haven, working in strategic and facilities planning for Yale-New Haven Hospital. . . . Liz Padjen admits to working too hard. Probably a common complaint of those of us approaching or having reached 30. In her position as a Massachusetts architect, Liz has been designing banks, libraries, colleges, and she expresses a new-found interest in urban design.

Kris Brainerd Innes, still a banker, says she would like to win a lottery, retire and make babies. Of course this attitude can be traced directly to one cherub who is nearly three feet tall and 24 pounds, and who has her parents eating out of her hands.

Ah, babies. Even Debby Roth has one: a December baby named Sarah. Mother Roth lives in Valatie, just outside of Albany, NY. . . . Rumor has it that even Lynn Graham Goldberg has begat a progeny. Meanwhile, Kathy Snowden has graduated from Law School and is in Miami, Florida, working for the District Attorney's office. And about a year ago Gayle Biddle married Navy Ensign Charles Swicker, a navigator. She's now a southern belle, living in Grafton, Virginia; that is when she's in town. You see, following in the family tradition, Gayle is Chief Mate or First Officer on the schooner Westward, an oceanographic research vessel that sails from Woods Hole, Mass. The ship spends its summers in Canadian waters and its winters in the Caribbean. Not a bad life.

By the way, Elly Mish did it. She completed her thesis, it was approved and she is now the proud recipient of a Masters of Art in the History of Museum Studies from prestigious Cooperstown. The degree coupled with a new home and new job has Elly set to meet the challenges of 1984. As Registrar at the Astoria (Queens) Motion Picture and Television Foundation in New York, Elly catalogs and monitors all the artifacts the museum acquires relating to the history of television and film, including such things as set models, designs, posters, costumes, props, photographs and technical equipment. Although working in the Big Apple, Elly lives near the salt water in Cos Cob, Connecticut. (New phone no. (203)622-0215.) Meanwhile, I hear that Jess Straus is exhibiting her painted and carved small wooden sculptures in a gallery in Boston. And Rosalind Munro lives in the sunny climes of Corona del Mar, California, as she puts it "geologizing on the West Coast between Orange and Los Angeles counties." Roz takes her registration exam this fall, and is practicing by skiing, taking ballet, and studying the computer. (New address: 619½ Begonia, Corona del Mar, CA 92625.)

Sally Jo Gilbert gave a classical piano recital in Seattle . . . Joanne Mosca Watson is free lancing in radio, working for WSSH, a Greater Boston soft-hits station, and for a syndicated radio magazine called Radio New England broadcast on about 80 stations in the Northeast. With a new puppy named Samantha and fellow anchorman/reporter/husband, Bill, Joanne reports life is quite good . . . Linda Rawson and her husband, Charles Harrison, are looking for a New York City loft to live in. And I am still exploring the Wall Street world having left the "security" of my marketing position at Chemical Bank and formed my own company Cooper Associates, offering marketing/strategic planning and finance brokerage.

You know, it's only at a place like the Harvard Club that you would find, as I did today, a doorman chuckling over the current New Yorker magazine cartoons. I guess special places attract special personalities.

Until next season . . .

Gents:

I recently found a piece of paper crumpled up in my suit pocket with notes of a conversation I had last September with Geoff Aronow. I was then visiting DC on official business, and I think the smog was so bad that my only thought was to have the suit dry cleaned as soon as possible. And so, Arnow's report smells like formaldehyde, but the news is still good.

Geoff's now working an eighty hour week for Ben Lacovara, Esq. (of Watergate Committee infamy) and getting paid well for it. He says he had to live with Dave King all through his stint at Yale Law, while Dave was in grad school for theater. King is teaching theater at Colorado College, and writes that he is fast becoming fond of Republican candidates nation-wide because they remind him of Andover.

Also, Geoff reports that Russ Selby got married in NYC last year and was at Brooklyn Law — no reports on the outcome of that endeavor.

I also spoke with Jeff Howard, now in love again, and a full-fledged architect with Cooper, Lecki (malaproped by Russ Perry '72 as Kooky Leper).

The only guy so far to return one of my PA postcards is Brooks Bloomfield, who proudly eschews any notion of a legitimate vocation, as he continues to teach skiing and cook at Park City, Utah. He claims, somewhat apologetically, that he will soon receive a degree in elementary education from U. Utah, and invites us all to stay as long as we want for free: P. O. Box 1624, Park City 84060.

Ted Harshman, long-time incommunicado, summarizes his entire ten year hiatus in one Paragraph: He went to Haveford, failed a math course, dropped out, goofed off, graduated from Harvard Extension, blew-off computer programming, got into med school, fell in love and got engaged. That's landing on your feet, Ted.

Dave Victor sent a news clipping from a Portland, ME paper that he was married last 6 August in Mercer Island, WA to Laura Rogers of Bellevue (WA, not hospital), a stockbroker with the old-fashioned firm. The headline in the Maine Sunday Telegram reads that he married "on West Coast." That's getting your feet wet, Dave.

Bill Robinson is annoyed that the Bulletin had ignored his letter for five years, but sends a cheery note from Denton, TX. He has refused to permit spinal arthritis to keep him from composing piano concertos, electronic music and "predicates." Physics, math, yin/yang and enthiogens [sic] are the secrets to his spiritual prosperity. Thanks for the letter, Bill!

Frank Sandler wishes to claim that he travelled all the way from Australia to attend one day of the Tenth, and wants an award. We'll give you another oar at the 15th, Frank. Mark Loo, call him, 602-623-1239.

The following classmates get credit for fraternal alumnity, civic honor and appreciation of a good letter: Lawson Fisher and Christine are rebuilding an old house in San Francisco; are reportedly on the verge of blows. He fiddles with robots programmed by his college classmates. Dave Swanson dropped in on him, but I'll let Dave tell the story, when he writes. Bob Bonaparte moved from a law firm I can't spell to Ross, Dixon & Masback in DC; Jesse Watson sends greetings in brown ink from somewhere (I lost the card); Alan Senior sends his best from Houston and invited all to call him collect, 713-780-0043. Will Schutte will be at my wedding this weekend (5/12/84), and will throw a fundraiser in the Apple for me — see you there. Walter Bukawyn responds generously from Jackson Hts., presumably meeting with great success in his endeavors.

Steve Harding cost me $.72 for a good laugh. I'm going to send him a billboard, C.O.D.

THANKS A MILLION, YOU GUYS!

Last time I reported Abbot news, I got reprimanded by McCabe, but Jane Pugh Perrett assumed that name 3/20/82, and boasts no children except a cock-a-poo she and hubby call "son." Perhaps my Abbot '73 counterpart can explain that, and also tell Jane where the envelopes are.

I have to go knock on doors.

The script for this quarter's drama was again, largely ghost written. This time it was during a coast-to-coast phone call with George Ireland of New York City fame. I think he's still waiting for me to call him back for other news. While these remarks will be old news for those of us who attended the reunion, they may inspire the unfortunates who found themselves in the unwilling or unable to go categories. George reported that Jean Frazer-Price is a newly-minted corporate lawyer in Texas. Lisa Hockmeyer teaches skiing in Colorado, Kent Vogel is a prospective fighter pilot, Steve Cassetta trades bonds for one of my competitors. Earl Killian is starting a software company in Boston, Steve Brody keeps busy at Western Union in NJ, Wally Corwin sails at Marblehead, Ann Randazzo is a DA in Lawrence MA, Nate Lee does advertising in Chicago, Jon Day does consulting for non-profit institutions there too, Howard Sklar is an electrical engineer, Dave Doyle is happily married in Brighton, MA, Peter Kapetan is in Zorba, Nancy Brisson Goracy is a new mommy (Matthew), Carl Harig is a banker in Providence, Libby Yoakum is an artist in Spain, George Lobsenz works for AP in DC, Nina Lanzillo-Leach is happily married in NJ, John Ralston teaches at University of Colorado, Denver. Linda Gifford is happily married and in the cranberry business, Joe Mazza is a prospective plastic surgeon in Florida, Kathleen Keesling does taxes at Peat Marwick, Dave Bauman is in the middle of BU Law, Patricia Sawin studies anthropology at UT Austin, Claudia Rullman studies natural resources at Cornell, Trigger Cook has another child on the way, Bob Treuhold is busy teaching law at the U. of Singapore, John MacWilliams does the real thing at Davis Polk, Priscilla Martel cooks dinners for the Peter Curries at her new restaurant, Adam Lerner is an MD in Boston, Caitlin Cofer-Rotchford is happily married in NJ, Peter Anderson has a byline in Nathrop, CO., and Ann Blumberg analyses political risks in NYC.

The mailbag fairly bulged this time compared with the meager flow I'd grown accustomed to seeing. Ted Maynard wrote of his happy departure from law school for the reunion circuit. Katherine Beck Moses left her vegetable farm for more of the same at the last Andover-Exeter game, where she saw Louisa Mackintosh and Sue McFarlane. Jorge Sanchez is busy adding to his family in So. Florida. He asks about Felix Padial, Charles Torres and Roberto Mirandu. Tom Lenagh returned from Thailand's opium dens long enough to go drinking with Bob Trehy in NYC. Steve Mayo wrote of Jim Troup's wedding and his work in real estate development. Will Noel will take his SMU JD/MBA to a Houston law firm this fall. Leslie Howland put the life style equations together in sunny San Diego and married a mathematician down there. Lucy Whittemore-Burke still "summers" (her word) in Edgartown, when not teaching kindergarten in Holyoke. David Cauty just missed seeing Steven Trott during his Bermuda honeymoon.

Thomas C. Lenagh '74 and Scott McIsaac '74 chat with former Headmaster Theodore Sizer

Steve is working on an MD at McGill and David is working on "enlarging the family." Bill Cunliffe teaches jazz at CSU in Ohio and just cut an album with his jazz group.

Mary-Louise Hunt Clary is happily married in St. Paul, where she does special education research. Christopher White is now a biologist and just published a book on the Chesapeake Bay. Diane Aigler runs a gourmet shop in Boston. Jeanne M.K. thinks Salem is neat and says she just saw Katie Gass-Walker and Amy Erlanger Folkman. "Katie lives in Stowe and Amy does a variety of sports." Sara Wedeman is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Pennsylvania, where her specialty is psychology. Val Corning-Spencer just had a child in suburban Minneapolis. Congratulations.

At least ten standard deviations beyond the range of credulity is the wonderful news of Steve Miller's impending marriage. From the PA bell tower Steve vaulted to the academic stratosphere as a teacher at Carnegie Mellon business and engineering schools. And so the torch is passed to a new generation, and over and over . . . Look for reunion notes in the fall issue.

Wedding bells continue to ring around the country for '75ers. Stephen Bache and his bride since 14 May, Sara, will be residing in LA. Stephen will be a securities analyst. George Kirchwey, living in Dallas, is married over a year now to Judy Rosenberg. His wedding was attended by Cecily Harshman, Carl Kehm and Peter Roome. By this time, George probably has established himself with a dog, a car and a lawn mower. Bert Garry and his bride, Ann Cahill, are living in Portland, ME. Rich Cotten was married in October '83 to Leann Billups of San Antonio, TX. Holland Sutton, Dave Scott, Wayne Darner and John Bishop were in attendance for cerveza fria, margaritas and free burritos.

Clarendon Masters is Andover's Alumni Representative in Bermuda and works as a corporate loan financial analyst at Field Bank. Mary Washburn is at Union Theological in New York. Steve Bretoi is in Flower Mound, Texas, working for United Technologies — Mostek, after receiving his BSE and MBA. Holly Vickers has one more year to go on her MBA from BC.

Susan Peters is just out of BU Law School and will be clerking for a justice on the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

That's all for now. Next June will be our Tenth. We need a volunteer Reunion Chairman as Denver is too far for me to be of much use. Drop me a line if you're interested.

Winter has indeed passed, the leaves are returning to the trees here in Essex County, and your scribe is again pushing pen to paper with news from four corners of your '76 classmates. Where to begin with such snippets? Pam Schwartz was sworn in as an attorney here in Lawrence in February — she will join her father's general practice and continue to work with the Lawrence Human Rights Committee, of which Pam is currently president. Adam Rosenthal has been living and working in Utah for a couple of years, but does manage to combine business with pleasure on frequent trips through Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, Utah, and Arizona.

Adith Cheosakul has combined a Cornell M.S. Engineering with an NYU MBA. I hope that by next issue I know more about how he's putting that combination to work. Konstantine "Prince" Prentakis is a lawyer with the Concord, MA firm of Nicholson and Liss. Howard Williams has completed his MD at the University of Virginia, and will proceed to Roanoke Memorial Hospital where he'll pursue an internship in internal medicine.

Martie Daniels was recently married to Cesar Vergara de LaHoz V, whom, one can assume from the newspaper clipping announcing the wedding, she met while a Latin American Studies major at Cornell. Martie and Cesar are living in Munich.

As always, Felix Murdoch, who almost certainly prefers Michael by now, writes with all kinds of news from Chicago, the windy city. He joined the alumni group on their trip to the Soviet Union last summer — and came about as close to smuggling precious Russian icons and lacquer boxes out of the country as a starving capitalist could get to Chernenko's luncheon table — not too. He's working with Chicago alumni in the formation (reformation?) of that regional alumni association.

Extensive news comes from an anonymous New York member of the class of '76 — I must quote, despite warnings from the mysterious source: "Pedro Rodriguez works for Chemical Bank serving small and medium sized businesses in Queens. He reports that he goes to Studio 54 often. Michael Gottsegen is getting a Ph.D at Columbia in Political Science. Ben Rockefeller works at Entre Computer Store outside of Boston. There he specializes in retail trade and real estate software programming. Mark Fraker works at Bankers' Trust credit department analyzing financial institutions. He is quite social. During the summer he hosted many large . . . parties on the roof of his 35 floor, 95th East apartment building . . . Thornton Lewis, Morgan Stanley's wunderkind, is a government bonds arbitrageur [whatever that is]. His life style tends toward new wave, but he is often seen dining in posh locations with his Morgan Bretheren. By the way, he works seven days a week.

"Brian Rivers recently moved to London with Shamrock Metals. There he trades a variety of non-ferrous metals . . . Brian also reports seeing Lynn Megan '75 working at Tiffany's and Julia Roe '77 . . . In addition he says Mike Aitken is married and working for an equities custodial firm near Wall Street.

"Lisa Barlow is supposed to be pursuing a career in professional photography. Dave Kufferman says that Lee Day is doing the same thing . . . Ann Ehrling has married and is living in Fort Worth, Texas . . . Betsy Killian is working for the Agency for International Development in Kigali, Rwanda . . . Her next assignment is Egypt. Adam Pool works for the Industrial Bank of Japan. I am told that he runs their group which specializes in telecommunications finance.

"Dave Kufferman is a structural engineer who specializes in the effects of explosions on buildings. Since the Beirut bombings he has been very busy. Carrie McDuffy is the lead singer in a band which has been touring the U.S. Sarah Mleccko runs the contemporary department of the Coe Kerr Gallery. She has had several very successful shows.

"Bart Partington sells international benefit packages for an insurance firm. He spends many weekends in New England going skiing, going to his house on Nantucket, or attending Volvo car-owners' get-togethers. Howard Phipps used to live in New York. His life is exotic. When last seen he had just returned from a month of diving off the world's second largest coral reef in Belize. He planned to head off to the Amazon shortly after that . . . Tim Draper is attending Harvard Business School after the enormous success of his board game called 'Stanford.'

"Rob Katayama is studying the flute in San Francisco. Where are you: Mitch Moore, Vicki Cartier, Kate Heller, Pam Bacher, Bay Roberts, Lou Patkin, Jeff Ruben, David Durkee, Boo Wilson?"

Sorry, source under deep cover. I simply couldn't take responsibility for all that info, hence the quotation marks. I trust my editorial liberties have lifted any clues as to your identity.

Other news wending its way toward PA: Heather White is running her own company, The Pacific Trade Group, importing from Taiwan. She tells of Dan Hemminger's position as Executive Editor of Asia Business magazine. Heather indicates that Peggy Dolgenos is working with Dan. Jandy Anderson and Barky Penick were in San Francisco to attend Heather's February wedding to Alexander Hiam. Peggy also flew in from Taiwan.

Final notes are from Richard L. Phillips, another engineer/MBA working out of Tulsa. He's been establishing the sport of crew on the Arkansas River, and last fall staged a United States Rowing Association Race. ESPN was there to cover the "most heavily attended rowing event in the history of United States rowing." Watch out, Head of the Charles. Rick's been catering "outrageous parties in Tulsa and the western Oklahoma oil belt," and looking after family interests in the area.

Pam Eaton (also known as my wife) and I had dinner with Chip Haslun, Rob McCabe, and another member of our class who wishes to remain anonymous, at Rob's Ipswich home last April. Rob's working as an engineer with a Boston firm that has an Italian name, Chip is organizing the Olympic soccer game to be played this summer at Harvard. I caught myself reflecting on those spring weekends we'd take out there . . . and abruptly jumped ahead to our tenth reunion — coming in two measly years. I trust Pam and I will see many of you there — and hear from more of you in the meantime. My most sincere thanks to those who found time to write — even those who do so in secret. Please keep the information flowing.

News of the Class of '77 has been flowing in steadily from around the corner and around the world, and as the new class secretary I am taking advantage of my new duties to seek refuge from the pile of history essays waiting to be corrected and relay as much of the information as will fit in our allotted space. Although I am on the teaching end, many of us are still on the studying side of academia. Future lawyers include Susan Jameson (Cardozo), Michael Solovay and Pam Scott (Columbia), Jay McOsker (Suffolk), Lisa McGovern (Harvard), Charles Elson and Mareile Bayard (U. VA), and Fritz Thompson (Univ. of Missouri, Kansas City). So far the results show the medical profession to be even more alluring than the law; soon to be doctors are: Elizabeth Siderides and Rob Canning (Columbia), Jackie Bracy (Down State, Brooklyn), John Springer (Univ. of Minn., Duluth, after a Fulbright in chemistry at the Univ. of East Anglia, U.K.), Tim Husted (U. VA), Mike Somers (Brown — soon to be in NYC doing his residency in ophthalmology), Steve Swartz (Univ. of Ariz., Phoenix), John Vaughan (beginning this fall; where?), Lori Wroble Alexander (Lori and her husband, both in their third year, have been "let loose on the Boston hospitals"). Anthea Letsou is at Yale doing graduate work in science of some kind (what exactly is it, Anthea? Ellie is not very scientific), and Mark Krebs is at the Univ. of Wisconsin studying for a Ph.D. in biochemistry. Chris Ratte is on his way to a degree in archeology at Berkeley, and Ross Boyland is at Stanford working towards a Ph.D. in sociology. Chris Randolph is also in California studying (guess what?) drama, at UC San Diego. Bernard Crespi has an office at the Museum of Zoology at the University of Michigan — can we assume that you're studying? Business school has claimed Paige Sutherland and Chris Cole (Harvard) and Bill Yun (Tuck, at Dartmouth). Jerome Buttrick is preparing to build our future at Harvard's Graduate School of Design, and Meg Assoni is doing the same at Princeton's School of Architecture. Dave Henderson has spent the year in Venice as part of U. VA's architecture program (he remarked that his "first discovery was how much wine you can consume and still get work done." On that basis his buildings may resemble Italy's famous leaning tower). After serving time at Oberlin and the Univ. of Chicago, Tom Morse is at Rutgers studying micro-electronics. Merry Raymond's field of endeavor remains a mystery, but she's at Columbia. (What are you doing, Merry?) All we know about John Nordell is that he's at school in Cambridge, MA (What's the rest of the story, John?). Dave Buck is back at Cornell.

Tom Gibbons has really been making book, literally. He's received a law degree from the London School of Economics and plans to practice in Bermuda; between studying for the British and New York bar exams, he has published a cartoon book called The Book of "Y" — and he'd love to hear from anyone in publishing.

Perhaps Rab Ker who is working for the New Yorker — albeit on the business side — is Tom's man. Also in Atlanta is Bob Benner. The South has also captured The Phillippian's own Bill Cohan who is covering education for a newspaper in Raleigh, NC, and Billy Vitalis who is acting in a dinner theater in Virginia Beach. Jean Kennedy who is married and has been living in San Francisco is settling in New Orleans this summer. Chuck Brody is farther north selling personal computers in the DC area and living in Arlington, VA. Peter Stein travels to Europe frequently for his Philadelphia — based employer, a pharmaceutical company called Biotech.

New England still seems to hold the hearts of many PAers. ChaCha Hartwell is in Portland, ME from whence she was planning to travel to visit with Debbie Segal who, at this writing, was working somewhere in MA and "quite happy" doing whatever she's doing. Brian Durrett is selling and investing in real estate in Salem, NH. Dale Robbins is making TV commercials with Century 3, and Theo Pozzy has formed a microcomputer software company in NH named Corporate Microsystems, Inc. Alex Magoun has returned to Hartford after earning an MA in history from the Univ. of East Anglia, U.K. The Boston area, not surprisingly, seems to be the favorite residence. Bob Mann, when not working as an engineer, coaches hockey and little league. Jeff Perley, also an engineer, works for Teledyne Engineering Services in Waltham. Polly Hoppin is helping to preserve the environment, while Gay Macomber is working on Chester Atkins' congressional campaign and living with Lisa McGovern again. Also in the political world is Geoff Fields who's working for a Mass. State Legislative committee. Jessica Barton is at Smith's social work school where she both studies and practices what she learns in Boston. Ellie Cunningham has been taking courses and coaching squash at Harvard; Liz Laverack, also at Harvard, is working as an admissions officer. Carrie Cunningham Young is happily married and teaching at Buckingham Brown & Nichols. Woody Young, after earning a degree in international relations at Cambridge, is working in consulting for Bane & Co.

Following Boston in popularity is NYC where many, though certainly not all, PAers have found happiness (?) in the business world. Bowen Farrell is working for L.F. Rothschild; Chris Sanders trades bonds for Prudential-Bache; Mac Johnson is an international financial specialist for International Paper (and still flies); Annette Porter is working on Wall Street, also trading something I believe. Charles Kimball works for the advertising agency Ogilvie & Mather; and Steve Wilson expects to put his creative talents to work in advertising in the near future. Ginger Ehrlich has been working for The Atlantic Monthly and plans to go to law school in the fall. Laurie Parsons is commuting from Hoboken, NJ to Manhattan where she works in publishing. Sally Kemp is putting her money-raising skills to work as director of development for The South Forty Corp., an organization devoted to prisoner rehabilitation. Barb Sutherland is an assistant buyer for Ann Taylor.

Heading West, John Chamberlain is married and living in Ohio where he has his own business that has something to do with bags for bicycles (I think). Nancy Keating is happily ensconced in Colorado. Across the Rockies, Bruce Brothers has settled in LA where he is an administrator in the Corporate Personnel System of Paramount Pictures (he would love to here from old PA friends). Heather Little is busy in San Francisco working for an investment bank, volunteering at the art museum, and promoting alternatives to war through a group she organized herself. Hamilton Mehlman, also in San Francisco, has been doing medical research while Halladie Grant works for Bankers Trust. Wendy Sonnabend who has also been living in San Francisco, got married this March to Michael Erikson in Key Biscayne, FL. Mike Rauseo, too, is in California.

California seems far from New York, but many of us are even further afield. Juan Enriquez-Cabot has been working for the Mexican government in Mexico City, and hopes to go to business school in the States this fall. Fabian Castro is stationed in Germany with the Army's Air Defense branch. Kris Kinney has journeyed to Australia, is now in Italy, and will head to England soon on the professional tennis circuit. Ellen Jewett just returned from a trip to Africa, and Paul Robertz likes Africa so well he has extended his Peace Corps assignment in Ghana. North Africa also has a PA representative in Andy McCarthy who is teaching in Morocco. Quad Wheeler is travelling in China, a country Jon Wonnell also visited while teaching in Taiwan for two years (Jon is now in NYC). Paul Senior is engaged in the timber business in Singapore.

Keep the news coming — my curiosity may be infamous, but notes and telephone conversations suggest that aging "youth from every quarter" are also interested in your doings.

First off I have to apologize for missing the winter Class Notes. It seems I have not yet rid myself of my college tendencies to try and get the infamous "extension" on deadlines. Hopefully, what follows will fill the gap.

Beginning with what Bruce Conklin calls the "Cleveland Chapter," he and Al Pear-sall are attending Case Western Reserve Med School while Chris Leggett is working towards his medical degree at Cincinnati Med School. Bruce also reports that Julian Chang is finishing his second year in China Teaching English (and public speaking!) at a University and is applying to school for International Relations.

Scott Cook is through his second year at BU Law. Grace Oseki is studying "prehistoric raw materials exploitation in the Junin-puma of Peru" and plans to receive an A.B. and A.M. in anthropology from Stanford.

Josh Truehart is continuing research in yeast genetics (a "rising field") and does so with a "wandering eye." John Banes just finished his MBA at NYU. Nobuhisa Ishi- zuka is attending Columbia Law School with Jerry Garcia, rather, Doug Amster and Larry Braverman. I would like to share with you part of a letter sent to Lee Appgar from none other than Rich Ward. Rich, it would seem, is going to be the Jack Kerouac of the '80s. Lee and I have picked a few of the more entertaining excerpts describing Rick's traveling exploits during college and post-graduate life.

Sophomore summer, 1980, "I went to Nevada with the Stanford Geological Survey; we lived in a little tent city 100 miles from nowhere. Nevada is a land of contrasts — red/brown hills covered with grey sage brush, bright green stream valleys or pocket springs with white-barked aspen trees. Basque shepherds tramp by occasionally with their flock. . . . Sky-piercing, chrome shining F-14 fighters fly 50 yards above your head, knocking you off your feet as they streak by." On Cairo: "There is nothing like a sunrise over Cairo when you're sitting on top of the great Pyramid of Giza. It was then and there that we decided where to spend New Year's eve, 1999." And finally, Rick's comments on Hungary: "Communist countries have more rules than Andover and we tried to break them all. We didn't register with the police and the guy we stayed with (Atilla) was an undesirable." It's good to see that some things never change!

I received a great letter from Anne Asbury Baylor who has just recently married William Baylor, Jr. She's finishing up school at Xavier University and plans on going to Britain with her husband to study British media next year and hopefully travel. She writes that Steve Posey is finishing up his undergraduate work in Austin, Texas and hopes to return East to study architecture. She also writes that Lydia Hatton and Caky Harold are in New York City. Caky is working for Merrill Lynch's International Dept. and is generally bullish on America.

Shelly Guyer wrote from the West Coast and insisted that I not write anything out of line about her (she's bigger than I am . . .). She's working for the Environmental Defense Fund on a variety of tax issues and is really enjoying herself. Anette Andersen is so busy she had to get her Mom to write in (take note all you Mom's out there). She is in her second year of law school at William and Mary. . . . Eve Crowley is pulling out all the stops. She spent June-December 1983 working in the American Embassy in Guinea-Bissan and is currently completing her second year at Yale in a M.A./Ph.D. program in anthropology. Wow! . . . Steve Bakalar "liked the razor so much he bought the company." He is working for Remington Products in New Haven in product development (on the "cutting edge of technology"). . . . Bruce Stanley is working at Chase Manhattan in NYC in the credit development department. I think we should put him in touch with Greenough Nowakowski to talk about a loan. She is returning to Nicaragua to work toward "alerting the public about the dangers of our aggressive U.S. policy toward the region." Speaking of far away places, Peter Warren writes that he's sorry he missed the reunion but he was "a million miles away catching waves on Kuta Beach, Bali." I hope that's all he was catching out there. Colin Baxter is trying to complete a masters degree in Moral Philosophy by June of '84.

There's a lot more to report, but space doesn't allow it, so it will have to wait 'till the next issue.

Reunion Notes: A more than wonderful time was had by all! To quote John Francis, "All night long. Good to see everyone. We are having a great time. A little hot, but it's still cool. I wish more of you could've made it back. Needless to say, our party is the only one still going on, I hope it is the same at the 50th." About one-third of the class returned for a fantastic weekend. We missed the rest of you and hope that everyone will be back in 1989. The enthusiasm generated was immense and we all discovered how easy and great it was to be together again.

On Saturday, during the parade, picnic, dinner, and wild hockey rink dance, a notebook was passed around and filled with news from many members of the class. Briggs Tobin's words epitomize the general outlook, "Hoping to capitalize on the potential which I supposedly had when I came to Andover." The notebook entries are fascinating and funny. Send a stamped, self-addressed, business-sized envelope to me for your copy of the reunion notebook.

MANY THANKS to all who helped with the reunion, especially Sarah Moore, Margaret Shuwall, Jim Ventre, Lolly Jewett, Greg Cleveland, and Mark Mulvaney.

Carroll Bogert is going crazy responding to all you gullible people; the truth is she has NO KIDS. Charlie and Julie Wisemen do have a baby, and I heard that Eric Sheffield has two children.

In D.C. where I am, Alex Pierpont is working in a real estate firm. Andrew Gilmour is at the Georgetown U. Center for Strategic and International Studies and enjoying it immensely. Carroll B., who will begin her masters in East Asian Studies at Harvard in the fall, is here for the summer. Lynne Kosobucki, Chris Powers, and John Flanagan each work in law firms downtown. Jim Pawlowski is home wind surfing (and tutoring on the side) 'til fall when we will return to DC to start at Georgetown Med School. Lolly J. is working on the Hill as a few other '79ers must be doing. Ed Hill might still be here, but I'm not sure. Nearby, Judy McGann has picked up a Bawlrner, Merlin accent.

A million people are in New York.

In New England: Howard Blumenthal is an Assistant Marketing Director for the Danbury Mint while also playing a lot of squash and racquetball and becoming a gourmet chef. Linda Polson will attend MIT in the fall but meanwhile is in Alaska with marriage plans on the horizon. Jacques Hugon works in Cambridge in a computer firm. In Boston Amy Haigh may go for her Accounting Masters, but meanwhile is with a large real estate firm. Dan Ryan, who lives in Somerville, is happy to be out of school and working as a computer science engineer. Having worked at the Addison Gallery this past year, Glenn Tomlinson now heads to U. Mass Art School. Beth Lovejoy is storming through Law School in Portland, Maine. Dan Goggin is a broker for Kidder Peabody in Boston.

On the West Coast: Mark Loomis works as a territory manager for Elizabeth Arden Cosmetics in the LA area. Brot Bishop is selling bonds and living in Portland, Oregon where Rachel Cartmell works for a radio station. Tiger and Geri Pope Warren are also in Portland where Geri writes a weekly newspaper column under the pen name Veronica Lodge. Suzy Page graduated from Reed and is now pursuing a graduate degree in Animal Behavior. Annie Mudge will be at Berkeley Law in the fall.

M. Jeremy Pirtle '79 and Beth DiRusso '79 at the Wisers' garden party Friday

Elsewhere: Whitney Blake works as a sales rep in Chicago. Rountree Collett is in Ann Arbor in law school but working in North Carolina for the summer. Scott Drescher and Laura live and work in Dallas. Scott hopes to go for his MBA soon and asks where Kendall Meyer is. Bill Schultz, who is with Proctor and Gamble in Cincinnati, finds to his surprise, that there is life in the Midwest. Engaged Lexi Doner continues at Wisconsin where he is now studying for a graduate degree in Real Estate. In New Orleans, John Dabney misses skiing, but Bourbon St. helps make up for it. Kris Timken Kingery was married in June with bridesmaids Geri Pope Warren, Judy Morton '78, and Perrin Tingley '78 in attendance.

Business: Dewey Thompson (who is helping to make a documentary film about artist Philip Pearlstein) was elected "class disc photographer." Carroll Bogert deserves a big hand for all she does for us and for Andover. Her crew was expanded over the weekend and now includes veterans Sue Jenkins, Steve Henry, Tom Rubin, Ruth Harlow, Taylor Bodman Sarah Moore, and new recruits Margaret Shuwall, Lolly Jewett, Greg Cleveland, Don Thompson, Jane Moncreif, Kerry Herman, Brad Holmes, Tori Abbott, Anne Cavett, Courtney Moss, and Ari Soroken (who will also organize the 1989 reunion). The Class Secretary duties will be shared by a diverse quartet of Neil Sheehy, Rachel Horovitz, Nick Lobenthal, and myself. We will each write once a year with Rachel and Nick working together on the next column (the fall issue). With the renewed class spirit that abounds we expect to hear from all of you. As always PLEASE WRITE (continue to send all your news to me). Until next year. — love, Gretchen.

28 August 1983 Liz Steiner tied the nuptial knot with S. David Novak. They met at U. Chicago where Liz attends school and where David is a systems programmer. Congratulations!

Domestic news: Katie Leede wants to be a housewife. Just kidding. On a more serious note, Peter Bishop joined a cult in Oregon headed by the guru Shree Rasmesh; he has informed me that brochures are free if anyone is interested. Vivian Toy, an American history and literature major at Harvard, served as a part-time intern at Boston Magazine this spring. Mike Abele will graduate from Johns Hopkins this May; he hopes to spend a year in Africa in the Peace Corps before moving on to medical school. Having returned to Berkeley after traveling throughout the Northwest and Mexico, and working in the Museum of Modern Art, Sophia Wheelwright is getting involved in drama. And Jana Paley reports that John Blasberg is recovering from a knee injury he suffered during one of his road trips to Smith.

Foreign Affairs: Andy Morton informed me that Steve Frank spent time on the Riviera last fall, where he was seen with Princess Caroline. Studying at the Pushkin Institute in Moscow, Scott Smith abandoned scenic New Haven for a taste of Russian culture. Joining Scott in Russia is Sarah Horowitz, who left Amherst for the spring to study in Leningrad. Liz Longworth spent the year at Cambridge University in England rowing and learning about literature and theology. Lynda McLaughry wrote me from Hong Kong, one of the stops on her around-the-world journey. That's one way of avoiding winter at Dartmouth. And Masaichiro Moriyama is spending the summer at the International Christian University of Tokyo.

Sports: Former Andover cross-country co-captains Randy Accetta and John Burgess will co-captain Wesleyan's cross-country team this fall. Dave Martz and John Brenner are rowing for UNH and ergmistress Jenny Marron will be trying to make the national women's lightweight crew team this summer. Fran Trafton, a Spanish/Government major at Connecticut College, earned a spot on the Varsity Women's Crew team. Mary Hulbert, now living in Paris, represented the United States at the World Squash Championships held in Australia. And Annie Yates and I were elected co-captains of the Women's and Men's Squash Teams here at Princeton. And if Annie can get her serve in, we should snag the intramural mixed doubles championship in tennis. Wendy Pulling is spending this summer in Maine as a teaching intern at Gould Academy. . . . A mother heard from and now a father, Meredith Price, from the Admissions Office at PA: "Doug Price has been elected co-captain of next year's Middlebury lacrosse team. For the second year in a row, Middlebury made the finals of the ECAC Division 3 tournament, only to lose to Bowdoin. Doug was a mainstay of the first midfield, along with Steve Frank's cousin, the Redoutable Nino Scalamanire, who single handedly beat PA lax a year or two ago."

A Special Feature Presentation: The First Annual Ullman Achievement Awards. These highly coveted honors go to Drew Quinn for taking life pass-fail; to Stef Scheer and Andrew Young for durability; to Chris Bay for visibility; and to Bill Kummel for his wit. Have some gravy with your roast. Cheers.

Hi! I hope all is well with all of you 82ers. I personally am feeling rather fantastic as school got out yesterday! I'll be spending the summer in NY and working — I'm not sure where.

Chris Ashley wrote from Yale; he was in NY last summer at a computer firm and will be back again. Melissa Perkins, Ruth Flanagan, and Drea Maier will be living together in NY. Also Melissa will be working at Avis. Lynn Snyder reports that Anne Van Arentschildt is studying English and French at Williams and plans on going to France next year.

Several people wrote in (or others wrote for them) to the Alumni Office. Robert Briggs and his hall mates, with Peter Thomas '83 "who when not drinking me under the table, is leading the b-ball team to a perfect record." Scotti Parrish played rugby this past fall at Princeton and will be in Paris this summer. Audrey Keithe writes that Steve Moreland made the varsity lax team and will be roommates with Tom McDonough '81.

Amy Baker writes that she has "re-adjusted to the American way of life" after a year of "navy blue knee socks" and "being sent to the corner in chapel when caught whispering." Ellen Nordberg gave a big frat update. She's the social chairperson for Pi Beta Phi. Will St. Laurent is in Phi Delt. Rob Harpel and Joe Capella are in Alpha Delt. Maria Elias is still swimming and a member of Kappa Gamma. Ellen had a history class with Paula Lee. Vimp, Scott Cary and Jeff Hunt all drove to the Mardi Gras. Landi Fannin is still running track at Purdue. Barry Stout is very happy at Vanderbilt and may be a camp counselor this summer. Alice Banta and Liz McDonald are Kappas out at Michigan. Liz and Ellen will be living together for a bit early this summer, and will take a couple of courses up at Ithaca. Wayne Day at Worcester Polytechnic Institute completed a Big Brother/Sister orientation weekend. Late news: Dan Besse was selected to the Varsity Men's Crew team at Connecticut College and is a bio/bio-chem. major.

I have been asked to keep it short because of lengthy reunion notes, so I'd better cut it here. I need news — have a wild summer. . . Love, Steph.

It's a pleasure to report that Spike Adriance and Ninny are thriving in Chapel Hill and looking forward to their fiftieth wedding anniversary in September. They plan to celebrate with a trip to Europe. Daughter Mary Lee and her family are still in Alaska, and son Ace, his wife, and their twins are heading for Denver where Ace will preside over the Garland School, kindergarten through eighth grade, as its headmaster.

Harp Follansbee and Patty circulate between Fitzwilliam, NH, Chautauqua, NY, and Sanibel Island on Florida's Gulf Coast. Harp reports that his golf game deteriorated from the low 80's in February to the high 80's in March! Now, he and Patty are getting their Fitzwilliam garden started.

During the summer they plan a trip to Scotland with Bob Sides and Kate plus numerous friends from PA and Andover. All three Follansbee sons, Ted, Nat, and Peter are English teachers at Rivers, Loomis-Chaffee, and Cushing Academy respectively. What? None in Biology?

Jack Hawes and Nancy are back in Weston, Vermont, after a winter in Stuart, Florida. Son John, his wife, Emily, and their two girls are located in Watertown, Massachusetts, where John is pursuing his career in architecture with Sasaki Associates, Inc.

Stephanie Sorota reports enthusiastically on life in Centerville on Cape Cod and says that she and Steve "haven't aged a day nor gained a pound" since retiring. She has been devoting a good deal of time to perfecting her techniques in water color and has won a couple of prizes. Steve's golf is still in the low 80's (watch out, Harp!) and will probably improve after his visit with son Peter in Dallas where Steve plans to take in the Byron Nelson golf classic. After three years in Norway, daughter Diane and her husband, who is in international shipping, have been transferred to London. Son Phil and his wife who share a chiropractic practice in Louisville, Kentucky, are prospering and are blessed with a son and a daughter.

Emeriti news is always welcome. Let's have more!

The View from Grub Street

Bulfinch Hall

We have been so accustomed to looking out of the window of Bulfinch Hall at the activity on Grub Street that we are a bit startled to discover the time has come to look into Bulfinch. In a word, the building was redecorated last summer, and the results are spectacular. Our only problem is that we despair of ever using the language of interior decorating effectively. How does one make paint sound impressive?

The colors have changed slightly: there are blues and pinks and grays (our own classroom is a pale gray so elegant in tone that we feel like Squire Allworthy in Fielding's Tom Jones, presiding over his Palladian mansion); and an abundance of white in stairways and corridors. A dangerous color, that white, with all of those teenagers whom we still have in this school with their sticky fingers. But the students have obliged by treating the building with the care that it deserves.

Perhaps they are impressed with the oriental rug running the length of the upstairs hall, or the large oil portraits in gilt frames of our sober predecessors, or the new lighting — those clumsy fluorescent lights that resembled Brobdingnagian ice-cube trays have been replaced by handsome fixtures and supplemented (you have to see it to appreciate it) by indirect lighting from behind the foot-high moldings near ceiling level.

Though the winter may make our new tradition impossible, so far there have been tasteful pots and vases of flowers somewhere in the building each day, placed there quietly by people who love the building.

We scribblers on Grub Street have more than we deserve.

Speaking of scribbling, this is the final "View from Grub Street" from this editor. After two and a half joyous years at the editor's desk, we have come to the melancholy conclusion that the only way we can do the job properly is to diminish our teaching load — and that we will not do. It is a maddening dilemma, because if we were not fortunate enough to teach at Andover, we would sell half our soul for the job of editing the Andover Bulletin.

We are happy to report that our successor — the second luckiest man in the world — will be English Instructor Peter A. Gilbert '72, a man of talent, wit, and deep affection for Andover. A graduate of Dartmouth, Peter joined the English Department in 1976 as a Teaching Fellow and then a full faculty member the following year. When he left us in 1978 to enter Georgetown University Law School, he really did not leave us, because he served as Director for thirty students in the Andover-Exeter Washington Intern Program on Capitol Hill. After two invaluable years as a litigator with a Boston law firm, he succumbed to his lifelong addiction to the classroom and earned his M.A. in the distinguished English Department of the University of Virginia. Finally, with an abundance of experience and academic degrees, Peter Gilbert is back home. We who are familiar with his teaching know just how fortunate we all are.

Before we check out, we would like to say a word or two about the staff of the Andover Bulletin. They are a curious lot, modestly paid, putting out more than 150 publications a year besides the Bulletin. They work in a dampish cellar office in the basement of Evans Hall, about where second base used to be in the softball field behind Paul Revere Hall. There are only three of them: Janet Nawn, our secretary; Paula Trespas, our Class Notes editor; and Ann Parks, the Director of Publications.

In one last gesture of editorial privilege, we include here a photograph of this Publications Staff, a trio of almost indescribable patience, talent, and good humor. They perform miracles.

Two Alumni Trustees reflect on their four-year terms

by Anne Oliver Jackson '53
and Philip M. Drake '43

Chairman Don McLean said, "Welcome to Anne Jackson and Phil Drake, the new Alumni Trustees. Ted Sizer wishes to announce his resignation. I shall reach 70 in a few months and will retire, effective next meeting of the Trustees."

With that bombshell as a starter, we began our term as Alumni Trustees on 1 July 1980 at a special two-day working session of the Board — a hot, sultry day in Cooley House, the old PAE fraternity, reputed to be among the cooler of Andover's non-air-conditioned buildings.

All too quickly it was May 1984 and the gavel had sounded closing the spring meeting of the Board. The terms of Anne Jackson and Phil Drake had been completed. Our thoughts were similar as we reflected on our first meeting on that sweltering July day — regrets because our time was up, but appreciative of our great fortune at having participated in so many special events and changes.

We assumed our roles as Alumni Trustees from rather different Phillips Academy backgrounds. Anne Jackson, an Abbot graduate of the Class of 1953, came from the era of Miss Hearsey, saddle shoes and hose, tea dances and a glimpse of Phillips Academy on "walks" carefully mapped out to maintain a safe distance from the questionable influences of a boys' school. Finding Cooley House for that first meeting was a challenge. A recently completed term as President of the Abbot Academy Association and Trustee experience at a Pittsburgh area day school were her credentials.

With her experience as an independent day school trustee she viewed Andover with certain skepticism — perhaps envy mixed with curiosity. The school seemed incredibly rich — in endowment, campus, program, faculty. How could this be justified, much less maintained, at the secondary level? The Abbot Academy Association experience had quickly made her a believer.

In its early days this group still waved the Abbot flag and viewed all moves on the Hill with suspicion. As the Association put the resources of the fund to work emphasizing projects to enhance the quality of life for boys and girls, Phillips Academy administration and the Abbot loyalists forgot their differences. It would now be an easy transition for the President of the Abbot Academy Association to become a Phillips Trustee.

Phil Drake, a graduate of the Class of 1943, approached the assignment with his memories of an all-boys school, but with the viewpoint of a father of four girls. As a practicing attorney with experience as the Chairman of the Town of Greenwich's (Connecticut) Finance Committee with a school budget several times that of PA's and as trustee of a local day school, he was curious about the future of the new coeducational Andover which had just completed the Bicentennial Fund and begun its third century.

Our first meeting in July 1980 was billed as a special session to consider long range issues. Don McLean had just announced Ted Sizer's and his own imminent departures. As the Board discussed the issues of Andover in the 1980s, the question of new leadership was uppermost in everyone's mind. Despite the Trustees' preoccupation, the Headmaster focused our attention on the issues we originally came to discuss, namely:

1. How should Phillips Academy streamline its operation (i.e., reduce costs and increase

- income)?
2. How should a residential school adapt to the changing lifestyles and expectations of its students, considering that fully one-third of the faculty were post-1965 college graduates?
 3. What does the "public" expect and need from Andover?

Ted Sizer urged that we begin or continue detailed studies of energy and space utilization, composition of the student body, the curriculum, faculty load, and utilization of the school's excess real estate holdings.

By the end of the meeting a Search Committee to find a new Head had been formed and was in operation. After about eight months of work the Search Committee called the full Board to a special meeting in New York in late winter 1981 to meet their candidate. A young college Dean from Dartmouth, Don McNemar, won the necessary approval to step into Ted Sizer's place in July. Mel Chapin was elected Chairman of the Board (technically President) and the School's new leaders quickly put to rest any concern about the transition or leadership in the 1980s. New Charter Trustees Tom Wyman and Rick Beinecke, both with great experience and interest in independent education, quickly made their presence felt.

Ted Sizer's last meeting . . . he would be sorely missed, as Headmaster and as a good friend. Prior to each Board meeting each Trustee receives an agenda essay accompanied by a two-inch-thick volume of "attachments." The highlight of the material is always the "agenda essay," thoughtful and wide-ranging prose penned by the eloquent Dr. Sizer. His last essay was a masterpiece reviewing his decade at Phillips Academy and the challenges ahead for the School. The final paragraph says it so well. "In all, the School emerges from the '70s rigorous but good humored, coed, and in solid fiscal health. There's much yet to do. The '80s will be a lively decade."

The Headmaster also reviewed "Life-after-the-Bicentennial Campaign" — the topic of fund raising always of major concern to the Trustees. Schools now recognized that a major effort in fund raising every five to ten years was no longer appropriate. Raising capital and annual funds was now an ever-present part of the yearly routine at Phillips Academy. The Non Sibi Associates were formed in recognition of those who gave the school $1,000 or more per year. Phil Drake was named Chairman of a newly formed Planned Giving Committee. Fred Stott was retiring — a difficult pair of shoes to fill.

As always, there was hand-wringing over a few endlessly insoluble issues — usually to do with buildings or property. What should be done about the boathouse, Cheever House, Draper Hall, and the Abbot Campus? And what about the School's radio station?

Our second year began with another special two-day meeting back on the Hill. Don McNemar, as the new Headmaster and Clerk of the Board, lost no time in taking hold. Assignments were made, projects undertaken, issues framed, and target dates set to complete the necessary study and analysis. He opened with the suggestion that the change in leadership provided an opportunity for the Board of Trustees to pause and reaffirm its commitment to the ideals of the Academy. It was a time when American education in general was under sharp criticism and searching for new directions. The emphasis was shifting from quantity to quality. The Academy must also critically analyze the "more is better" approach and be prepared to make qualitative judgments about what is essential for excellent education. Don McNemar clearly outlined his commitments and expectations.

"I am committed to the tradition of educational excellence in our curriculum and to high expectations for our students.

"I am committed to the goal of 'youth from every quarter.'

"I am committed to maintenance of a learning community in which individual adolescents develop their own sense of self-worth.

"I am committed to using our resources to encourage our students to contribute significantly to society in the future."

He identified some specific issues for the 1980s:

1. Questions about the composition of the student body. What should be the balance between the sexes? How to enhance diversity? The Academy must develop a pluralistic culture in which minorities feel welcome. What should be the balance between boarding and day students?

Co-authors Philip M. Drake '43 and Anne Oliver Jackson '53

2. Maintenance of a top-flight faculty and curriculum compensation. Can the triple threat model continue to work? Diploma requirements and breadth versus depth in intellectual experience.
3. Questions about the community. How can a sense of community be developed among 1200 students? Does the present approach to discipline work? How can students be a real part of the Non Sibi ideal through service to others?
4. Questions of finance. Long-term budgeting: what assumptions could be made in projecting expenses and resources? What changes should be considered in managing resources?

A brief pause is in order to describe this special group of people we keep referring to as the "Board." As "transients" perhaps we can be allowed to express our admiration for these exceptional individuals. It would be difficult to convince us that any school or college can boast of a more dedicated, harder working Board. With all the concerns and demands in their lives, in their "real" worlds, they come faithfully three or four times a year to Board Meetings lasting from Thursday night until Saturday noon and give themselves totally to the needs of the Academy. Financial matters may often be the prime concern, but they always and eagerly take time to meet with students and faculty, to understand the curriculum, or the inadequacies of buildings, or whatever the need. Of course, the giving is not only one way. It is a special treat for Trustees to immerse themselves in this outstanding school and enjoy the warm hospitality of faculty and students.

The meetings are a good measure of the interest and involvement of this varied group of individuals. The discussion is lively. The questions are thorough. Humor is never lacking even late in the day after many hours in the same chair and in the same air in the beautiful Board Room on the third floor of

George Washington Hall.

Don McNemar was installed in September of 1981 with great ceremony and community involvement.

The 1981-82 and 1982-83 school years brought new concerns to the Board but a strong sense that the new Head had taken hold and was making his mark. Our concerns centered on the pace of life, the pressured atmosphere, the composition of the student body, and the dilemma of how to keep tuitions down with the ever-increasing demands on the financial aid budget. Drugs and alcohol problems were on everyone's mind, along with the work of the Freedom from Chemical Dependency group. Rick Beincke's special committee selected new endowment managers as our efforts to maximize growth of precious resources intensified.

The Addison Gallery campaign temporarily faltered and was injected with a one million dollar matching gift spearheaded by the ever faithful Trustees and their friends to re-launch it toward ultimate success.

Giving high priority to house counseling (always a lively issue), Don McNemar focused our attention on the roles of faculty and students living and working together in a residential community. Although the students labeled that concern a "crackdown," the Headmaster described it somewhat differently, reminding students that self-discipline must go hand in hand with freedom if community living were to be successful.

Perhaps the culmination of our four-year stint in terms of participating in the creation of the agenda for the Andover of the '80s came with the Long Range Planning Session at another special meeting in July 1983. Extensive background materials had been prepared for us the preceding year, and we studied them carefully. Statistics and graphs told the numbers story from every possible angle. The Headmaster and faculty members involved filled in the "human story." In the endeavor to develop policy goals for the 1980s, about thirty-five

Trustees and key administration and faculty representatives spent two fruitful sessions in an air-conditioned motel conference room shaping those priorities. [See Don McNemar's summary in the Andover Bulletin of Fall 1983.]

The 1983-84 school year reflected the conflicts inherent in the Long Range planning goals as the Board struggled to balance the budget. How to keep tuition increases to a minimum and at the same time keep a leading position in secondary school faculty salaries? How to provide adequate financial aid to bring "youth from every quarter" and simultaneously build up a plant renewal fund?

By Christmas 1983 the Addison Gallery Campaign reached its goal. The Committee responsible for this exceptional effort and the major gift donors were honored at a glamorous dinner in the Gallery.

In the spring of 1984 PA investigated and celebrated ten years of coeducation. Speakers, seminars, and reports of a year-long faculty research committee commented on coeducation's successes, pitfalls, and future directions. There was indeed cause for celebration.

Our last meeting in May was uneventful, a let-down perhaps. We had become accustomed to the series of special issues, events, changes, celebrations . . . Regrets at leaving? Of course! A term as a Trustee at Andover is a privilege and a rewarding added dimension to our lives.

Early in our tenure at Phillips Academy we wondered about the need for our support of a school endowed with such wealth of people and resources. The answer became clear: we were supporting not only Andover, but the very best in American secondary education. Andover is truly a national high school not only because it is diverse but because it sets a standard for all other secondary schools.

We would be back. We wouldn't let the School out of our lives and we felt quite sure that the School would not forget us.

Thank you, Alumni, for the privilege of serving Phillips Academy! □

Judge George Bundy Smith, Sr. '55

Justice of the Supreme Court State of New York

by Elwin Sykes

Judge Smith was so quick and thoughtful en route from his courtroom to his chambers, his law clerk and I almost missed him in the corridor. Having been ill on the shuttle from Boston to New York City, having reeled at the flu's whim for two hours in slow motion among strangers, I feared the pace of this man so serious about the state's business. I ceased to reel and shifted out of slow motion to avoid missing one of Judge Smith's quick turns back to his chambers. Although his eyes still suggested the courtroom issues of the morning, he outlined an afternoon with a generous portion of his schedule given to our interview. Luckily he had an 11:30 am appointment — I sighed and gratefully accepted the thirty- or forty-minute reprieve from his pace.

His chambers, my recovery room, were quiet, but signs of purpose were everywhere, every desk and table stacked with motions, journals, and books — not in stylish scholarly disarray but ordered and accessible. His name plate, a plastic cube displaying family photographs, two telephones, and a box of tissues on his desk were the only items that did not directly represent legal purpose.

When Judge Smith returned, he and I went to lunch at a café in the legal district, one that accommodated not only the predictable dark-suited corps of litigious stewards, but also families! During lunch we reviewed my work and my family since his last visit to Phillips Academy, and then we returned to his chambers for the interview. But already, as we walked out of and back into the courthouse, as we navigated the human and automobile streams between 60 Centre Street and the café, and as we ate, Judge Smith's most striking trait was clear — he is an educator; he is an advocate of education; he is an impressive product of a familial educational tradition.

We sat in his chambers at a table in an alcove to his desk's left. He pushed stacks of motions to the center of the table to make room for my notes and our conversation. As the light slanted in on him from the window above the table, I recollected Judge Smith's speaking at the Afro-Latino Senior Dinner two years ago. He had stood at one end of Ropes Salon in the PA Commons in the final rays of a combative May sunset. His audience, his former teachers, his house counselor, other faculty, black and Hispanic students, and his son, had all beamed in his direction, some straight ahead, others by means of awkward turns of necks. The dining hall then had filled with pride as his audience remembered him, remmet him, or met him for the first time. As a black faculty member and a father, I had relished that moment of father and son sharing a school across a generation. Judge Smith, like an expert pedagogue, had first convincingly related himself to the black, Hispanic, and full scholarship students through his own doubts about coming to Andover and about going to France for his junior year of college; he then had given chilling, challenging examples of opportunities missed — examples from recent cases tried before him.

But now, two years after his speech and eight months after his son's graduation from PA, we sat, lit by the February glare and by Judge Smith's penchant for teaching. Now the opportunity was singularly mine, the opportunity to learn in a private tutorial with this judge, this scholar. He did not simply answer questions; he explained, he made each question an opportunity for a consequential examination of cause and effect. He was not just indulging a school magazine; no, he was searching for messages to send to Andover, to its current students and faculty and to its alumni.

First Judge Smith explained why his chambers were stacked with motions: he was completing his current tour as a member of a four-judge team sitting in "motions part." During this assignment each of the four judges hears motions one day per week for three weeks and two days one week. After the "motions part" come the trials, when each judge sits daily. The work during the "motions part" frequently extends into the evening and consumes the weekend because 1) there are so many motions, and 2) some motions have to be expedited because the case involves housing, eviction, or a small-business disagreement that could destroy the business. (Not until we were en route to his 6 pm class at Fordham did Judge Smith acknowledge quite modestly that not only did the "motions part" extend beyond the workday, but because in New York juries are put in hotels if they have not reached a decision by 10 pm, judges often remain in the courthouse until late evening during trials.)

Next Judge Smith explained his progress from director of the Model Cities program through the civil courts to the New York State Supreme Court — a progress that really began in Washington, DC.

Judge Smith, his brother, and his sister began their educations in Washington, DC, as had their mother, who supported and encouraged them through different schools but to a common goal: doctorate degrees. This family educational tradition goes on: Judge Smith's son George (PA '82) is presently a sophomore at Oberlin, and his daughter thrives at the Horace Mann School in New York City; Judge Smith's brother's son Sydney attends PA ('85) and his daughters study at Harvard ('85), Yale Medical School, and Rutgers Law School. Judge Smith's wife, who has her doctorate in education and presently teaches at Mercer College, completes this familial commitment to education.

But this strong, consistent commitment to educational achievement has been only one of two rivers in Judge Smith's professional life, for even as he attained academic degrees, he serviced those on the margins of the great society — both rivers positively flooding, never receding.

Mr. George Bundy Smith became Administrator of Model Cities, City of New York in January 1974; prior to this appointment he had been a law secretary to three judges (1964-1974) and a staff attorney, NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund (1962-1964). From the Model Cities Administration, a federally funded agency "designed to provide various types of assistance to poverty areas in New York City," he progressed by appointment and election as Judge of the Civil Court of the City of New York (appointed May 1975; elected November 1975); Judge of the Family Court (January 1976-March 1977); and Judge of the Criminal Court (for different periods since 1975 totalling approximately six months). After serving as Acting Justice of the Supreme Court from December 1978 till December 1979, Judge Smith was elected and has served as Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York since January 1980. Whether appointed or elected, Judge Smith's progress has been steady and his support extensive.

But of a man with such an impressive commitment to scholarship, to law, and to social and civil service, one asks if there has not been an irony in his progress — has his progress not in fact made it difficult if not impossible to maintain consequential commitment to scholarship, to law, and to social as well as civil service? Judge Smith's answer is an emphatic no — not just a verbal answer but one of action. As Supreme Court Justice he still adjudicates in cases involving custody, child support, divorce, and juvenile delinquents; on Fridays from 6 pm to 8 pm he teaches a course at Fordham on New York Criminal Procedure; and he is a very active member of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, where he is presently a member of the Committee on Immigration and Nationality (having served previously on the Bar Association's Family Law Committee, as well as the Committee on Housing and Urban Development).

In a 1974 New York Post interview, George Bundy Smith, as he began his administration of the Model Cities Program, reflected on some of the choices he had made to date. In particular he wondered about his having gone to study politics for a year in France in 1957 at the "height of the Little Rock crisis." He concluded, "When I returned, the problem was still here. It would have been here had I not gone to France." "The problem" to which Judge Smith referred, the problem of poverty, injustice, racial discrimination, has constantly been the target of his efforts as Model Cities Administrator, judge, and teacher.

As Judge Smith described the Model Cities Administration as a service to those in need, as a conduit for scholarships, job training, drug rehabilitation programs, urban renewal, public housing assistance; as Judge Smith described the New York courts; and as he worried about the emphasis on building new prisons rather than crime prevention, he portrayed himself unself-consciously as an empathetic civil servant whose work in Model Cities and in the courts was always concerned with rehabilitation, with saving youth, with preventive measures. Judge Smith the teacher, moralist, and humanist analyzed juvenile delinquency and thoroughly explained the cause-effect chains that lead some to the "dark assumption that criminals cannot be rehabilitated" or the even darker assumption "that kids cannot be prevented from becoming criminals." His arms did not rise in desperation, but his voice intensified as he explained the keenest points of need — where collapsing families could be helped and what could be done after the total collapse of a family. Judge Smith made much sense of the high incidence of truancy, family disorder, and joblessness in criminals' histories.

From this depression on the rim of the American dream, his vision

George Bundy Smith '55 being sworn in as Model Cities Administrator for New York City by Mayor Abraham Beame in January 1974

appropriately turned to Phillips Academy. The bright assumption that PA graduates become leaders, become decision makers, must be related to the greatest needs of the society. Having gone to segregated schools before attending PA, having been a full-scholarship student at PA and then at Yale, Judge Smith demanded two things from PA and its graduates: 1) that PA "must draw people from all parts of society because PA makes leaders;" 2) that PA "must maintain its tradition of excellence — those who presently doubt the school's purpose will appreciate opportunities and changes made possible by this tough school." Acknowledging the singularity of purpose that guided him at PA (a purposefulness dictated by poverty, belief in education as a means, and a familial commitment to that means), Judge Smith offered two regrets about his time at Andover — the paucity of black students during his three years on the Hill, and the school's not having gone coed in 1955 rather than 1973. These regrets were not offered lightly but with constructive seriousness consistent with Judge Smith's societal vision, with his sense of the importance of learning about human relations, the relations on which society finally must depend and without which families and society collapse.

For Judge Smith "education was one of the ways of getting ahead, of breaking the cycle of poverty." More broadly for current PA students, for the entire society Judge Smith defines education as "opportunity to be grabbed and held tightly."

I sat quietly reviewing my notes as Judge Smith prepared his notes for his evening class at Fordham. Even before I saw and heard him again — expert, serious, and sensitive in the lecture hall at Fordham — I knew that my hours with Judge Smith had been and would be for me and others affiliated with PA, an "opportunity to be grabbed and held tightly."

The Andover Artist

III: The Artist in the Library of Congress: Margaret Roth Brown '56

One cannot help admiring a group of people who are not intimidated by the eighty million books, documents, pictures, periodicals, and microforms they are responsible for — a significant number of which require immediate conservation to remain at all usable. On the ground floor of the Library of Congress's newest building (the James Madison Memorial Building) is the Conservation Department, a group of about thirty specialists in art and chemistry, magicians who occupy an acre of glistening, three-year-old laboratories and workshops. And in the middle of the entire show is our own Margaret Roth Brown '56, known as Mardie to many of her friends.

Although we would dearly like to report that Margaret owes her whole career to her experiences in secondary school, it just is not so. Abbot had no formal art courses in the early '50s, and she never entered the Addison Gallery while she was in school; indeed, her own interests in art had not yet been formed. Those years were, instead, ones of establishing close and lasting friendships.

After her graduation from Connecticut College in 1960 Margaret's first job was selling publications at the National Gallery in Washington. Her future seemed to lie in the direction of the commercial end of art.

Along came a subtle interruption that changed everything. In 1964 a curator of the National Gallery introduced Margaret to an independent painting conservator who needed an assistant, someone who would be willing to be trained in the art and who enjoyed working with her hands. She became his apprentice, and for three years learned the skills of restoring, repairing, and cleaning paintings. But in 1967 Margaret Roth married James Lee Brown, who was entering a graduate program in Phoenix. Mardie left her job, and she and Jim moved to Arizona.

Two and a half months after their marriage Jim tripped on the tennis court, struck his head, and died the next day. The horror and cruelty of fate require no comment. Margaret had to put her life back together again.

When she returned to Washington, Margaret was disappointed but not surprised to find that the painting conservator had filled her position with someone else. Through friends she learned that the Library of Congress was beginning its own conservation program; she applied, and was hired as a paper conservator, though her training had been in painting. She went through another training period, learning from new staff members who came from other laboratories, and of course teaching herself a great deal.

Margaret Roth Brown '56 prepares 19th Century illustrations for exhibit

In 1968 there were virtually no conservation training programs like the ones available now. And up until 1968 the Library of Congress had no conservation staff of its own, relying instead on the Government Printing Office. As the trade became a more specialized, artistic profession, people taught each other. The Library of Congress brought in one of the few advanced private contractors in paper conservation several times a year to tutor the staff and evaluate their work. Now, sixteen years later, they have facilities and talent that must be the envy of every library and museum.

Her own artistic talent was not only a vocation, but a consolation and therapy after her husband's death. Margaret found fulfillment in her own art by drawing animals at the National Zoo in her spare time. On the advice of one of her friends, she reproduced the drawings as postcards, and so began a fifteen-year parallel, if part time, career of producing note cards and postcards for the Smithsonian, some years selling over 100,000 annually. Readers of our book notices in the summer editions of the Andover Bulletin may also recall that Margaret has been the illustrator of several manuals and dictionaries on book conservation published by the Library of Congress, besides an ingenious coloring book for the Smithsonian.

In recent years her chief assignment at the Library of Congress has been Exhibitions Liaison, preparing material for display at the Library itself or for loan. Virtually every display item requires treatment that may include dry-cleaning, repairing tears and holes, removing tape and backings, washing the paper, lining the object with Japanese paper, rematting, painting in, and de-acidifying. Her favorite subject matter is from the Cabinet of American Illustrations, the Library's technical name for its collection of original drawings and watercolors for late nineteenth century magazines.

As Margaret gives us a tour of the Department, we watch Merrily Smith experimenting with four different solvents to determine which works best to remove rubber cement from the backs of newspaper clippings in an old but valuable scrapbook. Susan is cheese-grating an eraser for use in dry-cleaning documents; she warns the amateur that rubber erasers will not do because rubber breaks down chemically and its residues are harmful. Doris is restoring a stunning Persian manuscript whose colors rival those of any monastic illuminated manuscript from western Europe.

One of the head bookbinders, Glen Ruzicka, inspects the new leather binding he has created for a 1633 Herbal by John Gerarde. Lucy Tang turns on a machine from the twenty-first century that analyzes in moments whether the foxing (brown stain on paper) is essentially a copper compound or iron — it will make a difference in how they clean and bleach the paper.

We are among happy people.

And they are justifiably proud people. None of them will ever become rich from working in the Conservation Department of the Library of Congress, surrounded by the letters of Thomas Jefferson, the correspondence of Abraham Lincoln, two drafts of the Gettysburg Address, the manuscript of Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass, and eighty million other sundries. They understand better than most of us that real riches — treasures from the past — can be bought and personally owned for only a few years. The riches of the past belong to all of us. And these people are doing everything in their power to conserve our communal, universal wealth for us and our descendants.

We are more than a little proud that an Andover artist, Margaret Roth Brown, works among them.

The Chinese Connection: Chinese at Andover

New students from the People's Republic of China being met at Logan Airport by last year's delegation, current PA students, and PA faculty. Visiting Instructor Xiao-Min Ni is fifth from left.

by Hale Sturges II

Five years ago, I anxiously awaited the arrival of one of the first three visiting students from the Peoples' Republic of China. That dark October night Jingbo Yu walked dazedly from the car that had driven him from the airport into a dormitory party of twenty-one Fuess House students, hot dogs, and ice cream. The next morning, while he again attempted to adjust to the peculiarities of American cuisine, I asked him if Chinese children are told that if they dig a hole deep enough they will reach America. He replied, "Yes." Since that day the passageway between China and Andover has become very wide indeed.

As I write this article, another milestone is about to be passed. We are again receiving three students from the Harbin Institute of Technology in Harbin, China: Xiao-Ming Chu, Yan-Tao Jia, and Tian-Yi Ma. This year, however, they are truly "exchange" students, for they are being accompanied on their trip to Andover by two of the five Phillips Academy students who spent the month of August in Harbin as the guests of H.I.T. Ian Connor '86, Peter Ham '84, Douglas Stiffler '85, Fern Ward '85, and Amina Tirana '85 were met in Beijing on 27 July by a representative from H.I.T. (Yet another student, Amy Zegart '85, spent the summer in China under another program.)

While in Beijing they journeyed to the Great Wall, the Imperial Palace, and the Temple of Heaven. Subsequent travel included trips to the industrial city of Ta Ching and the villa of former warlord Marshal Chang, Tso-lin, in Shen Yang.

However, the essential part of their stay was three weeks living in dormitories taking specially designed courses in Chinese. Visits with families, much wandering, and school banquets all provided ample opportunity both to practice their embryonic language skills and to enrich their awareness of a strange but fascinating culture.

The initial impetus for this exchange was the farsightedness, imagination, and hard work of two people long associated with Phillips Academy, Joshua Miner, Director of Admissions, and Bardyl Tirana '55. Each in his own way helped to establish Andover's increasing commitment to a Chinese connection. In fact it was Tirana who arranged this summer's trip and presented the Andover contingent in person to its Chinese hosts.

It is important now to mention Ronald Speirs, the final member of our delegation in China. Two years ago we initiated a course at Phillips Academy in the Chinese language. It was a one-year course open mainly to Seniors taught by a part-time instructor, Son-Wey Chiu. This was an experimental effort funded by the Abbot Academy Association to determine whether Chinese should become a permanent part of our curriculum. Though initial interest was hesitant, it soon became clear that the answer to that question was affirmative.

With the support of Headmaster McNemar, the Language Division last fall voted for the incremental adoption of a four-year program in Chinese. To implement that program, we began a search to find a full-time instructor who had the requisite skills, imagination, and energy. When he was selected, Speirs began his task in May with a slide presentation addressed to underclass students. This fall he teaches a beginning course open to all Seniors, Uppers, and some qualified Lower, a second- and third-year tutorial, and English as a Second Language to the three students from Harbin.

In June Phillips Academy was awarded a $40,000 grant by the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation to help subsidize the program's early stages. We are one of over thirty secondary schools to be so rewarded. Its effects were felt immediately as we were able last June to send our instructor to a Dodge Foundation-sponsored Conference at Ohio State University on the lecturing of Chinese in secondary schools. It was the first convention of its kind in this country.

Also on the CAAC flight from Beijing was Mrs. Xiao-min Ni, the first Visiting Scholar from China. Sponsored jointly by Phillips Academy, H.I.T., and the Chinese Ministry of Education, Mrs. Ni will be assisting in all Chinese and ESL courses.

Thus, there will be a new accent on Andover Hill this fall. Increasing numbers of students will be learning how to communicate with a people who represent a fourth of the world's population and a nation which will be so important to America's future. As we make our first tentative ventures to the other's country and schools, and in the other's language, awareness, respect, and understanding replace ignorance, mistrust, and fear. The exchange between Harbin and Andover has taken on a new meaning.

PA in China

by Douglas A. Stiffler '85

It was at the train station in Beijing that I began to understand the broad sidewalk in front of the huge station and marvelled at the thousands of people sprawled out all around us in the darkness, talking, eating, or just sleeping to pass the time. The jumble of voices and occasional shouts penetrating the hot, sticky evening air created an atmosphere of expectation and confusion. Our group would soon be boarding a train to Harbin, but we had stopped for a few minutes to wait for a luggage cart.

As I looked all around, I noticed many people carrying mesh bags containing small watermelons, apples, peaches, and other fruits. Eager to try a little informal communication, and a little hungry, I decided to attempt some good old-fashioned bartering with a group of Chinese whom I noticed sitting beside a large bag of apples and peaches. I knew, however, that our communication would be hampered severely by the fact that I knew a grand total of three words of Chinese, none of which pertained to the situation. Nonetheless, I took out the packs of chewing gum I had bought especially for the purpose of trade and inched over to the group of people.

It must have seemed odd to them to have this funny-looking Westerner gesturing excitedly at their fruit. I was not making myself understood, but I did manage to attract a large and interested crowd. At last, one of the Chinese professors accompanying our group intervened. From his horrified expression I gathered that he was not too pleased with my impromptu attempt at "cultural exchange," but he explained my meaning to them. Understanding at last what I meant, the Chinese people with the fruit took out not one, but four or five apples and peaches and thrust them into my hands with the greatest enthusiasm. Of course, to make a fair trade, I wanted to give them as many packs of chewing gum, but lo and behold, they waved their hands in absolute refusal. They were so adamant that all I could do was try to thank them and find my way out of the gathered crowd.

Despite the fruit I got out of it, I do not consider this, my first attempt at informal communication, a success. The problem was my ignorance of Chinese custom. A friend who had spent considerable time in China later told me that it is customary to refuse something (like the gum) when offered in this way, and that it is proper to insist, indeed, to force the persons with whom one is dealing to accept what is offered. I am wiser now.

The other students on the trip got themselves noticed also. We Americans were especially conspicuous in Harbin, a city in the extreme northeast not usually on the tourist itinerary. Ian Connor, the only blond in our group, really stood out. At the Friendship Store in Harbin he had quite a time explaining to the salespeople that he wanted to buy one of their signs, a piece of white cloth with the words "Friendship Store" in Chinese and English. This so puzzled the salespeople that they convened a sort of huddle among themselves. As Ian continued to try to explain his intention, a crowd of onlookers began to gather, making the whole situation more unnerving. Since those salespeople just would not seem to go along with his idea, and the crowd was approaching mob proportions, Ian beat a hasty retreat. Blond hair can be an asset if you wish to identify yourself as a foreigner in China, but if you just want to blend in, no luck.

Future students applying to go to Harbin should be examined carefully for two qualities: the ability to consume large quantities of food, and singing ability, or at least a willingness to improvise in bizarre situations. The food part comes in at banquets, which we were fortunate enough to be given often. Liking a variety of foods is important, as well as having a sort of reckless open-mindedness when it comes to trying new things. At the first banquet, I thought the sea cucumber much better than the fried baby sparrows, which stared up at me like another dish in a certain Indiana Jones movie. The ability to use chopsticks is very important also, but this can be learned. It is truly amazing how quickly one can become familiar with chopsticks when the penalty for lack of coordination is hunger! I will not, however, soon forget the giggling of a Chinese student, now at PA, who found my struggle to pick up a tasty-looking piece of shrimp rather amusing!

As for singing ability, this might better be called the "If you can't sing well, sing loud" requirement. Picture four (Ian, perhaps wisely, got sick) embarrassed Phillips Academy students belting out "She'll be comin' round the mountain" to an auditorium packed with over one thousand students of the Harbin Institute of Technology! Several hours beforehand we all succumbed to a state of wide-eyed amazement and horror that there would be (how many?) one thousand people at this event, which earlier we had understood to be a "party" of some sort. I have never sung louder in my life.

For all of us, our memories of China will sustain us as we settle down to the serious business of studying Chinese this year at PA.

The Andover Summer Session

"To their great credit and our felicity"

by James L. Bunnell

Considering that we take happy, smiling, exuberant boys and girls and put them through their academic traces with deliberate intensity, demanding that they measure up without slack for six weeks, it stands to reason that such rigor and lack of stint are apt to take the starch out of them, if not their former joy. On the contrary — to their great credit and our felicity — all but a few find it the most stimulating and exhilarating experience of their lives.

Such has been the fortunate state of the Summer Session for the last nine years; and, taking each year up one side and down the other, it is likely that we shall remember this period from 1976 through 1984 as an extraordinarily happy one.

This general picture of good fortune in the Summer Session is further enhanced by the annual letters of appreciation, such as the one excerpted here from a student of the recent Session:

. . . I cannot find anything to complain about. The teachers at Phillips Academy were top-notch. For the most part, they were encouraging. They demanded your full performance both in and out of class.

The Andover facilities were also incredible. The Sports facilities, the newspaper, photography, visual arts, and dorm facilities were all comfortable and very well equipped.

I could go on and on raving about my wonderful summer at Andover, but I think you have gotten the point; the Andover Summer Session is a rigorous academic program but, also, a rewarding personal experience.

Thank you for bringing a diverse faculty and student body to Andover this summer. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to attend Andover. Finally, thank you for being a fabulous Director. Good luck in all you do. It was a pleasure getting to know you . . .

James L. Bunnell, Director of the Summer Session 1976-84

What a nice letter, we thought. Aside from the wonderful compliments about the teachers, the courses, and the facilities, we were struck with the unusual but clear and favorable mention of the Summer Session Director. Previous references had only been about "that old man with a beard," who tried to keep fun-loving students from cutting across the grass. Clearly, however, the thoroughness of the sentiment in this letter is almost enough to turn the Summer Session's collective head. What a satisfactory student!

Another contribution to our great pleasure was the final chapter in a long story dating back nearly thirty years, a chapter that was acted out several times during the last nine summers. Rather surprisingly it unfolded almost without our noticing it, without press or fanfare, as though it were a work of forces set in motion long ago (which it was) and dutifully followed year after year until the goal was all but forgotten and the pattern of faithful effort all that remained.

What happened was that John M. Kemper (Headmaster, 1947-71) created in 1955 an Ad Hoc committee on the Summer Session to review its purpose and practices. This Ad Hoc group began what amounted to a period of careful study and tough argument, the kind of mental pull and tug that is fundamental to any sort of fruitful transition, but for several years nothing much was definitely decided. And not to put too fine a point on it, major action was chiefly prompted by the implications of Sputnik (1957) which moved the St. Paul's School to establish an Advanced Studies Program for New Hampshire students (1959). We then followed by establishing a new Summer Session direction similar to St. Paul's with both traditional and experimental courses at the advanced level which were not limited to Bay State students (1960). In a few years the changes and aspirations came to be summed up in the expression "national public summer school."

It is pretty widely known, of course, that social institutions, even summer schools, change only gradually; but somehow the slow slip-page of time eased its way upon us and into the successful attainment of a National Public Summer School (NPSS) without our commemorating it. In the process our Summer Session also became the largest, most popular, and academically strongest NPSS in residential, secondary education. Thus, we have reached the happy state of a long-sought goal — and then some.

These favorable representations of the Summer Session are not to say, of course, that kids aren't what they used to be; for they are very much the same as always, wrestling as they do with the difficulties of growing up and ensnared in the usual tangle of emotions. And for those who like to hear the other side of the story, the not-so-happy news is that within the first seven days of every Summer Session an average of a dozen students (one and one-half per cent) found that they were unsuited to PA in one way or another and on their own initiative, and in some cases with our urging, withdrew. Their reasons for leaving ranged over a typical field of adverse reactions: from those old maladies of homesickness and disaffection with the rules or arrangements (one student left because we would not allow rooming with a friend from back home, and another because the walk from the dormitory to the center of the campus was too great) to faint-heartedness in the face of academic rigor or the hopelessness of endogenous depression.

However, this aspect of nine

Thus, we have reached the happy state of a long-sought goal — and then some.

summers of work has a helpful message in it. The fact that the Summer Session enrollees are not, and cannot be, interviewed before admission tends to increase the possibility of accepting students whose paper credentials look very promising but whose personalities really can't cope with our particular requirements. Identification of such individuals early in the Session is as essential to our general health and happiness as it is to theirs. Finding in the fourth or fifth week of Summer Session that a student doesn't somehow fit is virtually tantamount to admitting that we aren't sufficiently on our toes in this respect, whereas, finding the unsuitable students in the first seven days is pretty good evidence that our regimen is working properly. And if less than two per cent of the student body proves unsuited to our ways, our admissions process is also probably functioning satisfactorily.

In addition to those who withdrew for their own reasons, an average of six students per summer in the last nine Sessions were dismissed out of an average Summer Session enrollment of over 800 students: some for the purchase or possession or use of intoxicating beverages or drugs; some for an unacceptable accumulation of offenses; some for plagiarism; and some for neglect of their work. In general, to mention only the number of dismissals may paint too rosy a picture; for, if our Session lasted another two weeks (and many other summer schools do), our dismissal numbers could have been tripled or even quadrupled, the average count of censure and probation cases being twenty-four by the end of the summer. Probably students who are bent on cutting corners or stretching the rules and who know just how far to go without the unhappiest of endings are far more numerous than those whose ineptitude leads to a parting of the way.

Some statistics of the last nine years tell their own story. Beginning in 1977, the applications total rose to an impressive pinnacle with each succeeding year reaching a higher peak until 1982, when the total levelled off. (Subsequently, a declining trend has appeared in the making, the extent of which is impossible to know as yet.) But the overall increase in applications since 1976 has risen more than one hundred per cent, lifting the ceiling on enrollments to the point where a maximum use of facilities (use of all beds) has become the norm in an age when there is no threat of lowering our academic standards. Not everyone will remember that in 1972 and 1973 the Summer Session Director found it necessary to depress the enrollment in order to keep standards. So, with an ease unknown to previous summers, the last several Summer Sessions have seen the keeping of the same grading and admissions standards as used for the regular academic year, the end of audited and pass/fail courses, and the use of the 0 to 6 grading scale.

Other nine-Session statistics show that girls outnumber boys in both applications and enrollment some seven-ninths of the time; that despite a little wavering the Summer Session has a mature student body with an average of nearly seven-eighths of their number in the rising eleventh and twelfth grades; that the greatest number of students no longer hails from BO-WASH (that regional megalopolis from Boston to Washington) but from central, southern, and western parts of the country and that the largest number of students from a single state has been New York but that the next-to-the-largest number has shifted from New Jersey to California (now a four-year trend); that two-thirds of the students have consistently chosen a major course in English (overwhelmingly writing courses) or science and a minor course in English or art (performing, visual, and musical); that the remaining one-third of the students choose more or less equally from history, mathematics, philosophy, and psychology and least of all from modern foreign language; and finally that the decade-old back-to-basics trend would in the PA summer curriculum be more aptly termed back-to-seriousness from the backing and filling of the Vietnam War era. Also, schools in general rather arbitrarily still regard art as a frill and just as arbitrarily lop it off the curriculum when the financial going gets rough. In the PA Summer Session, where art is left free to compete with other subjects on an equal footing, it has consistently elicited a third place in popularity.

Helpful as they are, statistics don't supply the full summer story, especially with regard to two questions: "What does the Andover Summer Session have to do with Phillips Academy?" and "How does it work?" The summertime operation is often referred to as one of the Academy's ancillary programs, and indeed it is a subordinate function. But being ancillary doesn't make it a separate entity; it is not an adjunct. Rather, it is an integral part of Phillips Academy. In the simplest of terms, it is the Academy open in the summertime.

Some confusion occasionally arises from the fact that the STIs (Short Term Institutes in the Winter and Spring Sessions, only one of which, namely an art program, is still in existence), the Day Camps (summer soccer and football camps), and (MS)² (Minority Students in Mathematics and Science in the Summer Session) are also classified as ancillary; and, like the Summer Session, they are subordinate in nature, but, unlike the Summer Session, do not have the dimensions of a school. Instead, they are more like departments.

Other innovations of this era of extraordinary happiness are the Chamber Music Program (1976), the implementation of (MS)² (1977), the Day Camps in soccer and football (1978), the Carillon Concerts (1979), Native American Scholars Program (1981), the Intensive Studio Art Program (1982), and the Advanced Computer Program (1983).

Lastly, although we have worked and played as hard as any summer institution, for years we couldn't claim any pageantry to speak of. Since 1981 we have a new dimension.

At about 4 am on the last day of the Session the Campbell Highlanders slip into the Chapel where they won't be heard warming up their bagpipes. A few minutes before dawn (about 5:20 am) the pipers step off, halt in front of Samuel Phillips Hall on the Great Quad, go through a ceremonial dismissal, and march off. The students who rolled out to follow the pipers (and those who found their way otherwise) close in around the cordon before Sam Phil's steps to hear their names called out and to step forward to receive their Certificates of Graduation — and then to head for home.

The PA tendency is to see the Summer Session as only a brief moment of Andover. The Summer Session students see it as the most stimulating and exhilarating experience of their lives . . . to their great credit and our felicity.

Andover/Abbot Regional Associations

Regional Associations comprise alumni, alumnae, parents of current and past PA students, and special friends of the school who reside in certain geographical areas of the country. There are currently twelve Regional Associations in the United States.

Regional Associations are not "clubs" in the sense of having permanent locations or meeting places; they are not organized to serve as fund-raising mechanisms for the school; several associations are not even formally incorporated, and some do not possess any formal organizational structure. What are these Associations then?

Andover/Abbot Associations provide social occasions as well as educational and cultural activities for their members. They provide alumni, alumnae, and parents with the opportunity for cross-generational association (unlike the PA Class, which consists of graduates of the same age group). The Regional Associations help the school with important activities like identifying prospective students and interesting them to attend PA once they have been admitted; and the Regional Association leadership helps organize and serves as host for special Andover Travel Programs which enable the Headmaster and other administrators and faculty to visit annually with graduates and parents in certain metropolitan areas (please see the travel schedule, below).

In order to support their special social, educational, and other cultural activities, many Regional Associations collect modest dues from their membership which help defray mailing and other costs. The Associations are led by a loyal, energetic group called a board of directors, who in turn elect or appoint a president.

If you are interested in becoming active in one of the Regional Associations listed below, please call or write the designated president. If you are interested in starting a new association on your own, please contact Denis Tippo, Director of Alumni and Parent Affairs at the school (617/475-3400, Ext. 283), or write Denis at the Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

New York

The accompanying picture shows Andover/Abbot Alumni having fun and supporting their school. Within a 24-hour period in mid-June, our New York group entertained itself at dinner in a private dining room at Shea Stadium, and with press level seats to watch the Mets and the Phillies. While the Phillies spoiled this particular game for the Mets, that did not dampen the enthusiasm of the group. The next day, one of those perfect June evenings, on the grassy knoll behind the Metropolitan Museum, we hosted our annual picnic for matriculating students and their parents from all over the Metropolitan area. Meredith Price, Associate Director of Admissions, came down from Andover and invited several current students from the New York area to help answer many questions asked by our guests. Once we realized that the parents were asking all the questions, we asked

Southern California

The fourth annual picnic for new students and their families was welcomed by a bright, hot Labor Day afternoon in the San Fernando Valley. Susan and John Shumway, parents of three Phillips Academy graduates, maintained their Andover momentum by hosting this emerging Southern California tradition.

With plenty of room to romp, students, siblings, and parents worked up a hefty appetite for fried chicken and all the appropriate goodies. They were lead by Louise and Walter ("Bill") Farley '28, Alumni Reps Tim McChristian '73, Judy Mustille '66, Carlos Sanchez '75, and Graeme Henderson '52, who shared their families with those of the new students.

It was delightful again this year to see a majority of the new students in attendance. Particularly gratifying was the sight of current students, who themselves attended prior picnics as new students, sharing their experiences and advice with Andover's novices.

Our travel award goes to Linda and Denny Campbell, who brought Kathleen '86 all the way from Laguna Beach.

The two major items of business will be the election of the officers for the forthcoming year and plans to welcome Josh Miner and Company on 15 November for a reception and dinner. Dinners in Minneapolis and Pittsburgh

Hosted by Jane and Randy Ross '60, the Andover/Abbot Association of the Upper Mid-West held a reception and dinner on 14 October in Minneapolis in honor of Dean of Admissions Joshua L. Miner, who is retiring from the Academy after thirty-five years of distinguished service. Preceding the dinner, Josh gave a talk on "Creating the Curious Child" to parents and friends at nearby Breck School.

The following day, Josh Miner was honored at a gathering of alumni and parents at the Duquesne Club in Pittsburgh. At the dinner, Joseph C. Mesics '53, Secretary of the Academy, presented on behalf of the Board of Trustees a resolution to Anne Jackson '53, citing her distinguished stewardship as Alumni Trustee. Anne's term on the Board ended this past spring.

The festivities on 15 October were organized and hosted by Alice and Bill Snyder IV '59.

Campus News

The Summer

There must have been a time when Commencement and Reunions marked the beginning of a leisurely summer for the campus, but that time is no more. The Summer Session alone has more than 860 students, not to mention an invigorating influx of Summer Session faculty. The satellite programs of the Session comprise a variety of established as well as experimental institutes: the Chamber Music Program under William Thomas and his staff has become an institution unto itself which benefits the entire community with its weekly recitals. In 1984 we also offered special courses in computer programming and in English as a second language.

One of our most famous programs, of course is the (MS)² Program (Math and Science for Minority Students), a three-year commitment for each candidate selected. In 1984 we had over one hundred students in the program. Teachers, too, had their sessions, like the Andover-Dartmouth Teachers Institute, an intensive program for inner-city high school math instructors, and the two-week Visual Arts Institute for Teachers.

PA also played host to several administrative conferences. At the athletic conference the heads and athletic directors of six schools discussed the role of athletics in secondary school education.

Of national significance was a conference supported by the Ford Foundation consisting of school and university administrators and foundation officials who came together to discuss summer programs for minorities, both students and faculty. Twenty schools participated in sharing their experiences and suggesting new ways to serve our society.

The Fall

When the dust settled in September, we had 1213 students enrolled in the regular session, 430 of whom were new (out of 3,000 applicants). For the first time ever the Academy has over 100 black or Hispanic students, a handsome climb from the 51 of only four years ago. One-third of the students in the school receive financial aid; 56 of those students have full scholarships.

The Faculty

When PA parents Mr. and Mrs. Donald Kendall approached the Headmaster with the idea, he was interested. The Kendalls believe that more good will and understanding will evolve when people cross national frontiers and meet other people than all the political, diplomatic, and military projects combined. They offered to fund a three-week trip to Russia next summer for thirty PA faculty (spouses eligible) to meet their counterparts in the Soviet Union, on condition that the applicants immerse themselves in the study of the Soviet language and culture for three weeks prior to the trip — a six-week commitment.

Ninety-four faculty signed up. Loath to cut anyone out by either lottery or seniority, the Headmaster sought and obtained additional funds from the Kendalls and other sources and proposed that the entire group could be accommodated if each person contributed a modest sum. Although the majority will do

No one is under the illusion that the trip to six Russian cities will be a tourist's vacation. It will be that phenomenon dear to every academic, a working holiday. But best of all — never in the history of PA has there been such an example of communal faculty development.

Change In Tax Laws

The 1984 Tax Act included a change in the law governing capital gain holding periods. The law stated that, for securities purchased after 22 June 1984, the Internal Revenue Service would recognize a six-month holding period to qualify the assets as "long-term," rather than the former one year. If you bought securities between 22 June and 30 June, and they have greatly appreciated in value, you may give them to Andover between 22 December and 31 December and claim a deduction based on their full market value on the date of gift. We just thought you would like to know.

MacArthur Fellows

We are especially proud to learn that two PA graduates have been named MacArthur Fellows this year as "exceptionally talented individuals" — the program is more informally referred to as the "search for genius."

Beaumont Newhall '26 is an historian of photography and professor of art at the University of New Mexico, and was the first curator of photography at New York's Museum of Modern Art.

William Drayton, Jr. '61, is both an attorney and the chairman of the American Environmental Safety Council, as well as chairman of the Ashoka Society Fellowships to encourage "entrepreneurial skills among individuals in developing nations."

Each of this year's twenty-five awards carries with it a five-year stipend for use at the recipient's discretion.

Volunteer Weekend

More than 170 alumni who volunteer their services to PA were able to return on the weekend of 28 September for twenty-four hours of classes, meetings, panels, a concert, a tour of refurbished Bulfinch Hall, and a splendid lobster/clam-bake in the Cage on Friday night. They were Class Agents, Class Secretaries, Reunion Chairmen, Alumni Council members, Regional Association officers, committee members for Parents' Fund and Special Giving, Alumni Representatives for the Admissions Office, Trustees, and Faculty hosts. The subjects discussed were the statistical findings of the 10-year study on Coeducation at PA, the students' view of life at the school in 1984-85, and (in small workshops) the business of the committee or group that each alumnus or alumna serves.

Fund Chairmen

The new Parent Fund Co-Chairmen for 1984-85 are Rod and Verena Cushman, parents of Stefan '87, from Mill Neck, New York.

Grandparents Day

Grandparents Day at Phillips Academy will be 11 May 1985. We welcome all Andover grandparents to visit their grandchildren and see the Academy in action. So that they will receive the appropriate announcements, please submit the names and addresses of all potentially interested grandparents to Sarah Gurry, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Co-chairmen of the Grandparents Committee are Jack and Jane Ware, whose granddaughter is Amy Harris '85. Jack is also a member of the Andover class of 1937. The Wares live in Vineyard Haven, Massachusetts.

Soccer

Eleven alumnae from the classes of 1977 through 1984 returned on 23 September to play the Girls Varsity in soccer. In spite of the goals scored by Electa Sevier '83 (Harvard) and Lisa Johnson '81 (Dartmouth), the alumnae lost to the varsity 4-2.

Fifteen alumni returned to play the Boys Varsity on the same afternoon. The Old Timers showed such speed and skill that they defeated the varsity soccer team 3-2.

Among those who returned for Volunteer Weekend were Melinda Pierce '84 and Donald Shapiro '53

SPORTS

by Peter MacDonald '85

On the way to victory in the post-season tournament, Kara Buckley steals the ball from her Pingree opponent and sprints towards the goal. PA players behind her are Michelle Jolicoeur and Nell B. Gharibian (headband).

Correction

The New York Times, one of our favorite newspapers and one that we usually find very dependable, reversed Andover's enrollment statistics in a 26th October article on independent schools. The correct male-female ratio for 1984-85 is Boys 58%, Girls 42%.

Going Home

Denny Hatch's article "You CAN go Home Again" in the spring issue was a marvel.

His observations struck numerous sensitive notes in me, and I dare say in many others of us at PA who at the time felt like nobodies. It was true literature.

Hockey led the athletic program this year as the two teams are responsible for 14 of the school's 24 victories.

Field Hockey, under coach Ada Fan, has a record of 7-1-1, losing only to Groton in the first game of the season. Seniors Stephanie Sanchez and Fern Ward, scoring seven goals apiece, are the driving force behind the team, while Captain Julia Trotman, Jeannine Weissman, and Laura Obbard provide defensive backbone.

Girls Soccer, continuing in its tradition of greatness, is once again the team to beat this year. After the hopes for another undefeated season were dashed in the Holderness game (in which five starters were unable to play), the team came back to crush both Exeter, Harvard, and Pingree. Girls Soccer is led by high scoring Nell Gharibian and Ellen LeMaitre, with Jenny Wadsworth and Lane Gruber also playing exceptionally well.

Boys Cross Country, led by Mike Schaus, has a record of 1-3. Although it will be difficult to achieve a winning season, the team expects to do well in the Interschols, where runners such as Alex Guettel and Jim Park will be more valuable.

Football, with a record of 0-4, has shown steady improvement throughout the season. The Blue has an extremely talented defensive backfield with Kevin Minicus and Captain Jim Thompson, and a solid offensive line led by returning starters Scott Lattanzio and John Roesner. Despite their losses, the players are confident that the team will be more successful in the latter half of the season.

Girls Cross Country, led by runners Paige Cox and Helen Myers, is having a great season in 1984. The squad captured six out of the seven top places in both Concord's tri-meet and the Noble and Greenough meet, and has a record of 3-1. Volleyball, led by its energetic and talented captain Kate Cooper, faces a tough schedule this year and plans to improve their 2-3 record in the four remaining games.

Boys Soccer, 4-5-1, had a great start but lost its three games within a single week. The team is anchored by Captains Jon Schwarz and Jon Crawford, while Grae Davis and upper Mal Galvin lead the offense.

In addition, Andover has added another sport to its athletic program this fall: water polo. Although it is not formally recognized as a varsity sport, the team scrimmaged Exeter and will play Deerfield and enter the New England Water Polo Tournament. While a lack of experience proved a hindrance in the first contest, the team has shown great improvement and is optimistic about the remainder of the season.

DEATHS

Donald H. McLean, Jr. '28

At the memorial service for Donald H. McLean, Jr., his fellow Trustee John U. Monro '30 said "No one has played a more important role in the affairs of Phillips Academy over the past thirty years than Don McLean." True indeed.

The visible record suggests his importance to the Academy: member of the Alumni Council and then its president in the mid 1950s when alumni affairs were being thoroughly reorganized; chairman of the Andover Program campaign (which was responsible for the Arts and Communications Center, Evans Hall, Stevens, Stearns, Stimson, and Fuess dormitories in addition to several smaller projects); Charter Trustee from 1958-81; President of the Board of Trustees from 1968-81. The Trustee presidency included the years during which, according to historian Frederick S. Allis, Jr. '31, "Phillips Academy . . . underwent more basic changes than in all its previous history."

The less visible record underscores his importance. Donald H. McLean, Jr., was at the center of all policy decisions during the troubling period in the late

'60s and early '70s when student unrest was at its height, when Headmaster John Kemper's fine leadership ended with his death, when acting Headmaster Simeon Hyde, Jr. '37 courageously pushed and pulled the school through a hectic year of transition, when a new headmaster was urgently sought and Theodore R. Sizer was fortunately found. These were stressful, uncertain years. Like the Great Depression, you had to live through them in order to appreciate the tension which existed within and among faculty, students, Trustees, staff, alumni, and parents let alone the community and the nation. Confidence in management was at a low ebb. It was far easier to clamor than to lead, and people clamored. For the newly elected President of the Trustees it was a stern test.

From that period of trial emerged a stronger Andover. Headmaster Sizer, with Donald McLean at his side, led the Academy through an upswing remarkable by any set of measurements — student applications, faculty recruitment and compensation, student skills evident in the classroom or on stage, the introduction of coeducation and the merger with Abbot Academy, funds contributed in record amounts through the Bicentennial Campaign, and morale steadily on a rise in all quarters.

It was fitting therefore that Theodore Sizer spoke at Donald McLean's memorial service saying in part:

Donald Holman McLean, Jr. son of a congressman and judge, he cared about getting things done. Whether the matter was as subtle as delineating the functions of an occidental international house in an oriental land or as politically Byzantine as moving a large medical facility from one city to another, Don gloried in the tactics of a worthwhile cause.

Knowing the people involved was equally crucial. Don cared passionately for institutions, but he knew well that they were at their center both a cluster of ideas and a congeries of people, and that institutional decisions would ultimately be made by those people's hearts as well as heads.

Tactics were but a means, of course. The ends were the key. Support of the institutions which were the focus of Don's life became (albeit in a strongly secular sense) a holy purpose. No institution was holier than that of family, and while Don kept his privacy here, his friends readily sensed his intense commitment to wife, children, and grandchildren, to roots, to obligations. His marriage with Martha — two vivid personalities in serene and secure joining — was very special. However family customs may shift in our culture, the loyal vitality lived out by Don and Martha expresses humanity at its best.

No person could care more for the place where we now gather than did Don. He cared enough for Andover to change it, to change its form while he protected its substance, the ideas at its core. The founders' ideology — a "free public school or academy" with an emphasis on the Paul Revere motto, NON SIBI — was the constant. Don felt that the true loyalist's obligation was to fashion and re-fashion a contemporary expression of an enduring, noble ideology.

I would add a word from thirty years of close association with him. He clearly had an ideal, a sense of direction, which never faltered. He did not speak of it as a dream, certainly not his dream. He was far too pragmatic, too self-disciplined, too aware of man's limitations. But a thread ran deep through everything he did reflecting his belief that society would be rightly served if good schools became better, if improved management and planning were part of health care, if opportunities existed for the international exchange of cultural and economic ideas, if widespread recognition were given to positive initiatives in Southeast Asia, if information and technical knowledge could be acquired and put to use for both population control and agricultural development in the nations of the Far East. He often said "assemble the facts and they lead you to a logical conclusion." Throughout his life he did assemble facts, did see them lead to logical conclusions . . . and did act to implement those conclusions."

His public record was, to use one of his favorite adjectives, distinguished. Following Andover (1928), Amherst College and the Yale Law School, he joined the New York law firm of Millbank, Tweed and Hope. During World War II he became a Lt. Colonel in the U.S. Army International Division, serving as special assistant to General Lucius D. Clay in the occupation of Germany and twice receiving Legion of Merit awards for outstanding work. In 1952 he became a special associate to John D. Rockefeller 3rd, developing post-war cultural and educational programs in Japan and Southeast Asia. He was instrumental in the formation of the Agricultural Development Council, the Population Council, the International House of Japan, the International Center in New Delhi, India, and the Ramon Magsaysay Award Foundation in Manila.

In 1965 he became President of the Lahey Clinic Foundation in Boston. In the next ten years he reorganized its structure, directed its relocation to Burlington, Massachusetts, and led its development into a major medical center. Prior to his work with the Lahey Clinic, he had played an important role in the reorganization of the Cleveland Clinic in Ohio. He served on the Visting Committees for the Harvard School of Public Administration and the Harvard Business School, and was a Trustee of Massachusetts Financial Services. In 1977 Amherst College awarded him an honorary LLD.

One more personal word. Donald McLean was my mentor. Not in any formal sense, but rather because of the way in which he worked. He was understanding but demanding, sensitive yet tough, thoughtful but decisive, patient but impatient, careful yet capable of dramatic action. For thirty years I was lucky to work with him (under, technically, but always with). How he wrote, thought, and spoke became somewhat second nature to me. Not that we always agreed. On some occasions sharp disagreements split our common purpose, and they were not resolved overnight. But always we did come together, and the bond was the closer.

In his memorial service tribute, Theodore R. Sizer concluded, "The word which crept most often [into his conversation] was the term 'worthy.' A worthy idea. A worthy person. Someone up to the standard of the idea to which loyalty is expected. Don would have us be worthy, and our lives were changed because we wanted him to find us worthy. We knew, at those lunch table talks and elsewhere, that we were the beneficiaries of a loyalty of a profoundly worthy man."

His wife Martha continues to live at 187 Chestnut Street, Andover, Massachusetts 01810. Mr. McLean is also survived by their four children: Donald H. III, of Denver, Colorado; Mrs. James D. (Ruth) Lizotte of Silverton, Oregon; John A. of Yarmouth, Maine; and Mrs. David (Barbara) O'Neil of Lincoln, Massachusetts; by his brother Edward R. of Greenville, Delaware; and by eight grandchildren.

1904 Everett A. Sherrill, Allentown, PA; 20 April 1984.

Everett Ames Sherrill was born in Louisville, KY, but moved to Brookline, MA and resided there most of his life. He died at the age of 99 at the Phoebe Home in Allentown where he had been a patient since July of 1983.

He recalled how he earned part of his tuition at Andover by climbing the belfry to ring the school bell each morning at 6:30, at 8 pm and also the bells for meals and classes. He and his roommate, Bob Brown, heated their room with a stove that used a quarter-ton of anthracite coal a term which cost them $5. Two of his brothers, the late Edgar B. Sherrill and Miles S. Sherrill, for 50 years professor of physical chemistry at MIT, were Andover graduates as were two of his grandsons, David Sherrill '55 and Sam Skinner '70.

He was at one time treasurer of the Sherrill Press, a Boston publishing firm, but spent most of his life in real estate management and maintenance. He was a member of Harvard Congregational Church in Brookline, and the long-time treasurer of its Brotherhood, and was a member of St. John's United Church of Christ in Allentown.

Surviving are five children: Helen Elizabeth Harvey, Caroline Miles Fister, Edgar Ames Sherrill, Charlotte S. Skinner and Sarah Ann Horne; 11 grandchildren and 19 great-grandchildren. He was the husband of Helen Way Sherrill who predeceased him in 1980.

As the very aged secretary of the venerable class of 1910 I find myself increasingly tempted to write not about 1910 today (only seven of us left) but of times gone by when we were all very young and life was just beginning.

Sure, memories are the solace of the old. I remember very vividly the day I first arrived at Andover. I came by train and I was both excited and nervous.

Getting off the train was another boy also obviously headed for PA. His name was Mel Price and he was laden down with much baggage and a mandolin. We walked up the hill together and found we had both been assigned to Andover Cottage. It turned out that we were to be friends for life. We roomed together at Yale and he was best man at my wedding as was I at his.

The house master of Andover Cottage was Al Benner, a professor of Greek. We were all very fond of him but I regret to say we sometimes broke the rules. Once in a while we would bravely smoke a cigarette allowing the fumes to go up the chimney of our fireplace. And daringly, after hours, we would climb out the window and dash across the field to get ice cream at Hal Hilton's.

Those were the days of innocence and little did we know that in a few short years we were to be involved in the Great War and the world we knew would never be the same again.

Reunion at Andover on 8 and 9 June was great, even though the only other member of the class that was able to make it was Don Wright. General Leo McMahon and John Erving had planned to attend but circumstances prevented it.

The Class of '19 had a room reserved at the Andover Inn, "amply stocked," to which the Class of 1914 was invited—Mimi and I attended and that too was most enjoyable.

I feel that the amount of contributions from our class was "respectable," but regret that our percentage of donors dropped from 82 to 68 per cent. In a way that is understandable, but I hope that next year, even though it is not a reunion year, we'll be able to add many dollars to the scholarship fund.

Your Agent-Secretary felt the urge to report to Mrs. Ray Snell, and as you would expect, Val wrote a beautiful letter in return extending her best wishes to members of our class.

I received a letter from the son of Maurice Gould that he has passed away on 26 May. Maurice was the retired Vice President of the Curtis Publishing Co. of Philadelphia. At the time of his retirement in 1962, he was Advertising Director of the Ladies' Home Journal. He was a member of the class of 1920 at Princeton and he served in the U.S. Navy as an Ensign during World War I. Besides his son, Maurice, Jr., his daughter, Mrs. Francis Lobdell, and a step-son, Kenneth Spinney, Maurice is survived by twelve grandchildren and one great-grandchild. He was married twice and both wives predeceased him. The sympathy of the class is extended to his survivors.

The son of Herbert Upton also wrote to inform me of a change of address for his father. His new address is 1200 Earhart Rd., #226, Glacier Hills Retirement Center, Ann Arbor, MI 48105. Thanks for letting us know.

I met Charlie Gamble of Mobile Alabama at the Whitefield Inn in Spaulding, NH — we both happened to be staying there. Charlie is as jolly an individual as he always was.

Editor's Note: We are very sorry to have to report the death in September of Gilbert Hood's wife, Margaret. The sympathy of the Class of 1916 as well as that of the entire Academy is extended to Gilbert and his family.

A scholarship fund to assist students from middle class families at PA has been established in Temp Brown's memory by Castle Foundation, Inc. of Illinois. It is open-ended and may be contributed to by anyone at any time. I will mention this again when next communicating with members of our class. However, for those in other classes, or outside the Andover family who wish to contribute, it is suggested that checks be made payable to "Trustees of Phillips Academy," with reference to Castle Foundation. Temp did a great deal both for the school and our class, and this is a most worthy cause.

Jack Winchester, who lives in Juno Beach, Florida, has not been able to work reunions into his schedule, but maintains an active interest in PA. He reports all is well with the family, "with the usual problems of O.A." This presumably translates to "Old Age," a condition which applies to a number of us.

Your scribe and Izzie took a short trip to Montreal, Ottawa and Quebec in July and had an active summer in tropical weather, with visits from relatives and friends, but unfortunately no classmates. The Yale Club of Cape Cod planned a day's outing to Martha's Vineyard in June, with sightseeing, lunch, and some video-tapes of the Residential Colleges. Your scribe and Lou Lincoln decided that a visit there with Al Wilson would be the prime objective. Unfortunately, the trip was cancelled. However, Lou and I decided to go anyway, and, best of all, Al agreed.

After a night before spent at Lou's home in East Falmouth, Mary Lee and I, with Lou's long-time friend Margaret Moyer, took the early morning ferry to Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard. There, on the dock, awaiting us, was Al. He drove us to his beautiful home in the high woods of Vineyard Haven, where we sat on the terrace awaiting the return of his wife, Fefa, who was at the hairdresser's. Their house is an architect's masterpiece which they built some years ago, just for summer living. They now occupy it year 'round (when they are there).

During our tour through the house, we saw Al's championship oars from Yale days, the 1924 Olympic Championship oar and the gold medal. Al told us about their stay in Antigua this past winter at the Mill Reef Club where they played golf. They have locals for caddies who are very non-committal. It seems that on a short par three hole, Al hit a high iron and lost it in the sun. The caddy said laconically, "It's on the green." A few seconds later he said, "No, it isn't (pause), it's in the hole." Al said this was his first hole-in-one — ever.

After more conversation, we drove to a lovely sea food restaurant in Edgartown, overlooking Chappaquiddick Island, for a delicious lunch. Afterwards, a tour through the old back streets of Edgartown, then the shore road to Oak Bluffs, for the late afternoon Island Queen back to Falmouth.

We all considered this more of an Andover mini-reunion than Yale. It was great fun on a beautiful, balmy day, and the best part was renewing old friendships.

A nice note and clipping from Bill Dwight's newspaper in Holyoke, MA reports the recent death, in So. Hadley, MA of Willie Wingate's widow.

There is also reported, by a cousin, the death in 1980, of Frederick Yardley, and the death in 1982, of Eugene Dederer was also reported.

A letter from Ruth Dewey York came next with news she had just returned from the Salem Hospital after a successful operation. She follows a pleasant schedule of shopping on Mondays and visiting the Marblehead Senior Citizens Club about twice a week. She is looking forward to the next Bulletin.

I am sorry to say that is all the news to come in by mail, but I did have a most welcome phone call from Helen Knight Wilkinson from The Colony, a lovely resort hotel in Kennebunkport, ME. A date for Saturday noon gave us a chance to reminisce for a few hours and I enjoyed being her guest for luncheon. Helen and her friend Gwendolyn were at the Colony for a week in July, and were enjoying the days over the Labor Day weekend. Remember the lovely historical house where Wilkie and Helen entertained us in '82 in N. Andover? She showed me a picture of it that she had done in needlepoint, easily 18" square. It must be beautiful in full color. Since her husband died in 1983 Helen has moved to an apartment in North Andover. It sounds great, so roomy, attractive and convenient. She has kept her membership in two garden clubs and is now considering some time this winter in Florida. Helen looks fine — tanned and healthy! It was great to find her so near my home in Maine.

Not a very cheerful card came from Celie Kunkel Payne the other day. She says, "Sorry the news is just the same, another broken hip! Can walk with a walker and have nurses around the clock. Am about to have my 80th birthday which the children insist on celebrating. Lydia Kunkel Howard '21 is in a nursing home in Rochester, NY near her son and seems happy. Love to you all, Celie." How about dropping her a card? Her address is Mrs. Frank N. Payne, 2311 No. Front St., Harrisburg, PA 17110.

I have enjoyed my twenty-one months since I moved to this area; so good to be near my two eldest children and their families. I see more of my grands and greats when they come to visit their parents. Fairly often I see my son in Natick, MA and my youngest daughter in Clifton Park, NY. Although lame with arthritis, I expect to keep going as long as I can drive.

Of course sometimes I get sad news too! My card to Kay Damon Kletzien last May brought me word from her sister Edith Damon Bugbee '23 that Kay had been ill for some time. As Kay's daughters were busy caring for their parents, Edie had offered to write me. I was saddened by another letter from her with the news of Kay's death on 17 July after a prolonged illness.

After Abbot, Kay graduated from Wellesley College. She also attended the N. E. Conservatory of Music and taught at Boston's Perkins School for the mentally handicapped. She married Dr. Seymour W. Kletzien in 1929 and raised a family of four children who survive her along with her husband and 10 grandchildren.

I appreciated the copy of Kay's obituary that was included for it gave me detailed information of her life. Our warm sympathy goes to all the family, and our sincere thanks to Edith. My greeting to you — keep me posted. Love Olivia

As promised in the last Bulletin, herewith news of Jack Van Duyn and Red Cleaveland. Jack says he lives in a retirement home, has slightly rocky health — reads slowly, breaths just enough, walks with a cane, but at least is still on earth. His wife died more than a year ago. His daughter lives in Columbus, GA with her family, which is a help to him. Four years ago his eyes prevented continuation of medical practice. During his life he has been in many places — Mexico, Caribbean, Korea, Japan, etc. His last wife was Japanese. He remembers us all, young and handsome, especially those who went to Princeton with him. In July of '84 he expected to go to Skaneateles (near Syracuse) to visit his sister. Jack hopes to be well enough to see us at our 65th. Red Cleaveland's 80th birthday fell on Income Tax day (15 April), so he reversed tradition and gave to the IRS. In fair shape, he notices a decline in senses like sight, hearing, taste, and smell. Red and Katie missed their visit to Arizona in 1983-84, but went to Escondido, CA, enjoying Lawrence Welk's Village Inn and three-par golf course. Also they visited the wild animal preserve near Escondido, which impressed them. Red is active as a Deacon in the local Episcopal Church.

Bob Hamilton of the class of '24 sent me a notice of the death on 13 July '84 of Josephine Gordon, wife of Alex Gordon. Shortly thereafter Alex came to Tucson to visit his son Mark (PA '55) and daughter-in-law, Julie. They came over to my pad for a very pleasant visit and, of course, the three Andoverites gabbed happily about our school days.

A letter from Otto Alcaide informs that he continues as Treasurer of the Music Guild. A clipping from his local paper shows him as a Hospice volunteer, a very admirable service. He went to Boston in June to the Rivers School reunions and commencement and to visit his son Ted and wife on Cape Cod. He later saw his daughter in Hershey.

Phil Simonds wrote in May about my book on the stock market and other wanderings, adding comments on his investment philosophy and his good- and not-so-good adventures. A banker for 43 years, Phil had some cogent remarks on some of the banks we have read about recently. He very kindly wrote to the Secretary of Yale '27 to give a plug to my book. A note in the summer letter by Scribe Bob Cameron, Y'27, printed said plug. However, Phil's handwriting in the style of a doctor's prescription transformed the name of Jim Bruce to Jim Bunce, who is also of the class of Yale '27. I can picture Mr. Bunce when he learns he is an author with the designations FSA, MAAA, and CLU. Phil has written to the Secretary and pointed out the mix-up, so all's well that ends well . . . if Jim Bunce isn't bombarded with inquiries. Al Buttrick spent his 81st birthday and most of August as a patient instead of an ex-volunteer at the Danbury hospital with pneumonia and an infected lung. Later, with a portable oxygen device he went to his job as a receptionist and general handyman at the Episcopal Church. He is uncertain about how long he will "carry the pack" but, says Al, "It is better than staying home." Wishing you a speedy recovery, Al!

Bill Gay has been Class Agent for PA '23 for 25 years. We owe him a huge vote of appreciation. Not imagining a dissenting vote, I hereby declare for the Class a unanimous vote of gratitude to Bill.

When you read these notes your scribe will have been married on 28 September 1984 to Helen Hoyt and spent a week in each of the islands of Barbados, Grenada, and Tobago, and will live happily ever after.

I am sorry to report that Winthrop M. Puffer died six years ago. I have no details, except that his wife survived him. It is, of course, rather late to send condolences to his family.

I delight in reporting that my great-nephew, Eric Gazin, grandson of my late brother Henry, is now a member of the Class of 1987 at Phillips Academy — at Andover, of course.

This was your friendly secretary, but this time I am really retired. I have truly enjoyed the years I have served, but feel I have done it as long as I can. If my typing were better or my writing more legible, it might help. I do hope someone will volunteer to fill the vacant Class Secretary's spot.

I do want to say again (please forgive me for repeating myself) how much I appreciate all the letters and cards I have received from you and I thank you from the bottom of my heart. It has been fun!

At the moment I am grounded again as a car door swung on my bad leg. Not too bad, though. I will be around again in a couple of weeks. Love to you all. Charlotte

Keith Smith won the long distance prize at our reunion and it was well deserved as his letter written on the Amtrak train he took home to Dutch John, Utah told how he was delayed 14 hours due to washouts from the heavy rains. Keith was sorry the Wadhams couldn't make our 60th. Thanks, Keith, for those kind words about reunion.

Johnny Lockett, runner up to Keith, reports they are also having floods in El Paso. The saying, "It never rains in El Paso" is not true. Art Tait always referred to his city of El Paso as the city in the sunny Southwest. The day after I received a letter from Art, it said on TV that it was snowing in El Paso. Bunny and I will always treasure the plaque Art and Frieda had made for the Larsens and presented by Bob Hamilton at our 60th.

Good news about my roommate, Dick Knight. He has signed up at a retirement complex called North Hill in Needham, MA so we can see him more often. At present he lives with his sister and family in his former town of Melrose, famous for hockey players Knight and Milliken to name two.

Ruth and Joe Smith were in Melbourne Beach, FL for a week house-sitting for their daughter . . . said the weather was perfect. They were sorry they missed the class picture . . . "The first time we missed." They attended everything else.

Barney Treat, Frank's widow, was very pleased to receive Bob Hamilton's presentation speech given at the planting of the Charter Oak offspring near the 1924 House. Frank was a descendant of the Treat who hid the Charter in the oak. . . . Prentiss Glazier was in London again when he wrote in June. He was coming to reunion but his son could only spare that time from business. Prentiss instructed your Secretary to inform the Munroes, the Wadhams, and Grant Flynn's widow, Lee, his change of plans as he left his address book at home "Don't forget to note our get-together in November" writes Ralph Blank along with his thanks for our successful 60th. Our stop in Summit, NJ is an annual event. He reports that Town and Country had a picture of the gal who led the Andover reunion parade. P 178 of the March issue.

Morry Skinner's widow wrote to say she's been settling Morry's estate and that business today is operated for the convenience of the company and the computers, not for the customers and clients. Ethel sent her regards to Dick Knight Bill and Fonchen Lord were delayed in coming North and could not make reunion. "Hoist one for us!" writes Bill; and they called this morning to say the coffee pot is ready in Lakeland when we arrive in November Sam Connor wrote their reunion thanks from Nantucket. We hope he and Ruth will be on the island when we visit in September. We may also see Bill Dickerman and Min who summer there too.

Vic Earle has written twice this summer. Sorry he and his bride couldn't make our 60th. They had just returned from a southern trip and were following Bob Redpath's advice of not engaging in too many projects in a short period of time. . . . A letter arrives from Van Johnstone nearly every two weeks. He appreciated the pictures I sent of the PA baseball and football teams of our day. Johnny Phillips had sent them on. We'll see Van on the trip and also Nancy who may visit us in Green Valley. Van often mentions Leo Daley and must have been pleased he was voted an honorary member of 1924. Henry Hitchcock wrote to say Leo should have been made a member years ago.

Gardie Brown was not too happy when I added a few years to his age. He wouldn't mind having some subtracted — thinks I got him confused with Gordon Brown. It was good to see Gardie, your ex-class scribe, and Betty at our 60th. Gordon, incidentally, sent along a nice letter about our reunion; he and Marian enjoyed it. . . . Gige Mumby regretted not being at our 60th. He had already been in the East this year and San Diego is a long way to come. He sent me a Latin poem I wanted which he could recite fluently. He questioned that "Fat" Benton might grade him low on his spelling. I wanted to impress my grandson who just received a 98 in Latin at the Fessenden School.

What a great scrap book Nick Danforth sent to the Larsens, complete with engraved cover and pictures inside all captioned with the Danforth humorous touch. It will be a wonderful memento of our fun 60th. He also sent pictures to Laura Williamson and Ruth Eveleth our Abbot sisters. Dick Vaughan, my Yale roomy, reports all is well in Albuquerque; swims every day for his exercise. "Always something doing at the Old Howard" (an x-rated theatre in Boston of yore), says Dick. . . . Jack Barss, our honorarian, sent along a clipping from the Boston Globe whose headline reads, "Larsen has always been in the swim." I'm sure he referred to Bunny's 141 days of swimming at Green Valley. He wanted us to be aware of how closely we were being watched. The Barsses celebrated their 60th anniversary.

Quite a letter that Jerry Wynkoop sent to us Yalies of '28 in August. Jerry is our quintessential Class Secretary. What a job he does! Have heard from many widows during the summer. Sally Curtis, Bill's widow in Harwich Port, keeps busy at her church and trying new recipes which she sends along. We always dropped in to see her on our way to Chatham. Amy, Dike Howe's widow, keeps busy running the woman's golf tournament in Conroe, TX, organizing the banquets and trophies at the season's end. She wondered if I had a fit watching the Olympic high jumpers diving over head first. The answer is "yes," Amy. I still can't believe they allow it. Mary, Gige Mumby's sister-in-law, is an avid traveller. She hopes to tour England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales in September. Connie Brayton, Lawt's widow, reported the death of Ess Aske in Tiverton, RI. She saw him a short time before. Ess had been ill for some time. After college he worked for the Colorado Fuel and Iron Co. in Buffalo, NY. Two long letters from Mary Dake, Rocky's widow, who is now in Medford Leas, NJ and very happy in her retirement home. We will see Mary as we trek West. We were sorry Les Hicks and Florence couldn't make our 60th. They had planned to come and then had a change of plans. Maybe the 65th! And John Dixon out in Newbury, OH also had planned to come. I wanted to hear how his new invention was coming along. John finally couldn't make it.

Berry Grant reports he's playing golf again after his illness. Berry was quite the tennis player. Says he and his son have bought another home in Charlotte, NC and will send his new address along. We were sorry Bob Clark and Esther had to drop out the last minute due to illness. We hope to see the Clarks in Green Valley this winter to catch up. Bob very generously helped to defray some of our reunion expenses. Thanks, Bob. The Alumni office wrote to say Paul Bixler died on 10 May in Doylestown, PA.

I wrote to Mrs. Bixler expressing the sympathy of Paul's classmates. And a telephone call from Dave Mdivani's son Michael brought the news of Dave's death on 5 August. We usually contacted Dave while in LA and we hope to see Michael this winter. Dick Chace's sister sent along the program for Dick's memorial service in Tiverton, RI. Bunny and I attended the service at the grave site performed by Dick's nephew.

Another death just recently heard about in the family of 1924: John Lockett who lived in El Paso. He was a Colonel in the army and went to Yale after Andover. He leaves his wife, Marge. John and Marge attended our 60th reunion and he looked fine. One can never tell. Our sympathy to Marge.

A long letter from the Len Jameses, former head of the PA history department, told of their trip around the world on the QE II. Among the interesting people on board were Dr. Barnard, Norman Vincent Peel, and Margaret Truman Daniels. We will visit them in Sun City, FL enroute.

As I finish this report, let me quote from Jerry Wynkoop's notes about Bill Wadhams. When his wife prolongs the conversation with the hostess at the door after a party, (Bunny, please note) and when either takes a short breath, he inserts the following poem:

Let us then be up and doing
Lend our hearts for any fate
Still achieving, still pursuing Learn to labor and to wait

I'm taking the hint!

Greetings! Since our stalwart Class Secy. is gallivanting, I have a chance to report that she was named "the most gracious lady I have ever met" by the PA '24 chap she asked to help pack up when the '60th was over. I can also give you her news. Laura Scudder Williamson of Boston is now in California visiting her son Stuart. She will attend her first Elder Hostel at the U. of Santa Clara to learn more about "The Irish Revolutionary Tradition; Genetic Engineering; and the Jesus of History." For fun she will take "a week's cruise with eight of Stu's friends on Lake Rothwell."

Dorothy Converse of Concord, NH reports she has been spending summer weeks in Kennebunkport, Maine.

I visited a niece in France and one in England in October, while my husband rested from two roles this summer in Chekov's Seagull and Eugene O'Neill's Desire Under the Elms. He later joined me and friends for five days walking in the Cotswolds in England.

My Louise and your scribe had a delightful lunch at the Essex Yacht Club last spring as guests of Barb and Chamb Ferry of Old Lyme, CT. Chamb is a boating enthusiast, Barb a talented portrait and landscape painter. For years they've sailed on the Inland Waterways, spending the winters in the Bahamas. Chamb regaled us with some of their adventures. In their beach combing, they came upon and destroyed two bales of marijuana. Local reports had it that each bale was worth $12,000. Chamb wondered whether he would have been so noble if they'd been worth $12,000,000.

For 15 years he'd been looking for some ruins on Sampson Bay, crawling through all kinds of prickly underbrush, but with no success. This time he found some ruins that may be very old and of cut stone, giving him much satisfaction. Chamb has been a contributor for years to the Waterway Guide. The 1984 Northern Edition features a piece he did on the lower Connecticut River. Chamb and Barb were looking forward to his 55th Reunion at Hamilton College. As a boy Chamb grew up on its campus when his father was its president, so his return evoked many nostalgic memories.

A newsy, round robin letter from Charlie Glock in which he reminisced about the depression of '31-'32. He was one of the lucky for he had a job with a NY City bank. Often on a Wednesday night he'd splurge on a show for $1.10 or sometimes dine at Childs for 60¢ for all you could eat. To save subway fare, he'd walk to and from Greenwich Village.

Charlie has had a long bout with cancer and had an operation last March. After residing for many years in New Canaan, at the urging of his daughter Sally, he and Nell moved to Chelsea, MI where Sally had found a house for them near hers. Charlie is getting good care and is delighted with his new home.

Thanks to Joe Hague, I learned that the following made their 55th Princeton Reunion: Besides Joe, Jerry Blanchard, Norm Flowers, Gar Lasater, Spence Marsh, and Date Smith. Charlie Arnt was there in spirit because he sent two movie reels of 1929 Houseparties and Graduation.

Jack Whitham and Charlie Poore have already been laying the groundwork for our 60th in June, '85. Jack reports that he attended his 55th at Harvard and ran into Charlie Stewart, Johnnie Case and Al Whitney, all gung ho for our 60th. Al was married to Margaret Densmore in Princeton, MA. They had their honeymoon in the Caribbean and lately a trip to England.

Al Keedy got back to his 55th at Amherst and is eager for our 60th. Am indebted to Hugh McCandless for the word about the 55th Reunion at Yale. '25 stalwarts attending, beside Hugh, were Clare Barnes, Ben English, Charlie Glock, Del Paine, Hank Sawyer, Gordon Tweedy, and Bill Bush's widow. Gordon was honored by his family by their giving a Professorship in his name to Yale.

Belatedly and sadly I report the death of Brooks Carter White on 10 September 1982 in East Providence, RI. Brooks went to Dartmouth and was associated with the Mass. Mutual Life Insurance Co. He is survived by his wife, Bernice, four children, including Brooks S. White, M.D. '41, and three grandchildren. I regret to report the death ten years ago of William Ke Chiu Yuan who had lost touch with the school.

Before we know it, June will be upon us and our 60th Reunion. Let's relive our youth by getting back on the Hill and savor the joys of being with old friends.

The campus is more beautiful than ever, be sure to see it for yourselves at our 60th in '86." Also managed to catch another grandson's graduation the same day from St. Paul's in Concord, NH.

Stuart Blackinton Riley, 307 S. Washington St., No. Attleboro, MA, died on March 17th in Sarasota FL at the age of 76. "Stu" entered Phillips Academy in 1923. He was the former partner and treasurer of A. L. Lindroth Manufacturing, jewelers in North Attleboro. Also Corporator for the Attleboro Savings Bank for many years and was clerk of the corporation until he retired. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Proctor Academy from 1962

It is with great sorrow that we report the death of Harold Carl Sandberg on July 19th, at the age of 80. He lived at 26 Toll Gate Rd., Wethersfield, CT, and is survived by his wife, Barbara, two sons, Carl of White Plains, NY and Stephen of Coventry, CT; a daughter, Mrs. Douglas Koff of Denver, Colorado; and four grandchildren. He entered Andover in 1923 where he had a distinguished record. In the voting of the class of 1926, he was chosen among the leaders as the busiest, best athlete (he was captain of the football team), most modest, hardest to rattle, wittiest, most prominent, most original, least appreciated, most versatile, and most popular. He was graduated from Yale in 1932. Worked in the NY area for Proctor and Gamble until the early 40s, then with Griswold Mfg. Co. He resided in Andover for several years very close to Phillips Academy. Though he moved to Wethersfield, he always remained close to the school. He was a management consultant and executive recruiter with Frank C. Brown, D'Orsey Hurst, and was vice president at Baird Henno until his retirement. At Yale, he played on the 1931 football team, participated in the 1932 Olympic Games in Los Angeles, as a member of a combined Yale, Harvard, Princeton football team that played an exhibition game against U.S.C., Stanford, and U.C.L.A. "Sandy" served as our class secretary for approximately 38 years, starting in 1941. It was only ill health that forced him to relinquish this post. Our deepest sympathy to Barbara, his wife, and the rest of his family. He gave a great deal of himself to Andover and all of us will miss him greatly.

John C. Houston writes from Leesburg, Florida that he is still getting to Washington occasionally on Department of Defense assignments, as well as vacationing several times a year in the Naples area where he and Bettina enjoy the "delightful swimming in the Gulf."

Going from southern waters to the snow covered peaks of New Mexico, a lengthy article was published in Vintage a ski area management publication, about the Vintage Ski Races at Taos and at Sandia Peak, the latter having been founded by Bob Nordhaus during the pre-World War II era. He is given credit for having formally launched the New Mexico ski industry in 1937 with a $2,500 rope tow, the area now having grown to a record 112,000 skiers this past winter. These Vintage Races "began with a rather startling premise; no man under 60, nor woman under 50 could race in this unusual veteran's classic. What's more, you had to be a friend of one, or to both of these New Mexico ski pioneers, invited expressly to participate." We should add that Bob raced in the 70-74 age bracket! He is still practicing law actively, especially representing Indian Tribes, doing lots of flying. He has two granddaughters going to Andover next year.

Another classmate, John M. Bennett, now a retired Air Force Major General and living in San Antonio, had a unique experience in observing the runoff elections in El Salvador this past May, where he and 24 other Americans, all at their own expense, traveled to see for themselves what was going on in that country. In an article written by John he stated "There were Democrats, Republicans and political independents. The ages ranged from 19 to 75. There were two college professors, a college student, a former ambassador, a black woman writer, a nun, a retired Vietnam veteran and representatives from Catholic and Protestant organizations and from non-profit foundations. Yet, we 25 Americans of all these different persuasions and backgrounds reached the unanimous conclusion that the El Salvador elections were fair, free, honest and in the best traditions of democracy." He also visited Costa Rica and Nicaragua and ended his article stating "The trip convinced me that it is terribly important for the United States to support people who want true democracy, no matter where they live."

Regretfully, we report the death of James S. Bulkley on 2 May 1984 in Suffield, CT. After graduating from Yale and Harvard Law School, where he was secretary of his graduating class, he practiced law in Springfield, MA where he lived most of his life, serving in several partnerships before becoming associated with Monarch Life Insurance Co. in 1946. He became general counsel in 1956 and also became general counsel and director of Springfield Life Insurance Co. in 1959 and of Monarch Capital Corp. when it was formed in 1968. Jim was a longtime GOP leader in Springfield and held many positions both in the City and the State for over a period of 30 years. One of his many honors was receiving an honorary doctorate of law degree from American International College in 1971. Following his retirement from Springfield Life and Monarch Capital Corp. he founded the Springfield law firm of Bulkley, Richardson & Gelinas.

He is survived by his wife, Eileen, three daughters, three stepdaughters, and seven grandchildren.

Class Encounters of the Finest Kind: Northeastly, NC-ME migration was productive of eyeball to eyeball confrontations with Bill Frank, Bill Laundon, Miles Pendleton, Al Rowland. Classmate Frank, in addition to discharging Yale '32 Classecy devoirs, is top ranking trustee of a large and distinguished cemetery in N.Y. exurbia, and sports a golf handicap of 13, with impressively chi-chi wardrobe to go with it. He reported seeing Charlie Abbott and Tom Mendenhall at an early June NYC '32 dinner, but no meaty news re either. C'mate Laundon and Jean returned to VT Kineland after wintry sunning in Nevis, and Bill has resumed his competent, enthusiastic, presidential directorship of Londonderry's Mountain Valley Clinic. Pen Pen'ton, after springtime Spain visitation with wife Kay's kinfolk, continues serenely active winding down of the Golden Years at Andover's #2 Serenity Lane, whence he and partner promote Flo-Max Sales Co., "specialists in bulk material conveying and feeding, pneumatic and mechanical conveying," et al, and, via Vac-U-Max "moving vertically any dry product, including fine and abrasive materials" (pag-ing Howard Cosell). Agent Rowland, hosting fine midday repast in the refurbished Andover Inn (worthy of the ubiquitous Leona Hemsley), reported (a) wintering in Naples, Fla., (b) sale of Lawrence, Canal St. Rowland Industries, which he will continue to manage for a year, (c) unsolved, well publicized pilferage of valuable paintings from his office, (d) expansion of Canal allegiance to La Belle France, where July barge voyage to honor Barbara's birthday was scheduled to include no fewer than 22 (twenty-two) members of Clan Rowland. Minuscule descendants and pets were not invited.

Miscellaneous Mail Morsels: Tom Tyler re 4-day visit to Windsor Castle, attending seminar on the impact of trade Unionism on Democracy. "The American delegation consisted of members of Congress and of the Right to Work Foundation. The English delegation consisted of Members of Parliament, Heads of British Trade Unions, British Employers and Professors. In many respects a depressing meeting . . . the threat of a strike in the not too distant future. I had the privilege of attending a question-answer period in the House of Commons, and I came away awed and deeply impressed by Mrs. Thatcher. She gave better than she got, and that says a lot." In letter opening with fond recall of Lower Middle belly-grinding operations on the steam pipes in the bowels of Andover Cottage, with attendant vocalizing, Bob MacLaury wrote of 1980 retirement from Kidder Peabody, next generations(s) scattered hither and yon, volunteer work at Sloan Kettering Memorial Hospital, plentiful reading and fishing (Rogue River '83, Sweden's Baltic Coast '84). Son Robin, who, like so many before him, had his pre-college headaches, is "a very hard-working artist now, seascapes mostly, and I gather he's very good. He sure knows how to get buyers." From Jack Reiss: "Got your card by way of Raleigh, N.C.; Harrisburg, PA; Waycross, GA; and Hartford, CT. That's about a month or two late. No wonder Federal Express is rolling in money!" Maytime plans to "dust off my 1930 Portable and inundate you with news," have, as of early August dog days, failed to materialize, for reasons best known to (a) Reiss (b) the whims of Uncle Whiskers' Postal Minions (c) a Higher Power (d) a combination of (a)-(c). For the moment, Indestructible J.R. writes of health, happiness, relishing wife Irma's pies, playing at least 9 holes of golf every weather-permitting day, "working on my gorgeous garden" and on cross-word puzzles, which he claims to do in ink. He also indulges in culinary exercises that no doubt approach gourmet standards, and he gives a nod to Ma Bell for providing ready accessibility to beloved offspring and 13 grandchildren.

"Retired Educator Files for GWRSB" read a headline in the 15 Feb. Carroll County Independent, out of Center Ossipee, NH. The ensuing article, including impressive pedigree, revealed that Dr. Roger F. Murrary had filed for the Wolfeboro seat on the Governor Wentworth Regional School District Board. In reply to diligent secretarial sleuthery re election outcome, Rog blushinglly reported "landslide" victory (1280 to 1177) with subsequent election "by an overwhelming margin" to Board Chairmanship. This vote was 5 to 4. "Without my vote, I obviously could not have made it. Just back from observing the (PA) Trustees meeting. The celebration of the success of the Addison honored Chairman Bob Walker in a gala event. The talent in the student body always amazes me." Tully Torbert and Anne have moved "about a mile" to D.C.'s 4100 Cathedral Ave., N.W., where a swimming pool "to exercise arthritic joints" is a major attraction. "I am tapering off volunteer activities. Remaining ones mostly involving foreign service retirees. Anne works hard at the local Bryn Mawr bookstore. We are heading to Southwest Harbor, ME, for our 5th summer since we deserted Italy." PA sons Jim and Bill are farming in Whitefield, ME and teaching and deaning at Boston College Bus. School, respectively. Egg Lewis and Mary back on R.I. tree farm after cherished Calif. desert winter. "Somehow the living out there is moreso . . . deeper into passage of sun and moon and weather developing on a 50-mile stage, with quiet for internal developments too, than in leafed tunnels of R.I., though running tap water and lights at a fingerflick and green grass all 'round all 'round [sic] not bad either." On Eastward trek the Lewises outran a Texas tornado, "bearing down over fields and bldgs. in mindless black fury . . . scared the be-jaasus out of us." After more than a half century incommunicado, Dan James surfaced via numerous media accounts of $5,000 Rosenthal Award for fiction for Famous All Over Town, written about a Mexican family in East Los Angeles under the pseudonym "Danny Santiago." The award, presented by John Kenneth Galbraith, was unclaimed by Dan, whose real identity was divulged by his good friend, John Gregory Dunne, in the New York Review of Books. No more on the subject here, in hopes of a reply to a congratulatory letter and first hand information from a well and happily remembered classmate, who has had a fascinating and distinguished career, starting with his being the only member of his Yale class to major in classical Greek, which evokes fond memories of "Zeus" Benner.

These notes are concocted in early August to be dispatched to Ed. Regan in advance of Adriance Golden Wedlock Anniversary foreign pilgrimage. They must end, regrettably, with news that two of our finest classmates are seriously ill, Ted Lee with Alzheimer's and Don McLean with cancer, both acquired after extraordinarily full, useful careers and significant contributions to their particular segments of the world around them. '28 is proud to claim you, Ted and Don.

Editor's Note: We are sorry to have to report that Donald McLean died on 12 September 1984. Please see his obituary elsewhere in this section.

Your Class Secretary let you down for the summer edition. Plans had been to return from a California visit by 2 May; however, at the end of April I fell and broke my pelvis bone. Then in May had a left knee replacement and never made it back to Hanover until 3 August. Now am doing quite well but shall not run races.

Winnie Dudley Burnham reports that she retired in June as librarian of North Yarmouth Academy (Maine) and is presently living in a faculty apartment and serving as archivist. Home phone (207) 846-5844.

Emily Sloper Shailer had a hard spring as her sister Carlotta suffered a stroke in May and her other sister Ella died in Seattle in June. She and her husband have been busy trying to keep ahead of weeds and to keep the grass mowed after all of the spring rain.

In February Betty Whitney Binkley wrote they have "moved off their mountain top to the small town of Lakeport (pop. 4,000). Better to move before you have to. Can't yet realize I'm 76; but know my classmates are too! New address: 227 Mariah Way, Lakeport, California 95453. Best wishes."

Had a brief telephone conversation with Mary Piper Sears who says she gets on pretty well and keeps busy with children and grandchildren.

Any messages sent before the first of 1985 would be appreciated for the 1985 spring Bulletin. Best wishes to each of you good 1928ers.

I received a note from Bill Taylor from Pasadena, CA. I plan to see Bill in Maine on 19 September. Art Rogers and his wife are visiting us in Maine now. We were swamped with visitors in July and August. September and October are beautiful months. The days are crystal clear and warm, the nights are cool but ideal for sleeping.

I wish the living would write me, even if it is only to tell me that they are still breathing. Otherwise I have only sad news to report. Three have died since my last Class Notes.

Bill Newhall died on 25 April. He is survived by his wife who may be reached at 712 Columbia Dr., Sacramento, CA 95825. Bill had retired as a math teacher at American River College. He left three children and four grandchildren.

Hannibal Towle died on 30 June. He was retired and lived in Paris. His wife, Madeleine, survives him and may be written to at 58 Rue Pergalese, 75116 Paris, France.

Jack Cuneo died on 11 June after an illness of six months. He not only practiced law but was a well known historian, author of six books on various topics of American history. Jack practised in Norwalk, CT and was active in civic and Bar Association affairs. He is survived by a son and daughter and his widow, Myrtle. Her address is 11 Pine Tree Drive, Westport, CT 06880. The sympathy of the class of '29 goes out to the survivors of these deceased members.

Dear 29ers:

Barbara Folk Howe wrote up our Reunion notes (bless her kind soul!). She writes:

"Charlotte Osgood Bennet, Rosamond Wheeler Putman and Barbara Folk Howe, made up in activity and participation what we lacked in class numbers. Two nice husbands say they had a whirl with the three girls. We felt warmly welcomed by faculty and staff. Phillips 29ers included us in their planning of parties and good times. As a single lady I decided I like coed!"

"Our Class gift of $2000 was presented with the Alumni Fund gift. We do not seem to be the wealthiest class, but we did get the highest percentage of participation. I'm PROUD of us!"

"Our deepest appreciation to all who made us feel welcome and happy on the campus."

Thank you, Barbara, we wish we could have been there too.

Ed Barnet and his wife, Orpah, returned in July from a three-week China mission. The Peoples' Republic of China was his host. Ed was made an honorary faculty member at the Shanghai Tourism Institute, where one of his former University of Hawaii students is now Vice President of Academic Affairs. Ed's visit also included lectures in other major Chinese cities and his report concludes, "One billion people have a proud history and a sense of destiny."

Hal Boyle has retired "to devote more time to two chief interests: foreign affairs and working with watercolors." In May he grandfathered twins — new candidates for PA, he proudly says.

Dick Walsh is concluding his second year as president of the Sun City Fine Arts Society which brings professional chamber music to that oasis. Dick's happy to say, the society is on a sound financial footing.

Our sympathy goes out to Charlie Duf-ton, who lost his wife, Phyllis, in August. She was an enthusiastic reunion member of our PA '30 "ladies auxiliary."

I have the sad duty to report three deaths in the class of 1930. Len Philipps died in Toledo on 24 July; he is survived by his wife, Mary. Other than that, unfortunately, I have no further information. Frank Babcock died in his sleep on 9 May in Austin Texas and is survived by his wife, Bobby, two daughters, and one grandchild. A 1934 graduate of the University of Virginia, he was a land man in Louisiana for several oil companies until his retirement in 1958 when he moved with his family to Austin, Texas. I understand he had been feeling fine up until he died, playing a lot of golf and thoroughly enjoying life. And Ivan Sjostrom of Andover died on 8 May and leaves his sister Olga who lives in Andover. Ivar was a professional organist and was director of music emeritus at the Second Church in Newton for 33 years. He gave many recitals throughout New England.

The sincere sympathy of the class is extended to the survivors of these deceased classmates.

Erratum: Of course it's classmate Bill Sachse, not Dick as earlier reported. Your secretary's face is Exeter-crimson. Right now plan to come to our 55th Reunion. The dates to save are 7-8-9 June. Bill Robertson has agreed to serve as co-chairman. If you were at our 50th you know that a good time will be had by all.

Later he joined the American Can Co. where he held positions on both the East and West coasts. He is survived by his wife, Virginia, two daughters, Noel and Suzan, and two grandsons.

Unfortunately my reply cards to some class members must have arrived during vacations, so I have little news to report. Please keep the news coming, especially if we haven't heard from you recently.

Mary Elizabeth Olson Crum wrote from Santa Ana, CA while the Olympic events were going on all around her. Since it was the second successive "hottest" summer in her 24 years out there, she preferred to watch it on TV in an air-conditioned house. Her husband, Calvin, however, took in some of the events. She was proud of the way local authorities handled the traffic, security, etc.

Catherine Prentice White says that her trying to grow old gracefully isn't at all interesting! She, too, has been fighting the heat in Waco, TX, hoping for rain.

My husband and I had a wonderful 2½ week trip to Europe in May and June. Our main purpose was to attend the 350th anniversary of the Passion Play in Oberammergau. It was beautifully presented and beyond our expectations. Our overall 2,000-mile bus trip included visits to Lucerne, Vienna, Strasbourg, the Austrian countryside, Budapest and several cities in Germany. We fell in love with Rothenburg. . . . so unspoiled. We branched off from our group and had five days in London and its environs on our way home. I hadn't been there in fifty years and my husband's last "visit" was in World War II — buzz bombs and all!

Does anyone have the current address of Nanine Wheeler Allender? My recent letter was returned and couldn't be forwarded. I would really appreciate your letting me know of changes of addresses. In that way you won't miss the Bulletin and class news.

Editor's Note: We have learned from Frances Scudder Glisson's sister, Laura Scudder Williamson '24, that Frances is home now from the hospital after having a serious operation. We all wish her well.

Excellent news from our class agents, Phil Mohan and Mac Millard, on the past year's Andover Giving Campaign. 1932's contribution of over $27,000 made us No. 1 of all classes from the old guard through 1943 (except for the reunion classes). The school is delighted and so am I. Many thanks to all in the class who increased their gifts this year and put 1932 over the top once again!

I regret to note that we have recently lost two of our more distinguished members: Johnny Dean died in July at his home in East Orleans, MA. A graduate of Yale, the Columbia School of Physicians and Surgeons, he served in World War II as a doctor aboard a naval destroyer. More recently he practised in Long Island for 20 years and for 10 years was with the Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center, retiring in 1978. He leaves three sons, a daughter, and his wife, Suzanne, who can be reached at Nauset Beach Road, East Orleans, MA 02643.

Al Neal died in Longmeadow, MA. A graduate of Yale and Harvard Law School, he was for many years a patent attorney with the firm of Chapin, Neal and Dempsey in Springfield, with an interruption during World War II to serve as a special agent with the F.B.I. He leaves a son, a daughter and his wife, Barbara, who can be reached at 141 Pleasantview Avenue, Longmeadow, MA 01106. Considering the shortness of the time I allotted for the return of news, I am pleased to have heard from seven of you, especially from Jean Hume Nelbach who wrote that she retired from her work at Yale last February and finds not working delightful — when she tires of home work she visits her grandchildren in Montreal, or they visit her — she's learning about the phases of early childhood all over again.

Priscilla Donnell Anderson and Austin are joining the ranks of the refugees from New England winter weather. After 1 November they will be at 4443 Atwood Cay Circle, Sarasota, FL 33583, where they will be for eight months each year, traveling north for the four summer months.

Isabel Arms and Toddy Welles have both continued their travels. In addition to moving to 28 Wiltshire Drive, Worcester 01609, in May, Isabel took an Elderhostel trip to Wales and England in August, and is off for an art tour in Italy in October. During her few minutes at home she does program planning for the local National Public Radio station, along with work for Worcester Country Horticultural Society and two garden clubs. I think she must have more time in 24 hours than I do. Toddy went to California in July for a niece's wedding and came down with pneumonia, but is sufficiently recovered to leave Los Angeles soon on a cruise through the Panama Canal, with visits around the Caribbean. Early in the summer Toddy and I had a most pleasant reunion at the home of a cousin of hers in Sunapee; we had not seen each other since graduation.

A card from Flop Dunbar Robertson reports that she and Randal had their usual two months in Richmond, Massachusetts, making it possible for Flop to join her son Hugh at the Berkshire Choral Institute as a day student. This is her third year there — they learned and sang "Elijah."

Ruth Tyler Smith and Everett spent their 28th summer at Christmas Cove in Maine, seeing all their children and grandchildren, which this year included a new grandson, just ten weeks old. From January through April they will be in Vero Beach, near Helen Allen Anderson and Harry; all visitors from the frozen north will be welcome.

Betty Holihan Giblin saw her four granddaughters in England this summer and is now looking forward to her golf and other winter delights at Key Largo.

In Memoriam: Kitty Cook Howland. A note from her husband said that Kitty died on 23 July 1984, from carcinoma of the pancreas. She will be missed by all of us who remember her gaiety and poise from fifty years ago, and our thoughts are with her husband, her son and daughter, her five grandchildren, and the other members of her family. A clipping from Andover says that memorial donations may be sent to the Hospice Association of the Cape and Islands, 911 Main Street, Osterville, MA 02665.

Come on, guys, there really is Life After the Fiftieth Reunion!

Even the resident moth in our PA '33 file is beginning to make mutinous noises about the thin pickings. At the moment we are telling ourselves that PA '33 has been busy all summer making news which will be duly embellished and reported to your K. O. E. We await with panting typewriter your accounts of adventures on the briny deep, in the briny water hazards, under the spreading chestnut tree — whatever. There has been time for all manner of hair-raising episodes. Write soon or we shall Take Measures.

Snuffling gratefully, though, we do acknowledge three benefactors, whose busts now grace choice spots in our Hall of Fame: A nice note from Ted Gregg, whose talk at the Memorial Service during Reunion Weekend remains one of the highlights. Ted is retired in Temple, NH, and is putting some of his time to good use assisting in the campaign for the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister at PA. We hope our class is well represented among the supporters. Gray Baldwin is one of the people we always think of at Andover.

Another of the heroes of our Fiftieth continues to make news. Harvey LeBow sent us a release on the letterhead of the Harvard Club of San Diego announcing Harvey's election as president. Not only news, but history. Harvey is the first member since the club's inception in 1906 to oppose the slate proposed by the nominating committee, previously automatically voted into office. At a special meeting required for elections Harvey won in a landslide. Ron Reagan, Fritz Mondale, are you listening? Our congratulations, Harvey! In a P.S. Harvey urges any PA '33ers who venture into Southern California to give him a call at 619/571-5450.

Had a nice visit with Barc Kingman and Ellen back in June, got caught up on comings and goings since Reunion. Both were looking forward to their impending departure for Edgartown.

And a double-decker from Ed Folk at University of Iowa. Ed writes of a visit with Don Hirst, originally a member of our class, during a visit by Don to the University for a lecture. Ed recalls Guy Eaton's algebra class with Don and their joint tutoring in the subject of Duke Kahanamoku — which must have brought joy to the heart of swimming coach Rocky Dake! It's a shame to capsulize Don's last fifty (awkl) years. They have been full. The son of a medical missionary in Korea, he had followed his brother (PA '28) to Andover after receiving his early education in Japanese and Korean schools. Don returned to Korea for his senior year, graduating from Pyongyang H.S. After undergraduate and medical school at Duke University he was in his residency when Pearl Harbor intervened. Four years in the Army Air Corps followed, including two years "over the hump" with the 14th AAC and the Flying Tigers as flight surgeon, then back to civilian life for advanced work at Harvard in Obstetrics and Gynecology. There then followed a long career in medical practice including work on the clinical faculty of University of Nebraska. Over the years Don has filled his spare moments with numerous books and articles, work in community and church affairs, the Civil Air Patrol — he has logged 500 hours of pilot time — and various sports. Somehow he found time to retire from practice in 1971, and is now living with his wife, Suzanna, in Savannah, GA. Welcome home, Don, but don't wait another 50 years!

And so we mount Old Paint and ride off into the sunset. Maybe we'll meet the pony express with some mail from PA '33. We can dream!

I apologize for not getting notes in the last

Bulletin. For a two week period as the due date approached, Merrill was in the C.C.U. of the local hospital. Tests showed little heart damage, but he must have gall bladder surgery. So home for four days and back for the operation. He is fine now but no Abbot '33 notes submitted.

Early this summer I received an article from the Cape Cod Chronicle about Marcia Gaylord Norman. Marcia is the Grande Dame of Environmental Protection and knows every marsh, bog, and wetland in that area. I wrote her and received the following: "My years of service have been most interesting and worthwhile. I served 24 years and it is time for someone else to have a go at it. It has been rewarding volunteer work, when one sees an increased awareness of the environmental needs." Marcia has been drawing, studying, and painting plants most of her life as a botanical illustrator. She and her husband have illustrated eight books. Their next book will be on salt marsh vegetation and published under the auspices of the Cape Cod Museum of Natural History.

Louise McClary writes from her home in Malone, New York. She was disappointed to miss the 50th in '83. They had a severe winter in the Adirondacks region, but spring inspired her gardening activities. Louise enjoys get-away cruises and trips to visit relatives and friends.

Alice Shultz Valkenburgh and Roger will be arriving in Winter Park in late October for the winter months. Their new home in the Presbyterian compound will be completed by then. New address will be 1808 Summerfield Rd., Winter Park, FL 32792. Shuts, that was a fine letter we received regarding the Planned Giving.

This summer we spent the month of June dismantling my aunt's house in Mansfield, OH. Among "treasures" I found many Andover mementos. My cousin had graduated from there about 1912. I now have a very large Andover banner in satin which I brought home. When any of you can stop by for a visit, I'll decorate the room in blue and white glory.

I've learned the Bulletin can lead to delightful friendships. We were invited for dinner not long ago and met a former Abbot girl. She had seen my name in the Bulletin and suggested to mutual friends we might meet. So now we know a lovely lady, Rachel Stores, of the 1917 class. We shared memories, Miss Bailey's book, and she especially enjoyed our 1933 year book.

Really, I didn't hear from many of you. Just today I dialed Mariatta Tower Arnold in Sarasota and was given the "has been discontinued" bit. I'll keep checking. Let's hear more or you'll be getting double post cards this winter. A Christmas card with some current news would be most welcome.

Your Class Secretary is embarrassed by the lack of current news for this column. Classmates, please do not fail to drop me a line now and then. I have developed a few morsels to tell you and then, if you will bear with me, I shall give you an up-date on myself. This I have not done for some five or six years.

Norm and Sally Cross are off to Scotland and England for about six weeks. They expect to return about July 15th.

A short note from Pete and Helen Soutter says that the good Lord willing they will be at Andover for our 50th. . . . Our roving headmaster Al Kerr writes that he is currently serving another interim headmastership at the Heritage School, which is 25 miles south of Atlanta. I wonder if he doesn't hold the world's record for interim headmasterships.

During the last two weeks in July Buck and Lizzie Dyess rented a cottage at Madison, CT on Long Island Sound. They did this to escape the Houston, Texas heat. Escape the heat they did and, while doing so, they saw a lot of Andover and Yale friends in the Northeast. . . . Our former Class Secretary Fred Griffin who is now a key member of our 50th Reunion Steering Committee has moved from Bedford, New Hampshire to Franconia, NH.

Now as to your Class Secretary, Charlie Miller. I retired a little bit early from the Connecticut Bank and Trust Co. where I was a vice president and commercial lending officer. Immediately I decided to keep busy by some traveling (mainly Bermuda and Florida) and by golfing and paddle tennis which is one of my favorite sports. My spare moments have been filled in with minor committee assignments and directorships as well as sharing in the activities of a very vigorous wife, Gianna.

Early last May I arranged for an Andover Dinner in Hartford at the Hartford Club. The Andover group was headed by Assoc. Headmaster Peter W. McKee, his wife, Jean, Andover Bulletin editor Tom Regan '51 and his wife Gerri, and the Mesics, Joe '53 and Sandi, accompanied by Britta McNemar. Don McNemar, our Headmaster, was not able to attend his own reception because of a back problem which had him bedridden. A marvelous, warm welcome was extended by a large group of our alumni, parents, and friends from the Connecticut area. The group was joined by several grandparents of current students, as well as college students graduated as recently as 1983. Britta gave a brilliant speech about the Academy, and a great evening was had by all.

Lastly, I have been elected a member of the Andover Alumni Council which meets once a year for two days each April.

There had been debate among a few of us whether Sidney R. Ballou is still with us, deceased, or among the missing. The Academy has confirmed that Sid died 9 September 1983 in Concord, MA. Sorry, but we have no further details.

We are sorry to report the death of Thomas R. Burrell III of 52 Seminole Drive, Yarmouth Port, MA. He had been a retired Lieutenant Commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve having served in World War II and the Korean War. He was a 1939 graduate of Dartmouth College and before his retirement in 1981 had a long career with I.B.M. Survivors include his widow; a son, Thomas R. It has been a hot, humid and rainy summer in Connecticut. My attentions have had to zero in on such events as hosting a Ridge Farms Road Assoc. picnic, planning and carrying out a weekend family reunion for 34, and hosting a clambake for 40 friends in the area. If all has gone according to plan, you will have received (or shortly will) an important letter from Bill Hart. Bill, Loring Reed, John Bishop, Fred Stott and Mel Chapin met in Boston earlier this year to get plans underway for our 50th Reunion which is rapidly closing in on us. Bill came away from the meeting as Class Agent for the 50th — no finer fellow to funnel our funds through in support of Andover and for a fabulous reunion. You will see from Bill's letter that there is great opportunity for all to give generously.

Update from Howie Mendel, which arrived earlier but too late for the summer issue, gives these highlights: Harvard soccer captain and second team All-American; held shot-put record until 1948; U. S. Army, Signal Intelligence, European Theatre. In addition to his Harvard Degree he did graduate work at Columbia and the University of Connecticut. Howie in a sense had two careers, sometimes in parallel, one in radio at stations in Battle Creek, MI; Hannibal, MO; Waterbury, CT; Charlotte, NC; and Torrington, CT. He is, however, listed in "Who's Who in the South and Southeast" as an educator. His teaching has taken him to NYC, NY Military Academy, Laurelcrest in Bristol, CT and since 1971 he has taught and coached track at Brookstone High School, Columbus, GA. He is a Board Director of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra. Howie married Edith Littlejohn in 1961 and has four stepchildren. He closed with "good fortune and good health, we hope to be at Andover for our 50th." Howie, that's a date.

Parke Masters' address, the new Andover Directory notwithstanding, is 413 Osborne Avenue, Brielle, NJ 08730. He reports a second grandchild and first grandson, Jay Masters Buckley, born 8 April in Dallas.

On the occasion of Jim Gillespie's retirement from Colby College as associate Dean of Students, the Central Maine Morning Sentinel had this to report about our classmate's views on recent educational changes. These will be of interest to all who had children in the process.

"Dean Gillespie thinks that one of the biggest changes to occur has been in the male/female academic achievements ratio. He remembers one year when the Phi Beta Kappa female/male ration was 12 to 1. Dean's list membership also was heavily lopsided, but since then substantial recoveries have been made by Colby men. This year's PBK membership was split evenly between the sexes.

"Also noted was a change in job strategies. In the 1950s big nationals like U.S. Steel would come to Colby to seek executives, presenting job offers right and left. Today, seniors must go through intensive interviewing processes to get an offer. Preferences have changed, too; banks and insurance agencies are now more desirable says Gillespie.

"To gain extra credits, students attended summer school. Today, new experiences are sought in the form of taking a semester off for work, field experiences or participation in the popular sea-semester program."

Jim was a member of the psychology faculty since 1951, Chairman of the department since 1961 and became Dean in 1975. The above was condensed from a lengthy interview. Would like to hear from Jim about his personal plans.

Rus Bessom of Corrales, NM, was "back East" this summer in Hartford and Boston and will return to Andover for the 50th. On that promise let's hear from all you guys out there who have been avoiding me. Drop me a line, tell me what you're up to and commit yourself to a visit to the Hill in '86. Thanks.

I trust you all returned from your summer recreations refreshed and ready to face the winter pursuits with renewed energy. As the academy enters her 207 year, I wish to take this opportunity to thank all the loyal correspondents out there who have forwarded, either directly or indirectly, so much news over the past year and to remind Jack Ware's Co-Agents who were listed in the summer Bulletin not to forget to forward any news you collect as you contact classmates.

From the April and July issues of The Yale

Alumni Magazine and Journal I lifted verbatim the following four items of interest for the benefit of non-Yale classmates. I thank Mr. Ketcham, Secretary of the Yale Class of 1941, and John Deming who made the Journal accessible to me.

Doug Heck: "The Foreign Service continues to have me abroad, but this time in a slightly different capacity. As I am married to a foreign service officer, I became a dependent spouse when I retired (or was retired mandatorily at the age of 60 in 1980). After three years in Washington, Ernie was assigned to New Delhi, my old post in the '50s and '60s; so it has been comfortable to return to India as Ernie works at the Embassy and I boon-doggle with time out for tennis, swimming and golf. It's a good and full life."

Bill Scheft: "Daughter Harriet enrolled at Boston University for a degree in physical therapy; son John enrolled at Northeastern Law School; father Bill will probably be 75 years old when offspring's education is completed. Oh, those tuitions!"

Phil Emery: "Have retired from McGraw Hill book activities. Am hoping to recycle to some new career, so it's back to school and the pavements. Oldest daughter is maintaining a Yale connection at the Architecture School while youngest prefers the Harvard atmosphere."

Horace Poynter: "Betty and I traveled to Moscow, Novgorod, and Leningrad last summer with a group from Phillips and Abbott Academies, aged 15 to 82! Over Christmas we took the entire family of eight to Bermuda . . . I retired on 29 February 1984 at age 65 after 16 years at Wright Aeronautics and 25 years at General Electric, AEBG, Lynn, MA." Phil and Horace are our latest additions to the LBAR Club.

Jay Rockwell from Alaska: "Traveled to East Coast in summer of '83. Had lunch with Louis P. Dolbeare '36 in Washington, DC and my brother William H. Rockwell in Bedford, NY. Saw Bill again in August in Michigan where he delivered a poem in honor of the bride at the wedding of our nephew Tom Rockwell."

Perhaps the greatest reward for a Class Secretary is the unexpected news from an old friend. Seth Heywood, our stalwart captain of the swimming team, writes on 16 April the following: "In 1978 I married Lucille Fancoise Fleurent Augur (we've never figured out how 'Heywood' got tacked onto the end of that one!) while I was operating a motel in the Kennebunk, Maine area. For the past five years we have owned and operated a weekly newspaper in southern NH and we enjoy it a great deal. Fortunately, we can get to Maine many weekends to unwind and do a lot of canoeing. . . ." Seth and Lucy are publisher and editor of the Village Crier and can be reached at D.W. Highway, P. O. Box 1000, Merrimack, NH 03054.

The surprise of the summer was the unexpected appearance of my roommate Dave Davis at a Princeton reunion of roommates in Little Compton, RI on 14 July. David has worked and lived in Philadelphia since 1959; he is the Treasurer and Chief Administrator of the Public Interest Law Center of Philadelphia, a nonprofit law firm dedicated to "good works." Seeing Dave for the first time since graduation was overshadowed by meeting his lovely and charming wife, Mary Ann, recently retired from teaching at Germantown Friends School. She will now be traveling extensively throughout Europe. Daughter Susan Davis, Professor of Communications at U. of California, San Diego, is married to Dan Schiller, Professor of Communications at Temple. Apparently distances present no problem for experts in communications. Daughter Katharine resides in Belgrade, Maine. Mary Ann promises me she will get Dave to our Fiftieth.

Visited Kay Forbush Bass for a weekend in August at her cottage in Boothbay Harbor. We went sailing and lunched at the Boothbay Yacht Club. Kay is happily situated there in the summer with daughter Nancy and her family nearby, and numerous cousins and old friends all around in the colony of Bayville. Kay's other daughter, Joanne, lives in Wayne, Maine and Kay and George have a house there also. They divide their time between Maine and Hilton Head, SC.

Several other members of our class summer in Maine. Betty Swint McFarland on Orr's Island; Lil Seiler Willins in Bridgton; Mary Jane Smith in Hallowell and Caroline Curtis Carney in Brunswick.

Jeannette Partridge Harrison and her husband, Syd, recently went on a trip to Sydney, Australia before joining a birding expedition in New Guinea. They are based in Pebble Beach, California.

Last June I went on a circle tour of Germany taking in all the large cities and the Passion Play in Oberammergau. I traveled with some library colleagues and after the tour we took the train to Kiel, on the Baltic Sea, to visit a German AFS student who lived with our family in Amesbury about five years ago.

The request for news was largely ignored. It may be that most of you think your lives are prosaic; news of grandchildren may not interest someone; eyes, muscles, prostates, energies, etc. aren't what they used to be (or we thought they ought to be); Murphy will invent enough "facts" to fill up the column, or the hell with it!

The two exceptions were Ken Fleming and Tom Burns, and I had two left-overs from spring — George Brunner and Gene Curtis. As to Ken, he and Eastern Air Lines parted company amicably, Eastern to figure out how to keep its aircraft operating, Ken to enjoy Stuart, Florida for ten months and Old Lyme, CT for two, golfing and fishing. In brief: retired from being a pilot. The next two generations of Flemings live in San Francisco and Cleveland. Handy . . .

The Burns went on a cruise to Norway, around the British Isles and back to NYC. They live on the waterfront in Boston, have places in Duxbury, MA and Stratton, VT, all difficult for Burns to enjoy, still working 25 hours a day and is reputed to be the best trial lawyer in Boston.

George sold his trade journal in 1980 and retired to a tree farm in Brown County, Indiana, 40-50 miles south of Indianapolis. He's adding a third wing to the house, I gather on his own effort, and says, "What else is there to do if your golf and bridge are lousy and you hate to write." George: you answered my note, but what is your address? I mislaid the envelope.

Gene noted briefly his two addresses: summer at 304 Morse Hill Road, Dorset, VT 05251; winters at 509 Palm Trail, Delray Beach, FL 33444, and included a big article from the 8 May 1984 Miami Herald about Dave Williams and his efforts to get a sergeant from his black WW II tank unit a Congressional Medal of Honor. The article has three pictures including one of Dave with a Nazi flag, given him by his unit after he was wounded; one of the sergeant in question and one of a man who rescued Dave under open fire. The article opens with this characterization of Dave (the war hero, author and broker): "David Williams is a tough old buzzard." Dave had been to see a Pulitzer prize-winning play, "A Soldiers Play" which he likened to the experiences of his own black-manned tank unit's sordid and heroic experiences. I have written of Dave's books, the second of which I've read. Dave was (and is, I'm sure) ahead of his time. He does us all credit.

Fred Kent, Ace Pike and I met at Spink Davis's in Bristol, RI, in August, to consider a 50th-year Potpourri for 1988, and further efforts to start a reunion gift to PA by contributions to a fund which can be held and accumulated from 1984 to 1988. You will be hearing from us. Fred and Ace both sold their businesses. Spink is still a full-time lawyer in the "green goods" (corporate) area, as I am in the area of litigation. Spink and I will both be seeing Laurence Viney in England in October, but too late to get it in this column. As a last item I can report very favorably on the wives of the quartet which met in Bristol. Unfortunately I haven't seen the others.

As these notes were about to be mailed I received the shattering news of the death of Bill Pike on 16 September. While I recognize the inevitability of these things, Ace's death is a crusher for the class and for me personally. He had been deeply involved with Andover ever since I first knew him in 1935. Anything concerning our class concerned him: fund-raising, class activities, reunions, even school policy where we might speak. And all of it was characterized by Ace's warmth, sharp mind, tough-mindedness and a manifestation of his sense of debt to Andover and affection for all of us. Connie's address is 13-I Neck Rd., Old Lyme, CT 06371.

It's a beautiful day today after a very stormy night on the Vineyard. Have had a very busy summer with much company, beginning with the annual visit of Midge Coll Fields and Jean Cross Maier. We had a great time as always and they helped get out the postcards that I sent you all! Unfortunately, I'm afraid too many of you were on vacation (or maybe took offense at our attempt at poetry?!) as very few responses were received!

A lovely, long letter from Connie Abbott Schawb — by the way her address in the Directory is incorrect, please note change: 32 Carrie Court, Schenectady, NY 12309. Connie has moved into a townhouse as of July '83 as her home was too big now that the five children are grown and gone. What with a pacemaker and one cataract operation last year and another due this fall her tennis and active nursing days are over, but she keeps active with American Heart Assn., Visiting Nurse Board of Directors, and two bridge groups. Connie is Grandma to three, one boy and two girls — her children are spread out between New Orleans; Meridian, Mississippi; Providence; Cleveland and Schenectady.

A card from Jean Tilton Melby who is on the road this summer — they travel north from Florida by boat one year and by land the next — this was the car year. They stay in Sippican Harbor at Marion, MA when they come up the inland waterway; I hope to see her next summer. Three sons are married to wonderful girls, third son still single but "keeping a watchful eye out!" Her family is in New York, New Hampshire and Alaska.

Elise Duncan Danforth and her husband, Alan, went to West Point in May of '83 for her grandfather's "USMA Class of '83 Centennial Celebration." At the final roll call ceremony everyone was "goose-bumpy and teary eyed." There was such an atmosphere of love and pride among the descendants. Upon the return home both she and Alan had bouts of illness from which they have been recovering slowly. Elise also mentioned that her bowling team the OWLS (Older, Wiser, Livelier Seniors!) won the championship in May.

Jean Cross Maier is on her way to spend a couple of months in England with Ginny Thayer Boothby. Ginny is retired and living north of San Francisco; Jean is still in New Hope; her youngest son, Derek, was married in May. Two of her grandchildren are at the George School in Pennsylvania and three live in the San Francisco area.

And that's about it for this time. Do write and let me know your news. We will be starting to think about the 50th soon — so please keep in touch. Have a good fall and hope to hear from some more of you for the spring issue.

To continue with bits of news picked up at the Reunion last June:

George and Gert Oliva report that their family consists of six children (three of whom graduated from PA) and four grandchildren. George owns three radio stations, two in Cleveland and one in Thomasville, GA. His favorite recreation is hunting in Georgia, about which he modestly states that he "occasionally" gets a duck, dove, or quail.

Hank Terrie's phased retirement from the faculty at Dartmouth, where he is a Professor of English, continues apace. He now divides his year between New Hampshire and South Carolina and lists his activities as golf and work on Henry James in that order. He and his old roomie, Bill Pugh, and wives meet yearly at Hot Springs for a weekend of golf.

Holt and Kate Webster are two of Seattle's star citizens, both with records of great distinction. Holt, up until retirement last April, was chairman and chief executive officer of Airborne Freight Corporation, a position he has held since 1962, and Kate is a director of the Seattle First National Bank, a regent of Washington State University, and a trustee of Childrens Hospital. They have three children and four and two-thirds grandchildren.

Pete Strauss continues as an investment adviser in New York, but he and Barbara will be doing a lot of commuting to New Haven. Their daughter Sally is in the second year at the Yale Law School and son John is an assistant professor in the Yale Economics Department.

Out of the mail comes a release stating that our classmate, Charles M. Donovan, a nationally recognized transportation consultant, spoke at a March meeting in Atlanta of textile company executives on the future of the trucking industry. Those of you who missed this event and therefore the introductions will be delighted to know that Charles is president of a firm, which bears his name, of transportation management consultants in Pottstown, PA, and is a member of the boards of the Pottstown Memorial Medical Center, Trailer Train Co. of Chicago, and the Continental Bank of Norristown.

Warren Blanding writes that he continues to travel and teach business subjects related to publications put out by Marketing Publications Co., of which he is chief operating executive. He notes that "business has been exceptionally good this quarter, although I am inclined to think it is in spite of the present administration rather than because of it." I observe that there is no abatement in Warren's energy level as he is working on his twelfth book but finds time to grow a crop of vegetables in his "back-yard garden in the Nation's Capital."

I pass on with deep regret a brief notice from the School that J. Ashby Farrow died on 3 March 1984 of cardiac arrest. I have no further details but, on behalf of us all, express our condolences to his widow, who lives at 7 Allgood Rd., Charleston, S.C. 29407.

This epistle to you, Phillipians of 1940, should have appeared in the summer Bulletin. While man proposes, God still disposes. On a trip to Arizona with Susan in March, I landed in hospital in Cottonwood, was air-evacuated to Phoenix (in true M.A.S.H. style) with subsequent surgery, and arrived home with PA deadline long past.

I am indebted to Charlie Larkin for his kind and considered advice on my problem. Always our dear friend and classmate, he is also an expert in his field, cardio-vascular surgery. Charlie advised that Bill Arnold and Dave Gile recently had, and happily recovered from, heart surgery. Norm Bemis writes he too had joined the "Cardiac Club," but had recently resumed an active retirement with much time, naturally, on the golf course.

I discovered that Drennan Lowell is prominent in orthopedic surgery in Boston. Recently two friends in Bermuda told me that his skill enabled them to continue an active life with limbs that were suspect. The last time I saw Dreamer was about thirty-five years ago when he stopped off here after service in Europe as a U.S. Army Medico. Today he would appear to be a successor to famed Dr. Thorndike whom some of us had to visit in Boston with knee problems.

Recuperation in Phoenix led to a phone conversation with Bob Sturgis. Bob was in Williams Hall when we started in 1936. He left Harvard to serve in the U.S. Army Intelligence. After taking part in the liberation of Norway and the judgment at Nuremberg, he returned to finish his term at Harvard. He had a successful advertising career in Minneapolis before retiring to the sun belt some years ago. In an exhilarating retirement which includes golf, shooting and riding, he is a ready advocate of the Southwest, and doubts that he will ever leave that "wild and woolly waste."

Hardy perennial Bill Hayler is keeping up with Dick Sisson as Class Author. Besides sending me a copy of the Cornell Manual for Lifeboatmen of which he is co-author, he included an article he wrote for Shipmate, the alumni magazine of the U.S. Naval Academy (May 1984). It is a fascinating account of his service on the U.S.S. Benjamin Franklin. Bill was one of many heroes who helped save that gallant vessel after she had been badly wounded by Japanese action.

Culled from the New York Times: Butts Macomber is still as formidable a debater as he was in Philo at Andover. As President of the Metropolitan Museum he argued effectively against a new tax bill that would restrict deductions presently allowed would-be donors of works of art.

Maurie Gould reports the passing of his father, Maurice S. Gould '16, whom many of us remember with affection from his Andover visits while we were there. Maurice is still an active V.P. of American Express with son established in the business world and daughter at university.

Dick Ogrian has retired, but keeps active with good works in the community. Dick is the first of '40 to say that he definitely plans to be back next year for the 45th.

I was glad to hear from Emory Basford that he is happy in retirement in Gaithersburg, Maryland. Our old friend lectures his fellow retirees in literature, and keeps busy as well turning a potter's wheel.

Final note: Tom Rowen has been most kind and agreed to be Chairman of our Reunion on 7-8-9 June of next year. Let's give Tom all the support we can and make 45 in '85 the event it should be.

Wake up girls! It's time to plan to attend our 45th Reunion 7-9 June, 1985. You have been lethargic long enough. If you have depended on class notes to keep you up-to-date on all those young girls you once knew, you are a long way behind on the news. In my five years as Class Secretary I have heard from fewer than five of you! With this much time to plan, you can go on a diet, have a face lift and bring your brand new husband to the festivities. Remember, we didn't even wear makeup when we were at Abbot, so without the above mentioned preparations it will be interesting to observe how the sands of time have shifted things. Remember the dates, and y'all come!

Without any news to report, I must write about myself to get the ball rolling. I am a professor of journalism at Rutgers University. My specialty is politics and government. In July I attended the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco with press credentials. I wrote a series of analytical pieces along with some human interest fluff for one of the regional dailies in New Jersey. As I write these notes in mid-September, summer is turning ever so gently into that most glorious seasons in New England — Autumn. I hope some classmates and their families who have not recently experienced the vibrant colors and brisk air of a New England fall day may do so this year or next. We who live and work here are more than grateful for this blessing.

The Summer Olympics have come and gone and John Biglow, second son of Loosh and Nancy Biglow of Bellevue, Washington, has had quite a year for himself. You will recall in the spring notes I reported his triumph in the Olympic trials as the sole U. S. oarsman in the single sculls. The 30 July 1984 issue of Time had a good photo of John in his scull characterizing him as an "old-style, 'Chariots of Fire' amateur, the kind with true-blue (Yale) attitudes. . . ." John won his qualifying heats at the Olympics to row in the final. In the final he got off to a slow start but at the end was challenging the Canadian sculler for third place and the bronze medal. His challenge fell short and he came in fourth, but for John "competing, not winning is my reward." John has entered Dartmouth Medical School this fall. We share with Nancy and Loosh and family their joy and pride in young John.

Continuing in a sporting vane, Edwin C. (Ed) Andrews writes us that he recently joined the Board of Directors of the U. S. Equestrian team. He is still a part owner and a director of the Buffalo Sabres, National Hockey League team. His real estate interests are just as varied with a vacation spot in Sun Valley, ID, and a home and business office in Darien, CT. He recently purchased a home at the Palm Beach (FL) Polo and Country Club where he had a surprise visit with Rennie Wacht.

Copies of letters and certificates have reached us attesting to two fine honors which were bestowed on Fred Sontag this spring. On 30 April 1984 Montclair State College in New Jersey selected him as one of the first recipients of the "Margot M. Studer Award" for service to community, business and state. On 16 March 1984 Samuel R. Pierce, Jr., the Secretary of the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development awarded Fred their "Certificate of Superior Service" in recognition of his invaluable assistance and support of the Office of the Secretary in selected Secretarial Initiatives concerning Fair Housing and Civil Rights in Baltimore, Atlanta, Dallas and New Orleans. Fred lives in South Orange NJ. I hope he will write and give us some of his personal particulars.

I'm sure each of you has received Nate Cartmell's 3 August card detailing our Class of '42's excellent record of support for this year's Alumni Fund which closed 30 June and congratulating us for our fine increases over the past two years. Be generous in your thought and action when our genial Class Agent sends out his appeal letter for the current fiscal year. Let's keep our dollar and percentage participation growing.

With both National Political Party conventions behind us, those Republicans among us as well as some Independents and maybe even a few Democrats can take pleasure and pride in our classmate, George Bush, as he received and accepted his party's nomination for a second term as Vice-President. We hope the trials and challenges of the current campaign will be more than worth it for George, his wife, Barbara and their family no matter what the outcome.

Finally a sad message to share with you. Last November Jim Reilly, one of our outstanding class leaders, died suddenly in New York City. After Andover Jim went to Princeton and from there to Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons where he received his M.D. in 1947. Subsequent degrees were earned in Neurology and Psychiatry, as well as Radiology and Nuclear Medicine.

He served his internship and neurological residency at Bellevue Hospital, NYC; trained at the Neurological Institute of Presbyterian Hospital and NY State Psychiatric Institute after which he volunteered for duty in the Korean conflict. Jim served from 1950 through 1953 as Captain, U.S. Army Medical Corp. as Neurologist and Neuropsychiatrist at Tokyo Army Hospital where he was Chief of Physical Medicine. After returning from war duty, he served on the staff of Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in various capacities in the Department of Neurology, Radiology, and Nuclear Medicine. He also engaged in private practice of neurology and psychiatry and served as consultant in radiology and nuclear medicine at North Country Hospitals.

James A. Reilly, Jr., M. D. had a New England ancestry through seven generations. His father, James A. Reilly, was a graduate of Phillips Academy, Class of 1908. He is survived by two children, George Douglas Reilly and Julia Mitchell Reilly, his mother and sister Sheila, to whom we are indebted for the above information. Our class extends its sympathy to his family on their great loss and ours.

Now that summer is over take your pen in hand and please write me of your vacation ventures, family frolics, job changes, retirement plans and other personal news to be shared with all your classmates. Best wishes for a good autumn and a happy holiday season. It is always good to hear from you!

No news of the class for this issue because I did not do my homework before our deadline of 12 September.

Full time farming in which I engage, hits hardest in the summer. The beef cattle, sheep, horses, chickens and others are disappointed if we fail to put up their winter feed supply. The sequence goes like thus: fertilizing, planting, curing the hay (two cuttings at least), seeding down seven new acres and then worrying about whether the land was too wet to plant alfalfa. We have marginal land that takes a lot of encouragement.

We would enjoy hearing from anyone coming to or going through Woodstock. We also have a house in the village which is a convenient place to stop.

I hope to be able to report more next issue. Do write.

A nice note from Jack Pidgeon, the Headmaster of the Kiski School in Saltsburg, PA, who reports that having been headmaster for 27 years he has become the senior prep school headmaster in the USA. Bill Chipman let me know that he had played golf with Bob Montgomery at Pine Valley and expressed admiration for Bob's game, an eight handicap. Bob is apparently a magician with the short stick, the greatest stroke saver in the bag. Bob has retired to Sea Island, GA, a great spot for golf. Bill sees on occasion Ted Brockie another fine golfer who is with Alexander & Alexander in NYC. Glad to hear that Ted is making a good recovery from his eye operation.

Charlie Arnold sent me an interesting article from Economy '85 which featured Stu Northrop on its cover riding one of his Huffy bikes, apparently without training wheels. The article, which was about outside directors, mentioned Stu's nine directorships and quoted him as saying that an outside directorship is like an affair: lots of fun with no responsibility for day-to-day maintenance. Sex was always big at Andover. Got a nice call from Sy Brockway, a Public Affairs officer with Pepsico in Purchase, NY, who said that Dick Finnigan is back in Los Angeles after several years on Maui. Sy had dinner in LA with Fred Jordan, Jack Lemmon and Bill Mellor. Bill apparently played a part in the TV spectacular Winds of War but I, at least, did not recognize him.

Talked to Dave Thurber the Chairman of Bank of New Hampshire who survived a proxy fight and now has a firm grip on the throttle. Dave sees on a regular basis Bob Noble, still a resident of the Virgin Islands, Joe Houghteling of San Francisco and Ray Burmeister of Santurce, PR. Dave has solved the question of "Where's the beef?" as it turns out that Ray owns or did own Beef Island in the Caribbean.

Since some of you are retired and most of you are close to retirement I would like you to pass along your thoughts on how you plan to handle it and especially how you cope or plan to cope with some of retirement's practicalities like being home seven days a week and the fact that while the man retires, his wife does not. I'd like to hear from you.

Each issue of the Bulletin prompts a turn to Class Notes, and in each of the past several volumes, I've been disappointed. Our class has been missing! Aren't you interested in what some of your classmates are doing, or possibly not doing? It is often frustrating to think that "everyone else" has blossomed into a Nobel Prize winner, head of state, or "most recently published . . ." but it can be equally reassuring to learn that most classmates have matured into quietly contributing citizens: contributing offspring, volunteering, civic involvement, and frequently unheralded professional services which support our quality of life. After all, aren't those the values we cherish?

I have agreed to present a column for the class of 1943 in the Bulletin if the rest of you will cooperate, so it's up to you. When you receive a card from me, asking — no, begging — a scrap of news, please respond. If you do, I shall, and Abbot 1943 will be back in print!

There was a strong showing of our classmates at our 40th Reunion weekend, 8-9-10 June. On hand were Corey and Betty Allen, Al and Nancy Allenby, Burch Ault, Peter and Alison Baker, Gene Bernardin, Bill Boeschstein, Dan Carroll and his wife, Julie, Vint and Jane Cartmell, Kevin and Jane Collins, Ted Cook, Gus Deming, Stan Dickey, Dave Eagleson, Chris and Margaret Eatough, Stearns Ellis, Lester and Faith Grant, Dick Harrington, Dick Hatton, Ted and Betty Heckel, Bill Hickey, Tom and Dolores Howard, Bob Lawlor, Tom and Suzanne Morse, Sumner and Edith Milender, Ace and Connie Parker, Bob Percy, Gib and Louelle Reese, Joe Reisler, Bill Rich, Pete and Mary Alice Roome, Charlie and Marilyn Sagar, Roger and Virginia Seymour, Pete and Peggy Stevens, Whit Stevens, Walt and Lucie Torrance, Wheels Whitney, Bob and Ann Williamson, and Ray and Louisa Young.

A small group of early birds arrived on Friday afternoon, including Chris and Margaret Eatough, who came from England two weeks ahead of time and had a west-to-east-coast tour of the country, starting in San Francisco. Kevin Collins, man-on-the-scene for all of our arrangements, provided a bartender and a well-stocked bar at our headquarters in Bishop Hall (West Quad) and with his wife, Jane, played host to the early arrivals. Faculty member David Cobb hosted a reception for 1944 and 1939 at his home at the top of School Street, and we had supper with a growing number of classmates in Flagstaff Court, out in front of Commons.

Saturday provided perfect weather for our parade under the elms from the Addison Gallery to the gym, with the Bell Tower ringing out songs, and class banners announcing each class, from the oldest (1914) to the youngest. At a brief meeting in the gym, reunion gifts to the Alumni Fund were announced, and 1944 was proud to present more than $46,000. Peter Baker, our Class Agent, reported there was more to come . . . the Fund closed its books on 30 June, and the official total for the 1944 40th Reunion gift was $48,844.00.

A picnic lunch was provided in the open area bordered by the gym, Bulfinch Hall and the Bell Tower, and with a warm sun and a sense of no rush to go anywhere, classmates sat on the grass and enjoyed one another's company. During the afternoon some attended events around the campus — films, forums, and the like — and others swam in the pool, played tennis, or wandered about the campus. Our Reunion Dinner Saturday night began with cocktails and canapés at 6:00 p.m. in the Underwood Room (in the new building connecting GW Hall with Addison Gallery), and a delicious dinner catered by the Lanam Club was a sell-out, with 85 present including our co-reuning Abbot alumnae and their spouses. Music was provided by a four-piece orchestra, and many danced.

Special guests of our class who spoke during the dinner were Steve Sorota — now retired and living on Cape Cod — and Joe Wennik, past chairman of the Athletic Dept. Emory Basford had hoped to be with us, but had to change his plans at the last minute. Pete Stevens introduced Burch Ault and Chris Eatough, long distance travellers from Santa Fe and England respectively; Class Agent Peter Baker who did effective work with his team of 27 co-agents to bring in our record 40th Reunion gift; and Mort Dunn, who sang a special song to the tune of "Thanks for the Memories" and got a resounding round of applause for his amusing and nostalgic rendition.

Sunday morning those who were not already heading home lingered for doughnuts, fruit and coffee on the Bishop Hall lawn. All the lights went out at about noon as the last of us hit the road. Thanks for a notable and well-attended weekend go to Kevin Collins for the arrangements on campus, the many classmates who called and wrote others urging them to come, Peter Baker for our record-setting gift, and the weatherman who cooperated fully, after two rainy New England weekends in late May.

I am grateful to Pete Stevens for the notes you have just read on the Reunion. We'll be at the next!

Other notes: Carlton Coon ". . . still holding the fort in Katmandu, Nepal," as US Ambassador. Melvin Bergheim was too busy with the Governor of Virginia to come to the reunion. I guess we know where we stand in the pecking order, if we didn't already. Only kidding, Mel! John Clancy spent the summer in Hong Kong helping with Esso's long range planning there, which has to be exciting in the present context of reversion to China. A lift from the Yale Alumni news (courtesy of Roger Strong) says that Sam Arnold is riding horses in Spain, cooking in Sri Lanka, and other exotic things. Dick Mellor is still at the American Embassy in Singapore. Fred Greene did not make the Reunion, but was nice enough to write and wish the attendees well. Got a note from John Turner from Upper Hutt, New Zealand, where he is Deputy Principal at the Brentwood School. More exotic places: John O'Brien writes from the Embassy in Moscow. We are a scattered lot! Regrets from Ed Hayes out in Portland (just barely in the continental US). Leo McMahon, Jr. (his dad is still going strong — PA '14) injured his leg, so had a note from his doctor. Finally, I called Roger Strong on the strung-out Bell System but never got through. Roger, you call me. I'm in New York all the time.

More reunion news: I was remiss in not reporting the attendance of Nancy Nicholas Wengert and husband Harlan and two daughters. They have spent all their married life in Lebanon, Pennsylvania, in a family dairy business. Both she and Harlan are graduates of Cornell and active in the Presbyterian Church. One of their five children is still at home. Offspring careers include two bankers, one high school teacher, and one social work counselor. (They spent the hot June nights in an air conditioned motel, unwilling to melt with us in Bishop Hall.)

Gil Rich Ferguson now lives on Memorial Drive in Cambridge, MA and is an Historic Boston Tour Leader with "Boston-by-Foot." "Fun and interesting way to meet people."

Pat Damon Niswandor moved to Canterbury, NH several years ago and works part time at the Havenswood Nursing Home. I think she probably brings innovative care to the elderly.

Marge Travis Atwood's husband is half retired from a bank leaving him time to pursue collage and painting. Their offspring consist of one computer systems operator, one corporate lawyer, one associate of Grey Advertising and one teacher.

Charlotte Leland lives in Cohasset, MA, and is very active in the Democratic Party, Common Cause and World Federalist movement. Shirley Rhodes Lowe, winner of long distance award (Houston, TX) said she and Bill will retire to California in due course. She is free to travel extensively with him but has managed to receive a 2000-hour volunteer award from her local hospital.

Fritz Lange Dempsey is a social worker for the state of Alabama. Her 28-year-old daughter is a writer and 25-year-old twins are in telecommunications and counselling.

Elinor Cahill Georgopulo hasn't changed. She was distributing aromatic Turkish cigars! B. J. Bertucio Martuscello was lively as ever. She has been living alone for years and has a very responsible administrative nursing position with the New Rochelle Medical Center. Son Mike is a contractor in Tahoe, CA, and daughter Pat breeds horses in Florida. A note from Cubby Lyons Hickcox in September reports that she was unable to attend reunion due to graduation and annual meetings. She also commented that two out of three were out of college and happily employed. "I talk out loud to myself more than I used to but I'm a good listener. I've also noticed that I act younger than my kids."

She praised the pre-reunion mailings and we have Ricki Hinrichsen Stambaugh to thank. Ricki asked to be replaced as Class Agent and I volunteered to combine the two jobs. So you'll hear from me more often.

Donald McNemar announced in June that for the first year since 1964 admissions were blind as to financial ability to pay. We should all be proud of this. Further facts: 3000 applicants for 480 places. 15% of those admitted were alumni children. We feel fortunate that Malcolm was among them. That puts all of our family in the Boston area; daughter Mary at Tufts/Museum of Fine Arts masters program, son Thorn working in computer field in Cambridge; Edgar busy writing and promoting another book on rail history, and I'm a lone Republican running against four incumbent Democrats for the NH legislature.

Whew! Did this summer whip by fast! I think that the reason that time goes faster for us than kids is that kids are always looking forward to something — vacation, Christmas, Halloween, a birthday, etc. — and think that the day will never get there. This really slows things down for them. We're kind of jaded and take 'em as they come and boy, do they whiz along!

How about looking forward to our 40th 7-9 June 1985 as a way of slowing your speed. There's a meeting on the Hill 28-29 September for "Volunteer Weekend" and among the activities are seminar planning. I expect to meet with Bill Saltonstall, Jack Thorndike, Dick Welch, Bill Moore, and Pete Hetzler at that time to lay the groundwork for our festivities. One of the planned highlights will be our class dinner to which we are inviting a lot of our old faculty friends who still live in the area. Bill and Vera Moore have also offered their hospitality for our Sunday activities at their lovely estate in nearby Topsfield. We had a great time there at the 35th.

If any of you would like to help organize the shindig especially in the attendance area, please contact me or Peter Hetzler, attendance chairman. Pete's address is Point Rd., Rumson, NJ 07760. Ed Mead, Lee Bergstrom, and Reg Collier are already on the committee, but we can use all the help we can get. We broke all records for attendees at our 35th, and we'd sure love to see a big turnout for the 40th. Plan on it!

A few notes on the aforementioned citizens: Bergie is about to buy a house in Fairfield, CT and it sounds great. He's been living in Southport for the last couple of years around the corner from Lou Kutscher and is moving because of an expiring lease, not because of Kutscher. Bergie reports that he ran into Artie and Cornelia Moher at a wedding in Weston, MA last week. They're both fine and expecting their first grandchild. They see John Blake frequently and report that the Chet Homers have moved to Maine. Collier was heading for San Francisco to meet Ted Kingery and Bob Beach for an annual camp meeting of note. Welch is in the money management business handling retirement plan funds and is going great guns. He and his associates are in the over-100 million category after only a few years in the business. Moore's been keeping his nose to the grindstone as his various business interests are heavy industry oriented and were slow during the recession.

I decided to call a few guys I hadn't seen for 40 years to try to drum up some news. I picked five names at random with the following results on person to person phone calls:

Cy Chittick of Hingham, MA was in Europe, but I can tell you that his son Charles Y. also lives in Hingham because I dialed his number first.

Peter Lagemann who lives in Greenwich was out of town until next Tuesday.

Bill Ellis of Charlestown, MA does not have an answering service and I had to give up after 10-15 rings.

Bill Levin of Gales Ferry, CT was fair game as he was confined at home with a bad case of intestinal flu. When I last saw Bill he was in the family's wholesale grocery business. He says that they happily sold that out many years ago and he went into commercial mall development with good success. He is now semi-retired but is associated with Pequod Realty in New London as a commercial real estate purchaser, syndicator and broker just to keep his hand in. Bill's married a second time and has four children, three stepchildren, and three step-grandchildren. So much for zero population growth. He no longer sails, but has a twin engined airplane pilot's license and plays a lot of golf. he "plays often and swings often." He tells me his cousin, Bob Sussler is doing well as an attorney in New London.

Next was James Dennis Hand of Forest Hills, Queens, New York. Jim is a retired broker from the New York Cotton Exchange whence he departed when he could no longer stand the screaming and yelling. Prior to that he used his MIT chemical engineering degree in the natural gas business in various parts of the deep south and South America. Jim has also married a second time and has two children, three stepchildren, and two grandchildren. He spends 3-4 months in Forest Hills, three months at their summer place on Lake Mabon near Saratoga and the balance of the time in Florida. He finds retirement no burden and recommends it highly.

I hope the three guys who weren't home will drop me a line as well as any one else out there (is anyone there?) before I go broke with MA Bell.

Yale-Princeton is the big weekend at Yale Bowl this fall on 10 November. I'm sure a bunch of us will be getting together for it; so give me a call if you'd like to join us.

The retiring John Blake is still on the job as Class Agent, doing a heck of a job, and deserving our support. He's made more far-rell appearances than John Barrymore and I hope he continues to do so; so let's keep him sullen but not rebellious by ante-ing up for the class gift for the 40th.

Again, let me urge you all to plan to be on the Hill 7-9 June and let me know if you can help us get the show on the road.

Fred "Seed" Thomas, Jimmy Breslin, and Dick Phelps were among the many characters we encountered in Clinton, NY this past May during graduation exercises at Hamilton. Fred, up from Haiti, was "Canonizing" the event with his SLR, as Andy PA '80 and Kate Thomes PA '80 were receiving their cane and BAs. Lynn and Dick were on hand to hear Lynn's brother, Bill Luhrs, Ambassador to Czechoslovakia, deliver the commencement address. Kate is now with Grey Advertising in New York. Breslin is still with the News.

I spent a wonderful summer toiling on the North Fork as Sales Manager of Stirling Cove, waterfront condominium homes, a fantastic development in Greenport Harbor. The project was conceived, designed, engineered and financed by Vector Realty Corp., Don Shapiro '53, president. 48 townhouses and flats with a Vineyard feel, each with its own dock space, were sold during the season. My office was a 45' houseboat that was tied up to the site. Mary and Cam Paradise came over from Shelter one Saturday and bestowed their praise and approval on the entire proceedings. That was some assignment with the best working conditions you could ever imagine.

Did you get a letter from Bob Wexler vis-a-vis the Alumni Fund? Bob's clever communique explained that the class of '46's participation could move from average to exceptional if we "took Sam Phillips to dinner." If each of us sprung for a meal for Sam and sent it to the AAF, Bob says we would soar to the top of class results. To make sure Sam doesn't go hungry, Robert H. suggests:

$50.00 — very good neighborhood spot
$100.00 — gourmet spread, Chateau La Tour and an Uppman.

Great idea, Roberto! Let's do it!

Charlie Vail, six miles east of Falmouth, retired recently. Said he was sick of working. Bruce McCurdy, USNA '54, USN (Ret.), is still with IBM as a design engineer. Don McDonough is with the USIF and lives in Chevy Chase. Audrey and PK, the "downeast" Fishers, met grandson "PK" 3rd on the coast and are expecting twin grandchildren from their North Haven, CT children. George Meeks is west of the Rockies with Montgomery Securities, which I believe was reported in these columns previously.

Did you catch Kim Whitney on TV during the open at Winged Foot? He looked just great and what a tournament! Speaking of golf, I spoke with Tom Wyman '47 on the fairway at Westchester CC where he was hitting them straight and long while playing in the Celebrity Pro-Am with "Big Mac" McGillicuddy and Dinah Shore. Rog Neu-hoff tells me Tom is doing well in broadcasting. "RA" is apparently still commuting between Washington and the Vineyard.

That's all for now, folks. Write, if you get work. Keep your head steady, swing back slowly, eyes down and follow through.

Dear Class:

It has been a long, dry spell with little news of you. Thanks to the ubiquitous Russ Thomes, there is always news of our PA friends. What little news I know follows: Nancy Thomas Adams and Ted have moved to their new home in Homosassa Springs, Florida and are enjoying Ted's retirement. Ellen Brumback and sister Frances '48 visited Mary Howe Brumback and Charlie in May. The girls looked wonderful and Mary and Charlie had a lovely party for them. Last month Mary took me to a Cubs game and luncheon at a Tribune at Wrigley Field and that was one of the highlights of my life! (Cubbies magic number is 12 at this writing.) Mary and I are Frank Lloyd Wright aficionados and we have spent some precious moments pursuing the Wright way. Mary's grandparents owned a Wright home at Lake Delevan, Wisconsin and my grandfather sang in the choir with Frank in Wisconsin and my Uncle Jack played in the Wright playroom in Oak Park. Any comments from Mary Burton Blakney on F.L.W. will be helpful.

The Andover-Citizens' Exchange Council trip to Russia last year was stunning. Moscow, Novgorod, and Leningrad plus Helsinki were fascinating and the Andover-Citizens guides made the trip educational and unforgettable.

If you have a chance take an Andover trip, do. The group was intelligent and charming; more than 60 people from 16 to 80 plus years! I went with my daughter Gail and it was so nice to see Dodie Hildreth Detmer '48 and her daughter Zareen on the trip.

My daughter Karen lived in South Dartmouth, MA, for two years next door to Barbara Biddle Gallagher's brother and family. Sounds as if Barbara still has that beautiful face and piercing blue eyes. I'd like to see them myself; which reminds me — do begin to plan ahead for our 40th reunion in 1986. I can't describe how meaningful the reunion was last time.

Andover goes all out to make it a fun and special occasion for you, your husband, and family. We missed you last time!

Write me. Call me collect 312-441-7078, I want news of you. As Abby says, "I care!" We are missing Mrs. W. Clement, Mrs. Alfred Collins, Mrs. John Heywood, Mrs. Burt S. Hofmann, Mrs. Hans Peter Leib, Amy Mitamura, Sophie Wegrezynek and Ann Weston. Contact me if you have information about any listed.

It is with real sadness that we report the death of Sally North Jones on 26 January 1984 in Ogunquit, Maine. Survivors include Sally's husband, Charles; daughter Jennifer, and sons Jeffrey and Bradford. Sally owned and operated the Carriage Trade in Ogunquit for 27 years and was a past director of the Ogunquit Chamber of Commerce.

Love to you all, and if you love me even a little you will write.

I write these very brief notes to the sound of the waves of the Atlantic rolling against the shore in southern Delaware where Mary Lou and I are enjoying a short vacation. I'm still working for DuPont in Wilmington. We are fortunate to see our children fairly often since Nancy and our seventeen-month-old grandson live only about eighty miles from us, and David, when he is not traveling around the world on assignment for the Philadelphia Naval Yard, lives in Wilmington.

While you are getting ready to settle down for another busy winter, how about jotting down somewhere on your busy calendar that you are going to write your '47 classmates bringing them up-to-date on your busy lives. Marty Barber Lowrance's daughter Laurie is in her senior year at Kenyon College where she is majoring in English and is active in the music and drama departments. I can't believe she doesn't have a basketball stashed somewhere. Marty and Laurie enjoyed a trip to Hawaii in the spring and an Alpine tour in June. Marty says she would love to see any "Abbot-ites" who find themselves in the vicinity of Earlysville, VA. The class extends its sympathy to her on the death of her mother last December.

From Lewisburg, West VA, Muffy Wallis Hekness writes that she was disappointed to miss our 30th reunion — she was en route when she became ill. She does, however, plan on attending our 35th. She must be having a busy fall because one of her interests is GOP politics. She is also active in the Episcopal church and in the local humane society. Her outdoor interests include tennis and gardening, "in a slapdash fashion." Her husband, Wayne, is an engineer "with inventive tendencies" who runs a small dye company in Roanoke, VA. Muffy writes that "after five years of ownership of three houses, with a total of 65 acres of residential property, we have finally sold all but one and are about to move into it."

Tania Russell Potter has a master's degree in social work and is currently a volunteer counselor at Catholic Social Service in Phoenix. Her husband, Don, is a kidney specialist. They have three grown children and one granddaughter. She writes, "I was just looking over my Abbot yearbook and it brought back so many memories!"

"We are cruising into the later years smoothly and well," writes Salley Macartney Osborn from Agawam, MA. She is retiring as director of her school for special needs children. She and Bill have just celebrated their 34th anniversary. They have "two wonderful children, one great son-in-law and one very special grandchild... one springer spaniel, one cocker spaniel, and one crazy cat."

Nancy Richmond Hammer's daughter Beth was married in June to Edwin Ruh, Jr. of Pittsburgh. Beth received a master's degree in exercise physiology from the University of Pittsburgh. Nancy's son John works for Gulf Oil in New Orleans and is a specialist in small computers.

Write early and often.

One final note: Rosemary E. Jones, currently our class Co-Agent, and I will be switching rolls effective 1 January 1985. Rosemary will become the Class Secretary and I will become the class Co-Agent. Please help her out in her new job by mailing her your news — her address is 1718 N. E. Seventh Ave., Ft. As it turned out John Havelock had to beat four challengers in the Alaska Democratic primary for the U.S. Senate nomination. Although John won handily in August with some 66% of the Democratic poll, he will have a tough fight in November against the Republican incumbent, Ted Stevens, who has a war chest of over $1 million. John, a former Alaska Attorney-General, lives in Anchorage.

Last April Herkus von Letkemann pitched in with the Andover Alumni Fund Phonathon in Boston. I don't know how much Herk extracted in pledges, but since he is in the Development Office at M.I.T. he should have a deft touch. Herk talked with Dick Brace, a lawyer with New England Life in Boston, and Don Botto, Marketing Director in Goodyear's International Division in Akron. He reached Kevin McKibbin in Los Alamos, NM, where he is Chief Ranger at Bandelier National Monument, and Captain Ferdinand I. Collins, USN (Ret.) in upstate New York, where he carried on nautically with 150 old boats as director of the Shipyard Museum in 1000 Islands. Bo's daughter Liz has just entered PA as an Upper Middler.

At Yale 1954's 30th Reunion last May I found nine members of PA '50. Tom and Freya Keefe were up from Houston, Gibb and Mary Cornwell down from Dartmouth, and Leigh and Nancy Quinn over from Winchester, Mass. The Connecticut contingent included Dick and Wendy Gifford (Dick presided over a return engagement of the 1954 Wiffenpoofs), Dick and Ann Bell, Allan and Nikki Toole, Strother and Janet Purdy (Strother is now a professor at the New School in New York), Pim and Hutch Epler, and Dick Suismann, who has been busy raising money for Mondale. It was a special pleasure to see Dudley and Becky Shepard; Dud is a professor at Lowell University.

Bob Todd's son David was on Yale's varsity soccer team last year as a freshman. Bill Crozier, chairman and CEO of Baybanks in Boston, spent two days last December at Babson College, teaching and attending class as part of the college's Visiting Executive Program. Harry Miskimin, Professor of History at Yale, has been awarded a Fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies, for research on "The Concept of Property in France, 1300-1600."

Last June The New York Times quoted that distinguished New York architect, Charles Platt, in reporting that the city's Landmark Preservation Commission had disapproved a plan by St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church to build a 59-story office tower next to its landmark Byzantine-style church. "The sheer size of the building," observed Commissioner Platt, "dwarfs the landmark."

More on Ralph Blum's Book of Runes: "Over 180,000 in print since last October," Ralph writes. "I am on the road a lot. A job at last!" As reported in my last column, the book comes with a bag of ceramic runes — tidier than tea leaves or chicken entrails — for do-it-yourself oracles. Ralph offers classmates a reading by phone. His Los Angeles number is (213) 471-3331.

At the Andover reunions in June (which I attended as a functionary) I got a chance to see Ivan Chermayeff's splendid show at the Addison Gallery. His combinations of collage and calligraphy are especially striking and effective. I also saw Charlie Flather whose wife, Kate AA '59, was Co-Chairman of the highly successful Andover-Abot 25th Reunion.

I'm delighted to report that Gibb Cornwell has agreed to chair 1950's 35th Reunion next June, as he chaired our 30th in 1980. You'll be hearing from Gibb and his committee early in 1985. In the meantime, plan now to return to Andover June 7-8-9 1985.

Jerry Ward is recently the proud owner of a 40-foot ketch which he has painted black, installed gun ports, named Maraudeur, and flies the French tri-color as his private ensign. To date there has been no reports of any battles or privateering to a greater extent than is normal in Long Island Sound off Fairfield county.

Contrary to suggestions by PA Alumni office, Lloyd Cutting (Kutz) is not missing or dead. He is alive and well and living in Clearwater, Florida, and is "in sales." Speculations will follow when I get them.

Carleton (Tony) Thompson, formerly with Russell Reynolds, struck out on his own a couple of years ago, and formed his own specialized recruiting firm for the communications industry. He was sufficiently successful so that he then merged into his current employer, Spenser Stuart in New York City. Tony lives in New Canaan, Connecticut with his wife, Nancy, having contributed to the PA coffers via son (class of Jerry Lasley's company, Amerace, went on the block this summer and was taken over in a leveraged buyout by First Boston and the Bass Brothers. Rather than stay and move to New Jersey to the new corporate headquarters, he elected to jump with a tin parachute, and is now looking for something to do, while sitting on the shore of Long Island Sound in Connecticut. Anyone looking for the services of an outstanding controller should call.

Osborne (Ozzie) Ayscue reports that the spring 1984 edition of the Exeter Bulletin, an issue dedicated to track and field, contained a photograph of a 1950 track meet held at Exeter, containing both Al Moe and Ozzie Ayscue running the 40-yard dash. They were both pleased that the quality of Exeter's publications, at least, were improving.

But, if you read this column, you will soon find out just how Pat Morgan influenced a new series of children's books created by Bill Kaufmann. The first time I ever really looked at a piece of paper was at one of Pat's and Diz's art classes. The exercise I still remember was one in which I turned in a plain white page with cut out areas as my variation on a Mondrian painting.

About a year or so ago, I was looking at a piece of plain white paper and it occurred to me that if it were folded a few times (in the shape of a book) and cut (in the right place) that something interesting might happen. The finished idea, in collaboration with Alan Zwiebel, a friend and creative genius at Young and Rubicam, is now available in three books published by Random House. Trademarked and patented, they are called, "Ready-To-Wear-Books" because they are storybooks that unfold into real costumes.

Other stories that have unfolded recently include one from Ralph Bowman who just got married to Gail Paige. Ralph is presently a national sales executive in the carpet industry and soon expects to be a full-time alcohol and drug counselor. Whether this will keep him from his role as a theatrical and commercial actor, only time will tell.

In speaking to Randy Heimer, I found out a number of enormously interesting things. First, that the model in one of E. F. Hutton's magazine advertisements who looked so much like Randy was in actuality Randy. Second, that the house I thought he had in upstate New York was in the Hamptons. And finally, that Randy, in reading last time's column about baseball at PA, felt it would have been much more interesting had it mentioned less about Ray Lamontagne and Don Shapiro, and more about Randy.

Eliot Vestner's daughter Alice-Lee, will graduate from PA in 1985. His son Charles, writes Eliot, is having too much fun in high school and does not want to go to Andover.

In a rather lengthy Newsweek article, the work of Lauro Halstead of Houston's Institute of Rehabilitation and Research was discussed. Dr. Halstead, himself a polio survivor, has been involved in analyzing post polio problems and in organizing a meeting on the subject for neurologists, pathologists and other experts from around the world. The article, dated 4/23/84, indicated that the meeting would take place in Warm Springs, GA.

Barbie McCorvie, recovering from a broken back, was full of information about McCorvie & Partners, the business that her husband, Neal runs. Neal is one of the most highly regarded strategic planners and creative thinkers in the big leagues of marketing.

Also on the mend, Joan Wolff, after surgery that revealed little more than a distaste for having a tube in her nose.

May you all have a very merry Christmas and a happy, healthy New Year.

Please watch for post cards requesting your news which will reach you well before the next deadline of 16 May 1985. Please return promptly so we may have news of many of you in the summer edition! Eva Stern

Breckenridge lives in Teaneck, NJ, and has a son who has graduated from U. of Vermont, a daughter at Barnard, and another son at Horace Mann School. Ann Stoddard Saunders of Annandale, VA is working as a librarian at United Way of America. Two children are still in college, while a third has graduated. Libby Hollister Zimmermann, in Madison, WI, is an ornithologist and a wild life painter, and husband, Jim, is a Professor of Botany at U. of Wisconsin, and has a superb wild flower collection. They have a son. Ann Irish Kennedy phoned me just after the last deadline to tell me of the birth of a grandchild, and I believe, the marriage of another child. As I neglected to write down her news, I have lost the details, but it was wonderful of her to keep me informed. I do better if you all will write me a note for my Andover file.

Julie Gaines Phalen, Polly Jackson Townsend, and I had a superb, although very wet day in Boston in early June, exploring the Fine Arts Museum, dashing through puddles for lunch and meeting our spouses for dinner. It was fun to get caught up with all. I was in Boston with Bill who was attending some meetings at the Harvard Business School. Imagine our surprise when upon our return home, our 25-year-old daughter called to say she had been accepted at HBS, and is currently there. The move from San Francisco was traumatic for her. Our 23-year-old daughter landed on Ann Zuill Williams' doorstep in June, and enjoyed several days of Ann and Colin's hospitality despite a house torn up for remodeling. Julie Gaines Phalen and Clif, and Betsey Hitzrot Evans have both made recent visits to Zoo in England, and Ann writes what fun it is to renew old friendships.

Carol Hardin Kimball and daughter Jennifer stopped to have a quick lunch with me en route back East from Ephraim, WI. We managed a lot of conversation in a short time. Carol was in the process of starting a new job as a fund raiser for an environmental concern, the name of which escapes me right now. I have just returned from Ephraim where I rented Carol's darling, charming log cabin for three days with two girl friends from Milwaukee.

I will be making a school tour with son Daniel the last week in October, and Andover is high on the list. Will hope to see Connie Weldon LeMaitre who is now Director of Annual Giving for Andover.

I think I have figured out how the Bulletin news is handled, and I pass it on. This news will be read by you within a day or two of my January 10th deadline. The news I write in January appears in May, and the 16 May deadline news will reach you in August. So, please plan ahead and write me your news ASAP. I know we all have a lot to share, and the personal experience of having one of my kids visit a former classmate was just wonderful. It can happen to you!

The following "ditty" from Marti Belknap failed to reach the Bulletin office in time for inclusion in the summer edition, so here it is now with our thanks to Marti.

Our weekend reunion together was jolly
With Franny and Peggy, Paula and Molly.

Valjeanne and N.J. and Maris were there,
Winnie and Marti and Sylvia Thayer,
(All of us wiser, and some a bit grayer!)
Ms. Judd and Ms. Ritchie, Ms. Goodwin and more.

All got together for tea about four.
We met with our Andover classmates to dine

On chowder and steamers and lobsters and wine.

We danced and we partied, we laughed through the night,

Renewing our friendships was such a delight.

We thought of the days of the famed Abbot walk —

To boys we were strictly forbidden to talk!

Dear friends who were absent, we missed you a lot!

(I flew in from Denver, believe it or not)

In only five years we'll have turned 52.

I'm planning to be there, and hope to see you.

With love to all from Marti Belknap.

Linda and Bob Rogers have recently completed a well deserved European vacation. They are the mainstays of the Symphony Space Performing Arts Center at 96th and Broadway in NYC. Bob's undertaking, the Curriculum Arts Project, in its third year, is designed to bring music to the city's seventh and eighth graders by linking it to their American History curricula. Meanwhile, for the past six years Bob has continued to wield the baton for the long running smash, A Chorus Line.

Bob's post card from Monaco reminded me of an oversight on my part: failing to note the passing of the sweetheart of the Class of '55 — Princess Grace. Few secondary school classes have shown the insight to select a Class Girl who combined such beauty, talent and sheer class that we did.

Don Lauve reports he is enjoying the Mad Ave existence as Associate Creative Director for Uniworld Group, Inc. Our First Married is in a fine position to make us all feel very old with references to "the kids . . . Alex, 9, Jason, 13, Jenny, 25, and Delia, 27! Don mentions he is freelancing in children's photography, a reason to start talking about his four year-old grandson, Jesse Ko. Come on, Don, have a heart!

David Harrison, currently a public affairs consultant for the University of Minnesota has been in the Red River Valley of Manitoba and North Dakota eliciting support for developing a valley-wide policy on water use. In seeking to form an alliance of the valley's local governments, watershed agencies, farmers, and other affected groups, Dave hopes to create a model for a national water policy structure.

A stint of location shooting on a Warner Bros. film called American Flyer this summer enabled me to sample the hospitality of, and touch bases with several PA alums. Peter Schandorff '64, a veteran of the Andover Russian junket of 1983, was a very gracious host in his less-than-summer-resort hometown of St. Louis. He was most apologetic for the climate, a textbook case of iced tea and sympathy. Mike (Digne) Bell proved to be a better opponent at Trivial Pursuit than navigator as we tried to find the fabled suburban (Boulder, Colorado) hideaway of the Jack Tracys. Fortunately we had had a great visit with Jack and Vivi a couple of nights earlier, so not seeing the mountain showplace was the only disappointment.

The trade-off was that in burning out my brakes on Mt. Tracy, I was able to arrive precariously at the Chris Crosby hearth in South Denver to meet Chris' wife, Susan, and enjoy a long overdue reunion with Chris and Jay Precourt, veterans of Bishop South — but not able to leave brakeless in the dead of night for my home base in Boulder. I am happy to report the guest rooms at the Crosby Hilton are large and comfortable, and if your stay is the result of an automotive emergency, you get a free toothbrush. . . . Y.

This was the first time in 22 years that I have had to resort to the old "post card trick" in order to hear from some of you faithful. The response has been rewarding, and I am counting on those who have not sent me their latest news to do so; otherwise a hex will be placed on your by the Grinch of Christmas.

Tuck McClintock writes from Pittsburgh, where he is a stockbroker for Parker/Hunter, that his wife, Lissie, graduated from Pitt Law School at the tender age of 39 and is now working in the Trust Department of the Pittsburgh National Bank. Adding that he has a stepson going to U. of Colorado this fall and a stepdaughter entering the 10th grade at the Purnell School in Pottsville, NJ, Tuck mentioned that he had other news, but this was the only stuff that was fit to print. . . . Congratulations to Lew Neisner who was re-married about a year ago to the former Beth Vanfossen, a sociology professor at SUNY college in Brockport and author of several books in her field. This fall Lew embarked on a new career as an assistant professor of Business Administration at SUNY in Buffalo, adding that 1984 has been a good year. . . . Bill Hegeman dropped a note that he spent a most pleasant 10 days in England last August and is working for Saatchi Compton while teaching at the New School. Bill says he hears from Grant Willis from time to time and sends best regards to all Speaking of Europe, my post card made it to Colonel Dick Guthrie and wife, Cynthia, daughter Laura, age 16, and son Park, age 15. Dick has spent the last four plus years in Europe, two in Paris, one in the Netherlands, and the remainder at Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE), which he says is fascinating because he is part of the Political-Military Interface. Adding that next year he may be returning to Special Forces, Dick sends his best to all '57 classmates.

I received a most interesting letter from Chad Smith who re-married last year in Philadelphia to the former Meredith Stevenson. The Smiths have moved to Bath, Maine, where they have remodeled an old seafarers house for winter living, while spending the summer on Wolfe's Neck. Chad had been the curator of the Peabody Museum in Salem, MA and more recently with the Philadelphia Maritime Museum. However, Maine will provide more time to write and edit. Chad's latest book, The Empress of China, was published last February to commemorate the 200th anniversary the ship of the same name that sailed from the U. S. to begin trade with China. Interestingly, Chad mentioned that passages of his book were used by President Reagan in his speeches in China last spring. In addition, the cover painting done by Chad was turned into a commemorative stamp. [See book review, summer Bulletin.] Chad adds that he has two daughters: one entering the 8th grade and the other will be a senior at the Brooks School in North Andover . . . And I have trouble turning out this article . . . Tom Phillips returned the post card to say that he is enjoying late-in-life parenting with his wife, Nancy. Tom and Nancy have two sons, James, 9, and Jonathan, 6, who keep them busy, while Tom designs resort projects in northern Michigan . . . Yours truly spent a week in St. Paul last August in school and while there had a most delightful lunch with Ben Field who is the Treasurer of the Bemis Company in Minneapolis. Ben and his family were on their way back to Connecticut for the Labor Day weekend to help his parents celebrate their 50th anniversary. It's amazing that after 28 years we are all still recognizable, but Tom Fox was right, Ben hasn't changed a minute. New wife, Pam, joined me and we spent a splendid Labor Day weekend fishing in northern Minnesota — God's Country. I tried to reach Ollie Houx in Duluth, but couldn't make contact. . . Please keep the postcards coming. It's really great to hear from many of you from whom we have not heard in a long time. . . Next time from Rod Parke, Dave Catron, and John McConnell . . . This is the time I plug Tom Fox's efforts for the Annual Fund campaign. Foe and his money changers do a great job, so let's not let him down this year. Best for the Holiday Season. GEE.

In the wink of an eye this column must be written, or there won't be one. No pondering its literacy, excitement, earthshaking brilliance. The good ol' news office has given me one extension already. THE MAIN REASON for this chaos (and there must be an excuse) is that we have a new class secretary, but, by the time Labor Day rolled around and Carol had agreed to do it, there was not time to send the ubiquitous postcard. Yes, it's Carol Gaines Roberson. I am happy; she is happy she'll be hearing from you (right?); and the class will be thrilled, I am sure, to note the change of pace, style and color in her words. After such advance hype, she'll surely be looking for a replacement before long, so give her all the support you can. I guess the next deadline is in January, so look for her postcard before then. THANK YOU, CAROL.

The few tidbits are: Penny Holbrook Reid is working at Computervision in Bedford, MA, as of March, writing descriptive material about graphic-design systems which the company adapts for large businesses and corporations. She is thrilled with the job and the ongoing challenges, as well as the people she works with. Cindy started Wesleyan this fall, after spending half of last year in Australia; Megan just graduated from Exeter and is taking a year off to work and, after Christmas, to go to Greece.

Mimi Ganem Reeder is now in her second year at Boston University School of Management, having survived her first year far better than Mimi would have you believe. She worked for a small company in Cambridge over the summer, which was a valuable experience, according to her. Adam is a sophomore at Yale; Jason a senior at Andover; and now Allan has entered as a junior. It sounds as though they have inherited both Mimi's wits and her wisdom.

Jacque Goodspeed is happy to be moving back to Lincoln (from Cambridge) for the country and the early morning riding which she loves. She just began as associate director of the Sudbury Valley Trustees, a land conservation program on the borders of the Sudbury River. She is still singing and is taking a two-day workshop with Susan Osborn of the Paul Winter Consort (does anyone know Missa Gaia — spectacular!) Jacque keeps in touch with Ellen Parker who, since July, has been a development officer at Mt. Sinai Medical Center in New York. Ellen is doing public relations and grant writing.

I stopped for Sunday lunch at Jody Bradley Bush's in July. Enjoyed the great outdoors while admiring her excellent landscaping talents and knowledge of exotic plants and bushes (heh, heh). "Little Johnny has stepped forth into Andover. Jody is still very much concerned with Inwood House which assists and counsels unwed mothers, in New York.

For me, the move to Milton and the Boston area has many rewards and the boys are grooving in all the community sports. Ethan and Ben are both in Milton Academy Lower School this year, for which I am thankful and reaping, indirectly, their exuberance for learning. I am doing freelance copy editing for several magazines and looking forward to a permanent job and an office away from home. I must say I have loved being Class Secretary for I don't know how long (I have thoroughly enjoyed hearing from all of you), and am delighted that Carol agreed so readily to take over. She will inspire us all only if she hears from you. So write her soon: Mrs. Carolyn G. Roberson, 6532 N. Guilford, Indianapolis, IN 46220. Thanks for being the wonderful Abbot class I remember — only better. Yours, Dinah.

Bill Jenkins writes that he is now a resident in family medicine at Brown University, Pawtucket Memorial Hospital, Pawtucket, RI. From the land of the Down Under, we hear that Hugh Springer is in his third year as Chaplain at Newtonington, an independent, multi-cultural school with a student body representing more than 50 nationalities and 37 different languages. Hugh writes that his sons are thriving in this diverse environment.

Bob Posner writes that he has become a trustee of the Cancer Research Institute and encourages all of us to contribute to this worthy institution.

Jim Leaf writes that he continues as Headmaster of the Tower School in Marblehead, MA. His wife, Elizabeth, is a member of the Harvard English Department and senior tutor of Currier House.

We hear that Jon Higgins gave a concert of South Indian classical music in April at Phillips Academy. Jon is well known throughout India as the first non-Indian to be recognized as a professional performer of classical Indian vocal music. Jon is presently professor of music at Wesleyan University.

As your new Class Secretary, I am most anxious to hear from all of you. Win Orgera tells me that the twenty fifth reunion of the class of 1958 was a smashing success. I'm very sorry I was unable to attend. I am now living in Southern California (five moves in eight years and hopefully this is our last) and working for Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. We have four children, Mark (PA '81), a senior at Harvard; Kristen, a junior at the University of Michigan; as well as sons David, age 18, and John, age 8. I apologize for not sending in a column for the last issue. Please don't wait for a post card from me if you have news to share. My requests this summer did net a very special response. I heard from my roommate, Joanne Shanklin, who lives in Rio de Janeiro. Her daughter Anne is studying business administration at Pine Manor College. Felipe, her sixteen year old son, was waiting to hear from a school in Switzerland. Josie has been divorced for six years; she used to work in Sao Paulo, but has spent the last three years as full time mom.

Word about another classmate living abroad, Linda Carr Milne-Tyte, came from Jane Christie Smith. They and Linda's children had tea together when Jane was in London this summer on a working vacation. Jane also mentioned that Timothy is president of his cluster (West Quad South) this year at PA.

Jane encouraged me to attend the Andover volunteer weekend. A clambake without mosquitoes sounded enticing but we had already planned two trips to Boston. Our oldest, Andrew, is a freshman at Tufts. In addition to tutoring, I work for my church as coordinator of pastoral services. My contacts are mostly with the ill and the homebound. My husband has, unexpectedly, gone back on the Alexandria City Council.

I keep up with Mary Ann Savage Habib by phone. She keeps busy at the Library of Congress but still gets to Maine for vacations. Shirley Slater Crosman and family visited us while they were sightseeing in DC.

Next time any of you vacations on the Cape, look up Ruth Gray Switzer. She is part owner of The First Edition Restaurant in East Sandwich. Besides being a job she enjoys, the restaurant provided employment for daughters Kim, a senior at Amherst, and Pam, a sophomore at Brown. Their family also includes Kirt and Deidre, who attend Sandwich High School . . . Nora Colby Salaway has two kids in college. Tracey will graduate in June as a graphic artist from Rochester Institute of Technology. Charles has graduated from college and is living at home. Nora keeps calm by working at Bonwit's in Manhasset and teaching an adult ed class in crewel and counted cross-stitch . . . Sandra Castle Hull watched her Alfred graduate from Andover. He is at Swarthmore and Cathi is a senior at Smith.

Most travelled award goes to Vicki Kohler. She spent two months this spring "crashing around" Papua, New Guinea; Australia and New Zealand. The only trips she arranged this summer were for herself to Vermont and the Vineyard. She says she'll stay in Cambridge long enough to receive visitors. . . . A card came from Sally Lawrence Hopkins just as I was finishing the column. That's fuel for procrastination, both hers and mine. Sally writes, "Our lives continue to be education oriented. Giff is an English professor at Alfred U., I teach French and English at two small schools. Karen is a senior at Carleton; Anne is a sophomore at Yale; Jenny is in fourth grade. We do spend summers in Nova Scotia gardening, cutting wood and enjoying the environment."

In summary I'd say we have some very bright children, we are beginning some new employment fields, and we love to travel. Those of you who have not written — are you settled and satisfied or anxious and angry with your current situation? Please do respond.

If you promise to come to the 30th, I'll divulge some of our questionnaire that 25% answered. 50% have two children and the range is from 0-4. The oldest is 20 and the youngest two. No one has plans for any more — "Surely you jest." We have lived in five cities since our first job and have been married only once (although it is not always indicated if we are still married to that person). On average we have worked for three companies or academic institutions. Most of our weight has stayed about the same. In the aggregate of our beautiful bods, we are only up 20 lbs. collectively, but we agree that weighing the same as in 1959 does not by a long shot mean the weight is distributed in the same way. No consensus on the most popular song of 1959, but "Heartbreak Hotel," "Bee Bop a Loola - She's My Baby," "Love Letters in the Sand," "Moments to Remember," "Silhouettes," "Mack the Knife," and "Bye Bye Love" were contenders. Our greatest regrets were related to Careers, Finances, and Geography. 33% are sorry we did not go on to or complete graduate school, or regret our career choice. Most of the rest either regret where we live or that we are not loaded. Some of us had a lot of trouble remembering our commandments but the 7th (thou shalt not commit adultery) had the most votes for deletion. 50% of us have had a serious situation in our immediate family although one has been lucky enough to escape with only a son's athlete's foot.

In the past five presidential elections our candidates won twice. Since 1959 we have admired JFK most and Reagan next, disliked Nixon by far, with Carter and Johnson tied for second. On a scale of 1-10, most felt that a four represented how significant more income would be. One respondent added an 11. Those who answered 10 have "kids going to college and all appliances giving off death rattles." A majority do not drink too much, the rest do on occasion and one "never drinks enough." Two-thirds of us do not smoke. Half of the rest have tried unsuccessfully to quit. Although none use illegal drugs, a third have tried. We really don't trust our car to Mr. Goodwrench. One can't even trust her husband to Mrs. Goodwrench. We are as happy with our homes as with our marriages, although one who rated marriage at 10 today, rated it at 1 last night.

Some advice to children on what major decision we made to avoid "Not marrying for love or money," "Choosing a college to be near a boyfriend," "Going to a junior college," "Ceasing career upon marriage," "Avoiding decisions," and "Having teenagers."

Nuclear war is the most important issue confronting us today. In second place are the environment and nuclear waste disposal problems, followed by overpopulation, overtaxation, communist political expansion, terrorism, prole drift, and "Where's the beef?"

Our favorite movies include Dr. Zhivago, A Man for all Seasons, E.T., Magic Flute, Chariots of Fire, and Oh, What a Lovely War. Our handicaps are: High; 15; Not aggressive enough; Pleasing too many people; No entrepreneurial bones in the body; Laziness; Not knowing what I want when I grow up; Talking too much; and Middle age spread.

We all own our own homes although some own us, and some we share with the bank. One-third have a vacation home. "Sigh." Two-thirds of us work at home and typically we contributed 3% of our income to charities each year. "Masterpiece Theatre" is our favorite T.V. show.

College made a great difference to two-thirds of us and especially improved bridge, knitting ability and sex life. Half of us do not speak a second language fluently. Of those that do, we speak French, followed by Italian, Spanish, and Adolescence.

Big Brother is foremost the Government-IRS-FBI, followed by Parents, Husband, Brother, and THEM. We prefer the symphony orchestra to Picasso by two-thirds to one-third (to catch up on sleep for one). Most have two cars, some have 2½ (one just towed in). The Sunset just edges out the Sunrise.

In 1959 half of us would have supported a nuclear freeze movement. Now two-thirds would. In 1960 60% would have voted for Kennedy ("I was brainwashed then"). In 1972 Nixon won over McGovern by the same margin. 95% would go to a psychiatrist if we felt he/she could help. 33% have seen one in the last 5 years.

Our expectations in 1959 have turned out to be reality for one-quarter of us, exceeded for one-quarter, and disappointing in marriage finances, location, or career for one-quarter. The others had no specific ideas for their future. 60% are not considering any career change in the next five years, 40% are. Changes contemplated are from Part time to full time work, Voluntarism to business, Housewife to paid work, Counseling to family meditation, Consulting to torch singing, and What I do to anything else. Why or why not are we doing what we thought we would be?

"Abbot didn't have foresight to see women working and raising family at the same time."

"Always knew I would be a wife and mother of a lot of kids."

"Thought I would have to work—Never thought I would be in a well-to-do community where women still play roll of mother, wife, housewife, volunteer."

"Didn't consider marriage."

"Never knew where I was headed."

"Don't remember thinking."

Please let me know what the rest of you are doing, thinking, planning, etc., and we can round out this profile a little more.

One of the interesting aspects of the year-in-advance, pre-25th Reunion skirmishing is the collective headline effort to be positioned correctly for relative (or lack of) responsibility for the Event. Please volunteer soon, for whatever assignments/responsibilities most strike your fancy. Contact Denis Tippo at the School, me, or anyone, but volunteer. Creativity and imagination in presenting pithy negatives has thus far demonstrated the true genius of The Class. Whit Foster writes that he arrived in Washington last September for a 2-year assignment at the World Bank, after seventeen years working in a number of West (Nigeria, Ghana), North (Morocco, Tunisia), and East African (Sudan-southern half) and Middle Eastern (Egypt, democratic Yemen) countries. "Wrestling with the realities of the southern Sudan over the most recent 2½, and now living in Reagan's Washington makes for some rather painful perspectives; nice, however, in many ways to be here. Would love to have a few sessions with Scotty Royce."

An interesting post card from one Peter Liberman, Andover '80, recently arrived in response to a relatively recent call for news of the missing-in-action, this in relation to Jeff Putnam. The card is too long and exotic to quote in full, but the gist is that Mr. Liberman came upon Jeff in a downtown deli in Portland, Oregon, during the purchase by Jeff of a quart of cheap beer and the theft of a slab of brie. Apparently the author of the card, who appears to be a latent novelist/humorist, contributed $1.00 to Jeff's cause in return for a Putnam life history which includes "falling from PA's grace shortly before graduation," wandering through Europe as a street singer, novel-writing, the pursuit of "a woman and their infant," and the longing for a return to Barcelona, Spain. The story has a fanciful ring, and frequent references to Dr. Ed Quattlebaum, the author's erstwhile history teacher at PA, did not add to the story's credibility.

The front page of the September 6th edition of The Wall Street Journal contains stories, direct and indirect, about two of the Class's higher-profile members. Brad Reynolds, whose picture appears in sketch form on the front page of that Journal edition and who is Assistant Attorney General in Reagan's Justice Department, is described among other things as a potential successor to the current U. S. Solicitor General; the article on Brad states, among other things, that "Mr. Reynolds's champions (including Attorney General candidate Ed Meese) believe he could have a profound impact on the decisions of a Supreme Court that seems more conservative and increasingly willing to question precedent." A separate article on the same page of the Journal features the leader of Lazard Freres & Co., a leading New York investment banking house, whose 37 partners "far outclass those of its rivals" in per capita earnings; although not specifically mentioned by name, Woody Woods is one of Lazard's partners and one of the (and our) big hitters.

Fritz Dulles has been living in Blonay, Switzerland, since February 1983, with his wife, Martine and daughter Emilie, 3, in "an old chalet with a magnificent view overlooking the Alps and the Lake of Geneva." Fritz works in Lausanne at the Regional Headquarters of Philip Morris as Legal Director for a region covering all of Scandinavia, Eastern Europe, the Middle East, Africa, and Switzerland.

A news release from Wichita, Kansas, relates that Craig Hesser has been named manager of the Wichita, Kansas refinery of Derby Refining Company, a subsidiary of The Coastal Corporation, Houston. Craig received his BS in chemical engineering at the University of Kansas and MBA at Pepperdine University, and previously worked at Coastal Corp. operations at Hercules, California, and Antwerp, Belgium.

Bill Sherman (San Francisco) and Mike Scharf (New York) are members of Andover's Alumni Council. Bill is as well an officer of Andover West, the non profit Andover support group in northern California.

Plan your schedules for the Reunion next 7-9 June.

A very few notes, therefore, a very short column. Summer is still lingering in the Queen City of the Plains and I wish it would continue to linger until next July.

A note about Jim Knowles indicates that he is working as an artist and is living in Stamford. Les Stroh sent a post card from Peking in which he praised Dennis Cross and Jim Durston for such outstanding efficiency that Les was forced to flee to the Forbidden City. Fred Gass reports that his wife, Margery, is the first female OB/GYN of the staff of the University of Cincinnati Medical College. They are expecting their second child this summer. Fred teaches math at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. Erik Hanson reports the birth of a new son. You see, it's never too late! It is great to have a note from Don Davis. Don lives in Waco, Texas with his wife, who teaches Latin at Baylor, and four children. I would really like to know more about you Don, and would appreciate hearing from you.

As advertised, there is not much to report on for this issue. I am in the process of attempting to pirate an entry for the New York Marathon which will be run on 28 October 1984. If I get in I will let you know how I did. Best wishes to you all for a healthy and happy holiday season.

For some people January marks the beginning of a new year. For me a new year always seems to begin in September. I have made another bold leap this summer — resigning my position at Harvard and moving to Maine to be with the man I have long adored. It's quite a love story — details provided only if you come to our 25th Reunion! David is a Maine thoroughbred and currently the director of the Marine Advisory Program at the University of Maine. He has a doctorate in education and used to be a lobsterman. It has been quite a zoo, being now a family of six — with four children ages 11, 13, 13, and 14! Step-parenting is a new ball game — fun and challenging. The key is to be a parent to your own children and a friend to your step-children. At present I am unpacking endless boxes, looking for a part time job, and launching into a program at the University of Maine in health education. This makes now my fifth career, I think! I have extended my term for a third year as Co-Chairman of Class Reunions at Andover and look forward to "training" more reunion chairmen for the 1985 reunions.

Many changes seem to be occurring in the life of Eileen Keegan Pakstis as well who reports that she is moving from Amherst to Andover, only a few blocks from PA. "This is a time of great stress and upheaval," she writes. "I'm leaving my social work supervisory position at Bay State Medical Center and am searching for a position in Boston." Good luck, Eileen!

Sybil Smith Smith has been elected to a two-year position as trustee of Phillips Academy. A position of great honor and opportunity.

Once the dust settles here, I will be sending requests for more news from you before the next Bulletin deadline in January. Make a note of my new address at the beginning of this column.

If a few of the following items seem to their subjects to have the musty aroma of age about them, there is an explanation: they were recently rediscovered during the excavation of a couple of unopened packing boxes believed to be left over from a household move circa early 1983. Some, however, are as fresh as this past summer's mail.

Cappy Peters casts his vote for love the second time around. He's remarried to a lovely ICU nurse and says Gayle couldn't make him happier. They're in Williamsport, PA, where Cappy runs an emergency room and is putting down roots "at last."

Another headmaster in our class is Dave Quattrone, who runs Greenwich High School. With 2,200 students, it's the largest in Connecticut and recognized as one of the outstanding public high schools in the country. (As reported previously, George Andrews has become headmaster at St. George's in Newport, R.I.) Wonder what his school nickname is?

Living up to the time-honored IBM cliché, "I've Been Moved," Bill Gardner writes that they've moved him not only from New York to Minnesota but from marketing to finance. He loves the land of 10,000 lakes and says his canoe racing has improved a lot. He has two daughters, Katie, 7, and Vickie, 3, who are both "blonde, skinny, and tall." Sound like Bill's all right.

Ivan Higgins spent a wonderful evening in the Lima, Peru home of Tino Heredia in February 1983. Ivan was in Peru on medical business: introducing (knee) arthroscopy to that country. John "By" Bishop is living in Savannah, GA, where he's married and sales manager for a John Deere Industrial equipment dealership.

Ned Grew, certainly one of the better travelled members of the class, has been in Bochum, West Germany for a year on a Humboldt Fellowship working on the petrology of high-grade metamorphic rocks. Chris and Jan Nelson had their second child, Margo, possibly over two years ago (this is one of the items a bit yellow about the edges!).

Peter Ferrara has left ABC Television to start his own company producing commercials. The name: Windsor Castle. "No, I haven't become a raving Anglophile," he explains. It's just that his house is on Windsor, and the nearest cross street is Castle. In any event, he's doing "all NBC Radio promotion; business is good, what's not to like?"

Dallas will shortly be home to another illustrious member of the Class of '62. George Budd is working here now with CRS Sirmine, an architectural and interior design firm. But his mortgage is still in Houston, so George goes south again each weekend until that situation can be rectified.

George Works, another local, has informally assumed the office of Conscience to the Class Secretary, the principal duties of which position seem to be to berate, humiliate, and otherwise annoy the Class Secretary when an issue of the Bulletin arrives with an empty spot where the "'62 Phillips" column should be. Classmates, one among you has shared your anguish and taken up the cause. You now have a voice in high places! So, from now on when I miss a deadline, you'll know George is lying down on the job.

I heard from Bonnie Blake Colman, via the Alumni Office, for the first time in eons. Bonnie was divorced in 1977 and lived in Washington, DC with her daughter Kelsey (13) and son Bill (10). Bonnie managed a bookstore, was very involved with GOP politics, and started study at Corcoran School of Art. In 1982 she married Tom Colman and moved to Winter Park, Florida. Bonnie is now painting seriously, "finally."

Gretchen Whitehead Maynard, husband Rod, daughters Jane (11) and Hope (6) and son Roger (8) left for England on 1 August for a five month sabbatical. The children will go to school there, Rod will take courses at the University of Exeter and Gretchen will have some R and R.

Linda "Foxy" Swanberg Musser writes that she is "Thriving in NYC still and studying classical guitar still." She is also teaching music to pre-schoolers part-time. The Mussers, like us, "have left Mystic, but not in spirit." The Mussers built a house on a hill on Fishers Island, so they can still see Mystic.

The big event in my life this fall is that my youngest is off to kindergarten. Keep in touch.

Stanley Neill works with his father in the textile business as a wool merchant. When not so engaged, his real work seems to be coaching the Winchester (Mass.) High School wrestling team. They just completed their best season ever (15-1) en route to winning the championship. Coach Neill also serves as treasurer of the state coaches association.

John Bilheimer, lawyer, reports that he is involved in "the most fascinating and complex case of my career: representing the Little Rock School District, which is suing a plaintiff to desegregate its schools and those of two adjoining school districts by consolidating all three districts into one." The similarity of this communities' reactions to events there in 1957 has not escaped John. Early victories in the courts have done little to change local attitudes, he reports.

Still farming in Middlebury, raising dairy heifers and animal feed, Charles Lakin writes short (but frequent) up-dates. John Foster and family are in Virginia; his wife's fellowship spurred the two-year move. John continues research on comparative literature while teaching at George Mason University in the DC suburbs.

Richard White has assumed the position of Vice President and General Counsel at the Community National Bank. He also serves as President of the North County Hospital board of trustees in Newport, Vermont. His children are now 13 and 11 years old.

Joe Belforti writes of being a "missing link." But, missing links don't write. "A preppie at heart," Joe writes that he would like to hear from classmates (143 Mill Street, #306E, Natick, MA 01760). So would I.

Hope your holidays are filled with pleasant family time and good health.

It's back to school time, and how appropriate to sit down and gather news from old schoolmates after a glorious summer. From those I've heard, summer 1984 was indeed a good one.

Mimi Dean McBride filled me in on Abbot rabbits she's seen recently on the East Coast. She reports that Carolyn Holcombe Damp had a very active summer on the roads of old New England for visits and vacations with short stops at home in Milton where son Zander took in soccer camp. Mimi finished their kitchen remodel and then transported her family to Cohasset for six weeks. While there, she ran into Jackie Sutton Cleverly at Talbots where Jackie works part-time. Turns out Jackie's oldest daughter is off to boarding school in the fall! Now back in Washington, Mimi contemplates what life will be like with both Webster (age 7) and Morley (age 5) in school for the first time.

Mimi also reported that Karla Haartz Cortelyou hosted a lovely day for several Abbot '63 families at Evans Farm Inn, where her husband is farm manager. Mimi, Meg Power, Karla, spouses and progeny shared a delicious picnic and swim. Meg is expecting her second child in October. Missing from the group was Washingtonian Suzanne Burton. SueB probably was up to her ears finishing work on the new National Geographic building which was dedicated in June. Since then SueB and a friend have completed work on his house called Pigeon Hill Farm in Virginia. They have spent weekends for several years redoing it, and now plan a grand housewarming this fall.

I received several letters, one from Jackie Van Aubl Janssens just prior to her departure from the States. She and her family combined her brother's wedding in Seattle with a tour of northern California, Oregon, Washington and then New England. I talked with her briefly as she passed through Portland. She also called Jan Gleason Perry while in Seattle and reports Jan is alive and well. On her way to Vermont, she spent a day with Barbara Hoffman Bearsley. She toured Barbara's "very impressive" art conservation laboratory, met her three "most lovely" daughters, and enjoyed a good visit and delicious dinner in an attractive restaurant. It was a good trip and Jackie looks forward to a return visit.

Margie Brown Coakley wrote in June with news of an impending move in August to New Jersey. She and John decided to leave the church and the ministry temporarily, and John will teach Church history at New Brunswick seminary. Margie's first order of business was to find housing and schools for pre-schooler John and kindergarten Mary, and then figure out what she'll be doing next.

As for the Knolls, we had a wonderful summer. Our month-long car camping expedition with friends (four adults, four children) from Portland thru Canada to the Midwest and back surpassed all expectations. Wonderful weather, magnificent scenery, with mosquitos the only detracting element, we're ready to go again. Now back at work with Julie (4th grade) and Jessica (1st grade) in school, I wonder if it was a figment of my imagination!

Here's wishing you a golden Indian summer, as golden as the leaves of the huge old maple outside my window at Draper.

Is this the column of the Bulletin you always turn to first? Are you disappointed to see how short it is this edition? Does this mean another three months without seeing your name in print? Fear not, a solution is readily available. See the address atop this column? Just send me some news (a postcard will do), and I assure you your exploits will be in the next issue.

Sorry to sound like a parent, but everyone must have had a very busy summer. I look forward to all your news.

It's not too early to begin thinking about our 20th Reunion next June. The dates are 7-9 June, and I hope many of you can make it.

Now for the news: Pete Perault has returned to Chapel Hill with wife, Nancy, Matthew, 4, and Julie, 1, where he practices psychiatry, teaches at Duke and pursues psychoanalytic training.

Vaho Rebassoo was scheduled to go sailing with Greg Richards in the Canadian Gulf Islands.

Bob Ehrhart, wife Rica and four year old son Peter are living in Landstuhl, Germany where Bob is a Rheumatologist at the army medical center. Kelly Stelle has received a tenured lectureship at the Imperial College in London but is taking leave to teach theoretical physics in Santa Barbara this fall. Rick Pieters is back in Boston doing his residency in radiation oncology at the New England Medical Center while his wife is attending the Boston University School of Medicine. Jim Munroe has become the Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in Northampton, MA.

Greetings friends! Since my last news report, have made my annual pilgrimage to Massachusetts, where I saw Nancy Porosky Harris and spoke with Jill Singer Schoonmaker. Nancy and I spent a wonderful day picnicking and swimming at Crane's Beach in Ipswich. How many of you remember our annual outings to Crane's Beach the first Saturday of the school year followed by the ever popular (?) Abbot-Andover mixer? I'll certainly never forget my first Crane's Beach outing when Marilyn Hadley and I each picked a beautiful bouquet of poison ivy and paid for our mistake for weeks!

In talking with Jill and her husband, Bill, I learned that she gave birth to a son, Jesse Asher, on 26 April 1984. Jesse arrived a bit early (about three months!), but he's now doing just fine. Jill and Bill also have a six-year-old daughter, Emily.

Heading West, Sarah Beale Yancy's parents cooperated in providing news of their daughter. Sarah is now the Director of Annual Support at Hobart-William Smith College in Geneva, NY. I imagine that Beales are thoroughly proud of their daughter's achievements.

Finally, Pamela Jones sent news from Redondo Beach, CA, where she and her husband, Ed Hahn, live just six blocks from the ocean. Pamela received an MBA from UCLA in 1983, and she is now working for Data General Corp., selling computer systems to major accounts such as Northrop and Xerox.

That's all the news for this time around. Please continue to keep us up-to-date on your comings and goings.

I thank God, who, despite what Mondale and Reagan say, obviously is a John Anderson Republican supporting Mondale, that at least one of my PA classmates is compassionate. Noting that I have little to report in the Alumni News, Rich Devereux wrote, "I'd hate to see you end up like Gordy Baird — trying to conjure up what never comes in the mail." So Rick graciously provided information that he called "filler" but that I find remarkable. He described how his path had crossed Bing Chang's so often since they lived in adjacent rooms in Will Hall. Both went to Harvard, and they married close friends from Smith. Two years ago, Bing and his wife moved to Chicago, but that was hardly the end of the similar paths. Their wives simultaneously went into labor at 3 a.m. eastern time on 1 November 1983, and they gave birth within an hour of each other. Rick now has a daughter, Jennifer, and Bing, as previously reported, has a son, Ben. Rick adds that he is living "an idyllic life — working, living and going to school all within several bucolic square miles around Babson College in Wellesley, MA." He is running one of the largest recreational complexes in New England and teaches tennis a few hours a week to keep in shape. Rick, many, many thanks for your wonderful letter. What a role model for the rest of us.

Charlie Liberman also is in the Boston area, working toward his Ph.D. in psychology.

The class is starting to branch out, however. Dwight Olsen, for instance, owns Tip Top Tree, a pruning company in Minneapolis. Bruce Truitt is "doing music" in Austin and has a seven-year-old son. And Kit Rawson, if I can read a somewhat illegible scrawl (not his) correctly, is with the Department of Fish and Game in Anchorage. Moving South to warmer climes, Frank Currie has moved his high-tech securities work from San Francisco's Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro to Wilson, Sonsini, Goodrich & Rosati in Palo Alto, according to the Legal Times of Washington, a newspaper that follows the legal trade. In other California news, Chris Burke has been promoted to president of Trident Energy Systems from vice president for planning and development. The Davis-based company is "pioneering introduction of complete computer controlled residential energy systems," he told Hunt Deming. (Thanks for passing that bit of information along, Hunt.) Hank Goodman is living in Nevada City, CA, teaching math and science at an alternative high school that is part of the local school system. He has been married for five years, adopted two of his wife's children, and he and his wife jointly manufactured a boy, who is four.

In the Frost Belt, Jim Ross recently married, according to informed sources in New Bedford, MA, who were not informed enough to tell me the bride's name. Dave Dunbar's wife, Kem, added a second daughter, Bevan, to their tribe, and their project of moving antebellum homes to Lewes, DE, and fixing them up is working out spectacularly.

Here in the nation's capital, Dan Koch wed Leah Brasch, a doctor, and they'll be spending a year in Seoul on a fellowship Dan won. Dan gained some fame as the only Federal Trade Commission staffer to dissent from a staff recommendation to approve the joint venture of Toyota and General Motors. Not everyone in Washington is experiencing change. Hunt Deming still is with the city counsel's office, I think. Scooter Libby remains at the State Department, sometimes taking off for such places as Wellington, New Zealand, to help with George Shultz's speeches. And I'm still at Business Week, chronicling the troubles of financial institutions such as Continental Illinois and Financial Corporation of America and the pratfalls of people such as John Zaccaro, in addition to supervising a group of five reporters.

If any of you would like to get written up in the best little magazine in Andover, let me know.

The following is the second part of my reunion notes concerning Those-Who-Couldn't-Get-to-Reunion. This is what was said about you:

Ann Aldrich, and family, are living on a farm in the mid-west. Another farming family is that of Sue Gurganus Drackett, who are constantly adding to their sprawling 800 acre farm. She has two boys, 3 and 7 months, and also is busy with a preschool she helped to found. In England, Georganne Mueller Bendall lives in London with her minister husband, and Boo Miller, recently married to Robert Blackwood, sent her new address: "Rose Cottage," 24 Howard Rd., Wokingham, Berks, R611 2BX. Boo wrote that she "would be happy to see any old buddies and have room to put people up."

The NYC Abbots are: Marianne Gerschel, with Lazard Freres, Karen Mugler, artist Jennifer Cecere, and Nancy Bennett who is finishing her residency in internal medicine at Bellevue.

Two other classmates living in the Baltimore area whom I've seen are Betsy Gifford Bedford and Betsy Hoover Sexton. Betsy Gifford, preferring to go by her middle name, Melanie, is an art conservator at the renowned Walters Art Gallery, and is considered brilliant by her colleagues and others in the Baltimore conservatory community. Her lovely red hair is now at chin length and she is stunning. Being relatively newly married also helps. Betsy Hoover and I also see quite a bit of each other, especially since we both have pre-school boys. Betsy's no. 2 son was born at the time of the reunion. She and Carlton are world travelers and have lived in England and New Zealand. Betsy especially would like news of her Stanford roommate, Diane Best. Betsy reports that she is in touch with Shipley School teacher, Margie Lord and Margaret Gay Lavender. Margaret's life seems to be in perpetual motion these days as she commutes from her NJ home to a banking job in NYC, as well as weekend jaunts to Chicago where her husband is currently working.

Jane Titcomb is also in banking as an examiner at the Bank of New England, and Nancy Butterfield Horsley is a supervisor in a Wyoming bank. We extend our sympathies to Nancy whose father died recently. Janice Eklund, who lives in the DC area with her family, and Beth Samel are both account supervisors.

In the medical field, Ellen Junker has the tremendously difficult and admirable job of being a hospice nurse, and there are Doctors Jennifer Van Anda, Leslie Weideman and Delphine Ho. Delphine is an emergency room doctor as well as the mother of two young children. I spoke with Sharmar Santos a couple of years ago, and, at that time, she was a lab technologist at Duke.

Several classmates have continued their involvement in the world of education. Carolyn Cain and Sandy Waugh Winans (mother of a newborn son) are both teachers. Peggy Howes is an adult education director (please send your address, Piglet), Carol Nimick is the Director of the Mariposa School in CA, and Alison Nourse-Miller is the Assistant at the Prince William County School in VA. Former Yale Professor, Susie Cohen, is moving to Boston with her husband and newborn (boy or girl, Susie?) and will be enjoying motherhood for awhile.

In the creative arts, Debbie Marum is a photographer, Nancy Steele is a writer (poetry?) and Jennifer Cecere is an artist.

Supermoms in the class are: Helene Jenkins Tolbert, the mother of four, Kathy Boynton Williams, a mother of three, Janice Wolgethan Hawwa, who just had her second baby, and finally, Katrina Moulton Wolenberg who enjoys taking care of her two young boys. Kat also said, "After two boys, no more, thank you." By the way, Kathy Boynton also remembered our ritual of spring sunbathing "while studying near the lacrosse field and getting poison ivy as a reward."

UNCLASSIFIED: Martha Brummer is the manager of the Woodbound Inn in Jaffrey, NH. Anne Dillard, and husband Martin operate a homemade pasta restaurant in California. Anne Cashin Goldenheim, a psychotherapist, couldn't come to the reunion as she was vacationing at the time . . . in Italy. Attorney Gali Hagel Meares was supposed to be at the reunion, but never made it — we missed you, Hagel! Marilyn Dow Moriarty is a computer programmer with N.E. Mutual Life, and Stephanie Ross is an analyst in the DC area. Mary Steward Owczarek is a bookkeeper in Garland, TX. Sara Grey reports that after graduation, Sally Sykes changed identities and became Sarah Prep, complete with Pappagallos. You'll always be Sally to us, Sarah, no matter how you're dressed!

RUMORS: Joan Faro is a doctor living on Long Island with her second husband. . . . Diana Brainerd is a NYC architect, and that Denver banker, Linda Lacouture, is about to get married.

Whew! Some of this information is probably inaccurate; I don't think that any of it was fabricated. If so, perhaps it will spur you to write to me in order to set the record straight. After writing this, it's hard to believe that there are still thirty classmates about whom we know nothing. If you are one of these thirty, or know of any of them, we would LOVE to hear from you.

I closed the last column with reference to how different the game of football played here was to Chip Boynton's cherished Ivy League brand. Well, it's only fair that I now report further that the Fighting Gators now probably face a 3-year NCAA probation (pro!) for 107 recruiting violations. The coach did an excellent imitation of John Mitchell before being fired, but the fans remain loyal. The latest bumper sticker reads "Florida 107, Miami 0."

I continue to look forward to our 15th reunion this June. Writing the class notes provides one with an appreciation of how fortunate a group we are. We all have college degrees, none of us served in Vietnam, and we're now all yuppies. Serving as an example, there was Charlie Finch being interviewed on TV during the Democratic convention. Charlie was a NY Hart delegate who was defecting to Mondale, and the networks wanted to know why. This was our valedictorian, and he answered that it was because he liked the organization of the Mondale people better! It was as good a reason as the Oklahoma delegate later gave for switching to Hart. He said it was because he had better physiognomy."

I thank many of you for responding to a post card campaign. Ken Beilstein wrote from Hong Kong, where he's in the precious metal recycling business. He travels extensively in Asia. Don Rollings has now been back in Tuscon for 9 years. He and his wife welcomed their first child last year, and Don makes a living in property management and historic preservation. Tom Treadwell has two children and practises medicine at the Framingham Union/Boston City Hospitals. Carl Higbee has joined the corporate finance department at Salomon Brothers in NYC. The Higbee's were recently blessed with a son, Carl IV. Carl writes, "... don't worry, he looks nothing like me."

Out near San Francisco, Grant Heidrich, prominent venture capitalist for early stage, high-tech companies, was married last June to Jeanette Jones. Attending, were Rod Goldstein, Jay Watkins, Kip Sheeline, and Paul Yeuell. Paul enjoys his stage career, and has just joined the acting company at the Denver Center for the Performing Arts. Paul had been acting and directing with ACT in San Francisco. He'll miss the Bay area and his kiyaking outings with Henry Miner and Henry's two children.

John Deming still loves the seasons and outdoors of Grafton, VT. The restoration business is treating John well. Chip Boynton returned still again to his beloved Yale for his 10th reunion, along with Norm Selby and Burr Tweedy. Sounds much like the Harvard game from last time, except that they got to see Vijay Sikand this time.

I even received a very sweet letter from Val Fine's mother. She reports that Val owns a catering business in Carmel, California. It's called The Moveable Feast and does much of Clint Eastwood's catering. Steve Senft is completing graduate studies in neuroscience at Washington U. in St. Louis. This includes making computer graphics of brain slices. "High-tech Frankenstein stuff." Perhaps Mr. Heidrich can arrange some seed money.

Gary Shangold is an assistant professor in Endocrinology and Infertility at the U. of Chicago, after training in NY, Miami, and LA. I was disappointed to learn that Gary hung up his horn with the Penn Marching Band after only one year. He lives in a Northside, 33rd floor lakefront apartment in Chicago. Meanwhile back in Red Oak, Mark Swanson, another Cub fan, is prosecuting drunk drivers as County attorney. He and Owen Hearty have threatened to rat on Mark Kelly, who remains on the "missing" list in the Andover Alumni Office. Congratulations to Kim and Mark Kelly on their baby boy born last July.

Chip Boynton picked up these sketchy stories during an Andover phonathon. ... Luis Crouch is involved in agronomics at UNC. ... John Russo is a LA lawyer. ... Andy Bralley started a medical test equipment company in Atlanta. ... Dave Durant is with the FDA in DC. ... and John Eichner was admitted to the Connecticut Bar.

Thanks for reading. Hope to see you at the reunion. Mr. Swanson says that if Romerio Perkins doesn't show up, he'll charge an Andover Inn feast to him anyway.

Hope summer was a good one for all. Don't have a lot of news for this article but I'll give you what I have. First, Sandy Urie Thorpe is currently heading into her last year at Yale's Management School. As I recall, Sandy is interested in a financial career — more information on that next time.

Chris Steele has apparently changed jobs and is now working in Montclair, New Jersey. Unfortunately, I'm not sure what company but I am assuming she's still in product management. Chris had been at Parker Bros.

Lastly on the job front, Virginia Knapp Wolf was promoted earlier this year to Marketing Manager at Richardson-Vicks. I now have cough drops as well as some of our established cold products. Being the first woman at this level has led to some interesting situations as well as opportunities. On the side, I have invested in a restaurant that just received its third star from the New York Times. For those of you in New York or Connecticut it is called Tapestries and is in Greenwich, Connecticut. I've also invested in my brother's computer business and was happily included in a business presentation in Paris this past spring. Absolutely fell in love with Paris and was only sorry that Prilly Mendenhall had moved back to the states.

In home front news, Marcie Rickenbacker gave birth to David Bowne Pettibone on 29 Feb. (Yes, a leap year baby!) Marcie's very busy with two children, a neighborhood association and the local newcomers club.

Reunion #15 is this June. Please plan to come, Sandy Urie Thorpe, Chris Steel, Stephanie Dantos, and I are organizing it. Any help is greatly appreciated, attendance even more so. See you there! And write!

P.S. Please make a note of my new address at the beginning of this column.

I'd be glad to be an agent for this part of Korea, if there's any need, but I'll only be here till Christmas. In 1985 I will be in Germany and I don't know exactly where yet: Cpt. Wesley P. Forystek.

Have moved on to San Francisco from Minneapolis. Now doing a tumor immunology fellowship at UCSF. Hoping to get calls and visits from old PA friends who want a cheap room at the "Miller Hotel." : Langdon Miller. M.B.A., University of Minnesota, June 1982.

A.S.F. (American Scandinavian Foundation) exchange student in Sweden, July '82 — September '82. Worked for LUNA AB in Alingsos. Since December, 1983, Systems Analyst, Corporate MIS, Medtronic, Inc.: Christopher L. Bretoi.

On 10 June, 1984 Jeff Moulton became a father for the third time to a daughter, Lauren Anne. He has two sons, ages 3 and 5, not to mention his wife, Kate. All live in Denver: William Boak.

Barry Cronin, wife Laurie and son McNeil, Clayton Bond and wife Shirley and Scott Thompson (me), wife Roberta and son Kevin got together this last June on the North Side of Chicago (where we all reside) for a cookout and some fierce "old-timer" tennis. Barry is a sales manager for Richardson Electronics, Clayton is a sales representative for Toshiba and I am a sales representative for Picker International. Barry and Laurie had their second child in the fall of '83, Roberta and I are expecting #2 in mid-May: Scott M. Thompson.

My wife, Debbie, my two sons, Colin, 3, and Evan, 1, and myself are living in Valdosta, GA where I am practicing as a flight surgeon in the USAF. The Air Force paid my way through med school (at Jefferson in Philadelphia) and I'm currently two years into my four year commitment. As the physician for a squadron, I get frequently in the back seat of an F-4 fighter. It's great! But what am I going to do when I grow up? Need suggestions: Victor Crosby.

Still working in financial analysis at Bank of America. My wife, Zulay, and I are expecting our first child at the end of February '84: Lewis V. Howes.

I'm still working at the Pentagon. Recently elected President of my Condominium Association — lots of work: Robert Soule.

I am newly married to Connie Forchheimer Heller as of 27 November '83. We moved to a new co-op in Manhattan. A coincidence is that my wife works with Rich Berry at Towers, Perrin Foster and Crosby in NYC. I run my own marketing firm in midtown and have recently started a micro-computer consulting practice as an off-shoot. As always, I look forward to hearing from classmates who pass through the Big Apple: Mark Heller.

Have recently started new job with a generic engineering firm called Synergen, Inc. here in Boulder. The company should go public soon, so hope everybody buys some stock. Work is going well and I really enjoy Colorado. Some things never change: went to a hockey game in Denver (the Flames of the CHL) and who was playing but Dan Bolduc. He is star of the team as usual: George M. Cox III.

(Nuff said? I am dying, Egypt/dying, but hell, the rest is silence and whenever a bell rings, it means another angel just earned his wings.)

What has two million acres under management and a goal of protecting endangered species of plants and animals and preserving threatened eco-systems? The Nature Conservancy.

And what method has become one of the major ways such organizations are able to accomplish their goals? Direct mail — a device used to fund-raise, to increase awareness and to stimulate action.

And who is in charge of the Nature Conservancy's Direct Mail program? Why it's our own Nancy MacKinnon AA '72, Brown '76, squash player par excellence. Married in April 1983 to fellow direct mail junkie Fred Vallejo (who works in the political arena for liberal candidates), Nancy and Fred can be found at their new home in Bethesda, Maryland (301-229-3886) or at work in Arlington, Virginia.

So while those two deal with political causes in the continental United States, Sarah Richardson and her husband have returned stateside after spending several years in Japan where they taught English. Sarah, who joined the Peace Corp upon graduation from Bowdoin and was stationed in the Congo (or thereabouts), keeps building on her interest in world affairs. She and her husband are now enrolled in the master's program at the School for International Management in Glendale, Arizona.

Back in the Northeast, Dr. Annelisa Addante (doesn't that sound great?) has joined her father Dr. Joseph Addante and his associate Dr. Mary Chin in the practice of podiatric medicine and surgery in Fitchburg, MA. Annelisa says she's just beginning to feel as if she's joined the world again after numerous years of schooling (Holy Cross and New York College of Podiatric Medicine) and residency (Philadelphia and New York).

Annelisa reminds me that Dini Price Votta is a HUD lawyer in Boston who makes her home in nearby Sharon. Joy Beane Brieant is lawyering too. Only she commutes to the Federal District Court in Brooklyn. More important, she won four ribbons in a recent horse show: one blue, one red and two white. All of which she presented to our four-year-old daughter, Anna, winning her heart forever.

The mason begins work on the foundation to Joy and husband Charlie's dream house this week. If they're lucky, by the time you read this column the house in the woods of Ossining may be near built.

Angie Deitrick Wesel has a new baby. Her second son is to be christened James Matthews. Baby Matt, as he is to be called, joins his brother Kenny, 5, in helping his parents run an antique store (with warehouse and refinishing operation).

Carlotta Kip, who after Macalester College spent several years working in advertising agencies, has given up the Madison Avenue life to do "good works." Following two years of training at New York's Columbia Presbyterian Hospital occupational therapy program, Carlotta now works at Otteley House in Queens — a residential hospital for young, disturbed individuals. When not absorbed with her job Carlotta can be found at her Manhattan apartment.

Rumor has it that Lydia Eccles once known to be renovating buildings in Maryland has relocated to Newport, Rhode Island nearer her Brown alma mater. Whether she's still there is unknown. And word of Caitlin Cofer '74, yet another Brown alumnae, is that she got married last October, bought a house and works for AT&T.

Meanwhile my business can best be described by reading the book Life and Death on the Corporate Battlefield, as I continue working in the new business development world. Most fun for me has been an increasing involvement in environmental conservation. I was appointed chairman of our local conservation board and have been working on several regional open space planning and en. con. projects, as well as working on the master plan of the environmental education center of which I am a trustee. Ask me how there are enough hours in the day. I reply, there aren't. But I guess that's what makes it all the more challenging. Until next season folks . . .

Friends and Lost Ones:

When last I wrote, I was perched on the verge of the matrimonial stoop and about to knock on the door of Dexter T. Bliss Publicus Landus. I am happy to report that Betsy and I made it over the stoop, across the altar, through the champagne and over to Nantucket for a brief soiree. We left behind at the marital home Jim Hackett, last seen sleeping on our couch scantily clad and alone; Will Schutte, mummified in our only guest bed (also alone, but clothed); Dale Robbins '77 (life of the party and satyric extraordinaire) and others too numerous or embarrassed to mention.

Summer has flown, as have other Andoverites over the threshold. Most recently (9/8/84) Dave Donahue succumbed to Sue Pitt Donahue before the eyes of Brooks Roscoe (usher and inventor of saleable ideas), Jim Hackett (whose ventures in real estate limited his observations of Dave to "looking like a million bucks"), Dave Swanson (who sent me a campaign contribution with a scrawled note on stationery from the "Chumalee Comfortel" someplace in Nebraska), John McDonald (with wife Melissa, one child in tow and one more coming), Steve Rooney and wife, Sue (who smartly dumped their child on a nearby "friend"), Boris Bukawyn and his meaningful associate (Asst. Gen Counsel at E.F. Hutton — listen!), Tish, and a raft of others (I'm told it really was a wet one). I, unfortunately, had to spend the afternoon at the annual Cotuit Volunteer Firemen's picnic and the Irish Club of Cape Cod's annual chicken barbecue.

To make the matter worse, I had to do this alone, since Betsy flew off to Amherst, NH to attend the wedding of Martha Martin '76 to Alan Sherther. All who attended the '73 graduation party remember that location, but this time, Betsy reports, the crowd was a bit more subdued (at least Brooks wasn't wandering around barefoot all night!). Josie Martin, maid of honor, came up from DC, appropriately adorned in pink taffeta; Dale Robbins '77 (Betsy's roommate), Anne T. Pettus '76 and others. Reports are that Nancy Griffin got lost somewhere between Iowa and New Hampshire.

Late-breaking report: Dave Harsch is about to move into a house down the road (there goes the neighborhood) as he begins a new career in the real estate sales business (Century 21 — two split the commission, Dave).

Most distant message comes from Geert Geisterfer, who says he's having a great time in Santiago, Chile, "despite . . . the limits of dictatorship." Apparently so, as he's run half a corporate bank there three years following two years in Paraguay (mis-spelled by him "Purgatory." Hope they don't censor the mail!).

I got a cryptic note from Brice MacCrellish, who's in Belmont. Wouldn't tell me what he's up to, didn't return my calls; no matter, though, he also helped the campaign!

Gene Dallago wants to be ambassador to Peru someday, but will settle for now working a gold mine in California and aiming for San Francisco. Gene, tell all those dead-beats out there to write!

Dana Graichen says he's finishing residency at Dartmouth, getting married and joined the Air Force as a "flight surgeon." No circumcisions, I hope. Claims he'll have an honest job by the 15th that instills in me no faith in the USAF.

Will Schutte (still in radio in New York City) writes that Michael Pierce's paintings were recently exhibited at the Pyramid Club in New York. Will came down twice this summer, once for my wedding and once to play golf with lady's clubs.

Tong Soo Chung brought his first child into being May '83 and graduated from UCLA law school one year later with a choice of firms to enter.

Brooks Bloomfield, still eschewing a legitimate vocation, spent March windsurfing to Baja, CA from Utah (?)! By now, he is a teacher of what we don't know. . . . Doug Mavor designs and builds passive solar houses in big Sur country while his wife runs a health food co-op. What a life. . . . Peter Fernberger just returned from Australia to New York City with light pockets and insists on Jocko MacNelly '72 calling him (212/260-8176). . . . Ray Stecker tried to lose Peter Bensley '71 in Vail's back bowls, and got lost himself, not before reporting Tom Bohanon is a vet in nearby Englewood. . . . Colter Mott is a partner in a real estate investment firm in Seattle, WA, and his wife, Steffanie, owns and runs the Montessori School.

Nicholas Bircher is an anesthesiologist at the Bethesda Naval Hospital, and seems to want to practice resuscitation on all PA grads at NIH. . . . Bill Boeschstein summoned his lovely wife, Janet, to do what he has failed to do for over a year. She reports the existence of "Boesch III," a 10 lb. 5 oz. brute who will do to Exeter what Boesch failed to do for four years. She reports Dave Chase and Debbie recently added Daniel Webster Chase to the class of 2002! And Alan and Gail Senior, too. That'll be some football team in 2002! Boesch claims to be the best diaperman in the whole class. Some things never change — just don't put tequila in the baby bottle, Boesch! . . . Remember Nuke McLaughlin? He sent the note of notes asking me if anyone has seen him. He's feeling warm, and wants to know "is it safe?" For whom, Mike? You, or us?

A letter arrived today from Charlie Toy, Hong Kong attorney. He's glad there are finally some class notes to give him some contact with the Western world. He recently wed Sandra Youla, a Wellesley and University of Penn grad, left New York and headed for the Orient to help people invest in the Republic of China. Anyone in Hong Kong is invited to look them up. He wants to find Randy Gross.

Finally, I am informed by the PA news clipping service that I am running for office. Now that's confidence from my fellow PA alumni! Keep it up! You're getting better!

It's been over a year since my last contribution to the Bulletin. . . . But, Peter Morin's wild and witty column last summer, along with my own guilt inspired me to get off my "duff" . . . Sorry for the delay! (Congratulations on your wedding, Peter!)

A party for Megan Schutte '72 given by brother Will '73 was a hot source for NYC news. Megan, who is in real estate in San Francisco, came to NYC before beginning a two week cruise to Canada on the Royal Viking Scott. (She plans to visit K. T. Nourse '72 on one of the ships' stopovers in Boston!) Megan reports that Gene Dallago '73 is getting married soon and is moving to San Francisco to open a bridal business.

Also in attendance at Will's soiree was Matt Barry '73 who has moved to NYC from Atlanta and is working on Wall Street for Smith Barney. . . . (I guess he earned it!). Ironically, Matt is subletting his apartment from Mary Lo White, a 1940's Abbot graduate. He applied for the apartment and when she found out he was a clean-living PA guy . . . that was recommendation enough! (Little does she know!) Mike Pierce '73 was there too, and is enjoying his architectural work at Red Roof Designs. Will, our hospitable host, has been an east coaster for two years and sells advertising for a large radio conglomerate. He likes his work but misses the girls and sports of California. You can't ski down 5th Avenue . . . although fearless Will has tried!

NYC is a great place for bumping into alumni. Fellow thespians Peter Kapetan and Dana Delaney (both of '74) are busy in show biz. Dana has done several TV movies, and commercials while Peter dances on B-way, at the Rainbow Room etc. . . . I saw Ned Johnson '73 about a year ago. He was planning to move to NYC and contrive his work as a film maker. Chad Nehrt '73 plays volleyball with one of my Search For Tomorrow castmates, so he called to bring me up to date on his news. He works for Philip Morris International. His job allows him some opportunities for travel, but not as much as he'd like. He attended Alan Louie's ('73) wedding as did Brad Buchbinder '73 and Ned Jackson '73. Alan is a psychiatrist, lives in San Francisco and met his wife when they were "cadaver partners" in medical school. (It sure beats a singles bar!)

I did an extensive "plea-for-news" mailing in August and I'd like to thank everyone who took the time to answer! (Many of my cards were returned "address unknown," so if you know the whereabouts of any '73ers please let me or the Alumni Office know.

Lori Goodman is pleased to announce that after four years of non-wedded bliss with Larry Seegers they will finally make it legal with a December wedding. Larry is a jewelry designer and Lori practices corporate law with Anderson, Russell, Kill & Ollick. Lori spent part of her summer vacation with Buzzy Rollins in York Harbor, Maine. Buzzy is doing well as a consultant at Polaroid in Boston.

Margo Laskowski Michel is divorced and working as an EDP auditor for the Stop & Shop Companies in Quincy, MA. She reports that Hollis Conner Gabriel and hubby, Henry, are expecting their first child this fall. Abbie Owen Read is in her third year of teaching art at Concord Academy. She also does some coaching and runs a dorm with her husband. Charlotte Hamlin Wilson is in the graduate program at BU, studying nursing. She and Dave are living on a houseboat in South Dartmouth and love it. Dave just got a new job . . . he went from computers to growing alfalfa and bean sprouts in S. E. Mass. Back to nature, "Chuck!" Lisah Keller is director of health services at Kimball Union Academy in Meriden, NH. She's also doing graduate work at Dartmouth in environmental studies. She sees quite a bit of Cathy Von Klemperer who lives in Cambridge and works for a Harvard publication. Ellen Hoitsma Schelberg and Charlie are expecting their second child in February. She's busy with son Matthew, age two, and is doing some writing in her spare time. She says that Bets Kent has just moved to NYC and has a new job as an industrial analyst.

Vicki Wood was married last spring to long-time boyfriend Blake De Boest. She's happy buying "premiums" for Frankal & Co. in Chicago and looking for a bigger apartment. Genny Dodd Barhaugh and her husband live in Terry, Montana. She teaches 11th grade English, 9th grade science, and is the elementary librarian. Her husband teaches math and although they don't have any children yet, they have a mini-zoo: two cats, one black lab and all the classroom animals!

I finally heard from Mary Webb . . . whose last name is Lanman. She married Charles Lanman on 29 October (anniversary of the stockmarket crash) 1983. She's thrilled with her new life. She's working for an investment advisory firm and she and Charlie spend most free time at their land in the Shenandoah Valley clearing trees and planning a weekend retreat home. Since you live in DC, Mary, do you ever see Josie Martin or Kate Tomlinson? Tell them to write me!

My news hasn't changed much since the last column. I'm still on Search for Tomorrow, and celebrated my sixth anniversary as Sunny Adamson on the show in September. I finished fixing up my co-op and am planning to marry Chris Goutman. We met working together on Search and have been a duo for 5½ years. He's also an actor, but for the past year has been directing Another World. In short our life is a soap opera, but we love it.

1984-85 will find most of us celebrating our 30th birthdays. It's not the age that's frightening just the speed with which the years have flown by.

So . . . happy 30th, one and all. We're not getting older, we're getting better! (And hopefully more mature!) Please keep in touch.

P.S. After completing the column I received several cards that are definitely newsworthy. Amy Rogers wrote me right after attending Dave Donahue's ('73) wedding. Lots of Andoverites were there and a good time was had by all. Amy lives on Beacon Hill and works as a news editor for a business magazine called Purchasing. She also does some free-lance writing when time permits. She sees Laurie Woodworth and Susan Macartney from time to time. Both are fine and enjoying "motherly" life. Meanwhile her cousin Marty Rogers Scully '72 is due to become a "mom" in December and is ecstatic about it.

Sara Leith was married on 15 September. Her husband is a doctor and Sara works at the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. Also on the West Coast is Edie Wilson Pope . . . although Edie's been traveling so much lately, she's rarely there. She spent six months last year in Malaysia and Europe on business. She works as a project manager in research and development for Hewlett-Packard. Sounds like a fabulous job, Edie.

Bets Kent did indeed move to NYC. She is a securities analyst for Hambrecht and Quist and is enjoying the transition from "sleepy" Princeton to a more jazzy city environment. Welcome to "The Big Apple," Bets!

That All Folks!

Editor's note: Please note that your new Class Secretary is Jack Gray. He would welcome news from classmates to help him in the writing of this column. Please send your news to him at the above address.

Reunion Notes — prepared by Jack Gray assisted by Sara Nelson, George Ireland and Nina Rutenburg.

Friday was spent trying to flee work early and beat the crowds at the airports and on the freeways, the first impression, at least to those of us who hadn't been there for a while, was of the place itself. Very quickly the profusion of faces took center stage as we began the first of many parties. The class of 1974 is trading in everything from Government bonds to tarot cards. Our classmates are practicing law, medicine, and their lines for Broadway shows. Such diversity made for a very interesting weekend. Two of the more current bits of news: David Zelon is on the U.S. Olympic committee organizing the marathon (he says he got his start promoting sporting events with the now legendary Chris Doherty-Joe Malone boxing match at PA).

Meanwhile, in New York, Nina Rutenburg, after finishing her masters in art history has joined the staff at the Metropolitan Museum for the summer. Sara Knowles made the trip from Portland, Oregon. Between the reunion and Nantucket she apparently enjoyed the best of preppydom. Roemer McPhee, who came with his wife, Connie, either found some kind of growth elixir or spent the last ten years on a rack in Iran. He's six feet if he an inch! George Ireland, minus the whistle and clipboard, was, nevertheless, one of the weekend's guiding lights; he's a miner in NYC these days. Jack Herbert is a lawyer there and Faith Barnes has subtlet her midtown co-op as she was on her way to visit China. Faith starts N.Y.U.'s Business School this fall.

Scott McIsaac has finished his MBA and, I'm happy to report, is no less ebullient for the experience. Hope Woodhouse, another MBA, is trading bonds for Salomon Bros. on Wall St. Jack Gray is half way through Columbia's Business School, at Citibank for the summer, and finds marketing financial services and managing rock bands not wholly dissimilar. Sara Wedeman is wrapping up a Ph.D. in Psychology, and for the summer, moonlighting at Wharton. The highlight of Friday's festivities was John Devine's breathless announcement that his wife had just had a baby. Mark and Cindy Efinger have two sons. Marsha Kazarosian Moccia and her husband, Robert, are expecting.

Saturday, after a slightly bleary breakfast (during which we discovered that the renovated Commons could still whip up a mean batch of rubber eggs), the class assembled for the parade. The day was sweltering and the squeal of bagpipes in the shimmering heat slightly surreal. The speeches in the gym were mercifully short. Lunch and the class picture followed as more and more familiar faces appeared. Katie Gass Walker and her husband, Tom '73, arrived, both as cheerful as ever. Priscilla Martel is running one restaurant and opening another in Hartford. Ruth West, who came with Aina Allen '73, is consulting on commuter graphics and marketing the tarot cards mentioned earlier. On a more institutional track, Andy Hallberg is an MD presently doing his residency. A class meeting was scheduled for 1:30, adjourned at 1:35. Apparently a lot was accomplished. A large group went off to find some swimming at a nearby park. An aqueous afternoon was spent enthralled by actor Peter Kapetan's dramatic, and true story of fleeing a "Hell Ship on Fire" (N.Y. Post) aboard a lifeboat. Peter barely escaped the sinking of a cruise ship he was performing on. He told the tale standing waist deep in the pond as the audience listened raptly on a group of rock outcroppings.

Dinner that evening was fabulous, although the heat of the day was replaced by the mosquitos of the night. The lobster was delicious and plentiful. Here a nod is due Dave Wray, Jennifer Kittredge, Becky Putnam and all those who helped put the event together. Jennifer, by the way, is no longer employed by Talbots. We were treated to cameo appearances by Tom Herwitz, a lawyer in Washington; Peter Currie and his wife Betsy — he's with Morgan Stanley in NY, and the notorious Armstrong brothers, Tobin and Jim, straight from Texas.

Gordon Billheimer, a judge in West Virginia, and his wife, Meg, lived it up. David Corey and Nate Lee, both in the advertising business, did the same. Walter Granruth and his bride to be, Jane Baumgardner, live in New York; both are bankers, he investment, she commercial. Dr. Pat Marasco managed to resist the siren call of his beeper and stayed to enjoy the fun. While the band set up, the class intelligensia descended on the (air conditioned) Andover Inn. No ID checks this time. Sara Nelson, looking like editing Redbook in NYC agrees with her, held court dressed in a very chic black sheath. Bob Trehly, baby banker at Salomon Bros. mingled with Wendy Matthews, actress. Margaret Downs, halfway through Harvard B. School chatted with the other side in the person of Peggy Bliss, protecting the environment from rapacious business at The Nature Conservancy in Massachusetts.

Our dance was next door to the class of 1979's, and there was a constant interchange during the evening as celebrants went from our swing band to their DJ and back again. By the time the DJ quit, after 45 minutes of last songs, Greg Googer had organized a dozen dancers into an enthusiastic synchronized routine. At this point things began to get a bit foggy. Steve Gleason and Karl Harig were tearing about like loose cannons on the deck. There are rumors of a midnight swim in the pool. Sara Grosvenor returned to her room at 4:00 a.m. and was surprised to find bond trader Kevin Connolly, Duke Burnam, and unidentified others partying there, unaware it was occupied. One might think that journalists like Sara would anticipate the antics of corporate types (tykes?).

Anyway, after an even blearier breakfast on Sunday, we all wandered around campus for a last look. A group collected by an elm-flanked walkway one by one and talked over Dana Delany's vignettes of acting in New York. Doug Greeff described the considerable perils of owning an automobile in Manhattan. At Laura Richards MacWilliams's insistence a group went to Friendly's for burgers and "Fribbles." In twos and threes everyone headed for cities and airports in a flurry of exchanged addresses and promises to stay in touch.

In writing this I have tried to be as accurate as possible. Please forgive any slip into the New Yorker's "composite truth" style of journalism. For all the people I got to talk to, and the details of what was said I recall, there are many I haven't mentioned. Here they are: Joe Algrant, Paul Barnett, Jim Briggs, Jake Cahill, John Cross, Jonathan Day, Robert Driscoll, Bruce Fleming, Ed Greer, Mark Harman, Donald Hayden, Jeanne Nahill Kempthorne, Keith Kloza, David Lippold, David Loo, Matt Mangan, Tom Mitchell, Marlin Johnson, Tom Lenagh, Lenny Moher, John Pawlowski, Nancy Peterson, Tony Pietrafesa, George Redman, Charlie Smith, Ralph Stell, Bob Streett, Mark Tay, Greg Winn, Kevin Wood, and John Solomon.

It is difficult to describe the emotions evoked by such a weekend. Certainly we were lured by memory, curiosity, and a bit of pride in the fact we'd grown up a bit since 1974. But perhaps we made more than a couple of lifelong friends ten years ago. Our class, who showed we could spell "Mother Phillips," demonstrated the same exuberance and style again.

Have a great fall — see you in five years.

Hello everybody. In case anyone has gotten into trouble with the law, I think I will start with an update on classmates who are practicing attorneys. Phil Fletcher, having graduated from the Fletcher School and Boalt Hall (Berkeley) has moved to Washington, DC with his fiancé. He is practicing with Milbank, Tweed, Hadley and McCloy. Palmer Epler is an attorney in New Haven, CT and is living at 1847 Chapel St. Bill Snedeker is a lawyer with Shea and Gould in NYC in the corporate/securities law department. He doesn't mind the long hours and still has time to see Jon Otto and John Crowley frequently. Bill plans on making it to our Tenth Reunion in June 1985.

Lawrence Kemp is in St. Louis handling barges of beans (soybeans, that is) for Continental Grain. Yes, Lawrence, I know Tom Brush's address: 221 N. 5th Ave., Ann Arbor, MI 48104 (313) 994-6413. Tom is working on a Ph.D. in economics at the U. of Michigan. Wayne Samuels is manager of financial research at Filene's Basement's Corporate offices in Wellesley. Wayne got his undergrad degree from Brandeis and his MBA from Babson. He and his wife, Valerie, moved to Andover in June with their two children Nathan, 5, and Eryn, 1. Michael Fleming is currently on board the USS Berkeley in the N. Arabian Sea along with the USS Kitty Hawk. Mike saw Dori Hale in Berkeley and reports that she is still boisterous and doing well. As I write this (12 Sept.) Mike is rejoining his wife, Cindy, and 17-month-old daughter Elizabeth in Miami and returning to civilian life.

On to the marriage department: Steve Bache and his bride, Sara Elizabeth Davis, were married in May and have moved to LA where they are both gainfully employed. Wink Harvey reports he was married in May of '83 — I think we caught up to that news. Charlie Clark will be married to Molly Wharton on 6 October. And a special congratulations to Dick King and Mauri Wellin who are married and living in Seattle (I guess). Dennis Pratt and Carol Hempfling were married on 4 August 1984 and are now living at 1 Putnam St., Watertown, MA.

Andrew Craig is finishing his Master's at NYU in Interactive Telecommunication. Andy will be working in the city for WICAT Systems producing interactive videodiscs used in continuing medical education. Bob Thorndike is the year 'round caretaker of The Glades in Scituate, Mass. He is working on history of the area which was originally a group of small farms, then a hotel and eventually (in 1873) used as a cooperative summer resort for Boston families.

Less Butler has just graduated from the Harvard School of Design and Architecture and is starting his own firm in San Francisco. Lew has been skiing and fishing with Bill Whiteford, Lawrence Kemp, Dick King, Brad Geier, Pete Wyman and John Kingery. Catherine Armsden AA '73 and Lew were married in Maine. Although in SF for now, they hope to move back East one of these days. Tilly Woodward had three billboards of her art installed in Kansas city, MO in conjunction with a one-person show of hers at the Karl Oskar Gallery. Peter Hubshman has just been named VP and Assistant to the chairman at D.C. Trading and Development Corporation (trades OTC Nasdaq). Previously, Peter has been an "executive go-fer" in D.C., working for Diversified Media operating a Spanish daily in NYC, playing music and still keeps busy with his two partners in LaLa Productions, Inc. Phil and Judy Hueber are living in a 200-year-old farmhouse in Stamford, CT. Phil works for a market research and consulting company called Majors Corp. Matt Finnie spent the summer at Chemical Bank before returning to NYU business school. Phil says "hi" to Dennis Pratt.

Our Tenth Reunion is coming up in less than a year. Rod Rolett is organizing the 10th Year Extraordinary Fund Raising Extravaganza and is recruiting team members to help encourage giving which will top 1974's tenth reunion drive of $12,000. If you want to help, and every little bit counts, contact Rod at 8 Larkspur Drive, Cromwell, CT 06416. A special thanks to Anne Rollings and David Vipond who have agreed to be co-chairmen for the 10th reunion. If anyone would like to volunteer to help, please contact them.

My best to you all, please continue to keep in touch!

"Every now and then we turn a street corner, a page of a newspaper or magazine and we're suddenly brought into the past. Memories of places and times and old places come back to warm us. Such was the case a couple of weeks ago when the Minnesota Twins were in town playing the Red Sox. It was an event in the short, two-game, rain-delayed series which made me, for the first time since our graduation, nostalgic for my past, particularly our days at Andover.

"As the Twins arrived in town, Dave Engle was leading the league in hitting and there was great excitement in Boston because Ted Williams' old number nine was to be retired. After the game, the Boston Globe covered the event with an article in which Engle spoke of his unique relationship with Ted. Dave's father had attended high school with Ted and through the years had run the Ted Williams baseball camp in Lakeville, MA, which I had attended.

"The event forced me into the past and, while I was there, I couldn't help but think about Andover and the days spent there. It's gratifying to recount special memories in unexpected ways, but still, it prompted me to call and just say, 'Yes, I am alive, in Boston. What's new from all my old classmates at Andover?'"

Thus writes Wally Row, currently residing in Belmont when the Sox are out of town. His thoughts, conveyed in a letter which followed a recent telephone conversation, struck such a chord I felt it worth sharing them with you all.

Wally spoke of Chris Bensley, also in the greater Boston area and involved in multimedia work of some exotic description. Wally also mentioned that he had run into Steve Harrington, currently a broker with First Jersey Securities.

The faithful Office of Academy Resources pipeline brings news from Brad Rockwell who, when he isn't volunteering his services with a local crafts persons' guild (a long story not worth retelling here), is in a residency at Barnes Hospital in St. Louis.

Naomi Rush is a grantwriter for the Massachusetts Audubon Society, and getting in shape for a future in management (environmental or corporate?). She lives near Walden Pond — and encourages friends to call or visit.

Telethoners bring news of Larry Dowd, who works for IBM, presumably in the Rockville, MD area. Laura Rome is trying her hand at tobacco farming, though I'm sure her back is into it, too. Ned Elmer is right down the street at Mass. General Hospital as an intern. Speaking of medicine, open wide — Nguyen Nguyen is in Dental School at UPenn.

Hope Barnes made the Olympic rowing team, and, I gather, garnered a medal for her efforts. She speculates about graduate work in pharmacy, and writes of seeing Trina Wellman about once a month. I wish she would send me details of her wanderings!

Mark Fraker communicates regularly, through the Alumni Office. He's lending for Bankers Trust — I'll accept any of the extras. Mark reports that Larry Fong (who may not even remember our trip up Mt. Chicouira) and Michael Connor are in their first years, respectively, at Columbia B-School, and that Bart Partington is in insurance and NYU night school — though not necessarily in that order.

Dennis Driscoll is a new homeowner in the town of Milton, a lovely suburb just south of our State Capital here in Massachusetts. He has put the shingle up with the family insurance agency: J. Barry Driscoll Inc.

Andy McCulloch was recently married to Ann Elizabeth Wilbur. Andy is taking it easy — after Dartmouth and Columbia Law, he's pursuing his MBA at the latter. Someday he'll get out of school and have to find a job. (Just kidding).

The brightest of the bunch, Bob Burnham, Pam Eaton, and I are back here at PA, just a couple of years early for the tenth reunion. Bob's teaching in the science department and spearheading a new boy's cross-country program. I'm getting into computers now, and still working in College Counseling at the Academy. Pam (my wife) is a supervisor at BayBank Merrimack Valley, and on the fast track toward life among the big corporate fat-cats down Burlington.

So much for a winter epistle. Do keep in touch — all news is good news, particularly if it's class news, and so many remain incognito!

Hope you've all had a pleasant summer (and by the time you read this, a good fall as well). I spent the summer finishing a masters thesis in history (emphasis on theoretically) and changing beds for an endless stream of visitors when I wasn't shuttling back and forth to Martha's Vineyard. I tried taking my books to the beach, but somehow . . . First, some apologies and amplification on the last column. John Nordell will be happy to know that I've "got it" now. To quote him this is his "real story": "I'm certainly not in school in Cambridge. I graduated from Stanford in 1983 with a BA in International Relations. I took two years 'on': one working as a camera salesman in New York City, the other teaching English in Japan. After graduation, I spent six months on my brother's organic farm in PA. Since then, I've been living in Cambridge working as a free lance photographer and driving a truck for a produce store twice a week." Steve Schwartz is indeed in Arizona — Phoenix — but he's working as a hotel consultant for Lowenthal and Howarth. Here also are the specifics on John Chamberlain: his company is called Chamberlain Design Systems, Inc. and they manufacture and sell the Skybag[®] (The Bicycle Travel Bag) and other custom protective coverings for rowing equipment, boats, display cases, musical instruments, machinery, and squash racquets."

We still seem to be getting more info about doctors than any other profession: Richard Sammel having received a BS in biophysics in '81 was also awarded his MD. He will be doing a residence in internal medicine at the University of Chicago Hospitals and Clinics. Steve Gerst is busy racking up degrees at Columbia where he is working on an MD and a masters in public health after which he plans to pursue an MBA; (how old do you suppose he'll be when he gets his first job?). He spent this summer in China studying their health care system. Elizabeth Siderides, whom I ran into at the Columbia student center one day this summer, has decided to become an ophthalmologist.

After medical school, the next most popular activity is getting married. Al Colby married Donna De Rango of Naples, FL last January; she's an accountant at New England Life in Boston where he's employed as a computer programmer. Andy McCarthy returned from Morocco and promptly headed for California where he married Betsy Riggs on 22 July. Reporting from the wedding was Michael Solovay who noted the attendance of Ross Boylan and Brian Loughman. Fritz Thompson is reportedly engaged to someone who remains mysterious except for her first name, Rosemary.

Many people have been travelling, among them Louis Boorstin who spends much time in Africa and the Far East for Lehman Bros. Todd Anderson and Louis ran into each other on a plane from Jakarta to Bali (aren't we an international group!) while the former was on a two months vacation from Schlumberger. Todd is now at Duke pursuing a Ph.D. in experimental physics. Louis also sees Peter Collier who is working for Dillon Read in NYC, and Hoon Won, who having completed an MA in Public Policy at MIT, plans to go to law school. Tom French, the cleverest of us all, has figured out how to be paid to travel. Take a cruise in Scandanavia with Salen Lindblad Cruising, and he may well be your cruise director.

Chelsea Congdon and Liz Laverack also haunted cool parts of the world this summer on a trip to Anchorage. Chelsea is living in Cambridge and was, until recently, working as an assistant to the publisher of World Paper, an international newspaper supplement. Chelsea reports that Katy Loewald is in NYC "directing and producing her career in the theater;" Noel Schwerin is also in NYC as is Walker Stevenson. Walker just arrived and is looking for a job as a sound man for movies and an apartment.

It is with great sadness that I announce the sudden death of Jeff Stone on 23 June in San Diego. The family has requested that those who wish may make donations in Jeff's memory to the Burn Research Fund, in care of the Department of Surgery, University of Vermont College of Medicine, Burlington, VT.

As far as Class Notes go, it has been a fairly quiet summer having not heard from great deal of people. Nonetheless there are a few souls out there who've written or whom I've seen.

In acting as the male counterpart to Sloan Condren, Mark Resnick writes that after graduating from Boston University a year and a half ago, he has settled in Boston and is working as a model for the Hart Agency. Along the same lines of glamour, Josh McCall (who's living in Greenwich and working in New York) reports that he went to see Revenge of the Nerds and saw Matt Salinger starring in the film (not as a nerd, mind you).

A couple of weeks ago I went to Maine/New Hampshire for the weekend. I spent the day with Patsy Cahill Warlick who is living in Rye, NH and has a great job, is married to a great guy and lives in a great house and has few complaints about life in general. Something is clearly unfair there! On the same weekend I spent an afternoon in Portland, Maine drowning my sorrows at Three Dollar Dewies where I ran into Bill Regan also escaping from New York for the weekend. He was with his brother Tim's wife who we both decided would make marriage a tough act for Bill to follow!

Steven Young is a graduate student at New England Conservatory of Music in Boston and is the organist and music director at the First Parish Church in Taunton, MA.

It seems we have quite a contingent at Columbia Law School. Larry Braverman's second year has just begun; Art Choy, after graduating from Columbia undergrad (during which time he spent a semester at Peking University in People's Republic of China) and finishing a year of graduate work in political science at Seoul National University, plans to attend Columbia Law School and room with Nobu Ishizuka.

Deirdre O'Donoghue Riou as the name indicates is married and living and working in Manhattan. She spent a year in Paris while in school and returned after graduation to work as an English Language Assistant when she met and married her current husband. Her sister Carol O'Donoghue, is living in Japan, also as a language instructor.

That "wild and crazy guy" Chuck Wyatt is at med school at Baylor which I assume is in Texas because he claims to be raising hell with those Texas women. I personally think he's a little too old to be playing "Doctor." In any event he is on the med school's Admissions Committee as a full voting member (make checks payable to . . .)!

Last, but by no means least, Laura "Lou" Begien has tied the knot, marrying Timothy Bryan this past summer. Congratulations, Laura!

That's all the news for now. Please feel free to write me with any bits of info you may have about our classmates, the juicier the better.

The reconvening of the Class of 1979, XXIII Olympiad notwithstanding, altered the serenity of this past summer for history. Certainly, those wiser members of our class knew better than to interrupt the flow of Lethe, that tidy river of forgetfulness, by setting swim in so many shallow waters. Others of us broke stroke, paddled in and rented double rooms at Paul Revere South. Ms. Van Dusen takes issue with this conceit in her class notes of late.

We find much to dismay in the showing of the survivors of Andover's more discotheque years. Perhaps those who reigned starry Lower Year have forgotten the meaning in the motto NON SIBI. For example, private enterprise has consumed the spirits of the once selfless, Pan-like creatures, Sue Jenkins (in bonds), Bradford Holmes (in medical supplies), James Tappan (in money, ever the entrepreneur), James Marquand, (in real estate), Adrienne Yost (in cash).

Others talk of personal endeavor, such as Forty Conklin, but are witnessed drooling beer and peanuts in the bandstands at Yankee games. He still likes to have fun.

A certain crowd roams the shores of Manhattan; the island holding its share of classmates in lofts and office space. Tim Stoneman manages the occasional evening out (seen at trendy dance concert), as does Helen Link (caught at a PARIS cinema late show on 58th St.). Both, however, plot graduate work in new fields (philosophy and medicine). Perhaps the greatest statement of future professional/personal goal is Margaret Best's in the Reunion Bible passed around that weekend, "Not nursing, I'm a microbiology major." We urge you to write for the unabridged book care of me (see above) for a minimal donation.

Goodness. There's just so much to tell. A number of you don't write but, rather, wander. In doing so, you become most vulnerable. Illustration of this might be, Taiyi Greaves, the regularity with which you ride the commuter trains to Connecticut and nap on station benches. Or, Nick Philip, visits to the dry cleaner on York Avenue. We used to run into you at Studio 54, but now that you're a paralegal, staying in the neighborhood is a lot wiser. Both Kosta Demos and Tom Fehsenfeld have peddled in Greenwich Village, in my view. And most wandering, Jamie Marks, enrolled in law school to pass time shopping in ethnic gourmet shops on the upper West Side.

Worse yet, are those classmates who turn up in the media: John Kennedy spends the weekend with Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden and doesn't send a postcard. Andrew Gilmore, at the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies, makes print. Do let us know what comes of this!

Everyone, I'm sure, read the UPI stories about a clever youth who impersonated the son of a certain ethnic cinema personality. This is the kind of press our class is worthy of. Word has it, Dave Ulin was in on it, as were a number of PA parents. Media is a wonderful way to keep in touch. Gigs, too, such as the ones Lloyd and Zanes's band, Del Fuego, perform, help reveal all current personal anxiety. Willie Cooper had a band, though he no longer needs a musical medium to rend his heart.

Everyone is doing their post-graduate thing. Class romance seems to be at a height at the Reunion. Tim Regan and his wife danced a deux, as did Sean Wolfort and Guy Chirico. Jim Swenson, Steve Fritzing and Roger Kass danced a trois, to no one's surprise. Jimi had just been nominated Employee of the Month at Ken's Foods in Wayland. His dedication to the production of salad dressings has finally been recognized.

We had a chance to catch up with Rona Shapiro indirectly. We had the great fortune to run into Mr. Shapiro, Rona's father, a gentle, soft spoken man who rather modestly chronicled Rona's achievements, both at Harvard and in Israel.

Hyla Flaks would like to know where Nick Lobenthal is. Nick, my assistant, was given a large, elegant bon voyage party at my home. No one, however, has seen him since his supposed return from Rome. Others lost are Hunt Stehli, Rick Bradt, Bill Miles and Brian Linse whom we hear are in law school, business, and, all currently off the Maine coast. Most lost are classmates paid to program computers. We hear not from them; Taylor Bodman, Pip Lampietti, Mark Mulvaney, Jacques Hugon except via elusive telecommunicative messages.

Ted Lord saw Lucinda Pascale on her way to South Africa. She has plans to tackle the divestment issue from their side. We ran into Teddy and Mrs. Lord (mom) walking their pet on Park Ave. Poetry consumed them. Tom Rubin and Dewey Thompson actively participate in filling me in on class news and deserve mention in this column, particularly Tom for his favor to City of New York last week. Thanks, Tom, I got the raise.

In closing, the class of 1979 constitutes what one faculty observer called, "Honestly, the least exciting, most matter-of fact, rude, boring group of starched, boiled without butter or spice PA has produced in the 20th century." K. Kelly Wise, however, fondly recalled our "edgy, wonderful and very bright class," and expressed pleasure that the police were not called out for the cocktails he hosted for us.

Until the next mail, write to me in Central Park. With affection.

When we have drunk
We know what's right;

Well folks, what's up? I've got lots of news but not lots of space so I had better get going.

Charles Boddy who is attending Boston College Law School sent me a great letter with lots of news. Apparently he, John Niceforo, Rich Gasperoni, and Tom Seman, all spent some time in the Jacuzzi of Tom's fiancée (or by now is it wife?), Gayle Newman. Outside of Gayle, Tom's major interest seemed to be the position of Poland in world affairs. He and Gayle will be attending graduate school in the fall. Rich has gone nuclear in the Navy. John is going to Tufts's Med School. Also attending Med School this fall is Jim Mercuri at the University of Rochester. He spent the summer teaching at Andover. Dan Hajjar has a fellowship at Andover for this year. Charles also reported that Lisa Mosca had been accepted to the Harvard graduate program for Spanish.

Those who have just graduated from Colby with Charles include Whistle Wood, Diane Perlowski, Craig Alie, and Peter McHugh, a star hockey player.

Cassie Doykos spent the summer at Rye beach with her family. Michael Grittani, Alfred Sciabarassi and she all graduated from Ohio Wesleyan this spring.

Matthew Belman was captain of the hockey team at Wesleyan. He applied to the veterinary school this summer and is "entertaining the idea of sailing around the world." Other travellers include Bill Crabtree who plans to bike across the country after graduation from Northwestern in June '85. He invites anyone who wants to join him.

Russell DuPuy reported from Conn. College. He and Mimi Keon travelled to Europe this summer with the hope of joining Bob Stammers in Italy. Peter Cole reportedly spent the summer criss-crossing the country and started work at Lord and Taylor in New York.

Also working in New York are Deborah Stahl, Timothy Davenport, and Dianne Hurley. Tim also reported that Justin Cronin was planning on teaching at a school in Hawaii this year. Imagine . . . Justin in a hula skirt!

Studying in New York this year are Barbara Duvoisin who is at Columbia's School of International and Public Affairs and its Russian Institute, and Abigail Jones who has one more year at Vassar.

She and Elena Bowes spent last March together in London. She also reports that Paige Evans is doing well and that a few people went out to San Francisco at the beginning of the summer to see Susan Maginn's wedding, including Sarah Ehrlich.

From Bowdoin, we have Dave Donahue who graduated holding school records for both the high and triple jump; William Conroy who was a dean's list student and also managed to get a varsity letter in football. He is attending Case Western Reserve University Dental School this fall. Kim Lilly spent most of the past year in Russia and also finished her studies at Bowdoin.

Michael Grittani at Bishop finished an impressive year by winning his second consecutive conference javelin title.

Sherri Wolf was thinking of either teaching or possibly doing graduate work in English. She says that Chris Neville looks and sounds great after his stay in the Soviet Union and that Dan Egger is living in Boston and is in good spirits.

Joon Kim finished Cornell, was deciding between med school and grad school, but was sure that the answer lay in the West. Molly Pyle spent the summer in DC and is planning to live there for awhile.

Well, that's it for me for a while. I hope that everyone who can make it is coming to the reunion. It sounds like it's going to be fun. Oh, another other thing . . . Linda Beane . . . will you write to me? CIAO EVERYBODY.

Another summer has passed us by and a new year of school begins yet again. For most of us, this is our second long awaited and anticipated senior year. And though nearly four years have jogged by since that first senior year, I am still full of sharply etched images and memories of my final lap at Andover: stickball on a warm spring evening and tea and cookies in the Underwood Room. But enough of my sentimental bunk and on with the news.

In early June 1984, a Lowell newspaper reported that Paul Regan Slattery — the man who can open a beer bottle with his mouth and then chew the metal cap into a tiny little ball — was engaged to Cynthia Lee Camp. Paul, who attended both the University of New Hampshire and the University of Lowell, currently works for Wang Laboratories. Congratulations!

Is this marriage thing contagious? Brad Kliber wrote the following: "Peter Mackie is dating a Wellesley College girl. They've visited a well known Boston jeweler on Commonwealth Avenue and are presently picking out rings — and I don't mean class rings." Although unsubstantiated, this is most interesting data.

Can you say artsy-fartsy? Many eighty-ones can. Spending a term away from Swarthmore where he is an Art History major, Jeff Orrell studied at the Barbieri Center in Rome, Italy last year. Adriene Bailey sings in a Princeton band called The Outlets, and Regina Fraser will enter her fourth year of a five year program sponsored by Tufts University and the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston.

By the time most of us graduate from college, Alan Howard will have completed his first or second year at Harvard Law School. Graduating magna cum laude from Yale in three years, Al majored in both economics and political science. Somehow, he also found time to play on the rugby team and appear in several dramatic productions.

Another of our classmates to meet with success at college is Peter Kodzis. Peter, now a Senior at Babson College, was chosen as a member of two honor societies, the Blue Key National Fraternity Society, for his academic record and extra-curriculars and Omiricon Delta Epsilon, the international honor society for study in economics.

I received a letter from Howie Lebowitz who attended a foot stompin' barbecubarn dance at Tony Bienstock's farm in N.Y. Tony and Tim Clark have returned safely from their year off in Brazil.

Karen Woods spent part of her summer as a teaching assistant at the Salisbury School in Connecticut. Jim Cleary and John Burgess both worked for investment banking firms in Boston when they were not chasing PYT's on Cape Cod. On the other side of the Charles River, Katrinka Leschey and Bill Kummel toiled at the Harvard Summer School. After a term abroad in France, Laura Bull will return to Middlebury for her senior year.

Some other scraps of news: Rob Stier is majoring in chemical engineering at Lafayette . . . Abbey Adams is working with computers and finance in Fort Lauderdale, Florida . . . Jeff Babin is looking forward to finishing up at Penn so that he can get started in the music industry.

We are sad to have to report the death of Henry Hough, a victim of an auto accident in May. Henry elected to work for two years before entering college and had just finished his freshman year at Worcester Polytechnic Institute. The class sends it sympathy to his parents and his brothers and sisters.

Please write.

Stephanie M. Yoo
936 West End Ave. C-16
New York, NY 10025

Aloha! Hope all of you had a good summer. I spent most of mine in the sweltering heat of New York in an apartment that had no air conditioning. I became very close friends with my fan. However, I did end my vacation with a two week stint of R&R in Hawaii drinking Mai-Tais with little umbrellas in them and sunning on the beach, so I guess it was worth it. So, for those of you who had previously contributed to the Stephanie Yoo Bahama Fund, you will be glad to know that I did go to the tropics — although the destination and date were different. Now for some news.

This summer while I was wandering about, Jeff Hunt whizzed past me on his bike. He is studying classics in Rome this fall. Earlier this summer he saw Christina Fink and Hadley Soutter in San Fran. Both were scooping Italian ices. Mike Polonsky spent the summer studying Japanese and was just in New York and Boston visiting friends. Peter Pedulla was a waiter at the Ramada Inn in Boston, bought, then sold an orange BMW, and lived with Jamie Anderson who studied Chinese and bartended. They formed Youth in Asia again with Eric Cohen '83 and Adam Simha '84 but disbanded again this fall.

Susan Philipp spent the summer in Andover mowing her mother's lawn and is majoring in psych at W&M. She wrote last week and said that Chandri Navarro is in France studying and that Alex Cochran went to boot camp and got a buzz "like you wouldn't believe." Phil Berney was in New York this past summer working for Pan Am. He spent his weekends flying all around the place. Now who goes to Rio for the WEEKEND? Jeff Arle spent his summer in France working and the last part of it sunning on the Riviera. A little closer to home was Lynn Snyder who worked on the Cape and lived in a bar this summer. Cathy Cotins was on the Vineyard and is now in Nepal for the fall studying Nepalese. Jen Beirnes worked in a window factory outside of Chicago and decided the life of a prol was not really her bag but got you in great shape. Pierre Vallette was also laboring as a ranch hand where he got paid the high wage of $11 a day and fell in love with his — pony.

Maiya Greaves worked at The Bottom Line. Hank Glassman is majoring in East Asian Studies at Columbia. Courtney Starratt is in Germany, and Tom Luongo will be in England in a week. Paul Hochman wrote a long letter. He spent his summer up at Dartmouth taking Physics and got robbed twice. He made the varsity ski team and his team went on to get 2nd at the NCAA championships, 3 points away from winning. He spent last winter in Italy where "I got proposed to by some American-stricken ta lover. Will wonders never cease? I did 'no' in case you're wondering."

Brian Dunham might get a children's book published which he did the writing and artwork for. Matt Weatherley-White will be rowing in Melbourne, Australia with the Australian National Crew this fall and winter. Patti Doykos spent last winter in Germany and is now back at Dartmouth. Al will be in D.C. this fall. Pam Weiler is summer stock in Maine, and Melissa Warner went to art school and sold children's books over the phone. You should read the books just to hear her sales pitch!

Stie Benesch was a foreign correspondent in Mexico last year and is now back at school.

I realize that many of you wrote in to the Alumni Office, but unfortunately I have temporarily misplaced — make that "permanently lost" — the little bits of info you put in so please write again, either to the office or to me. . . . Ciao, Stephanie.

etings '83ers. Sorry about no summer news but the post office liked them so much it kept them.

Michael Abramowitz spent much of the summer researching questions for a book about the game Trivial Pursuit and still had time for an August jaunt to Europe. Heading in the other direction, Harry Elson and Thomas Jones both returned from in England. Harry now attends Brown and Thomas is at Georgetown.

Luc-An Phan worked as a News Information Coordinator for the L.A. Olympic Line and reports that he ran into Max Kennedy at the closing ceremonies. Also in the area, Jennifer Cray continues to enjoy journalism while at USC.

Jason Bernhard had his travels interrupted last spring by a brief bout with hepatitis while he was in India but has now returned at attends U. Penn. Cindy Reid spent last year travelling and learned a lot in Indonesia. She is now at Wesleyan.

Aura Roche modeled for Calvin Klein in Chicago before heading back to Georgetown. In New York, Peter Cleveland furnished his journalistic talents working for Wall Street Journal. Both John O'Reilly and Tamar Gendler also braved the city; John scooping Haagen Daz and Tamar as an assistant at Skiing magazine. Tamar reports to have occasionally bumped into Stafford in the elevator.

Ann Ree works part-time as a chef near Irvine, where Kimi Sato is now a freshman. David Keaton is playing squash for Wesley and Sandy McPherson continues to do well on the Northwestern football team. Gita Khadiri reports that UVA is wonderful and Carin Ruff seems equally enthusiastic about Swarthmore. Finally, Kelly Kellogg gleefully reports that Dunkin' Donuts now makes croissants.

I have a great winter and please keep the information coming.

Five, Class of '84! I've painfully torn myself away from my library orientation here at Bates to organize all your summer news into some form of coherence.

My notes begin about a month after graduation; three weeks after those memorable grad. parties (and then there are those who don't remember a thing) when I spent two nights in Boston with Danielle Morris and Annie Emmick along with classmates Nancy Kashanek, Lisa Moreland, Nancie Pageau, Stephanie Boyko, Carolyn Battista, Laurie Vance, Perry Hewitt, Tommy Herzog, Joan LaRovere, Caroline Ren, Brian Millerick, and Bayode Jegede to say farewell to Danielle and Jegs as well as Annie who was on her way to England for the summer.

While working at PA during the summer my colleagues included Lulu Donahue, Mike Drozdick, Barbara Calvert, Matt Donahue, Amy Price, Matt Bergeron, Ralph Petrosino, Cathy Merrill, and Peter Eliopoulos. I often saw Kendall Coor busy with an art project as he, too, passed one more season at Andover.

Mike Cahill, who shared a townhouse in Georgetown with Nick Bienstock and '83 grad. Tom Ullman for the summer, was a tremendous help to me with his lengthy, informative letters (thanks, Mike). Here's a bit of news from him: "Rich Eisert was an assistant tennis pro near his home and charged up outrageous phone bills calling Phoebe Conant ('86) . . . J. B. Murry was a door-to-door salesman in Florida. Andy LeSueur said he was an airport maintenance man (cleaning planes) in a small airport on the Cape, but I talked to his father and he gave me the real story — he was cleaning toilets there." Mike also reported that he housed Jeff McDermott and Dirk Murphy after a few Greatful Dead shows in June and that John Pickett also spent the weekend once.

Jonathan Loew and Sean Stone both decided to take a year off before college and work for their Senators in Washington, DC. John Batten lived with Sean and worked in New Hampshire for the summer. Kitty Douglas was a fry girl at her local McDonald's. Edward Anderson wrote that he and Alex Mehlman "had a fantastic trip (cross country). Logged 12,000 miles on the rental car and in doing so saw much of the West. Dropped in on many Andover folks along the way including Bart Rickenbaugh, Tim Cahill, Sarah Keller, and Alastair MacTaggart."

Here's something I know y'all will get a kick out of: rumor has it (thanks to M.C.) that despite all his illustrious achievements at Andover as school president, Jordan Smyth failed even after a month's attempt in the wilderness, to grow a beard (nice try, Jordan. Better luck next time).

Paul Chesterton, Paul O'Boyle, Charlie Welch, Chris Gildehaus, Rob Kellan and Tommy Herzog played together on a summer lacrosse team. Charlie, Rob and Tommy also worked with John Best for a construction company in Andover. Anita Cataudella packed bags in a gourmet & produce store on the Cape. Living down the street was Scott Bothfeld who was host to Jim Smith, Chip Pollard and Jack McKay among other grads. Jenni Tessier held a number of jobs in Falmouth including lifeguarding at her backyard beach. Kirk Orrell was also on the Cape and spent his time instructing youngsters in the craft of sailing. Stalky Henderson ran into Tad Davis and Serra Butler in a crowd of 63,000 at an Olympic soccer game in California. Kate McBride took a trip to Alaska but spent most of the summer working in Aspen, CO. She wrote that Courtney Carmody waitressed in Stockbridge, MA, John Travas "dated a stewardess and ended up stranded in Alabama . . . and Caroline Higgins dated a plumber and folded underwear in the Andover Shop."

Numerous New England and New York camps were summer homes for '84 grads such as Mike Bayer, Peter Vrooman, Julie Crosson, Paul Murphy, Brad Winer, Christal McDougall, Anne Stout, Jeff Woodhead and Arthur Muldoon, all who were counsellors at their camps.

Bulfinch Hall

I expect you remember the cover of the last Bulletin, which you received about New Year's: the white cover with the Chinese calligraphy for the words for "Exchange," "Andover," and "Harbin" writ large. The design is starkly handsome, classic, bold. But I can't help wondering whether those black ink characters actually mean in Chinese what we have been told they mean. Maybe Xiao-min Ni, PA's Visiting Scholar from China and the calligrapher who wrote the words in Chinese, has played an enormous joke on us all. Or perhaps Tom Regan, who just vacated this editor's chair at the Bulletin, is in on the joke, too. Perhaps the characters on the cover are actually some jocular message of farewell and best wishes to me, the guy who has to try to follow his superb performance.

Chinese scholars, let's hear from you. Have Xiao-min and Tom come clean with us?

We in Bulfinch celebrate. We have gotten a new photocopying machine. We needed it: the old one's time had come. Even when it worked, which was seldom, the monk in the scribllarium could copy faster than it could.

We were not impulsive shoppers, however. No. For weeks we had legions of copy machine salesmen marching into the building. Clean-cut in their suits and ties, briefcases in hand, they looked as if they'd sell us a copier or encyclopedias, or both. Before I knew who they were,

I was uneasy around the department secretary, Elin Gesing. I thought she was grossly overinsuring.

We saw machines of all shapes and sizes — one as big as a Buick, some loaded with bells and whistles, octopus-like arms for page-sorting, collating, stacking, alphabetizing — you name it. They don't really come any other way. Ever tried to buy a new car without any options? Each machine, it seemed, had a reducing feature, and an enlarging feature, which, of course, requires a different size paper. So stacked on the floor next to the machine are sheets of paper the size of Colorado. The paper, in turn, requires different size paper-feeding trays for the machine. Chaos is come again.

And why, pray, would an English department want reducing and enlarging features on a copying machine, anyway? Does a short story become a novel or a haiku a sonnet if you "enlarge" it? Do homework assignments get shorter if one "reduces" them? But whether we like it or not, we ended up with a machine that enlarges. As Shakespeare said, "Some men are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them."

Personal computers have come to Andover, and to even this English teacher, they are a delight. For years my nemesis has been computers. When people tried to explain them to me, a steel door closed over my brain. Well, that's changing, largely due to tutoring I got from a Lower Middler.

Chaucer's description of the clerk, "Gladly wolde he lerne and gladly teche" is now almost a cliché, but one of the joys of being in education is the two-way street. And it manifests itself at the strangest times. I teach, coach and advise lots of students, but it was my tutor's uncle that I met at a Christmas party in Boston. "Oh, you teach at Andover. Do you teach my nephew, David Fisher?"

"No, he teaches me."

As part of the School's work program, Lowers are involved in some sort of office work for two hours per week. This fall David tutored me in using the word-processing program; other fifteen-year olds valiantly brought other gray-haired faculty members into the twentieth century. Despite my aversion to computers, I began my tutorial full of hope. I figured if they could make penicillin out of mold, David could make a computer user out of me.

But the first piece of advice about computers you get at PA is hardly reassuring. You are admonished to "save" periodically what you have typed on to the computer — to push a few buttons to preserve for posterity your inimitable prose on a floppy disk that looks vaguely like a 45 record in its jacket. The reason is that PA draws its electricity alternatively from the School's steam generator and Massachusetts Electric. When we switch from one source to another, the power goes off for a fraction of a second, turning off the computer and destroying whatever you have typed on the computer's screen but have not yet saved. After praying to the Muses for inspiration; after agonizingly working through your writer's block and setting down your thoughts with a clarity and forcefulness you didn't know you possessed; after shaping a sentence just so, you do not want your product vaporized when the power lapses. No. It is bad for morale.

How frequently do you interrupt your writing to save your work? That depends upon how lucky you feel.

There is a way to avoid such a disaster. It is called a "dedicated, line" — an electrical line from the electric company that serves only the computer. It is "dedicated" to the computer's use. I understand the School's Office of Physical Plant is undertaking a project to resolve the problem. Soon, it seems virtually everything at this School will be dedicated to someone or something: the buildings are dedicated to generous alumni, the faculty is dedicated to teaching, and now the wiring is dedicated to computers. What will be next? —PAG

Learning to serve:

The Urban Studies Institute

Jennifer J. Lewis '85 and Carmen Villanueva

by Susan M. Lloyd

If you live in Andover, Lawrence is your inner city. Founded in 1845, Lawrence, its problems — and its opportunities — belong to America's industrial revolution. Ever since Irish laborers built the dam at Deer Jump Falls on the Merrimack, Lawrence has been a mill city, an immigrant city, most renowned when most miserable: for the typhoid epidemic of the 1880s, for the most crowded central ward in the United States in the 1890s, for the strike of 1912, when 25,000 workers decided that they could no longer live on a dollar a day, and most recently for race riots last summer.

Lawrence has also been a place where work could be found and the American dream realized — by your children, if not by you. Beginning in the early 1960s, Lawrence provided jobs and homes for hundreds, then thousands, of families from Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, and Central America — and now, in the 1980s from Vietnam.

If you are a student at Phillips Academy, Lawrence might as well be a thousand miles away. In the nineteenth century, Phillips and Abbot Academy students were "rusticated" or even expelled for traveling four miles north to Lawrence without express permission, and praised for going twenty-five miles south to Boston or Cambridge to seek culture, whether or not they actually found it. To several of us this psychological distance seemed like poor education. Therefore, in the winter of 1980, with Carmel Rodriguez, a teacher of Latin American history and Spanish, and American historian Edwin Quattlebaum, I planned an Urban Studies Institute — a full-time, ten-week program in which up to seventeen students might enroll to study the American city from many perspectives.

The institute has four major components: Lawrence is our laboratory and our teacher, where the students and I undertake a major fieldwork project tutoring Hispanic children in an elementary school. Ed teaches his field of expertise — urban history. Carmel gives a course in the history and current economic and social problems of the Caribbean area — once her home, as it has been home to so many Lawrence families. I teach a "core seminar" to draw disparate threads together, relate our fieldwork to class work, and introduce students to some of the contributions that anthropology, psychology, and ethnic studies have made to our knowledge of human development. Eight Phillips students receive a full trimester of credit for the program. To make this an inter-community institute, we invite students from Lawrence High School to join us on the same basis. The Lawrence High students even live in Andover dormitories. Half of their $1800 tuition has been provided by the local Artemas W. Stearns Foundation, $100 by the Abbot Academy Association, $90 by the student, and the remainder by Phillips scholarship funds.

Our first spring term the program came off as planned with only one hitch: the Lawrence High students stayed home. Strong Lawrence applicants seemed ready to come from their college preparatory program to ours. Then, at the last minute, they decided they couldn't miss their Senior spring after all. The pressures on them from peers or even a few faculty to decide against the institute were enormous; "You'll hate it at PA — all those rich snobs . . ." "They read college books — you'll never make it there." Nevertheless, despite similar pressure, the next Urban Studies Institute, in the spring of 1983, included nine Lawrence High School students. Wary of Seniors, and wanting our program to contribute as much as possible to the high school through Juniors who later become Seniors, we now recruit only eleventh graders.

Our strategy for our fieldwork tutoring is two-fold. We work on writing skills by preparing bi-weekly issues of a magazine — the children named it El Periodico — in which every child has at least one entry, no matter how short or trite. We also push oral English skills by inventing and performing short plays. Small groups of kids satirize television shows and fracture fairy tales. We compete with the hum of the cafeteria refrigerator by shouting impeccable directions to the children, who in turn shout their less-than-impeccable but comprehensible lines to imaginary audiences: "I'm da wickit step-sistah. Cinderelly, you git to WUK, dammit!" When these bottom-of-the-heap fourth graders finally perform for classmates and parents, they amaze themselves by bringing roars of laughter and approval.

For urban history a major text is Edward Banfield's Unheavenly City, a celebrated attack on limousine liberals and urban do-gooders going all the way back to Cotton Mather. Banfield's sardonic critique of public arrangements for privatistic communities needles our tutors where it hurts as they become appalled by the federal government's withdrawal of resources from their children's elementary school; Banfield's concept of "future orientation" as a major determinant of social change proves both useful and infuriating.

To our students Caribbean history seems at first remote from the urgent day-to-day problems of their tutees — ("Landlord say we got to move again and Mama's up and crying all night." "If you keep me after school my fathuh gonna beat me when I get home.") — until the course reaches Puerto Rico and revolutionary Cuba. Then they begin to see how traditional patterns of authority, deference, and political activity break and mend themselves under twentieth-century stresses.

My core seminar unites the academic and the firsthand experience. The fieldwork requires much discussion, for it proves a surprisingly complex experience, much more wearing and exciting than any other tutoring project I have supervised. Our students bring to thirty-four needy children so many aspirations churned up from their course work that every available moment in the core course seems crucial to the program. Soon the students begin to call the course "Reality 325."

In "Reality 325," we begin with the African Bushmen in order to study the process of growing up in a self-contained society. With this preparation we consider young people whose containers have been broken into shards, whose restless families have chosen to piece together new lives out of two or more cultures. To see what psychoanalytic theory offers, we read much of Erik Erikson's Childhood and Society. We read sections of Oscar Lewis's classic La Vida, testing his concept of the "culture of poverty" against our observations. One Andover student found that her three tutees and the ethnic communities that shaped them comported startlingly well with Lewis's construct. Moreover, her three charges — a Vietnamese boy, a Puerto Rican girl, and a Caucasian girl — acted out in microcosm the social dynamic of Lawrence as a whole: the Puerto Rican girl and Vietnamese boy loathed each other for reasons stemming from their different ethnic backgrounds, but neither knew the other; the white child sat between them. We finished the term with George Dennison's Lives of Children, a vivid book that deeply moves young people struggling to help still younger people make sense of their lives.

At first, the most conventional Phillips students rebelled against the overlap and intermingling of disciplines. Secondary school is supposed to be an orderly affair, with disciplines neatly divided, counted by Carnegie units, and related to one another by college requirements. Yet, through the fieldwork, life's urgencies keep rushing in on our students, demanding that they put books and persons together. Their questions get sharper each week, and our answers sometimes prove less satisfactory. The school children we tutor — responsive one day, rebellious the next — are perpetual questions in themselves. In spite of the tutors' sincere efforts to identify specific needs and devise lessons to meet them, our tutoring can have no neat beginning, middle, or end. Thus the Urban Studies Institute is upsetting at times to those who depend on such tidiness.

Upset or not, they all survive. Indeed, by May all seem to thrive on the rich diet we mix for them. Entries in the tutors' fieldwork journals grow longer and more reflective, as do the stories in El Periodico, most of them written by kids who have never before put two sentences together.

Our standards for the Lawrence High School students are as high as those we set for the Phillips students, but we offer extra help meeting them. If they fail a test in any of the courses, they can retake it. If their essays are out of joint, they can rewrite them — repeatedly, if need be. "I can't believe the amount of reading I've done," said Denise. "I've read more in two weeks than I have in the last two years." Halfway through the term a Cuban student said, "I can't believe the words that come out of my mouth now. Whenever I'm at home, my brother

A Student's Perspective

by Allison Grishman '85

Spring term begins with Uppers consumed with history term paper hysteria and Seniors suffering from college admissions paranoia. During all this confusion I decided that I would follow an alternative path for a term. And so last spring I participated in the Urban Studies Institute, which took me, three times a week, to a little elementary school in a low-income area of South Lawrence. It was there that I met Oneida.

When I was nine years old, I stood five feet tall, had one sister, and talked with a New York accent — incessantly. At nine years old Oneida is four feet three, the youngest of six sisters, and for the first month I tutored her I wasn't sure if she were able to talk. Her parents work all day, although she doesn't know where. Sometimes Oneida came to school dirty, sometimes tired, and sometimes covered with scratches from fighting with her older sisters. Each day was different, except for one unaltered fact: she would never talk. "Give her time to get to know you," my teacher said. So I tried various techniques to make her speak. I made faces and imitated animals as I had seen my animal behavior teacher do. She giggled. I asked her all sorts of questions. She nodded. I even pretended to cry! But I wasn't getting through.

Because I love theatre, I thought it might be a way to share one of my passions with her. As the term progressed the students started to work on little plays they had made up. After two weeks of rehearsal, we were approaching Oneida's debut and I was nervous — with reason. Oneida would only whisper her lines. On the day of the performance I felt like a parent seeing her child's first play. And Oneida only had to play a tree.

When I saw Oneida just before the show, much had changed. Oneida was all dressed up, hair neat, big smile. She said, "Hello, Allison," and proceeded to chatter about her costume and her lines. She was excited, she was full of life, she was talking! Then I realized how simple it was: I had shared with her something that had given me confidence at Andover, something that was part of me. And that's when she opened up.

I think you never really know when you've grown up. It's not as if you wake up one morning and feel mature; rather, it happens in small conquests in your education. At Andover you are encouraged to mature by thinking for yourself and acting for others.

Allison Grishman, a three-year senior, lives in the Virgin Islands.

and my friends keep saying, 'Rita, what in the world are you talking about?!' For Lawrence and Phillips students alike, immersion is the key — immersion in the vocabulary and intellectual constructs that facilitate serious study of the modern city and its inhabitants.

Although initially some of the Lawrence students are frightened at the prospect of living in various dormitories with Andover students, dorm life has proven to be one of the best aspects of their experiences here. By May the Lawrence students have been accepted by their Andover dormmates and vice versa. "What I love about this place is, it's so preppy!" one girl exclaimed. This was alarming. What did she mean, I asked. "It's not like the high schools I've been in where we all divide into groups that are always sniping at each other. Here people seem to enjoy meeting all kinds of people, and they respect you if you work hard instead of laughing at you or, like a lot of foreign kids at Lawrence High, being scared even to sit with you in the cafeteria." Well, I thought, if that's preppy, I can handle it.

Relations with Lawrence and Phillips students within the institute are even better: "Before I came to the Urban Studies Institute," mused one Lawrence student, "I had this image of a line painted on the floor of the classroom, and we'd sit on one side and the Phillips students would sit on the other side." Such is not the case. I had hoped that our students would eventually forget who came from where. This has proven to be an unrealistic hope, perhaps even an unwise one. For one thing, the Merrimack Valley accent is powerful; every mouth that opens speaks "Lawrence" or "not Lawrence." For another, all our Lawrence students have been Catholic. So are some of the Phillips students, but the Lawrence youngsters have never consorted with atheists or agnostics, and their common shock at the several in our group initially sets them apart from Phillips students accustomed to pluralism. They are baffled: "How do you decide what to do if you

TUTOR

Tutors are fun to be with it is really fun they teach you alot of stuff. They take us on field trips. They took us to Phillip's Academy School. I have fun doing plays and we are doing SnowWhite and the Seven Dwarves I'm the queen in the play. IT's fun having a tutor and we're going to Lawrence High school and to Phillip's Academy again. Once we ate lunch there. I'm going to miss them because they are special people, very special. I like them. I don't want them to leave.

One Lawrence elementary school child's contribution to the students' magazine, El Periodico don't believe in God? How can your life have any meaning?" Jerry Falwell is right: thorough exploration of a subject — history, economics, anthropology — tends to lead one to relativism, at least for a while. Are we making secular humanists of the faithful, in the name of imaginative schooling and improved community relations?

In the end, all the Lawrence students have said they "would do the institute again, even if we'd known how hard it was going to be." In the final week, drawing on their own experiences for week-long seminar projects, the Lawrence students design imaginative investigations, in some cases pairing up with a Phillips student to do a more thorough job. Two have interviewed grandparents and grandparents' friends who had taken part in the strike of 1912; two others have traced family migration and resettlement patterns. And they contribute as much to the program as they profit from it. Familiar with Lawrence's poorest neighborhoods, though few of them live there, the Lawrence High students are invaluable to our tutoring project. Lawrence is, after all, the star of the show: it is Lawrence that we study and Lawrence where we tutor. Our greatest privilege is to have Lawrence sitting in every class and fieldwork planning session.

The Urban Studies Institute is a complex and unconventional program, and we have made our share of mistakes. But in its challenges and even in our mistakes are great lessons. In their tutoring our students are challenged by being expected to be teachers, authoritative and professional, when, indeed, they are still teenagers. They are challenged to help their tutees by simultaneously taking on the roles of both instructor and, somehow, older sibling. And occasionally, they must deal gracefully with the resentment that sometimes rewards success, for once in a while home-room teachers feel their positions in the classroom threatened when youthful tutoring succeeds where they have failed.

Facing such realities and learning to serve within their constraints is not easy. Risks abound in the unconventional. However, we expect this year to risk the whole thing again. Teaching, like learning, will always be a risky business. □

by G. G. B. '43

It is quite possible that a student could spend four years at Andover unaware of the sorcerer who dwells in the upper caverns of the Arts Center. The sorcerer's lair is entangled in a cobweb of wires, and is lined with electronic testing equipment, shelves of resistors, fuses and spare parts, patch cords and tubes, machine tools and motors. The sorcerer fixes things. But he not only fixes things; he designs and builds things that have yet to be commercially manufactured. He throws nothing away (a habit that gives his cavern an intriguing ambience) because he has a milling machine for recreating missing parts. Frequently he uses this machine to "modify" a piece of audio-visual equipment, to improve it — or, in his words, to achieve "a more elegant solution." Behind the Audio-Visual Center's outer office, past the slide room (now also used for computer graphics), beyond the extensive projection booth that feeds the viewing rooms with slides, films and video, through the recording studio and the slide production room is — finally — the sorcerer's workshop. "This," visitors are told, "is why it all works." This is Lolo's lair.

Of course, Lolo is not his proper name. But Aloysius Hobausz is rather difficult to pronounce if one is not Hungarian; and being a friendly, benign sorcerer, he has gone along with the nickname. The saga of Lolo's arrival and his early days at Andover is almost as strange and fascinating as his workshop. In a nutshell, his story is this:

When revolution erupted in Hungary in 1956, Lolo was helping design and build Budapest's first television station. When it appeared that the revolutionaries were winning, the government removed the Communist Party puppets in managerial positions, and held elections to place more capable anti-Communists in positions of leadership. Consequently, Lolo was chosen as one of the television station's three managers. But when the Russians invaded the country, they immediately jailed all those in positions of authority, knowing that they were anti-Communists. So Lolo was forced to flee the country or be imprisoned.

His first thought was to construct a one-man submarine and sail up the Danube into Austria — a rather elegant solution, it would seem.

But the Danube flowed the wrong way, so convenience prevailed over elegance, and a three-day back-roads hike brought him to a border canal on the 22nd of November.

The night was dark and frigid, the bridge had been blown up the day before, and Russian guards — aided by the light from a bonfire made from pieces of the bridge — were rounding up would-be escapees on the embankment. Waiting below the embankment until the guards had marched off with their prisoners, Lolo and a handful of fellow Hungarians chose the best moment to scramble gingerly across the jetsam floating under the shattered bridge to the Austrian side. But a woman in a heavy fur coat slipped and fell into the canal, and the noise drew the fire of the returning Russians. While bullets splashed in the dark water nearby, Lolo returned to pull the woman out — a task made even more difficult because he had sprained his ankle badly a few hours before. Despite the ice-coated boards and the wet fur coat, Lolo managed to fish the woman out — at the price of falling in himself. Unable to climb up on the slippery boards, he struggled until a friendly hand reached down at the last minute to pull him to safety and head him towards his eventual destination: Lawrence, Massachusetts.

Meanwhile, back at peaceful Phillips Academy, Headmaster John Kemper had chosen a young art teacher named Diz Bensley to start an audio-visual program. The program grew apace, and soon Diz needed an assistant. He wisely chose a lady known as Lil (or more properly as Lillian Spillane). The program quickly arrived at the point where the teachers were using so much audio-visual hardware that repair bills were escalating. A sorcerer was needed. Because Diz was also involved at that time helping place Hungarian refugees in the area — you guessed it — Lolo came to Andover and set up his first workshop and recording studio in Graves Hall.

There was one small problem at the outset: the School had no electronics engineer on the payroll, and knowing no better, offered Lolo the salary of an electrician's assistant — a meager $50 a week. A man of diverse talents, Lolo had landed a job in Boston as a draftsman, which paid $125 a week. But because both his parents were educators, he preferred the school atmosphere to the Boston commute (he loved the trees), and he accepted the cut in salary.

Lolo's approach to meeting the Academy's needs was, to say the least, elegant. First, he needed to learn English; he also needed a driver's license. So he had Diz record both questions and answers from the driver's manual on a tape, which he played over and over for several weeks as he repaired equipment; he then took his driver's test and passed with a perfect score. Full command of the language took a little longer, but not much.

When the Arts Center was constructed in 1962, its Audio-Visual Center included a projection booth that fed six viewing rooms. Designing such a facility and wiring a monitoring system that would allow one operator to set proper audio levels simultaneously in each room was no small task. Rather than leave the design and construction to the architects, Lolo took it on himself. He acquired all of the materials (including two 35mm film projectors) from an army surplus warehouse for a cost of about seventy-five dollars. When completed, the facility worked so well that thereafter, when the architects received other jobs involving audio-visual installations, they turned to Lolo for consultation.

By this time it seemed only proper to adjust Lolo's salary, and Diz had been begging the School's business manager to visit the Audio-Visual Center and see the extraordinary breadth and quality of Lolo's work. Instead, the School engaged the personnel manager of the Western Electric plant in Haverhill to "evaluate" Lolo's job and recommend a salary adjustment. After a morning in Lolo's lair he evaluated the booth-monitoring system at $125,000 and evaluated Lolo by offering him a job at Western Electric at double the salary the School was paying. Once more Lolo chose the trees.

By then Lolo had other roots in Andover: he had married the lady named Lil. Lolo spoke Hungarian to their two children; Lil spoke English. The result was that both children were bilingual by the age of three, and when they all went back to Budapest for his first reunion with his parents, there was no problem with communication. The only problem was back in Andover, where the Audio-Visual Center tried to get by for six months without its sorcerer-director.

In the late '60s, Christopher Cook, Director of the Addison Gallery of American Art, invited Lolo to exhibit a piece of work in an Art Department faculty show. Lolo modified an oscilloscope, a device that shows audio wavelengths in the form of a wavy line, and created a device reminiscent of an Etch A Sketch® with constantly-changing curved lines. Producing a kind of visual music, Lolo's "black box" was incontestably the hit of the show. It was essentially the precursor of the current state-of-the-art vector scanning computer for graphics.

Whenever the A.V. Center acquires a new projector, Lolo removes it from its case, takes it back to his lair, and modifies it to a design he thinks it should have had in the first place. Usually his designs have been about three years ahead of the manufacturer. When amplifiers wear out in old film projectors, he installs up-to-date versions he makes from surplus parts. The result: 20-year old projectors, good as new. Out of old telephone ear pieces Lolo made darkroom timers that tick off the seconds.

The sorcerer in his shop, making the part he needs

The more sophisticated equipment becomes part of our lives, the greater the challenges for Lolo. Repairs of office coffee pots and other appliances have become old hat to him. More elegant are the repairs on the language lab facilities and the student radio station, where well-intentioned student fiddlers have often made repairing a straightforward problem as difficult as putting cooked spaghetti back in the box. Recent additions to Lolo's hit parade are the closed-circuit TV system at Isham Infirmary, and the radios and mobile intercoms used by campus police and the School's maintenance crews.

And Lolo performs all these tasks with a difference. Like a man from a time that perhaps never was, Lolo doesn't charge people or School departments for fixing things; he treats his time, effort, and even his materials as if they are of no consequence. Cheerful, gracious, gentlemanly, he derives old-world pride from his various endeavors. Essentially his own boss, he is free to attack problems imaginatively and efficiently; he is concerned only with doing everything he can.

Thus, in the twenty years since the Arts Center opened, the stuff in Lolo's lair has grown even more eclectic. Each year Lolo performs miracles, but keeps within his budget — he builds what he can't afford to buy. But the converse is also true: one can't afford to buy what Lolo builds. And his elegant solutions extend well beyond the field of electronics. He fixes cameras and even grinds lenses. He designs strobe lights for the Studio Photo course and keeps them running. He fixes his own cars; he owns three Volkswagens that are running and cannibalizes two extra bodies and five extra motors for spare parts. He makes his own cheese in his basement, which is also where he has his darkroom. He has been known to fix Christmas toys for faculty members' children. His is the most elegant garden in town, and Hungarian peppers thrive in his window boxes. He is a voracious reader and delights in discussing politics or philosophy or literature or history or art or music with anyone who can find his lair.

Last fall his daughter was married, and Lil and Lolo catered a gourmet reception dinner. Although they now live in a school house, Lolo winterized a porch and built and insulated an upstairs bedroom himself. In anticipation of his retirement years, ten years hence, Lolo has purchased a former post office in a small New Hampshire town because he likes the idea of a brick building; brick's integrity and durability make it aesthetically superior to wood in the eyes of this European gentleman. Of course he will redesign and rebuild the building's interior. But the School is not looking forward to this development; his replacement will be a problem demanding an elegant solution. □

A friend and colleague of Lolo's, the author is the Instructor in Art on the Ammi Wright Lancashire Foundation and a member of the Phillips Academy faculty since 1949.

[Emily] Dickinsinging and the Art Thereof

by John A. Gould

"Form is not fashionable these days. What's being thrown out, of course, is music, which reaches the reader through his senses . . . If you don't use meter, you are throwing away one of the biggest weapons to get at the reader's subconscious and move him."

—May Sarton, interviewed in The Paris Review

May Sarton knows what she's talking about, of course. Meter is poetry's link with music — the beat, which goes on, goes on. In the interview quoted above, she was talking about the writing of poetry, but her remarks translate perfectly to the teaching of it, as well. Meter isn't very fashionable to teach — never mind to write. It's not only the kids who cry "Oh, so boring!" at the thought of scansion and iambs and pentameters; I have a number of colleagues whose eyes roll upward, too.

And I think I know why. All too often prosody, the study of metrical structure, becomes an end in itself. We ask our young scholars to learn metrical terms and to identify metrical patterns only to show they can do it. Or, if we recognize the futility of such mechanical instruction, we may err in the opposite extreme: sparing them this leaden agony, we concentrate on the more accessible and rewarding elements of poetry — images, word play, content. Thus, we throw out form entirely, and in doing so, we throw out a baby with the bath.

Three years ago, when I was teaching at Milton Academy, a friend and colleague named David Grant asked me to help him with an exercise for his American literature class. "You know," he said, "Emily Dickinson took most of her meters from hymns." I remembered being told that in college, but never since had Emily Dickinson's choice of common meter seemed to matter. David knew I had recently joined a choir.

"Can you get the music for 'A Mighty Fortress Is Our God'?"

"Sure," I replied. "And I bet I can learn the tenor."

"Exactly."

He put a slightly edited version of her poem "I heard a Fly buzz when I died" to Martin Luther's grand old hymn. Then he and I and two girls in his class learned our parts. And one morning in November we showed the class precisely where Emily Dickinson had heard the beat.

Subsequently I came to Andover,

Teaching at Andover

Sandra DeJong, a graduate of Harvard-Radcliffe who has taught English at Andover since 1982, offers astute insights into the art of teaching at PA. Her remarks, which constituted an address for New Faculty Orientation delivered in Kemper Auditorium on 4 September 1984, eloquently suggest both the School's concern with pedagogy and the vitality of the Andover faculty, student body, and classroom experience.

by Sandra M. DeJong

When I was home this Labor Day weekend, I mentioned to my mother that I had been asked to serve on a panel that would talk to new faculty about teaching at Andover. She responded by saying, "But I thought you had only been there two years." The situation worsened when I also told her that the other members of the panel were the Chairman of the Science Division, who also happened to be Associate Headmaster, and the Chairman of the Department of Philosophy and Religion. But rather than playing the Sesame Street game, "Which one of these three just doesn't belong here," I thought I would begin with a few immediate disclaimers.

I am not a veteran teacher. Nor am I a "master teacher." I beg the indulgence of those of you for whom what I say is old hat. What I am is new enough to teaching and to Andover that my observations and personal resolutions about teaching may provide new teachers with some insight into the whole undertaking, and veteran teachers with some impressions about Andover in particular.

Let me say that for me, teaching is the most important and most enjoyable part of my work at Andover. I like coaching; I like house counseling; I can even tolerate faculty meetings. But the teaching is where I find myself most challenged and most excited. Andover kids can engage, respond, give. Whether your greatest strengths as a teacher are your youth and energy, or your wisdom and experience, they will respond to you on your own terms. Moreover, Andover students know the value of hard work and how to work hard. Don't be afraid to expect high standards of them. Almost always, they will rise to meet your standards.

But at the same time, don't forget that these superior beings are also very much adolescents. To be sure, these are sophisticated adolescents, not only in their thinking, but also in their ability to build up personal defenses. Almost invariably, they are working through some of the adolescent clichéd-but-true confusions — lack of self-esteem, uncertainty about who they are as social beings, as sexual beings, as intellectual beings. Many of them are away from home for the first time, and suddenly confronted with 1,200 other models for the kind of person to be. Many of them face very strong expectations from their families as to what they should be. In short, while they may be the last to admit it or to show it, they need reinforcement, support, guidance.

Hence the importance of getting to know students well. A student's behavior in your classroom may have nothing to do with you or the subject matter, and a lot to do with homesickness, or the Saturday nights spent alone in the dormitory, or the belief that he or she simply is incapable of achieving at Andover. Meet your students in conference. Talk to them when you see them. Talk to their teachers, their house counselors, their coaches, their academic advisors. Getting to know students is one way to prevent yourself from ever underestimating their complexity, or from losing sight of their individuality. It is too easy to see them as "the kids," the members of the class, or even "the preppy one who always sits in the corner." Appearances are deceptive. The good-looking, well-dressed, energetic kids in your class are all very different people, with very different needs to which you must respond.

So, that is what the kids are like. Now the question arises of what to do with them in the classroom. I have a list of six points which I need to remind myself of continually:

1. Let the kids work as hard as you are working. Particularly in a seminar situation, the commitment to what is happening in the classroom should arise from both teacher and student. One way of doing this is to let the students learn from each other. Have them read their papers aloud in class. Have them edit each other's papers. Let them provide the energy. If your classes seem flat, don't always blame yourself. Let the kids know that you expect them to be as actively present as you are. When the dialogue becomes a monologue, they are the losers.

2. Don't allow bad patterns to establish themselves; patterns are hard to break. Don't lose the quiet student in the corner, or let yourself and the class be directed by the outspoken student. Early on, ask the quiet one questions, easy ones like the name of the main character. Keep asking him questions. Ask the overzealous student to raise his hand, and don't call on him if there are others who want to respond.

3. Don't be afraid of the silences. Andover places great emphasis on energy and action, and too little on pauses and reflection. As my piano teacher used to say when she wanted me to hold the rests for their full time value, "Don't short-change the rests."

4. Be honest — about what you do and don't know, about who you are and what is important to you. To me teaching is not so much a question of putting on a mask, but of allowing yourself to be transparent. Of course, I'm not suggesting you force your values on them, or that each class should be an emotional outpouring. But don't hide either. That is where the self-discovery lies.

5. Be descriptive rather than evaluative in the language you use to respond to students, and encourage them to be the same with each other. A descriptive comment that you understand point A, but you don't see the logical connection between point A and point B is far more useful to a student than the statement that "This paper is incoherent."

6. Finally, don't forget to replenish yourself by pursuing what you like to do. Read books. Write. Think about the issues that compel you. Only by continuing to grow yourself can you continue to give in the classroom.

I close with a suggestion that is really an invitation. I hope what I have said and what you hear in this orientation period will be only the beginning of a discussion about what we do here as teachers. If you are having a particular problem, ask someone about it.

I wish you joy in your teaching and lots of luck. Have fun, and for Heaven's sake don't lose your sense of humor. □

Down the Drain in Style

What's lower than the gutter? The drainpipe, of course. But low or not, few of us, we wager, have lifted our eyes up from our usual realm of vision to notice the various designs ornamenting the drains on many of the Academy buildings. Each of about a dozen School buildings bears a different design; they are in fact, personalized gutters. That they exist at all is more interesting than some of the simple designs themselves. Relics of an age when funds were perhaps more plentiful and priorities were certainly different, they are monuments to an attention to detail that is more felt in the beauty of the campus than consciously observed.

How many have you noticed? Upon which building will you find them? (Turn to p. 24 for the answers.)

where I found myself faced with the joyful task of introducing students to poetry, to prosody, and to Emily Dickinson. David Grant's idea came back to me, and I made some discreet inquiries in the English department. Three other voices came forward — Sandra DeJong, Ann Harper, and Hugh Silbaugh; a soprano, an alto, and a bass, thank Heavens! — all of whom loved the prospect of singing and hadn't been doing much of it recently.

Many hymnals identify the meter of each hymn, making it simple to set particular poems to music. Many are written in "common meter" — the familiar ballad stanza (which Peter Quince in Midsummer Night's Dream calls "eight-and-six") — alternating lines of tetrameter and trimeter. Less regular meters are designated by the number of syllables in each line. In the Episcopal Hymnal, for instance, "Onward, Christian Soldiers" is labeled at the top of the page "65.65.D., with Refrain," in other words, four couplets, the first line of each containing six beats, and the second line, only five. These are followed by a refrain of two similar couplets. Practically speaking, this means that Emily Dickinson's poem "Abraham to kill him" will fit flawlessly into Sir Arthur Sullivan's marchy tune.

We set four poems to music and sat around an empty classroom at ten o'clock on Thursday mornings ringing chords off the bare walls. "What do we call ourselves?" someone asked one day, and Hugh Silbaugh answered, "The Dickensingers. And we sing Dickensongs."

Gradually, tentatively, the Dickensingers came out of their empty classroom. They performed their four Dickensongs for some of their classes. They learned other poems in musical settings: "Sing We and Chant It," a Thomas Morley madrigal with words attributed to Michael Drayton; and two Robert Frost poems, "The Pasture," set by Phillip Gordon, and "Choose Something Like a Star," set by Randall Thompson. They applied for — and received — a grant from the Abbot Academy Association to buy more music. And finally they closed their eyes, took a deep breath, and presented a program of their repertoire before 350 tenth graders at Andover who undertake an investigation of poetry each spring.

The Dickensingers are not overwhelmed by illusion. They know their limitations. No other singing group on campus feels itself threatened by this new ensemble. And yet they feel that they are successfully bringing to students an awareness of the musical nature of lyric poetry. The young prosodists are becoming aware that rhythm is what makes it all possible. "The Dickensingers were very interesting to listen to because of the way they took the rhythm of poems and put it to music," wrote one young critic in a less-than-effusive review for her Music 20 class. "Very interesting." The Dickensingers' heads will swell but slightly with such faint praise! "The rhythm of poems!" The point was made!

It was fun, too. □

RETIREMENTS

Joshua Lewis Miner III

by Edmond E. Hammond, Jr.

To lose Josh Miner to retirement means, for those colleagues with whom he has served, the end of that portion of his larger career that has been Andover's. Though he is known and honored off campus for a multitude of public services and attainments, it is here that we have seen his convictions form and his judgements ripen over the span of thirty-three years.

To enumerate his many deserved recognitions and honors is to pay due respect, on the one hand, but to clutter the mind and to lose the gist of the man on the other. To know him as a friend is to ponder the itch that has shaped him and which continues to animate him. We know that he was the son of strong parents; that he rendered distinguished military service to his country in World War II; and that he was deeply influenced by the German educator and philosopher Kurt Hahn, who was his headmaster when he taught at Gordonstoun School in Scotland early in his career. We can believe that his own growing up was arduous in its allegiance to worthy goals, and that his deepest respect was paid to those whose counsel demanded the realization of the best that was in him.

So it was, that from 1952 onward, in his Andover career as teacher, coach, housemaster, and dean, he set about applying those ideas that had found the greatest validity in his own development. And those convictions, tested and reshaped in the dialectic of school life, have been passed on in the form of bracing counsel to kids for over three decades — "his own and others," most often in a form that would encourage the recipient to revise his vision upward, toward attainment not previously contemplated.

Andover has been important to Josh; it has offered him an arena for growth and testing. And he, reciprocally, has had an impact on the School's vision. Always suspicious of the narrowly intellectual view, he has been ever ready to challenge us to encourage the young to grow in the broadest sense.

Just as Andover has been the right place, the indispensable companion for the journey has been Phebe Stevens Miner. Because she is the daughter and sister of Andover men, her knowledge of and respect for School traditions were in place when she and Josh first began their service here. Over the years she has been an exemplar of good sense and practicality from whom her spouse and five children and many campus friends have derived quiet support. Her own strength and love for the School are reflected in the host of selfless tasks she has undertaken. Their presence together among us has been rich in special awarenesses and special loyalties.

No more felicitous wording could be found to commemorate Josh's years with us than that employed by our Exeter cousins on the occasion of his 45th reunion at that worthy institution last spring:

We salute your work with young people as founder, President, and Chairman of the Board of Outward Bound, as physics teacher, and as Admissions Dean. You have kept faith with Samuel and John Phillips' imperative of usefulness to mankind.

It is that spirit we celebrate and honor by Faculty Resolution this 16th day of May, 1984.

Hilda Stroop Whyte

Hilda Whyte is giving herself a wonderful present — early retirement. With characteristic enthusiasm she plans to plunge into this new stage of her life, “curious about what this can and will mean for her,” as one of her retired colleagues puts it.

Hilda began teaching at Berkshire Country Day School in Pittsfield, where she started its Science Department. In 1966, she moved to PA where she became “the Minister’s wife,” her husband, Jim, having succeeded Gray Baldwin as Andover’s chaplain. She missed teaching and therefore was delighted when Abbot hired her in the fall of 1967 to teach physics, introduction to physical science, and the history of science. Soon thereafter she became head of the Science Department. Seldom during those years was her faithful golden retriever, MacGregor, far from her side in her Abbot Hall lab. As Carolyn Goodwin, her former Dean of Studies at Abbot says, Hilda “always took her teaching very seriously and went out of her way to learn the latest methods of teaching her new courses — especially those for the younger students.” She and her students spent hours lovingly cleaning, classifying, and arranging the Abbot shell collection, then carefully moving it to its present Evans Hall location.

The late ‘60s and ‘70s were difficult and tense times in boarding schools. For Hilda the tensions were also personal. As Jim dealt with the effects of social issues on the community, the controversial campus issue of compulsory chapel, and his own illness, her unfailing sensitivity and courage showed in her candor and good humor. She faced the realities of a situation — not possibilities — head on.

With the merger of our two schools in 1973, Hilda joined the PA Science Division. With typical energy and tenacity, Hilda took on new challenges — biology (a new course for her), academic advising, the usual cluster jobs of chaperoning both social events and Commons duty, and coaching tennis — that is, until she broke her back taking lessons to improve her coaching skills. “It’s a dangerous game!” Hilda jokingly insists. Hilda devoted hours to students who needed advice or expertise, yet she still found time to earn her Master of Science at Tufts University, to unwind at an Addison Gallery concert, to ski to class during the big blizzard of ‘78, and to teach a February Week course on repairing Oriental rugs. Peter McKee, head of the Science Division, says, “There is no more caring teacher than Hilda. She considers any student’s failure her own. She prepares her classes carefully and her presentations are lively and clear. Her good humor is contagious — she will be greatly missed.” Her colleague Barbara Hawkes has always been impressed by “her strong sense of duty and responsibility, her absolute professionalism, her fair treatment of others, and her uncanny ability to judge people accurately.”

This Michigan lady, who accompanied her parents to the United States from Germany when she was five, is seldom relaxed, or as people say now, “laid-back.” She eagerly shares her energy and enthusiasm for life’s adventures and challenges. To hear this raconteur describe a Moroccan bazaar, a washout on an Earthwatch trip, or an encounter with police on a Greek isle is to be transported to the scene.

At the center of her life, however, has always been her family. As a Mt. Hermon friend says, “The one word that says it best is devotion.” To Jim: to this day no Boston driver dares get in her way because of her long experience of driving him to the hospital. To her children: Robin, Eric, and Kristen, whenever any of them needed her. To her mother: especially when Hilda spent a sabbatical year in Michigan nursing her dying Mutti.”

That devotion spills over to her friends, to her work, and to her home on Cape Cod. That is where the next adventure begins. Now she can have, in her own words, “time to read and contemplate, immerse myself in music, go white-water rafting down the Colorado again . . . canoe in Alaska . . . join Earthwatch research expeditions . . . tend to my farm in Michigan . . . spend time with my new granddaughter.” What a lovely present retirement will be for you, Hilda. You’ve earned it — enjoy it all!

Events

To quote cartoon character Pogo, "We are confronted by insurmountable opportunities." PA's winter term teemed with concerts, lectures, readings, plays, films, and exhibitions. Three hundred Uppers and Seniors enrolled in the non-credit Headmaster's Symposium, "The Americas: A Dialogue North and South." In six Sunday lectures, movies, and Wednesday discussion groups with faculty, the students focused on relations between the United States and Mexico, Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Instructor in Theatre Kevin Heelan portrays one of the eight characters in his own one-man show, Ten East.

In January PA Drama Instructor Kevin Heelan performed his own play, Ten East. In his one-man show Heelan brilliantly portrayed eight different characters in a mental hospital. The set was only two folding chairs and a changing screen upstage. Having portrayed a character, Heelan strolled behind the screen only to reappear seconds later as a different person. The characters ran the gamut — pathetic and humorous, tender and violent, male and female, young and ancient, frail and obese. Sometimes humorous, sometimes rich in pathos, sometimes rife with unsettling black humor, the fast-paced play never let up — on actor or audience.

The PA community honored Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday at an all-school meeting that featured remarks by the Headmaster, students reading from "A Letter from the Birmingham Jail," Mozart's haunting "Quintet for Clarinet and Strings," performed by a student-faculty quintet, and English Instructor Thylias Moss's resounding declamation of King's "I have a Dream" speech. Afro-Latino-American Society President, Sidney Smith '85, emphasized that the audience should not be "concerned with blame or responsibility for the past," but should share "the hope for the future that inspired Martin Luther King, Jr. to great heights."

The Music Department celebrated Mozart's 229th birthday with the Mozart Birthday Weekend, which began with a party — complete with hats, ice cream and cake, and music by a number of ensembles and soloists. Most unusual was Cambridge musician Zeroa Meyer's performance of Mozart's works for glass harmonica, an instrument invented by Benjamin Franklin. On Saturday renowned pianist Karl Ulrich Schnabel conducted a piano master class, and Sunday featured an afternoon concert in Cochran Chapel by the Academy Chamber Orchestra, a group comprised of faculty, townspeople, and local professionals.

The School did not observe Elvis Presley's fiftieth birthday, 8 January, in any official way.

Faculty

Nine faculty members received Kenan Grants to help finance individual scholarly and creative projects this summer. Three grants were awarded to support projects in the visual arts, three in music, and the remaining three in computers, psychology, and the Classics. Art Instructor Mary McCarthy will use her grant to work on her book about weaving and quilting and the women involved with these arts, particularly women of the mid-1800s. Stephen Wicks, an art instructor, received his grant to organize slides he has taken over the last fifteen years into a coherent presentation that tells a story. English Instructor and professional photographer Kelly Wise will use his grant to work on his latest book, Portraits: Men and Women of Letters, a collection of photographs of American writers and intellectuals. Chairman of the Music Department, William Thomas, received a grant to establish, with Music Instructor Mimi Bravar, a resident string trio. Music Instructor Christopher Walter will use his grant to allow him to spend the summer preparing for twelve solo piano recitals. Sally Slade Warner, record librarian and PA carillonneur, will use her grant to study under Milford Myhre at Bok Tower Gardens in Lake Wales, Florida. She will also be doing research to find more music suitable for the PA carillon. Math Instructor Albert Coons received a grant to develop teacher and student handbooks for the LOGO computer language. Margaret Jackson, Instructor in Psychology and Graham House counselor, will use her grant to further her research in women's achievement motivation. Classics Instructor Brent Vine received a grant to support the research and preparation of several scholarly articles.

While Kenan Grants support individuals' scholarly and creative projects, Abbot Academy Association Grants support institutional educational ventures at PA. The grants are made possible by a million dollar endowment established with unrestricted Abbot Academy funds when Abbot and Phillips merged in June 1973. This year Dean of Faculty Jack Richards received the largest Abbot grant to run a three-week workshop on the Russian language and literature for faculty members traveling to the Soviet Union this summer. Victor Young, Director of (MS)², Mathematics and Science for Minority Students, received a grant to support minority counseling on campus. Jean St. Pierre, head of the English Department, and English Instructor Elwin Sykes will use their grant to finalize a teacher's institute in English and a program in English composition for minority students from urban areas. The Reverend Richard Gross, S.J. received a grant to fund the community service program. Math Instructor Nat Smith and his wife, Priscilla Bonney-Smith, are using their grant to study females who are talented in math. Headmaster Donald McNemar received a grant to fund this year's Headmaster's Symposium. Jean Palmer, Assistant to the Director of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, has used her grant to purchase a Dialog Computer Service for the Library. School Archivist Ruth Quattlebaum is using her grant to continue conserving and restoring the Phillips family papers. Head of the Language Division Hale Sturges received a grant to continue to send PA students to school in Harbin, China. Graham House counselor Margaret Jackson and Associate Dean of Residence Priscilla Bonney-Smith received a grant to fund a conference on eating disorders. Director of Graham House Jonathan Marlowe received a grant for the renovation of Graham House and a smaller grant for weekend activities at Graham House; Biology Instructors Barbara Hawkes and Lydia Goetze will use their grant for demonstration and laboratory equipment for molecular biology. English Instructor, minority counselor, and advisor to the Afro-Latino-American Society Myrna Santiago received a grant on behalf of Af-Lat-Am for Latin Arts Weekend.

PA Writer-in-Residence Margaret F. Gibson was one of 51 poets awarded a Fellowship for Creative Writers by the National Endowment for the Arts. The purpose of the $20,000 award, according to the Endowment, is to enable "published writers of exceptional talent" to set aside time for writing, research, or travel.

Business

The Trustees have set 1985-86 tuition and fees at $9700 for boarding students and $7350 for day students. This represents a 5.4% increase over last year's tuition.

Health

Despite the sniffles and coughs that swept across campus in the cold months, the School's fall and winter schedules exhibited a keen interest in health issues. Along with students at Exeter, 200 students taking courses in Biology continued to participate in a four-year study of the effects of a reduced sodium and cholesterol diet on blood pressure; the study is run by the University of Massachusetts Medical School and funded by the National Institute of Health. Instructors from the Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation visited the campus for the third year, engaging all new students in a program of drug and alcohol education and offering old students a choice of seminars and workshops on a dozen interesting topics, from cocaine to relaxation and meditation. Food Fright returned to Andover with their program about eating disorders. Their humorous and poignant cabaret dramatizing women's obsessions with food, weight, and body image and the discussion after the program were before a standing-room-only audience in Kemper Auditorium. A representative of the Samaritans, a suicide hot-line organization, spoke one evening to a spell-bound audience of students and faculty about how to identify and deal with a potential suicide.

But the concern was not limited to the students' health. In her program entitled "Ladies of the Eighties," Assistant Director of Athletics Katherine Henderson began a series of clinics for female faculty, spouses, and staff on the use of the weight room. In addition, two faculty members and two students teach about 60 faculty, spouses, and staff in coed aerobic classes for beginners, intermediates, and advanced. CPR training continues apace, with the intent that most of the School community be certified in CPR; sometime during the year, each student will take two days out of sports for the training.

Evans Hall farewell

She knows the name of virtually every student who has worked in the chemistry, biology, and physics labs in the last seventeen years. Now Anne Weld is retiring. Now who will gladly enable sick or errant students to make up missed labs? Who will cajole ("Think!") and terrorize ("Don't spill anything in the weighing room!") while taking such interest in the students' welfare? Now who will so patiently and meticulously supply teachers in the three physical science departments with the myriad of solutions, frogs, and gadgets they need for class demonstrations and student labs? Students and colleagues will miss her very much.

Athletics

Last 18 November, Frank Di-Clemente, beloved PA faculty member and coach for many years, was presented with the Distinguished Service Award by the New England Private Schools Athletic Council for his many years of service to that organization. Not only was he one of the founders and a past president of the council, but he also published the annual NEPSAC Directory, an indispensable resource in New England private school athletics; in lean years, Deke even dipped into his own pocket to produce the Directory.

Deke is the first recipient of this award, which was probably created specifically with him in mind.

In January members of the varsity and junior varsity boys and girls squash teams were treated to two days of clinics with Hashim Khan, seven-time winner of the British Open Squash Championship. A brilliant coach and author of Squash Racquets: The Khan Game, Khan exhibited legendary racquet control and accuracy. □

For the last seven years, the Alumni-Varsity Lacrosse game has been a highlight of the spring sports season. Although the boys' lacrosse team has compiled 11-2 records in each of the last two springs, the alumni team has been equal to the challenge each year. In fact, last spring the alumni beat the Northern New England champs, 12-6.

All male alumni lacrosse players are invited to play in the eighth annual game on Saturday, 18 May, at 2:00. Please call Athletic Director Paul Kalkstein at (617) 475-3400, ext. 191 for details.

Soccer players, male and female, should be sure to set aside 22 September for the Second Alumni/Alumnae Soccer Games here at PA at 2:00.

Alumni Reunion Weekend

The Andover/Abbot classes ending in 0 and 5 will have their class reunions on 7-9 June. The reunion weekend reservation form and preliminary program schedule will be mailed by 1 April.

The annual meeting of the Andover-Abbot Alumni Association will be held during Reunion Weekend on Saturday, 8 June at 10:00 a.m. in the Memorial Gymnasium.

If there are any questions about reunions please contact Denis Tippo, Director of Alumni and Parent Affairs, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover MA 01810 (617/475-3400, ext. 283).

Alumni Publications

The Andover Bulletin is happy to announce the publication of books by its graduates and its faculty. Because projected dates for publication often prove unreliable, however, we do not announce a book until we have a copy in hand. All books sent to us will be shelved and catalogued in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with the Alumni Collection.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Sir:

I recently received the very handsome Annual Report of Phillips Academy. I was impressed by its beauty and comprehensive character. I read the inspiring addresses of the Headmaster and his chief assistants, and I finally arrived at the list of contributions.

I was pleased to see my name at the top of the list. These things are arranged, of course, on the basis of age. I was also pleased that you didn't even reveal the smallness of my contribution, but my euphoria was checked when I saw that after my name there was a small "d," indicating that I am deceased.

My first reaction was to think of Mark Twain's comment: "the reports of my death are greatly exaggerated."

Then I thought of Woody Allen, who recently said, "It isn't that I am afraid to die, I just don't want to be there when it happens." Apparently my alma mater has helped me achieve Woody's ideal as I certainly don't feel I was there when it happened.

Franz Schneider '04

P.S. I recounted these circumstances to an old Irishman who was driving me to New York for a directors' dinner, and he said: "Well, it was a mistake, wasn't it?"

Fall Sports

This fall, Andover's athletic teams compiled a collective 44-24-6 record (a .594 winning percentage). The girls' teams led the way, with the soccer, field hockey, and cross-country squads all posting winning records.

The girls' soccer team, coached by Sherman Drake and led by high-scorers Nell Gharibian and Ellen LeMaitre, continued its legacy of victorious seasons by finishing with a record of 13 wins, 1 loss, and 2 ties. An auspicious beginning with a scrimmage win over Andover High School paved the way to early season success. The season's only loss came against a tough Holder-ness squad, who edged the Blue 4-3. The girls capped off the successful season with a brilliant first-place finish at the Andover-Exeter Invitational Tournament at Andover.

Field hockey, under coach Ada Fan, completed the season with an impressive 10-3-1 record. Although the team lost the home opener to Groton and the last game of the season to Exeter with a heartbreaking 1-0 score, it nevertheless shone throughout the season, winning every game in between, save for a midseason loss to St. Paul's. Leading the team were Senior forwards Stephanie Sanchez and Fern Ward on offense and captain Julia Trotman on defense; Sanchez and Ward each scored eight goals during the season.

Another success story lay in the girls' cross-country team's victorious season. Helped by the effective coaching of Elwin Sykes and the brilliant running of star runner Paige Cox, the team began with a first-place finish at the Milton Invitational and carried the momentum to post wins over Thayer Academy, Noble and Greenough, and Milton Academy. A close, one-point loss to Northfield Mt. Hermon ensued, after which the runners regained the winning edge by trouncing St. Paul's, Concord Academy, and Exeter. Finally, the girls came away from the Interschols with a first-place finish.

The girls' volleyball team, coached by Victor Svec, ended the season with a 4-4 record. The tight squad was led by captain Kate Cooper and the team's most valuable player, Meg Bottcher.

Like the girls', the boys' cross-country team finished the season with style, grabbing the first-place trophy at the Interschols competition. The Interschols victory, PA's first in twelve years, was a fitting end to a misleading 4-4 regular season. Coached by Bob Burnham, the team was led by Senior Mike Schaus, who consistently topped all Andover runners despite the fact that it was the first season he had run cross-country.

Boys' soccer, under coach Meredith Price, could not repeat last year's victorious performance, and finished with a disappointing record of 5-6-2. Though the squad started out strong, winning or tying five of its first six matches, inconsistent offense coupled with tough competition led to a dismal second half of the season. A season-ending tie against Exeter was appropriate. Senior Graeme Davis powered the offense, and co-captains Jonathan Schwarz and Jon Crawford anchored the tough defense. Inconsistency also marred the exploits of the varsity football team, which compiled a disappointing 1-5-1 record. Although the defense remained solid and aggressive throughout the season, the offense, which centered around ball control and the ground game, could not produce more than one touchdown per game. In the Blue's only victory, over Deerfield on Parents' Weekend, the one touchdown proved enough as the defense controlled the game and the running offense ground out the yardage. This victory marked one of the most significant non-Exeter wins in recent Andover history, as the team went in as a two-touchdown underdog against a previously unbeaten Deerfield squad. Tailback Scott Glasser and receiver Kevin Minicus powered the offense, and the compact line and linebackers anchored the defense. The season ended on a sour note when the team lost to Exeter, 26-12.

Winter Sports

At midterm, Andover's winter sports have compiled an impressive record of 54 wins and 36 losses. Leading the pack is girls' basketball, which is currently 6-0. With eight returning Seniors, the team's defense and depth are its strongest assets. Captain Nancy Colbert, Jennie Wadsworth, and Robin Crestwell have proven invaluable to the team, for their tenacity; coach Nancy Boutilier ignites the girls' endless enthusiasm and spurs them to victory.

The boys' basketball team is also having an impressive season, posting a 7-3 record thus far. In the first game of the season, against Fitchburg, the Blue unveiled its powerful front line, with Peter Alberding grabbing 71 rebounds and Arthur Mann doing his Larry Bird imitation and scoring 40 points. The following week the team battled against its toughest opponent, New Hampton (a team which they have not beaten since 1964), and came away with a heartbreaking 82-81 loss. Co-captains Dan Sheehan and Sid Smith are looking forward to the Brooks Tournament later in the season.

Andover's boys' and girls' track teams have had mixed success so far this season, accruing 3-2 and 2-1 records, respectively. Girls' track, in its first year as an official varsity sport, lost to a tough Holy Cross squad in its first meet despite many outstanding individual performances. Co-captain Paige Cox led the way with a spectacular time of 11:08 in the 3000m and a second-place finish in the 1500m. Lower Caroline Pool also shone by turning in two second-place finishes and a third-place finish. Two weeks later in a tri-meet against Milton and Lawrence High, the girls avenged this loss by defeating their opponents, 56-34-14.

The boys' track team, led by captain Chris Patrick, posts a 2-3 record at midterm with victories over Milton and Lawrence High School. The season opened on an unsavory note when Andover High beat the Blue; two weeks later the team lost a heartbreaker to Holy Cross JV during the last few events despite the heroics of Chris Patrick and Jorge Mora (who threw his best shot put of the season — 48' 7"), and the superb contribution made by underclassmen Kendall Price, Alec Guettel, and Todd Fletcher.

The wrestling team is heading toward another successful season despite a tough schedule. Although the team is somewhat lacking in experience, through hard work and devotion it has compiled an impressive 4-2 record. Co-captain Dave Castle is currently undefeated and Jake Elsas, a fourth-year wrestler, Jim Cho, and Jefferson Allen are also having great seasons.

Boys' hockey, led by John Matterazzo and Mark Glover, is having a successful year with a respectable record of 9-9. The team began the season with an excellent fourth-place finish at the Marr Christmas Tournament, a great improvement over the last-place showing a year ago. After disappointing losses to Lawrence Academy and Harvard JV, the Blue faced two strong squads in Deerfield and Choate. While the team played well, the opposition proved too strong and beat the Blue 9-5 and 4-3, respectively. The icemen then proceeded to defeat Arlington Catholic and play their best game of the season against Yale. Yale, which had previously defeated the same Harvard team that pummeled PA 8-1, faced a vastly-improved Andover team. John Matterazzo, Jon Crawford, and Bayne Findlay all turned in superior performances, but a Yale goal with 3:32 left to play sealed Andover's fate, and left the score at 4-3.

The girls' hockey team, like the boys', is also having a .500 season as its record stands at 4-4. Co-captains Kate Flather and Julia Trotman, and Lower superstar Eliza Minot have led the Blue's offense while Eleanor Tydings and goalie Brita Strandberg have anchored the defense. After losing its first two games of the season, the team came out with incredible intensity to beat St. Paul's 4-3 (with all four Andover goals scored by Trotman) and demolish Concord 8-2. Following two tough losses against skilled Groton and Noble teams, Andover obliterated New Hampton 11-0 and handed archrival Exeter a 5-4 loss.

Girls' swimming has had a disappointing season so far this term despite the great performances of Amy Pritchard, Abbie Falb, and Jenny Greene. After two initial losses to the Andover YMCA and Loomis Chaffee, the team came back in a tri-meet to beat Hotchkiss but unfortunately to lose to Suffield by a mere 8 points. The following week the Blue faced an experienced Haverhill team and turned in its best performance so far this season. Amy Pritchard, who holds the New England Prep School Record in the 500-yard freestyle, raced to an unofficial School record in the 200 I.M. and Jenny Greene, Melissa Morton and Lisa Lincoln swept the diving events.

Although the boys' swim team had only four Seniors returning from last year's 9-2 team, the Blue has performed quite well and posts a 2-2 record. Having lost its first meet against a talented Loomis Chaffee squad, the team rebounded to beat Hotchkiss and Suffield in a tri-meet. The Blue's superstar this year is Upper Jon Bernstein, who has beaten all opponents in the 500-yard and 200-yard freestyle events. Captain Jason Marx, Lower Bill McNulty, and Junior Derek Wong are also having excellent years.

Both the boys' and the girls' squash teams are having spectacular seasons, earning records of 6-1 and 4-2, respectively. The boys' team asserted itself as a powerhouse at its first match by edging out a tenacious Belmont team. Its one loss this season came against a tough St. Paul's team, which beat the Blue by 3 points out of the hundreds tallied. The team took its revenge the following week, destroying archrival Exeter 7-0 and edging Milton 3-2. Andover's top three seeds, Seniors Bob Hopkins and Bill Parsons, and Upper Jim Kingsbury, are strong competitors, and the middle seeds are providing a solid backbone.

Despite five members of the girls' squash team having graduated and the injury of number one seed Whitney Stewart, the team has had an incredible season. After losing to Harvard JV and crushing Middlesex, the girls destroyed perennially strong St. Paul's 6-1, demonstrating the depth and spirit of this relatively inexperienced team. The following week the Andover squad blasted Exeter 6-1, but faltered against an amazing Groton team.

The boys' and girls' gymnastics teams, with only five meets between them, have both shown vast improvements since the beginning of the term. Boys' gymnastics, under coach Kenneth Maglio, is currently 1-1 after a loss to Reading High and a victory over its cross-town rival. While inexperience hurt the team in its season opener, the team tallied a respectable 85.65 points and co-captain Jamie Bernardin set a new School record of 6.0 on the rings. The Blue turned in a very impressive 94.1-85.6 victory over Andover High as co-captain Steve Shrestinian and Peter Meyer had an excellent meet.

Girls' gymnastics, under coach Jack Gleason, has had a disappointing 0-2 start. In its first meet of the season, PA's injury-plagued team faced New Hampshire State Champion Salem High and lost by a respectable score of 112-93. The following week the team lost to Northfield Mt. Hermon in spite of several excellent individual efforts. Captain Becky Thomas, Kristin duBay and Kath Campbell all have been consistent performers for the team, and Coach Gleason expects a better second half of the season.

Andover's boys' and girls' alpine skiing teams are off to a strong start with two victories for the girls and one victory and one second for the boys. In their season opener, the boys were bested by Deerfield in spite of the brilliant skiing of John Recesso, Kyle Sowles, and captain Casey Jones. One week later, however, Recesso led the way to a first-place finish over Holderness, St. Paul's, Gould, and New Hampton. The girls won their first race of the season against St. Paul's with Heidi Salin and Nikki Vadeboncoeur placing second and third, respectively. In its second meet, a 5-team race, the team competed without Salin and captain Karen Nott, but still captured first place. □

Secretary of his PA Class of 1922, graduate of Yale in 1926, Don Walker had really two vocations — banking and education. As a banker he was associated at various times in his career with W.A. Harriman and Co., Brown Brothers Harriman & Co., and Union Trust in New Haven, from which he retired as vice president in 1972.

His interest in education prompted him to interrupt his banking career from 1948 till 1959 to serve in the Admissions Office of Yale, where his roles included Executive Secretary of the Committee on Enrollment and Scholarships, Associate Director of Undergraduate admissions, and resident Fellow of Calhoun College. Even after he returned to banking, Don's expertise enabled him to counsel dozens of youngsters to the appropriate school, college, or summer session, and later on in their career goals.

Besides serving his country as lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve in World War II, Don served his community selflessly. In Southbury, CT, he was Chairman of the Economic Development Commission, 1972-75; on the Board of Selectmen, 1975-77; and on the Planning Commission, 1977-78. 1958 Jon B. Higgins Middletown, CT; 7 December 1984 (see class notes)

Jon Higgins, an internationally acclaimed singer of Indian music and director of Wesleyan University's Center for the Arts died 7 December when he was struck by a hit-and-run driver near his home in Middletown, Conn.

"This is an unspeakable tragedy," Wesleyan President Colin G. Campbell said. "An internationally acclaimed artist who had the courage and the capacity to master the art of another culture, Jon Higgins was also a fine scholar and a committed teacher ..."

He performed a concert of South Indian music at Carnegie Hall in May 1964 after studying Indian music at Wesleyan for two years. In 1965 he went to India on a Fulbright Scholarship to study music under T. Viswanathan, one of India's foremost musicians and now an artist in residence at Wesleyan.

Mr. Higgins had achieved prominence and a wide following in India as the first westerner to master the difficult art of singing South Indian classical music. His first public performance in India in April of 1965, before a crowd of 10,000, amazed his listeners.

Mr. Higgins grew up in Andover and after graduation from Phillips Academy, he obtained a bachelor's degree (1962), a master's (1964) and a doctorate (1973) in ethnomusicology from Wesleyan.

During the 70s, Mr. Higgins served as an assistant professor and assistant dean of the faculty of fine arts at York University in Toronto. He also was councillor and former secretary of the Society for Ethnomusicology, was a member of the board of directors of the Society for Asian Music and a member of the ethnomusicology steering committee of the American Association of Asian Studies. He was active in his community, serving on the board of directors of Oddfellows Playhouse and the board of the Midletown Foundation for the Arts. He was a member of the choir of the First Congregational Church.

He is survived by his wife, Rhea Padis Higgins; sons, Luke, 12, and Niko 9; and a brother, noted jazz pianist Hayden "Eddie" Higgins.

In my last Class Notes I wrote that there were only seven survivors of the Class of 1910, all over 90, and we were not very newsworthy except when we made that inevitable rendezvous with St. Peter. I am glad to say that all who were living then still survive. So I write about not what our classmates are doing but what they once did.

Today I write about Charlie Donworth with whom I roomed for three years at Yale after Andover. I sat beside Charlie at graduation in June 1910. He had worn a new pair of shoes for the occasion and they were so uncomfortable that he took them off. To his horror he was called to the podium to receive a prize for excellence in Greek. Two of us helped him get his shoes back on, and there was a delay until he finally squeaked his way up to the platform amidst laughter and applause.

He went on to law school and eventually became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington state.

Your Class Agent-Secretary is not able to submit reports of your activities unless you write to me with your news! I venture to say that all of you turn to the Class Notes within a few minutes of receiving the Bulletin to see what's happened to other members of our class, and then you wonder "why in hell is my name not listed anywhere?" The reason is simple — I can't make up what each of you fellows is doing! The only note I have is from Ben Richardson which he wrote out longhand; his writing wasn't too good but it's a damn sight better than mine. I quote. "At 87 I'm in good health and active in my life's work, farming. I am thankful to be a graduate of Andover; my memories of my years at PA with Al Stearns, Cecil Bancroft, Charlie Forbes, and all the rest are still vivid, and were without doubt the best years of my life."

As you read this, our 70th Reunion was more than 10 months ago. The only other member of our class that was there was Don Wright. We spent some time together and had dinner across the table from each other, but neither of us had much news from the rest of you.

So do put pen to paper so that each of us will have a chance to know something about what the rest of the classmates are up to for the next issue of the Bulletin.

Mert Perry has written about a hair-raising, mule-back ride on mountainous Molokai in Hawaii. The mule was Gloria and his guide Clarence Coehlo. After Clarence asked his party to sign waivers, he likened mule riding to educational progression and said "when you get to college, then you have many mule pockets." [A pothole-type depression on the trail.] Now quoting Mert: "Believe me, a mule pocket a minute. The mules are roped together. I grip the front and rear of the saddles. Gloria zigs and I zag. She likes to nibble at wooden fences. It can be a bit disconcerting when you are 2,000 feet above the beautiful blue sea. We hit a mule pocket, sail two feet in the air, plop down hard in the saddle and groan. There are 26 hairpin turns; the path is less than two feet wide and all rocks; a three mile trip through rain forests, slipping and sliding; the waterfalls cascading 2,000 feet in breath-taking view, but the cliffs are sheer. At the bottom of the trail, Clarence warns that your knees may buckle when you dismount, so I waited five minutes. They buckled anyway. The trip was finished with a Mai Tai. 'Night and You in Blue Hawaii' is no longer a song; it becomes reality." Mert feels he has not just gone to mule riding college, but even beyond graduate school.

Joe Chatman hasn't had much luck in attending recent reunions, but keeps in touch via the postal service. He and Jeri are pretty much settled in Rye, NY, and he has turned over the old family homestead in Kennebunkport, which was built in 1779, to his oldest daughter, Janet. Joe has seven great-grandchildren and has trouble keeping track of all their birthdays.

Dwight Colburn has diabetes, but gets around and has outlived his relatives by 35 years. He has been quite a regular Yale rooter at Harvard-Yale football games, and last fall attended the Eli victory at Cambridge. He does, however, miss going with our late classmate Parker Dudley.

Bert Mayers says "Things are not going too well as I write, but I have reason to think that by 1985 they will be better." A grandson Noah, quite a soccer player, may be applying to PA in a few years, and two granddaughters are prospects. He is enthused about index options and would like to know if "any classmates are hooked on them." He keeps in touch with Bill Gary '18, who joined us at our last reunion.

I received a welcome letter from Fritz Clement in early December. At the time he was trying to shake off a siege of viral pneumonia, but is still playing golf three to four times a week. Sadly, his wife continues in a nursing home. Between them, there are 21 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Fritz's tangible loyalty to Andover is outstanding and heartily appreciated. Rowlie Bannister's second wife died last June. They had no children, but he says "she had a very good relationship with my progeny of three, 13 grandchildren, and 11 great-grandchildren."

Allen Griffin and his wife, Ruth, have both been seriously ill, but he took time to write and express his support for Andover. Here's hoping they are both feeling better when they read this, knowing how much we appreciate them.

A valued friend of Andover and mine, Henry Penfield, died 28 October at his home in Paradise Valley (near Scottsdale), Arizona. He had a notable athletic career, starting with football and swimming at PA, and he continued the same sports at Northwestern University where he was named to the All-Conference (big ten) and All-Western football teams. A tackle, he played next to his brother Graham '18. Graduating in 1923, he joined Northwestern Life Insurance Co. and also served as Treasurer and Mayor of his college town, Evanston. In World War II he joined the U.S. Navy, serving as Lieutenant Commander in charge of recruitment in the Chicago area. After the war, he joined the executive recruiting firm of George Frye Associates, retiring in 1963, moving to Arizona. From this base, he and his wife, Henrietta, traveled extensively, including our 50th reunion at Andover and a much appreciated call on Izzie and me here in Durham with their daughter Nancy. A heart condition did not faze him; they went to Hawaii in the summer of 1984 and attended a grandchild's wedding in California a month before his death. Henry made a host of friends; and his close family ties were spearheaded by his romance with Henrietta, dating back to his college days. Her address is 5627 North Invergordon Road, Paradise Valley, AZ 85253. He is also survived by daughter Nancy and son Henry, Jr., 11 grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and two sisters.

From his son George we learn that Frank K. Newkirk passed away on 22 November 1984 after a short illness, but at this writing we have no further details.

John Cushman has been named chairman of his 60th class reunion at Harvard and is now preparing for that big event. He was formerly Vice President of Old Colony Trust in Boston where he had spent most of his business career.

Bill Dwight writes that they have sold their home in Holyoke, Mass. and are now at their condo-villa in Florida on Siesta Key. They expect to spend most of the year there except for visits to New England a couple of months of the year.

A card from Don Leach advises that he is playing a great deal of golf, but still has time to be the Treasurer of the Lyme Historical Society and the Florence Griswold Museum. Having lived previously on Cape Cod, he is now enjoying life in Essex, Connecticut.

Tom Darling, in a note to me, tells me of the sad death of his wife, Dorothy, in January of 1984. Answering my note to him, Abe Clark writes as follows: "This fall I gave up golf. I can't break 100 and my feet hurt."

In the December issue of Yankee magazine, there is a very interesting article about Ben Spock and his current activities, which include sailing in Maine and the Caribbean, and sculling in Arkansas.

A corrected date, 20 July 1984, has just been received for the death of George A. Sullivan. He leaves his wife Elizabeth who lives in Sarasota, FL. We are also sorry to have to report the death of John N. Winton of Eagle Point, Oregon. He is survived by his wife, Harriet. The sympathy of the class is extended to the surviving members of the families of these deceased class members.

It sure was a busy time to request news, but I heard from four out of twelve of you! Kay Gage, Sr. Mary Anslem, C.S.M., was the first reply, saying she understood my deadline for she has that problem too. You remember I told you that Kay had broken her hip? In September the pins were removed from her hip and at the same time surgery was performed on both hands for what she called "trigger fingers." The hip has healed well and the fingers are taking more time, but coming. She does hours of therapy and playing with damp sponges to exercise her hands. Congratulations are due Kay on the occasion of her birthday! Says she feels venerable and foolish at the same time, but loves being an octogenarian.

Gertrude Franklin Callahan's news came the next day. She still spends her winters in Newbury, MA where she is very active in the town, and among friends of many years. However, a grandson was with her this summer at Rye, NH. He starts his business career at Data General in Portsmouth after an ME & MBA from Cornell. She thinks my periodic calls for news are "wonderful," but bless her, if she and other classmates didn't respond, it wouldn't be very wonderful for me. I appreciate even a little news.

This is the second time George, Marian Saunders Cheesborough's son, has sent me word from her. She is fine and gets out a lot though not very far. Her eyes are bothersome but fortunately can be restored to good shape. She has fond memories of Abbot and Smith College. Sandy had a first great-grandson born last May and there are two great-granddaughters as well!

A Christmas card from Helen Knight Wilkinson gave me news that she expects to go on a cruise in mid-February to mid-March, ending up in Florida. Expect she will be in touch with others in our class there!

Betty Brewster Thompson sent a few words saying she is editor of the Hospital Newsletter in the hospital in Cambridge, MD where she has been busy for some years.

All these girls send you love and best wishes for a happy year.

I must tell you the heart-warming surprise I received in October. The Class Baby (he is 60!) and I had been moving quite a few pieces of furniture and everything was in a mess, when the doorbell rang and there was Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews beaming at me! She and Margo, her daughter, were travelling from Washington, DC and took time to look me up. I'm pretty sure we haven't seen each other since our 50th Class Reunion. Needless to say our tongues wagged! Hope more of you will do it. I'm on the first left hand street when you turn left from R 109, onto R 1 coming from the Maine Pike. Try it! Love, Olivia.

This note could be titled "Dilemma of a Scribe." Chapter One: Supplier fails to get order for reply cards to Scribe. Chapter Two: Scribe leaves minimal (read not enough) time for answers to hasty call for news. Chapter Three: Even if first two chapters were different, editor's rules restrict volume of news permissible for any one edition of the Bulletin. Hence, Scribe can't issue too many calls lest he get too many answers (oh, frabjous day!). Contrariwise, too few pleas risks no answers — a scribe's nightmare. Chapter Four: Solution: fire the Scribe. Caution: if you favor firing the Scribe, be sure to volunteer as his successor. Chapter Five: These notes are necessarily brief and any late answers will be featured way into the fall of 1985.

Otto Alcaide sent Christmas greetings that reported his extensive volunteer services and his visits with his family since we last heard from him. I wish members of PA '23 would keep me and you in touch with their lives and activities as well as Otto does. Our ranks will grow smaller as we age, whoops, I mean, as we mature, and I venture the opinion that a large portion of us have an intense nostalgia for the associations of the past. Let's indulge ourselves and burst forth without urging, with a word or two about ourselves, our doings (or far niente), and our families. Boast about our grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and children of whatever age.

Immodestly, your Scribe reports further on his book pretentiously titled Adventures and Misadventures in the Stock Market. Bob Cameron, Scribe of Yale '27, will straighten out the tangle referred to in the last class notes of PA '23. Said book was reviewed in The Actuary, a newsletter published by the Society of Actuaries. The review was kind and flattering. Whether it leads to anything, who knows?

Hope everyone received the 1924 Newsletter with more news of classmates, the 1924 family, and other classes.

Charlie and Kitty Sawyer celebrated their 50th anniversary along with Charlie's 78th birthday in London. The first time he says he didn't have official duties so they could relax. The Sawyers decided to try to survive the winter this year in Ann Arbor. Charlie heard from Bob Redpath who mentioned having a 1924 reunion every year either at Andover or New York. Wasn't it Bob who warned us senior citizens to take it easy?

Terry Keep was sorry to miss our 60th but "am saving my energy and money for our 70th." Why not the 65th, Terry, and bring Renata. What was the name of that delicious fish dish she prepared for us?

Bill Jones thinks I'm a "living wonder" (or did he mean it is a wonder I'm living) for while having Thanksgiving dinner in Bixoxie, MS with Bill, he wondered where he would get a 1924 Pot Pourri. While in Conroe, TX with Amy Howe, Dike's widow, she said Bill could have Dike's. It happened Bill and Dike were roommates at Harvard, also Gordon Brown.

We left a note of welcome in Naples, FL for the Browns when they arrived later. Bill will visit them in February.

Helen and Neal Wells enjoyed our reunion at the Ed Munroes on Treasure Island, FL as we did.

We all dined later at the Careless Navigator and agreed it should be an annual event.

And in Sarasota another reunion took place — a luncheon at a restaurant chosen by Lee Flynn, Grant's widow. Present were Bill Wadhams and Prentiss Glazier besides Lee and the Larsens. Lee Flynn was our hostess for three days while we were in Sarasota. Her Christmas card reported her cruise on the Love Boat was fabulous and that she's completely spoiled. Sardie and Betty Brown also took a cruise on the Love Boat earlier. Gardie said "They had a great time but little love."

When George Stevenson was visiting in Lake Forest, Gardie showed both George and Hunt Eldridge the picture of our 60th. The two were unable to make it. When Bob Clark saw the picture, he thought Nick Danforth and Red Sanborn "had found the spring of eternal youth!"

Red and Fonty Sanborn were ready to start on their birding expedition after the holidays. They go to less frequented places. Has anyone heard of Wakula, St. Marks' or Myakka'? They will include Sanibel Island where he birded on our way West. Their granddaughter hopes to make Dartmouth and Red hopes the four generations of Sanborn alumni will help. They loved the Scandinavian countries in August. "Friendly people, clean and gorgeous scenery."

We were sorry not to see Mildred Pope, John's widow, when we stopped in Falls Church, VA. Mildred made a trip to Ireland last spring. Mildred liked Bob Redpath's line about not doing more than one thing a day, but felt nothing would get done.

Mary Mumby, Ken's widow, said she was also in Ireland. "And a lovely country it is! Am in a pub right now waiting for some Irish coffee. Weather great." Her brother-in-law, Gige Mumby welcomed us back to the "great Southwest." Gige will be in the East with his daughters' families for Christmas. We stayed with his daughter and husband in VA.

The 1942 grapevine was at work when

Laura Williamson wrote to say Nick Danforth was hospitalized. We then got a confirmation of this news from Bob Hamilton who had heard it from Dick Knight. Dick is still in Melrose, MA with his sister and her husband until his retirement home is ready.

While in Nantucket in September, we tried to reach Ruth and Sam Connor. We later heard that at the time they were celebrating their 50th at home with several Yale classmates and a Dixieland band. Congrats to a great couple!

Keith Smith won the long distance prize at our 60th. Says he'll be in Carmel-by-the Sea for Christmas to escape "the austerity of Wyoming weather."

Bill Lord wrote on his Christmas card that he considered himself a saint, but wife, Fonchen, had another name for him — he didn't elaborate. The Larsens visited them in Lakeland, FL and dined at their country club. Fonchen has another exhibit ready of her exciting work in metal.

Another artist of the 1924 family is my high-jumping teammate, Ed Renouf. Ed says he finished a new sculpture of an 8-foot candlestick which is on exhibition. I sent Ed a picture taken at Yale of me high-jumping which he said should be good for seven feet (new style). I hoped he would say eight feet over his candlestick like Jack-be-nimble.

Eight Abbot 24's had luncheon at our Pillar House, and their hostess, Laura Williamson, said it was their best mini reunion. "A darling waitress and beautiful food." She should be our press agent! Laura hopes to be in Winter Park, FL in early February.

Dorothy Converse, another '24, has written several times. She asked for Joe Smith's address in Umatilla, FL. Dot and Joe lived in Andover in the twenties. She also wrote about a picture of our 60th which I sent and named all the people in it. I have three extras in case anyone needs one.

The Louie Wieneckes called on Christmas day. Phillips Oil offered their employees a free toll call. We felt honored. They sounded great in spite of Peggy's fall earlier last year. Their daughter, Gretchen Wyler, received another award presented by Mayor of LA, Tom Bradley, the "St. Francis Award," for her long interest in the humane treatment of animals. She has been on several TV programs recently.

It was good to see the Leonard James again in Sun City Center, FL. Len headed up the Andover History Department. Maja, a gourmet cook, prepared a delicious luncheon and even gave us her recipe.

Stillman Hobbs was voted "The Distinguished Citizen Award of the Year." Chips also had an article in Yankee Magazine. Billie's project for '84 was to completely remodel their kitchen. They were told three weeks would do it — it took eight.

We learned from the Hobbsses the death of Johnny Hooper. John was publisher of the Brattleboro, Vt Reformer. His book, Hooper's Pastures which he sent to us, was "one man's view of the fun of living in rural NE." I wrote to John's wife, Marion, to express our sorrow.

We were sorry to hear of Fred Campopiano's death. We visited Fred many times on our trip west. Fred was in the real estate business in Pompano Beach area before he retired.

Johnny Lockett attended our 60th in June and we were shocked to learn of his death in September, and also in El Paso, TX, Art Tait died in November, although Art had been sick over a year.

While in El Paso we had luncheon with Marge Lockett and Frieda Tait — a sad occasion for all of us. The two wives have become great friends in their sorrow.

Jane Allen Kilby writes, "Let's have a reunion at Pillar House this spring, after my return from a PA trip to the Greek Isles." (More about this as you read on.) Sybil Bottomley Talman likes her quiet life in her family home. She is awaiting eye surgery, but still knits beautiful bed socks for her Unitarian Church Fair. Peg Colby Williamson says it is hard to believe, but she and Bob have attended her granddaughter's wedding in Dehner, NY. She and Bob "have enjoyed our 70s and are not looking forward to our 80s."

Mary Harvey Kindel enthused over our 60th — "for the Abbot friendships she rediscovered after 60 years." And Ruth Larter Eveleth and I rave over the handsome gout stools from the Kindel Furniture Co. Ruth Kelly Perry said "problems" kept Ruth and Elwyn from making the long drive from Chatham on the Cape to Pillar House last year. Their children and grands came to them for Christmas. We are planning another mini-reunion luncheon on 20 May 1985, and they hope to be able to lunch with us then.

Ruth Eveleth is happy as ever living in Concord, MA next to her Abbot daughter, Pat Buchanan '53, and Pat's three college and high school-aged sons. Kay Hart Mitchell sends "sincere thanks to George Larsen (PA '24) for his handsome and happy Pillar House dining room where we could talk and eat deliciously for two hours. We relived the love and warmth of our 60th Reunion." Marion Shyroock Wagner wrote, "It took 60 years to get me on the very long road back to Abbot, and now I can't wait for our 65th. It was a joy to catch up on our past lives. I envy you being so close that you can get together frequently."

As for Laura Scudder Williamson, it was fun reading about myself in the notes of the last Bulletin written by Polly Bullard Holden while I was away. Elder Hostels are spreading so fast. I hope Polly might gallivant to India for the first one to be held there next summer! My error in my letter to Polly was that my son and I adventured in Lake Powell Utah, not Rothwell. A new experience: I gave a talk on the subject of Phonics for one-and-a-half hours to volunteers to the program, English as a Second Language. My two educators, Ella and Stuart, suggested the use of transparencies to fill that hour-and-a-half but the talk went so well, I plan to give this talk again at the International Institute. There are so many refugees to learn our language. My only complaint of Boston life, is it is so full of cultural "things" to do, it is difficult to have time and energy for ESL.

Barbara Loomer has put "20 May 1985, Pillar House" on her new calendar. And she hears the parking is easy. She hopes to pick up Olive Mitchell on the way. And if any of you find you can come at the last minute, just call Mr. Larsen at Pillar House the day before. And if you wish '24 pictures, let us know in time to bring some.

Polly Bullard Holden says "having a daughter living with you, makes one a mother again." All the Holdens went to Vermont to attend the Inaugural Ball for that state's first woman Governor, Madeline Kunin. She is only the third Democratic Governor since the Civil War.

A striking color photo showing Charlie Arnt and wife Pat wreathed in smiles, posed before a cow, conveyed greetings from their ranch on Orcas Island. And one from Dan Layman from Pasadena asked about a reservation for our 60th next June. A Christmas letter from Allen Keedy told that he and Ida will be in Antigua W. Dutch Brodhead thoughtfully sent a copy of the magazine put out periodically by Mystic Seaport, which included a story by Dutch on the trip he took on the square rigger Pekin in 1929. Those attending our 55th Reunion will well remember the thrilling movies that Irving Johnston took of that voyage, which Dutch showed. The article quoted from the diary that Dutch had kept, recounting the day-to-day happenings and the storms they encountered. Dutch and his wife have been much involved lately in the evaluation process that Vermont high schools experience when judged by the State Dept. of Education and the New England Association of Schools and colleges. Through the efforts of a group to which they belong, an agreement was reached which eliminates some red tape and speeds up the approval process.

Winslow Ames and Anna made a wonderful cruise last June to the fjords of Norway. Unhappily, the midnight sun, on the longest day of the year, was hidden under a heavy sky. Gerry Blanchard expressed his appreciation of our co-agents, Charlie Poore and Chuck Eeles. In that connection, Chuck advises that the class has responded well so far to the appeal for our 60th Reunion Gift. Perish the thought, but this may be our last opportunity to contribute importantly to assure that PA keeps in the forefront of secondary schools. Let's do right by Andover.

I'm happy to report that Jim Case married Mrs. Mary L. Price last June. Here's wishing them much happiness. Clare Barnes has a deal with Charlie Poore that he will match whatever Charlie gave Yale '29 as his gift to PA, and this year Clare upped it by 33%. Dick Bernheim reports that he made a long hit to the outfield in a softball game last summer but was thrown out at first. Oh, me, the cruelty of age!

I regret to announce that on 20 April 1984 we lost Charles H. Colby who lived in Brookline, MA. He had been President of Andrew Dutton Co. Our deep sympathy to his son, William, his only survivor. Also, I am grieved to report the death of Ralph Charles Glock on 13 January 1985 in Chelsea, Michigan. Charlie was with us for three years at PA, active in Club and Varsity football and wrestling. He went on to Yale, was in banking for his whole business career, retiring as Vice President of the Bank of N. Y. He had lived in New Canaan, CT for many years. Charlie battled cancer and, in failing health, moved to Chelsea last June to be near his daughter Sally. Our heartfelt sympathy goes to his widow, Nell, and his family.

We regret to have to report the death of Maurice Rolfe from a heart attack on 4 October 1984. The class sends its deep sympathy to his widow, Lucille D. Rolfe, who lives in Lynn.

7-9 June are special days. That's when we have our 60th — our last major reunion as a class. Already we have a goodly number who hope to come back. So do plan now and when your reservation comes, send it in. Treat yourself to a memorable weekend. Hope to see you all in June.

In reading the 1983-84 Andover Annual Report, it is more apparent than ever what a splendid job Fletcher Nyce has done as Class Agent over the years. By his indefatigable and skillful efforts, the class of '26 ranked third for percentage of donors in classes under 100 this past year, with a figure of 73% donating, exceeded only by 1912 with 100% (only nine donors) and '22 with 85%. We and Phillips Academy owe Fletcher a large vote of thanks. He deserves our increased support in the future.

Reggie Parsons and wife, Beth, have moved from California back to Seattle, WA, where he was born and raised. "Probably the best of all places on earth one might choose for his remaining years. Next to Seattle, I love Andover best." The Vantage Press, Inc. has just published Selections From The Journal of Reginald B. Parsons, excerpts from his diary covering forty years of philosophical, religious, and poetical thoughts. Sounds like "must" reading for Reggie's many friends and classmates.

A letter from the daughter of Gustav Stein, Jo Stein Gabeler, was received by the Alumni Office telling of his death on 6 May 1984. I quote part of the letter: "... My brother Nick and I were with him when he told us goodbye, closed his eyes, and was gone. ... After his operation and then the radiation treatments, he just withered away. We took him to Andover where he is buried beside our mother at Spring Grove. The Phillips Minister spoke at the small, family ceremony." The class of '26 extends its deep sympathy to the children of Gus.

Hope that all of you are giving a great deal of thought to planning a trip to New England in late spring 1986 to attend our 60th Reunion. We received the following from Sonny Quinn: "Having completed 76 years, am looking forward to having Christmas with nine grandchildren, three of whom are arriving from Buenos Aires. Am still in Mexico (since 1957) and despite an amputated left leg, I still get around. Do not meet any Phillipsians but would enjoy seeing any who come to Mexico. My warmest best wishes to all of the class of '27 who are still hanging on."

Eddie O'Neil sends these words: "Age and limits that result therefrom, have reduced my physical activities somewhat. My principal interests are now bird watching and ham radio. For many years, Lydia and I have wintered in Mexico but this year we are changing to Tucson, AZ. John Bennett and I keep in touch with each other and usually get together at least once a year. Used to see Bob Kimball regularly before he moved to Charlottesville, VA. My daughter Charlotte has three boys."

Coly Hardy reports that his annual Guide to Your Investments has passed the one million sales mark (though not all under his editorship) and is looking forward to big sales in the booming 1985 stock market.

We recently received the following from Bob Pelletreau: "At the age of almost 76 I am still going strong and go to the office four or five days a week . . . limit my practice to estate and trust work. . . . Being a member of Committee on Character and Fitness for Admission to the Bar takes considerable time as it requires an individual personal interview with every applicant. . . . Regretfully, we have just learned of the recent death of Newhall Douglas; no further details at this time. His daughter, Miss Roxanna Douglas, resides at 6332 Lake View Dr., Falls Church, VA 22041.

Though accorded space in the last Bull, to chronicle eastward trek from Calif-desert winter 1/4's, a supplementary grant here-with seems appropriate to Egg Lewis, '28s #1 correspondent. It sets a properly Pioneer tone for the New Year: "Le Onze Novembre we lead the tumbrel for another sneak thru Indian Country to Eden; bedsprings and mattress, chickens caged, pots and pans swinging, tub of suet, musket. . . ligatures and tooth extractor, linsey-woolsey. . . fishline and map of Mormon Trail. Wish you might come with us, Nancy in high, black button shoes walking alongside the oxen, and yourself to skin bison for the cookpot." Unfortunately a dearth of the requisite foot gear in the local booteries prevented our participation in this pilgrimage with Egg and Mary, the best of company in a bison-skinning or any other enterprise. . . . First '28ster to be honored by Great Britain's House of Commons was Duke Henning, recipient of a silver-gilt medallion in recognition of more than two decades of monumental toil to produce a three-volume history of 17th century Parliament, awarded at the discretion of the Speaker of the House of Commons to "distinguished persons connected with Parliament." The Prince and Princess of Wales can proudly claim Duke as a co-recipient. . . . Al Keyworth is newly elected chairman of the Fitchburg, MA, Safety Fund Corp., to add to his responsibilities as board chmn. of Gardner's Collier-Keyworth Co. and service as director and Executive Committee member of Restoration of Atlantic Salmon in America (in line with his keen and active interest in Conservation).

A note, devoid of details, from Bill Guyer still domiciled at NYC's 6 Peter Cooper Road, reports, "As a result of being struck by a vehicle, my legs are permanently disabled, but otherwise I am all right and fortunate in having an attractive female homemaker take care of me." If recollections of an active and agile Bartlet Hall chimney-jumping classmate aren't awry, Bill has met adversity with admirable courage and good cheer. . . . "Fully retired as of August after semi-retirement teaching at Berkshire Medical Center (integrated with U. Mass. Med School)." Dori Dorman says he and Dody will stay in the Berkshires, but still summer at Orient, L.I. cottage. 10 grands are split, six in Calif., four in New England Bill Adams celebrated Flag Day with heart attack and triple bypass surgery in San Diego hospital (luckily near home), causing him to miss Dartmouth '34's 50th reunion. With daughters Abby and Sue as big help to Elly in keeping a no doubt occasionally ornery patient in recuperative line, Bill had shortly recovered sufficiently to bang out fascinating, 3-page bio, on his 50-yr-old Royal. It included details of enforced furlough from Big Green, return after two years for highly successful conclusion after varied experiences, including peddling ties at Jordan Marsh, night auditing at the Copley Plaza, practical courses at Bryant & Stratton, and writing regularly published poetry for the Boston Herald. "Looking back, getting kicked out of Dartmouth was the best thing that ever happened to me. I think it's a great mistake to push kids ahead. The slower they go, I believe, the more they get out of it." This observation recalls the PA Veterans Program performance of many ex-G.I.'s whose post-war records bore little, if any resemblance to their pre-war academic output.

In pursuance of earlier reference to Dan James' award-winning Famous All Over Town, (under pseudonym "Danny Santiago"), Dan sent a gracious reply to a letter of congratulations from this enthusiastic reader. Based on 20 years of volunteer social work in the LA barrios with his wife, Lilith, Dan's story led many Hispanic Americans to believe it must have been written by a Chicano who had grown up in the area he described. What he called "my personal rebellion on the 1930's" led to '51 blacklisting as a Communist Party member by a Congressional committee, although the James quit the party in 1948. In the '30s Dan worked with Charlie Chaplin as asst. director on The Great Dictator, and in the early '40s he and Lilith collaborated on what became the libretto of Bloomer Girl, a highly successful musical. It later became a TV spectacular, from which the James' credits were removed, "apparently," said Dan, "to protect the morals of the American people, but we still collect royalties." His letter ends on a note of pride in two daughters, Barbara, lawyer for the Wis. Pub. Serv. Commission, well known for her anti-nuke briefs, and Cathy (McWilliams) noted show rider in dressage events with stables in Westchester Co. . . . From the Alumni Office came word of Seymour Strong's death in September, in W. Cortland, NY. — In the same month Dana Baird died in Salem, MA, survived by wife Grayce and daughter Diane Jasset and family. After retirement from Boston's Mace Advertising in 1974, he was an active volunteer with Action, Inc. and Senior Home Care Services of Gloucester. . . . And at the close of 1984 Bill Laundon's lovely and talented wife, Jean, died in Hanover's Hitchcock Hospital. Your Secretary is writing this on 9 January at his home in Prouts Neck, Maine. The outside temperature this morning was about 5° F. The sky is cloudless, the Atlantic ocean is very blue, the snow is bluish-white, and there is a strong northwest wind. The foregoing is written so all of my classmates in warmer climates can get vicarious pleasure, and, I hope envy, for the lack of cars, smog, fumes, noise, people, and crime.

A nice Christmas card came from Philip K. Allen and family; also a message from John McGauley who's in good health. Bill Taylor and wife took myself and wife Peter to lunch in Portland this fall at Dimilo's Floating Restaurant. Great Maine seafood. My twin Brother Art Rogers had surgery in early December, and his recovery is well under way. My faithful reporter, Dinty Moore, who proudly reports that E.P., Jr. is chairman of the English Department of the Punahou School in Honolulu. Ben Gault advises that he and his wife thoroughly enjoyed the 55th reunion in June, complaining only of too few classmates attending. George Parsons has celebrated his 50th wedding anniversary with his wife, Elizabeth. They are spending the winter months in Honolulu.

Thankfully, the sad news is brief this edition. The Alumni Office has learned of the death in 1982 of classmate Saxon B. Gavitt, Jr. who lived in Lyons, NY. Unfortunately, we have no other details at this time. I'm sure that those of you who have not already heard, Sam Caldwell died on 14 October 1984. Of all our class, I think he was one of the most universally liked. He was always so cheerful and had such a delightful sense of humor that even a brief contact passing on the way to class left one cheered up and happier for the day. His wife, Frances, can be reached at 1510 Hobbspark Rd., Anchorage, KY 40223.

Catherine Bowden Barnes reports the arrival of a new grandson born to her daughter Susan, and an honorary degree given to her husband by Brown University. Congratulations, Kay!

We were also presented with a new grandson in September by our son Charles and wife Jan who have been in Indonesia for several years but are back at Cornell now.

I'd like to tell you more class news but haven't had much gossip. Do write some tidbits that we can all enjoy!

A sad note: Hal Boyle, whose retirement was felicitously reported in our last notes died in Marblehead on 20 October. Hal had a distinguished military career in World War II and had been active in a number of New England trade and manufacturing associations. He served as Treasurer of the Concord-Carlisle Community Chest and held several positions in the United Way of Boston and the Concord Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Also, Marianna Smith Hile and Hap came by on Christmas Eve. They are both well and so is El, who has kept busy and active since Herb's death, but I know she is lonely.

Plan now to attend our 55th Reunion, 7-8-9 June.

Jack McLanahan's Christmas newsletter reports progress on Rainbow Ridge, "Center for Research and Education for Cooperatives and Peace," 7½ acres on a high ridge six miles north of Berea, Kentucky. Jack and Connie moved there last May but they say, "There's much to do just to get settled." They'll be at our 55th Reunion. Hank Rowland's living comfortably and quietly on the French Riviera after retirement from the French Embassy in Paris and 40 years in the U.S. Army. Jim Byington hopes to be back at our 55th Reunion. Stan Kellogg writes, "One of the bonuses of becoming Class Agent is the parade of names and memories of those I used to know . . . and making almost a miracle that I found them again. Furthermore, my holidays extended his year to 11 January because visits from Bill's two sons and their families lasted until then which is why I never got cards sent out.

Betty Giblin wrote in September that she and Jack were leaving shortly for England where they would visit Betsy and their four granddaughters, after which they would start for Longboat Key and a winter of golf — as she said, a tough schedule!

Dot Richardson also had a traveling year: with her brother to California last February, then in May a 10-day tour of Ireland (her fourth trip there) and now in January '85 back to California for the Rose Bowl Parade and other visits.

It was good to have a card from Kay Brigham Callanen since she had missed an issue. She and Gardner spent most of a wonderful summer at her old family summer home on the Cape, with Gardner's Beetle Cat (named O Kay) moored in front of the house. When she wasn't sailing Kay says she pecked away on a history of "this place." (Not clear if she means the house, or Brewster.)

The last half of '84 was as different for me as '83, and my trip to France was, in an entirely different way. Our church secretary broke her wrist on 12 July so I filled in for her until 15 December. She had a really difficult time, with numerous complications, so I worked 16 to 20 hours a week, depending on church activities. It was a great experience, even though I found it rather tiring at first, not having worked for seven years. Among the interesting things the church was doing during those months was the resettlement of two Kampuchean families, refugees who had been in camps in Thailand, but along with thousands of others had to leave before the camps were closed in December. One family of four — mother, daughter, son, and grandmother — stayed exactly two days, which was quite a blow to the committee that had found an apartment for them, scrubbed it from top to bottom and bought a good supply of food. Their leaving, however, was perfectly understandable: they discovered that a brother who had escaped from Kampuchea some years ago was living in Springvale, Maine, a scant 100 miles from here, and it was eminently practical for him to give them shelter and help them adjust to this new world.

The second family arrived in mid-December — a father, mother, 4-year-old boy, 3½-month-old girl, and the father's sister and mother. We were lucky enough to find them a three story house (3rd floor shut off in the winter) and believe they are as well settled as possible. Rann, the father, now has a temporary job, and his sister is going to high school. I am on one of three teams of two people each who have started to tutor English to them, and it's fascinating. They are charming, know some English and giggle a lot.

That warm breeze you felt when you turned to this page was the hot breath of the Bulletin headline on the back of our neck. Everything was peaceful — the Christmas tree was down, our toys were put away, the snow blower was contentedly munching its oats in the garage — when all of a sudden "15 JANUARY" on our calendar began to shoot sparks and make like the General Quarters gong. We'll admit the heroics, the mad dash for our typewriter, pulling on our green eyeshade as we ran; the purposeful emptying of our PA '33 mail bag and the confrontation with a very surly Resident Moth. Modesty forbids such an epic. We do have a note from Paul Offill, who says that after three successive June trips back to PA — two for grandsons' graduations, one for our 50th — he is off to foreign climes this year. "Off to Italy and the Holy Land in April, Jerusalem Easter weekend if the terrorists are quiet." Paul is still doing consulting work for Young Life International, which he says "requires me to be away too much from the Low Country of South Carolina — '84 definitely my last year!"

Dan Badger writes of a fine trip last spring with Mariette and their younger daughter, Diana, which included a visit with son Dan and his family in Paris, followed by an automobile trip through Corsica, thence homeward via Venice and Florence.

And a great letter from Hugh Samson, reading like an article from National Geographic, about the trip he and Edith made last spring to China. "So many interesting and beautiful things to see," he says, "that one cannot begin to enumerate them." The content of his letter is so varied and interesting that it is difficult to encapsulate it. Hugh tells of the "acres and acres" of the Forbidden City and its temples; the Great Wall; the terra cotta soldiers; Peking, Chungking, Canton, Shanghai, Hong Kong, and a boat trip down the Yangtze. And a long bus trip through a "fantastically beautiful rural area, with practically every inch of land under cultivation," visits to numerous factories, schools, homes and communes. In addition to sampling various forms of entertainment, ranging from opera to acrobatics, ballet, song and dance, Hugh says they were permitted to roam the streets freely in their unscheduled time, to observe what Hugh describes as "very friendly" people. We wish we could print his whole letter — it has made our feet itch. We look forward to hearing more one day.

Returning to home soil, we have word from one of Our Sources that the son of one of PA '33 is about to enter his first term as U.S. Senator from Massachusetts. John Kerry, son of our own Dick Kerry. Our congratulations to both. (Dick, where are you?)

A note from Dick Lowe, courtesy of U.S. Postal Service, tells us of Dick's moving from Lighthouse Point, FL to 3020 Shamrock South, Tallahassee, FL 32308. No comment from Dick to date, but surely the move was not without adventure? We wait with bated breath.

And so the sun sinks slowly in the west and we rein in our trusty steed for this trip. One cheering thought — by the time these immortal lines reach print the birds will be twittering, the flowers blooming and we shall be only three years from Reunion. Remember, PA '33 rides again in '88! In the meantime, our stocking still hangs at the fireplace, hoping for some mail.

We regret that we must close by reporting the death of a classmate, Cornelius J. Holway, Jr., in San Juan Capistrano, CA, 21

December 1981. The Class of 1933 extends its sympathy to his family.

Here it is 6 January 1985 and I'm wishing all of you a good, healthful, and rewarding 1985. No doubt when you see this in print, you'll wonder just how long ago was that? Our own holiday time was busy and fun even if all the family couldn't be together. It surely was the time to be in Florida with lots of sun and 80 degrees every day. Two granddaughters were here splashing in the pool and doing EPCOT on Christmas day.

Christmas notes brought good news and bad news. I hoped to hear from more of you but it seems to be my fault — I never did get around to those double post cards. Betty Snyder Cady wrote about all her family being together last summer for the first time in 13 years. She and Dick were spending Christmas in Michigan with the only "grandchild who still believes" [in Santa Claus]. Makes me wonder how many believers are still in your families? We have one yet, Chris, age 4, in Columbus, Ohio.

We heard from Mariatta Tower Arnold. She's an Elderhostel attendee in summer. Many of our age are enjoying these college opportunities. Alice Schultz Valkenburgh and Roger attended some last summer, too. Have any of you tried Elderhosteling? Back to Mariatta who lives in Sarasota. She seems to be as busy as ever enjoying trips, visitors, and many friends around her.

So many of you winter in Florida, and I know if you drive, you'll be near Ocala. We're in the phone book and at least we could chat. We're north on the Peninsula but not inaccessible! A mini-Abbot reunion would be fun.

One sad note came with a lovely picture of Betty Weaver VanWart and her husband, Lon. I quote. "This picture was taken in our happier, healthier days. Last July Lon fought a losing battle with throat cancer and passed away 8 December. We had a wonderful life together. We will all miss him. He was special." They were a special couple. Our hearts go out to Betty and the family. Perhaps a note would be welcome. Mrs. A.L. Van Wart, 160 Melrose Place, Ridgewood, New Jersey 07450 is her address and has been for many years.

I would love hearing from more of you. — Peg.

WORLD TRAVELERS EDITION (Part One. All other PA 1934 world travelers are asked to send me reports for the next part, to appear in the next class notes). Inspired by an early December bulletin from Soapy Chamberlin, I inquired of a few others whom I suspected of world traveling. Here's what I learned — or at least remember of what I learned. Soapy and Anne met Trev and Joss Cushman at the Y-P classic at New Haven. Not exactly world traveling, you might say, since the Chamberlins live in Waverly, Pennsylvania. True, but it is becoming clear to us ground observers that the Cushmans, who live in Laguna Beach, California, must be recognized as birds of passage, that is to say, they fly everywhere at the drop of a postcard, a life style related to Trevor's status as a retired executive of American Airlines. Take heart: wherever you may be on the planet, the Cushmans will drop in if notified. Still the Chamberlins are also on the free flight fast track. A look at their schedule for October through March supports my point: 10 October days spent hopping to and fro from Sacramento to San Diego to visit their four children out there. Recalling the words of Marco Polo, Soapy reports bemusedly, "They have a different world out there." Home for the Y-P classic and an 8-child Christmas, they left almost instantly for Kenya to spend three weeks in what must be top-secret operations, for Soapy doesn't specify. But then back to relax for the month of March in Aspen where, Soapy notices, yearly the mountains grow steeper and weather colder, "but that doesn't bother Annie." Inspired traveling like that got Betsy and me to thinking, the result being feverish planning to go West in May to watch our youngest, (John '76) get attached to a pair of wings as he finishes his advanced Navy flight training in Sacramento, to tramp once again the Frisco streets and for the first time the burning sands of Death Valley. Next fall, after the sailing season, we plan to visit, swanlike, the classical monuments of the eastern Mediterranean.

But all this rushing about pales into diminished splendor when one considers the exotic travel habits of the Campions and the Sides. A few of us have belatedly caught on to Bob Sides' and Kate's metamorphosis into world class bird watchers. It's true: every year while Marblehead sinks under the burden of ice, snow, and winter gales, Bob and Kate are far away in search of birds never before seen by them. Bob kindly allowed me to extract many details. I've lost my notes, but I do know that they are wintering this year off and on the coasts of West Africa, cruising, flying, driving, and walking to find aves rarae. Last year I believe it was Brazil, and next year may be the west coast of South America and the Easter Islands. Wow!

Those of us who read carefully the travel section of the Boston Sunday Globe of 23 December will find it impossible to forget Wardi Campion's story, with photos, of the Campions' 1983 Christmas in Marrakesh, as refugees from the familiar national Christmas hassle. I don't dare paraphrase Wardi's trim but evocative prose, so I'll reproduce here a couple of her lively paragraphs. "Christmas vanishes from our thoughts when we reach Djemaa el F'na, the enormous square at the heart of the city. There is nothing 'for tourists' about this city. Five or six thousand Moroccans swirl around the jugglers, fire-eaters, boxers, sword-swallowers, acrobats, tom-tom dancers. Fire crackers explode; drums pound, music wails. It's wild. Christmas Eve was never like this. So many people having so much fun — and no alcohol. The Muslim religion forbids liquor. Of course, there is that odor of hashish. . . ." Back at the hotel, in the El Morocco Dinner Theater, "the band salutes Christmas with 'When The Saints Come Marching In.' We complain about 'carol saturation,' but a complete absence of carols isn't so great, either. Our Christmas Eve feast is a typical Moroccan meal of bastilla, a flaky pigeon pie, and couscous, a mix of mushy vegetables, lamb, farina and olive oil. Heavy going. The Moroccans eat with the 'fork of Adam' (thumb and first two fingers), a skill that eludes us. The waiter fetches knives and forks. Swilling many glasses of Morocco's national drink, atai benaana, a sweet, hot mint tea, we watch the folklore show that features glittering harem dancers. Live goats, ear-splitting music, and a man dancing with a tray of coffee and two burning candles balanced on his head."

Now, the really bizarre quality of all this, as I read it this Christmas was my memory of Tom in 1983, deep in the turmoil of raising money for our 50th Reunion class gift, slipping away "for Christmas" without explanation, and upon his return there he was, the same old jovial, energetic, intense classmate I'd always known, utterly unchanged, superficially at least, by that exotic Marrakesh experience — and he never breathed a word of it to me.

I have been informed by the Alumni Office of the death of Grover T. Stevens on 5 November 1984. He was a graduate of Harvard University and was a World War II naval veteran. He was a retired executive of the Hood Molded Form Co. of Marblehead, a town in which he resided for over 50 years. He leaves his widow, Harriet and a daughter, Judith. The sympathy of the class is extended to his family.

Received a note from Sally O'Riley Loria telling me she "spent Christmas with Kay Damon Reed and Carroll on the west coast of Florida. . . no Pennsylvania trip this year because of the move to Sebastian, only 10 miles from Vero Beach, so have become a commuter." Her new address is 6175 South Mirror Lake Drive, Apt. 204, Sebastian, Florida 32958.

Also had a note from Nancy Marsh Gares, our Class Fund Raiser, who lives in Paris and comes to Nantucket in the summer, saying, "we think with pleasure of our Nantucket summer — it was hectic with cleanup of carpenters and plasterers as a prelude to the arrival of our children and their families."

How about sending me a current picture of yourselves, families, etc. for my new class album. Have some fun pictures of our 50th to start with and will bring the album with me to our next reunion. Don't be modest! . . . of course we're ALL 50 years older!

Our 50th Reunion approaches! It will be here before we know it, and it's going to be a very exciting event. You have received my comprehensive letter of 21 September about it and also Fred Griffin's specific letter of 12 November about fund raising, and our financial goal, and gift to the Academy. Your Steering Committee and other Reunion Committee members will be working very hard this winter and spring to make this the best ever.

Return cards were sent with my letter asking about your intentions of attending the Reunion on 7-9 June 1985. I can now give you a preliminary count on these returns. To date 41 have said "yes" and of these 37 said that they would bring their spouses. 27 more said that they were interested, but plans were not certain at this time. Only six replied that they could not, unfortunately, attend. I have no count on the Abbot ladies, but perhaps Elaine Eaton Perine will have that in her column.

Your secretary has talked with a few Pennsylvanians about our 50th. Harry Curry reminded me that he took early voluntary retirement from the Mellon Bank in 1969. I'd forgotten that it was that long ago. Sam Osburn of Norristown reports that he continues as an assistant analyst for National Liberty Corp., which is a direct mail insurance company.

Your secretary has received a nice note from Newell Brown. Newell doesn't expect to make our 50th unless some pressing business brings him East. Brown moved to Colorado in the spring of 1982. He built a home on 20 acres at 8000 feet about ten miles west of Boulder. It's a gorgeous Rocky Mountain setting. He owns a couple of Arabian horses which he rides, he fishes, skies, and likes carpentry work, but frequently has to cope with 21 feet of snow and cutting four cords of wood each winter. He worked hard for Mondale and he loves his new life.

Jack Krey, who lives in Eastville, VA, has a winter home in Nevis. He writes that he never seems to run across any PA 35ers. Jack didn't give us much information about himself, but he did furnish this interesting tidbit about Nevis. "The natives of Nevis certainly love Uncle Sam since he booted the Commies out of Grenada last year, but the administration, the faculty, and the student body of old PA probably think the U.S. was wrong."

Charlie Simon has given us a change of address. His classmates may now reach him at 19707 Turnberry Way, 11-E, North Miami Beach, FL 33180.

Piecing together bits of news from Ted Toohey and Norm Cross, we learn that 1935 was well represented at the Henley Regatta last June. Bill Littlefield couldn't make it. Those three were members of the Yale 150 lb. crew that rowed at Henley in 1938. Norm rowed again and Ted struggled with the modern hand-sized rudder and thousands cheered.

And now to the sad part of this column. I have four deaths to report. Sarah Hackett writes that her husband, Jim Hackett died in October 1984. she says, "He was gallant, cheerful, and all things fitting and proper for such a kind and merry gentleman. Andover should be proud of him." Jim had been a successful partner in a real estate association. Mrs. Hackett may be written to at 8 Lowell Road, Port Washington, NY 11050.

Patsy Taylor has written to tell us that Gray Taylor also died in October of 1984 after a brief illness. Until a few days before his death he was active in architecture and playing golf. She writes, "Gray was a wonderful father and the best husband in the world. I miss him so much." Mrs. Taylor's addresses is 55 Dingletown Road, Greenwich, CT 06830.

Also we lost Henry A. Schueler in July 1984. Mrs. Schueler has written, "Heartbroken over the loss of my man." Mrs. Schueler's address is 411 Annwood Road, Largo, FL 33542.

I have talked several times recently with Sam Haverfield (we frequently called him Jack) who was a member of our 50th Reunion Committee. He didn't sound too well. On 28 December his wife, Kay, telephoned to say that Sam had passed away the day before. Katherine may be written to at River Road, Lumberville, PA 18933. The sympathy of all the class is extended to the survivors of these deceased members of 1935.

No responses yet from the last communique the Alumni Office sent out, but the returns from Charlie Miller's letter in the fall are very heartwarming. At this point in time I think about sixteen of you plan to be in Andover in June. Between now and then I hope we can add to that number. The current report on the fund is that we are on our way to breaking the previous 50th reunion gift total. How's that for an indication of our loyalty?

In a note to Ann Cutler Brecheen I asked if she would look for interesting mementos of Abbot days to share with us at reunion. She wrote "I've moved too far and too often to be able to lay my hands on much Abbot memorabilia but I did find three old Courants. . . . "I thought I'd bring them and the old classbook, still, in my opinion, the best ever! Fun to see the things we wrote 50 years ago." Ann's daughter Laurie was married on 21 December 1984.

Frannie McTernan Coan took her granddaughter Hillary to California in October to visit her Aunt Hillary (Frannie's daughter) and family. We do get to travel, as our off-spring have settled so far away. Ellie Johnson Du Toit wrote on her Christmas card that she was off for daughter Ellen's home in Palo Alto for two-and-a-half weeks. Ellie wrote in her "annual report" that the high point of her year was a trip with Susan to France for 17 days in July. This included seeing the parade on the Champs Elysee on Bastille Day, an exciting experience. The night before, the bus she was on was in a traffic jam. They couldn't move an inch for an hour. Her remark: "They celebrate!" She said she used her old Abbot French quite a bit, much to her surprise and amusement.

Cathleen Burns Elmer sent a good family picture with her Christmas greeting. She mentioned acquiring an honor grade in her computer course (not surprising to us, Kate). She also mentioned having had a wonderful trip to Mexico with her family. Doris Anderson Clark reports the birth of a grandson David Small Clark, born to her son David Whittredge Clark and wife Laurie.

Returning home from Martinsville, VA (where we spent Christmas), Wes and I stopped overnight in Annapolis, a place I have never had an opportunity to see. I had it in the back of my mind that if Lucia Nunez Atlas lived nearby, we would take time to see her. After driving through the restored area of Annapolis and the Academy, we inquired about Lucia's address. It was nearby and I did the unforgivable, knocking on her door without forewarning her. She couldn't have been more gracious. We had a delightful chat while we admired the view of the bay and her garden (not in bloom, however) which lined each side of a 100-ft. strip of land down to the water from the house. I could only imagine the spectacular results of her "green thumb." The highlight of her year was a trip to Russia about which I hope we hear more in June.

In a few days I will be joining Ellen Rivinius Hill in Andover for the final reunion committee meeting. Her recent note said "Looking forward to our 50th and hope all our classmates are, too. Had good news that Anne (Bunny) Hurlburt Bradley and Susan Hildreth Goodwin plan to come."

It is hard to believe we're about to celebrate our 50th! Be here if you can!

Vince Scully was the subject of a fine article in a recent Yale Alumni Magazine. Among the nice things reported about our sterling Professor of the History of Art was that "nearly half of the student body will take one of his classes before graduation." This stands in comparison with nearly all of PA '36 taking Colonel Poynter's Latin I twice.

For some time I have been conscious of perhaps overemphasizing those of us who went on to Yale in these Class Notes. However, I have received recent support in this published statement "at its high point (Andover tradition to Yale) in 1936, ninety Andover graduates, more than half of the class, went to Yale."

Fred Donaldson reports that he has retired after 35 years in the Massachusetts Public Welfare Dept. When writing, Fred had just returned from a visit with a daughter in Oregon. He has two grandchildren there. Others are in California, Idaho, Tennessee, Rhode Island and Massachusetts for a total of 13. This must be the class record. Who tops that? If so please make your claim a year from now at our 50th Reunion.

Loring Reed is our 50th reunion chairman and asks that you save these dates, 13, 14 and 15 June 1986. As his plans develop, watch for their unfolding herein, but for now plan on attending your very first 50th reunion on the Hill.

Cleve Cory has a one-year-old grandson appropriately named Wendell Cleveland Cory. Had dinner with Wes Oler, Washington's leading physician, who denies he has a Washington Post mole in his waiting room.

As we ready ourselves for a 50th Reunion, news from and about you provides quite different attitudes about retirement. Many have yet to retire; others have left one career to pursue another; so-called retirees are doing good deeds. Here's a sampling: Ned Brightwell retired from Bethlehem Steel in September of '82 only to "re-enter the work force" in June of '84 as a sales representative for Gerrard Strip Steel; Bart Chapin is Chairman of the Board, Che-wonki Foundation, Wiscasset, Maine; Harry Groblewski, after 40 years of teaching English and being a headmaster in independent schools in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Texas, and South Carolina, wants to take on the Moral Majority which is neither; Rog Hageman in Houston is "developing an avocation of art and word pictures into something marketable"; Hank Wood is Treasurer and Trustee of the Hadley School for the Blind; Drayt Herd is President, the New Haven Branch, English Speaking Union and Chairman, the HOSTS, an acronym for "Help Our Society to Survive"; active Attorney Bill Trafton, elected director, Norster Bancorp.

Alumni Fund Report (1983-84) reveals 76 members of our class contributed with a 43% participation. But horrors! Abbot '36 had 48%. The following deserve to be singled out with high praise as NON SIBI donors: Burns Borough, Mel Chapin, Ed Ford, Bill Hart, Paul Kalat, Dick Merrick, Johnny Sears.

PA Athletic Director, Paul Kalkstein, has confirmed that the all time soccer record (undefeated, untied and unscored upon) belongs to the 1935 team (our senior year). What other claims to glory can PA '36 make public at the time of our 50th? Please send me your suggestions. Humor encouraged.

Little news to report and what there is is belated due to my failure to meet the Bulletin deadline in September. Marion Mooney Starr and Lucy Hawkes Winship and I staged a sort of mini-reunion in Concord, NH one hot day in August. We lunched and shopped and talked. Since then a note from Lucy reports she and Steve thoroughly enjoyed a trip to the Orient. Also a brief note from Fran Mahoney Stewart now happily settled in North Carolina.

Happy New Year, one and all! May 1985 bring all thirty-sevens happiness, good health, and prosperity.

George Schreiber is happy to announce the birth of this third grandson, Daniel, who was born on the first day of spring. "Oddly enough," he writes, "two previous grandsons were each born on Thanksgiving Day (1981 and 1983)." Our congratulations to George and Adrienne.

Our historian, Howard Reed, continues to receive honors and awards from the Turkish Government. Recently elected an Honorary Member of the Turkish History Society and Honory Fellow of the Institute of Turkish Studies, Howie was awarded a gold plaque commemorating Mustapha Kemal Atatürk by the Prime Minister of Turkey for services to Turkish scholarship and U.S.-Turkish understanding and a U.S.I.A. grant to organize an international conference on "Improving Cooperation Among Business, Government and Universities in a Free Enterprise Economy" in Ankara in 1983.

We were saddened to hear of the death of Harold Munger's wife, Barbara, on 22 October 1984. My daughter-in-law, Alicia Rounds, R.N., who nursed Barbara at the M.G.H. on one of her hospital stays, recalls her courageous battle against cancer. The class extends its deepest sympathy to Hal and their sons Mark T. PA '61, and Jeffrey H. Our thoughts are with you, Hal.

Morrison M. (Budge) Bump died 8 October 1984 after a brief illness. Born in New York City, he was a graduate of Yale. At Andover his interests were in the performing arts — he was a member of the Glee and Dramatic Clubs and of the choir. He was vice-president of musical clubs and also played varsity football. From 1960 to 1964 he lived in Greenwich, CT and was executive vice-president of United Carbon Co. at that time. He then moved to Kentucky where he was vice-president of Ashland Chemical Co. In 1971 he moved to Duxbury, MA, where he served as a Duxbury School Committee Chairman and former Chairman of Duxbury Capital and Budget Committee.

Budge was a caring and loving husband, father, and grandfather. He had a deep sense of civic responsibility and served his fellow man with distinction. He was a 'direct and forthright person without calculation or pretense.' For this quality he earned the respect and love of his Andover classmates.

Husband of the late Frances (Kelley) Bump (see Class Notes, summer 1984 issue of the Andover Bulletin), he is survived by sons Morrison, Jr. PA '65 and Laurence W. PA '71; daughters, Cynthia B. Neusbaum and Barbara Morrison Bump; a brother, Milan R. Bump; a sister, Barbara B. Stager; and four grandchildren. They have the deep sympathy of Budge's many friends in the class.

Holiday greeting from Kay Forbush Bass included a stunning photograph of her daughters, Nancy and Joanne, their husbands, and four grandchildren taken in Bermuda a year ago where they all celebrated Kay and George's 45th wedding anniversary. Last August the Basses flew to St. Paul for a nephew's wedding, then took a trip to Banff, Jasper and Calgary and on to Boise, Idaho to visit Kay's sister. In October Kay and daughter Joanne travelled to Italy for a week which was an "unexpected and delightful" trip.

Mary-Emily Pettengill Smith-Peterson was another traveler last summer who had a great trip to Germany and attended the Passion Play at Oberramsgau as well.

Cynthia Holbrook Summer writes that her husband, Warren, had a serious operation last August, but is now fine again. Their son Steve and family were going to join them in Sacramento for Christmas and Cyn's son Charles lives nearby in California. Barbara Randolph Bowman and her husband are enjoying their retirement in Seabrook, Texas, on the Gulf of Mexico; however, Gus was hospitalized just before the holidays. He is now home again slowly regaining his strength. Corinne Brooks Cornish has recently moved to San Mateo, California and Betty Wilson Tennant has moved from La Porte, Indiana to Tucson, Arizona, and would love to see any classmates traveling through the Southwest.

Priscilla Wonson Hahn sent holiday greetings and is still enjoying her position at The Book Ends in the Northshore Shopping Mall, Peabody, Mass.

The class extends deepest sympathy to Ellen Simpson Martin whose husband, John, died of a heart attack in Mt. Kisco, NY in June of 1984.

The best parts of a happy trip of Barbara's and mine to Scotland and England in October were the visits we had with Mike Garnett and Laurence Viney. It is easy to wax emotional over these two men and their obvious and loudly professed love for PA and for us, too.

I was pessimistic about reaching Mike, particularly as we had spent a night in Oxford, close by Wallingford, where he lives, without knowing it until we had lunch at the Vineys in Hertz the next day. But a call from London solved it all: Mike quickly accepted an invitation to "come up to London" and a stimulating and most satisfactory three-hour luncheon followed. We had not seen each other since 1964. Five years ago Mike remarried, and while we did not meet Tiz she has clearly had a most salutary effect on her husband. He seemed, as my father used to say, "just full of it." The Garnetts live in a thatched roofed cottage; each has grandchildren. Mike has just gotten some kind of degree or license as a commercial dispute arbitrator, and life has a brightness for him which I did not quite detect in 1964. Mike retired from J. Brown and Pipe Line Jt. Enterprises. He asked particularly after Harrison and Flounroy.

We drove from Bath on a Sunday to lunch with Eirllys, Laurence, their son Paul and wife, daughter Vanessa and two grandchildren. Other than overeating, this too was a lovely sojourn with these old friends and their nice family. The real test of friendship is how rapidly you pick up with them; you would have thought we saw each other 8 to 10 times a year. Laurence has been in the printing business for many years and had linked this to his favorite sport, golf, by writing and publishing a book on the sport. This he has added to his substantial library on the subject. In addition, the printers and stationers have a guild with a very old but partly re-built Hall (it was damaged in "the bombing"), and Laurence was recently installed as Grand Master of, yes, The Worshipful Company of Stationers and Newspaper Makers, in London. Comparatively speaking, this organization is recent: its roots go back only to 1403, its charter from the Crown is dated 1557, and the Hall has occupied its present site since 1606. We visited the Hall and were given the red carpet treatment to this handsome, tradition-filled Guild Hall.

Both men spoke repeatedly of Andover as one of the great experiences in the lives of each of them. If Andover had a face it would blush with pleasure. I rather had the conceited idea that we of '38 added something to this in their minds.

For a change I have a lot more news to be stated here. Alphabetically:

Johnny Allen speaks of involvement in downtown Kansas City, MO's building boom, aided and abetted by Crosby Kemper '43. He retires in 1988, when I plan to get him back to the Hill. No problem with family line with the Allens: 12 grandchildren and two greats! Damon Carter wrote a nice letter (I will respond) in answer to my inquiries as to questions for a 50th year Pot Pourri. He retired from an ad agency in Boston in 1982, then moved to 56 acres in Warner, NH, where he raises Christmas trees, fruit and berries. He has taken up canning and cooking. The Allens do a lot of travelling — Europe, the Caribbean. He describes himself as "happily retired" and living a most "pleasant life." Rated off that letter, I agree.

Like Damon, Ted Harrison's retirement has led to his becoming a resident manager of the Boston office of Devine, Baldwin & Pierce, executive search consultants. Some of his work is from his house in Westport. I will have seen Ted and Marge again in New Haven before this is printed. George and Joan Horwitz had been in London last summer. George is still active in the men's clothing business in or near Boca Raton, FL, and he often sees Bill McConnell. England also lured the Fred Kents and the Spink Davises, and both visited the Vineys. Fred played "Saintandrews" with Laurence with unreported results. Gordon (alias Duke) Kent wrote after a long silence: retirement from teaching planned in May 1986, and concerned at the financial crisis in higher education. His only son's ski racing and soccer experience has led him into physical therapy and professional dancing in Boston . . . Johnny Marsh's letter was largely addressed to the questionnaire: he suggests an inquiry into our preparation, if any, for retirement; how it has worked, or will work; what other events may have precipitated it. As it evolves, John, I suspect this type of thing will be significant, replacing the war records and the like of the 25th Yearbook.

Andy Palmer writes a very bucolic and long letter from retirement, living in Henderson, North Carolina, a life of growing things, nature around him and, I might say, a touch of David Grayson, the author. He is some distance from Blair Hellebush, in Fairview. Andy had been to Kenya and Tanzania, driven there by a philosophy which took me to Kenya, too: in not too many years the great beasts won't be there and neither will I . . . Last, but certainly not least, is Bob Young, the chairman of the executive committee of Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, which I know to be one of the largest and finest law firms in the U.S.: 360 lawyers, Bob says, with many challenges. He and Jean have three married daughters, an unmarried son, and a daughter at Bucknell; plus three grandchildren. And a sore back muscle from too much golf and tennis, per his September note to me.

Some of you have been nice enough to compliment me on undertaking the "labor" of being the class scribe. All I can say is that with letters such as Damon's and Andy's, interesting and warm notes from so many others, and the reception by the likes of Laurence and Mike, it is a most satisfying experience. If our English brigade is grateful to Andover and you, just think how I feel.

Included in the December mail was a most impressive book, entitled The AMA and U.S. Health Policy by Frank Campion. It's 600 pages and it's heavy, and I would have expected to find it about as interesting as the Boston telephone book. My expectations couldn't have been more mistaken. Frank has combined his skills as journalist and historian to produce a book that contains a wealth of information and is a delight to read, even exciting in those chapters dealing with the in-fighting over compulsory national health insurance. Frank has been on the staff of the AMA since 1970 and had free run of his employer's files for source material. While he gives detailed explanations of the AMA's positions on various controversial issues and of the strategies it pursued to implement those positions, he also provides a full airing of the opposing points of view, and one concludes with the sense that the presentation has been even handed. 45th! REUNION

Tom Rowen has always been a stout-hearted son of old PA. He accepted the arduous and thankless task of chairing our 45th Reunion in June (7-9 June 1985). Tom was here in late November, and I was able to thank him for his great help. He was planning to set up a committee to help him with the many and complex problems that confront a Reunion Chairman. Did you know that ice-cubes and fillers and dance bands must be indented for six months in advance? You will have heard from Tom by this time, so do try to make life easier for him by answering his summons as soon as you can and find your way back to Andover Hill in early June to make 45 in '85 a successful get-together.

It is not an easy task to discover news of PA '40, for you are, unfortunately for this Class Secretary, reluctant to put pen to paper. However, one rich lode has been the columns of the good, grey New York Times. In the last few months, two stalwart classmates, both veterans of public service, have contributed articles to the Op-Ed page of that publication that would have earned nods of appreciation from 'Doc' Darling and the American History Department of our day. First Tim Hoopes led off with "Block Reagan's Crude Attempt at Censorship." Tim, President of the Association of American Publishers, makes the case that proposed legislation to safeguard national security information would repress or seriously distort freedoms guaranteed by the first amendment.

Bill Macomber, president of the Metropolitan Museum and former foreign service officer and U.S. Ambassador, was equally adept a short time ago with his proposal that all U.S. representatives abroad be drawn from the ranks of career officers of the Foreign Service, and not be appointed for political favours. I cannot help but feel that the sentiments expressed in these well-reasoned articles came from these doctrines to which we were exposed at PA: a love of country and a concern for freedom of the individual to express himself.

More detailed news from Frank Carr, who writes from the Sacred Heart School of Theology in Hales Corners, Wisconsin: "My wife died two years ago, leaving me with three sons, Christopher, Gregory, and David, who live in Cincinnati, Chicago and Dallas. I left INROADS last August (INROADS was started by Frank and has been nationally recognized for its work in providing higher education for young people of ability) to enter this seminary. Assuming all goes well, I shall be assigned to the priesthood in late 1986 for the Diocese of Tucson."

Frank concludes, "I feel fortunate to have had a series of growth experiences in life. I do not wish to retire, ever, although that goes against the prevailing wisdom." I know all of us wish Frank well in Holy Orders. The Roman Church has gained a wonderful guy.

Nostalgia dictates that I note that Frank's old roommate in Williams Hall 1936, Charlie Larkin, was here in November. Susan and I had a pleasant evening with Charlie and Anne and younger Larkins. It's sobering to think that those two, Charlie and Frank, now attend to the body physical and the body spiritual. "Finis origine pendet," my end is in my beginning. Can it be any wonder that we all love PA for what it gave us in those halcyon days of yesteryear?

I learned with regret, from the Alumni Office, that George Heard passed away last November in Sewickley, PA. George left Andover for Yale and served as Gunnery Officer in the U.S. Navy from 1943-1946 in the Atlantic Theatre. George was chairman of Safety First Industries at the time of his death. I know we all extend our sympathies to his daughters, Elizabeth Guy of Durham, N.C., and Jeanette Allen of Edmonds, WA, who survive him.

A final plea to support Tom Rowen and 45 in '85. Remember what Marvel said:

Always at my back, I hear

Time's winged Chariot drawing near Return to the scene of your youth and indulge in memories of yesterday. May I wish you all a happy 1985 and may we meet again in June.

In their spare days, the Cookes manage to travel to other parts of the country including Alaska last year.

The Golf Journal of the United States Golf Association reported in the October '84 issue that Dr. Carver Livingston has the chance to repeat some golf history. In 1963 Carver lost the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club championship to Michael Ryan. Carver reversed the outcome in 1964. Now, 20 years later, Ryan, 77, defeated Carver, 62, for the first club senior championship at the Southampton, NY course. Shinnecock will be the site of the 1986 U.S. Open. Carver must be quite proficient with the sticks to play so well on one of the country's most interesting and challenging courses. We will all cheer for him to repeat the history this summer.

In addition, their son Charley graduated from PA in 1984 and their daughter Elizabeth is a senior at Middlebury College. The Yale Class of 1945 held its 40th Reunion in New Haven from 8-11 November. Classmates who attended were: Grant S. Barker, Lucius H. Biglow, F. Steele Blackall III, Bruce Calder '41, Fred Kahn, Vincent L. McKernin, Philip D. Reed, Jr., Godfrey A. Rockefeller, Lawton G. Sargent Jr., William K. Saunders, John E. Searle, Jr., Edward B. Twombly, Jr., and Elliot E. Vose.

Carolyn and I attended the Saturday, 10 November activities which began with a moving Thanksgiving and memorial service in Dwight Chapel. There was the reading of names of those who have died since the last Yale Reunion. Included in the reading were the following classmates: Olin Pickett Boone, Ernest David Obermeyer, Philip Richard Toohey and Howard Sayre Weaver.

From New Orleans comes news both sad and glad from Sedgewich Howard. His wife died in January 1984 after a long illness. He plans to remarry in January 1985 in Louisiana. No more details at this time.

Finally a short note from Paul Micou '44 informing us that his brother Hilary H. Micou, Jr. died on 13 December 1984 at his home in Grosse Pointe, Michigan. Hilary leaves his wife, Joan, and their two children, Hilary H. Micou III and Lisa Micou. Our class extends its sympathy to Joan and her family on their loss and ours.

It is so good to hear from you and your wives, and sharing the news is what this column is all about. Please write!

A meager response to my postcard mailing, but at least a little something. Paul Weamer reported that St. Louis, his transplanted home, is a city to enjoy. Paul is involved in Seler Management in the heating, ventilating and air conditioning industry. His wife, Virginia, has recently taken up teaching.

Peter Poor, a producer for NBC news in New York, was in charge of the last of NBC's magazine shows, First Camera, which, unfortunately, went off the air last April. He is now working on some hour documentaries.

Bill Palmer sent in a newsy letter which was much appreciated. Now in Louisville, KY, Bill, after 20 years with Ford, is currently with the State in correctional work. He has three children and four and one-half grandchildren and no doubt keeps the latter well in hand. Looking ahead to retirement in four years, Bill has a goal of comfortable retirement years and in his words "going out gracefully." In view of the botch many make of retirement, his approach makes a lot of sense.

The New London Day recently ran a long article on Dave Anderson, the State Representative from Norwich. Dave is Chairman of the legislature's Energy and Public Utilities committee and according to him this is no easy job. Outside of having to cope with the local Millstone nuclear fiasco, Dave will also have to assess the effects of the AT&T break-up on the Connecticut telephone user, a very tough issue to understand.

For those of you with a green thumb or the desire to have one, I suggest the Master Gardener program put on by at least eleven states through their County Extension Offices. I took the 60-hour course taught by the faculty of U. Conn. in fields such as plant disease, soil management, botany, vegetable growing, use of fertilizers, etc. and found it very worthwhile. The state courses are free, but the student is expected to give the same number of hours that he received as a volunteer at the County Extension Office. You learn a lot about horticulture and it's fun.

My heartfelt thanks to those who responded to my plea for news. May this inspire others to do the same.

Mimi Beckman Huidekoper writes that she works part-time at Pete's business and continues a busy volunteer schedule. Her five children are scattered from Arkansas and Minnesota to more local Connecticut, New York and Massachusetts. Her concluding statement is very rewarding: "We're all healthy and happy and very blessed." "Best to all my classmates" is sent by Honora Haynes who has been running her farm, raising horses in Sudbury, MA for the past 30 years. After teaching riding for the Millwood Hunt Club and later on her own farm for 20 years, she would like to slow down a bit but "the pupils keep coming and so do the horses, who now number 23." Teaching has included considerable travel giving clinics and she adds that she is Joint Master of the Nashoba Valley Hunt. An active and rewarding life.

The word from Peggy Howard Long is that her husband, Harry, has recently retired, leaving them free to travel in their boat and motor home. Meanwhile from Florida and Kentucky, Janet Humphrey responded that her activities include serving as director on boards whose range includes a university, and art gallery and the American Heritage Park, especially the preservation and promotion of the Negro Baseball Hall of Fame.

Among travellers, Betty-Lou Monett Hess spent a month touring Europe and visiting her son and daughter-in-law in northern England. Her daughter Victoria having graduated from SMU, now lives at home. Betty-Lou is still working and sounds content with her active life. Another busy classmate is Anne Pearson who, though semi-retired, is still active in the family snuff business, taking time to hunt and fish in season at her Maine camp. Highlights are her white-water canoe trips with her nephew.

Pett Pettingill Whitaker writes that she has talked with Isable Wiggan McDuffie and has seen Ann Loughridge Konstam and Bette Rowley Tittmann and even more, Bette's 94-year-old father. Of her own family she says her three sons are living in the West and her husband thrives in real estate on Cape Cod. Kathy Shaughnessy Bruns is delighted to have moved back to San Francisco with her daughters, Grace and Denise, after several years of living in the suburbs. Her life is busy, but not too busy to hear from classmates who might be passing through San Francisco.

Too late for the last issue of the Bulletin we learned of the death of Cornelia ("Skipper") Perkins Barbour in April of 1984. Our sympathy is extended to her husband, Fred, her two sons, Fred, Jr. and Scott; her daughter, Kathy Lynn and to her sister, Eloise Perkins Beck AA '41.

A September note from Frannie MacDonald Thompson just missed the last deadline. She and her husband moved to Montecito, CA (602 El Dorado Lane 93108). In January '84. No freight trips until this year. She spent two and one-half months in New Hampshire last summer but never phoned her Class Secretary! Treated myself to a long distance call to Tut Baylor Little who hadn't checked in for a long time. Her youngest is 25 and headed off to medical school. Edward, now retired from teaching, reinvigorates his mind with studies of the glorious Greek philosophers, taking time out in the spring to ski in Switzerland and Austria. After 25 years, Tut is stepping back onto the slopes with all new equipment. Good luck.

Ruth Goodall Pitstick's Christmas card tells me their new house is complete and being occupied in Boca Raton. Margi Travis Atwood suggests a mini reunion next year. Maybe Bloomfield, CT, her home, or Andover at Bazaar time. Let's hear from you. Margi's letter also includes Miss Baker's address and notes she would love to hear from any one of us. 31 Hensley Road, Bath, BA 2, 2 DR, England. Visitors to Connecticut can enjoy Bed and Breakfast with Margi at 84 Gun Mill Road.

Ricki Hinrichsen Stambaugh and all her family were at Hanover Inn for Christmas again this year. She and Stam are opening another restaurant in the Boston area. Ricki and I have decided to be Co-Agents for our class and thereby get twice as many donations!

I have the distinction of being one of the few Republicans to lose in the nation this year. My race for the legislature against four incumbent Democrats was great fun, but as Hanover goes, so goes Minnesota. I had the satisfaction of coming close and may try again.

It's only January and already reunion plans are humming. Thirty-four classmates have already indicated they are coming and forty-one are tentatively planning to attend, and that's with less than half the returns in! I'll be sending a newsletter next month with the names of friends coming back.

Returns are also coming in from the people who faced the formidable task of trying to teach us something long ago. Among those planning to be at our reunion dinner are: Deke and Dene DiClemente, Bob and Kate Sides, Helen Bronk, Clara Maynard, Steve and Stephanie Sorota, Jack and Helen Barss, and Fred and Susan Stott. Fritz and Laura Allis will be with us if Fritz has recovered from his 50th at Amherst. Several others have not been heard from at this writing.

Festivities will start on Friday 7 June in the afternoon and will be highlighted by our class dinner Saturday night, and a wonderful windup lobster/steak roast at Bill and Vera Moore's lovely estate in neighboring Topsfield on Sunday. Through superb management and imaginative bookkeeping the committee has brought in this package deal for the fantastic price of $99.99 per person ($199.98 per couple) — room, board and tuition for three days and two nights in beautiful Andover! You can't afford to stay home!

Tom Hopkinson phoned a couple of months ago to touch base. He was on a Mediterranean Cruise and found Nancy and Spike Adriance on the same beautiful boat. They sailed from Venice and wound up in Nice which was nice (ouch!).

Jack Thorndike attended a meeting of the Boston Securities Analysts to hear a fine presentation by the management of AMP, Inc. Jack didn't know that the company president was Hal McInnes. After reminiscing about the good old days, Hal assured Jack that he'd be back for the 40th. Jack, who is VP and a director of the Fiduciary Trust Co. in Boston is also Chairman of the Massachusetts Health and Education Facilities Authority, the largest such authority in the country. They have sponsored the issuance of over $3 billion worth of tax exempt bonds for hospitals, schools and colleges. Phil Reynolds is on the board of the Connecticut HEFA, and they compare notes.

Artie and Cornelia Moher are looking forward to becoming grandparents in February thanks to daughter Melissa. I'm sure they'll have a picture or thirty to show around at our party. Artie says, "Just think forty years out, and we haven't changed a bit!"

Genie and I had an enjoyable trip to England in November with six days in London doing the theatre bit and five more scaring ourselves to death riding around the countryside in a rented Renault. It was a wonderful experience, nonetheless. While in London I called Charlie Isitt's home and was shocked and saddened to learn from his wife, Patricia, that he had died in October 1983 of a heart attack. He is survived by his wife and two sons, Jonathan and Simon. Their address is 33 Lancaster Rd., London W. 11, England F03199. Our deepest sympathy goes to them.

Many of you who watched the vice-presidential debate between George Bush '42 and Geraldine Ferraro may have been unaware that Bob Boyd was the third, and, I thought, the best of the interrogators. Bob is the Washington Bureau chief for Knight-Ridder newspapers and already has a Pulitzer Prize under his belt.

You can help the class to register a good showing for our 40th reunion Alumni Fund gift without it costing you anything. We will get credit if you will pledge your 1986 and 1987 gift at the time you make your 1985 gift. There will be no arm twisting at the reunion; let's back Blake before the blinking blast, buddies!

If you haven't sent in your preliminary reunion reservation form, it will help us a lot in planning, if you'll drop me a note. Our goal is 100 attendees and our motto is: "Class of '45, TRY TO MATCH US!" See you in June.

This is the final reminder of our upcoming 40th reunion to be held at Phillips Academy on 7-9 June 1985. I really hope that many of you will come as it will be fun to catch up after so many years.

Joan Mitchell Norton plans to be there along with Bea Van Cleve Lee. Joan, who lives in Ridgefield, Conn., wrote that she had her first grandchild before Christmas (don't forget to bring pictures!).

A note from Andrea Lyons Shoemaker indicates that she, also, is going to try to make the reunion. Andrea lives in the Washington, DC area near her two daughters and teaches math at Langely High School. She has a son in Alaska and hopes to visit him this summer — it depends on how many snow days she has to make up (as of January it looks as though there might be quite a few!).

Jean Mulvey Friedmann might also break her non-attendance record and appear at our 40th. She went to her niece's graduation from Andover last June and was very favorably impressed by the merger. Jean and her husband (who just retired from Shell) have moved back to the northeast from Houston. She sent me a great clipping from the New York Times referring to Sally Leavitt Cheney who had to translate an interview with Eden Pastora Gomez who is fighting the Nicaraguan Government. "He used so many four-letter words in Spanish, I had to soften up the translation. He's a very picturesque speaker," Sally is quoted as saying.

The last I heard from Ann Bushnell Bailey, she was in Washington, DC continuing research on the Far East. Her penmanship hasn't improved since Abbot days so she'll just have to come to reunion to explain her topic.

We were saddened to learn of the death of Betty Doyle Kukol last fall. Our deepest sympathy is extended to her husband, Frank Kukol, 960 Broad Street, Clifton, NJ 07013.

In October Sheila and I spent a lovely weekend at Andover with Bob Hulburd. The Begians came up for a picnic and the football game, yet another loss for PA to some prep school I had never heard of. Kyle, our youngest, was along for her interview.

Bege and I, totally helpless to avoid The Andover Shop, came away with gold and silver and blue encrusted blazer patches, complete with that Non Sibi sun, swarming bees and "Finis Origine Pendet," baby! These emblems will turn your run-of-the-mill Stanley Blacker into Saville Row in a flash. Well, the first time I wore mine — at the Boat Show in New York — damned if "Bo" Collins '50, Capt. USN (Ret.) didn't strike up a chat over olde PA and other topics of interest and amusement, mainly his super Shipyard Museum in the Thousand Islands.

In early December at a New York Alumni meeting at Jody Bush's '57, we were tickled to find Sue and Jack Lynch (Past Pres AA of NY). At dinner Jack had us roaring over old tales of his days as an assistant purser on The Grace Line in the 50s. Got to make Sharon this summer for a round or two. Jack Lynch is PA '86.

Heard from Heard (we missed the tuba concert this year) who has closed down the Sewickley operation and will come East, probably Bucks Cnty., to live. Cy was last seen in NY, bourbon in hand, before the Giant screen at the Yale Club absorbing the great upset victory over Harvard.

A welcome Christmas card from Idalita and Gus Tavares confirmed their intention of attending our 40th reunion in June of next year (June 13, 14, 15). Believe it or not, it will be a reality in 1986 — 40 years and on, as those old Harrovians would lament. So, just plan now to come back for the festivities, fun and frolic on the greensward. I think we should start a day early and have a little golfing at the olde ACC for those inclined towards the odd round of Royal and Ancient. Friday will come with that gorgeous young bride of his who is reported to be a crack golfer.

I am, indeed, sorry to end this on a sad note. Last August, Myles Chute died. Myles went West with that pioneering Stanford crowd, Asbury, Budge, Chandler, Nourse, etc., and stayed in California. He was a wonderful, energetic, active fellow at PA. His wife, Carol, lives at 2083 Rancho Corona Drive, Corona, California 91720.

Rev. P. He is former minister of Kent United Church of Christ, and his wife is a former Assistant Professor at Kent State University. They will be on assignment in the Natal region where they will work under the United Congregational Church of South Africa. Allen will serve as leadership training and Church extension coordinator for the denomination there.

The Myricks also served as World Board missionaries in South Africa from 1957 until 1968 where Allen served in the capacity of Field Secretary. He taught at the Adams Theological Seminary in Modderpoort from 1958-1962 and at the Federal Theological Seminary in Alice from 1963-1968. Mrs. Myrick served as a social worker and assisted Allen in counselling African pastors and their wives. Following their earlier overseas mission assignment, Allen was minister of the Whitneyville Congregational Church in Hamden, CT from 1968-1975 while his wife was a community organizer with the Urban League of New York and with the Connecticut Conference on Church and Society. Allen has been a delegate to the United Churches Decision Making General Synod and has led workshops and retreats on contemplative prayer. He is co-founder of the Kent Ecumenical Peace Group.

Roger Hunt has moved his practice of tax and probate law to the firm of Sullivan & Worcester in Boston where he is working hard and is very active as usual.

Andy Ireland has left the Democratic party and is now a Republican Congressman. A Florida banker, Andy ran successfully for Congress in 1976 on the Democratic ticket after a 13-term Democratic incumbent retired. He was unopposed for re-election in 1978 and in 1980 had only token opposition. His district had not voted for a Democratic Presidential candidate since the 1940s and up until now has never had a Republican Congressman. In the summer of 1981 when the tax and spending cuts were passed, Andy was one of nine "boll weevil Democrats" with a record of complete support for President Reagan's programs. His constituents were content: in 1982 he again ran unopposed for re-election. On 5 July of this year he made official what he had announced almost inaudibly in March: he re-registered as a Republican. "The South," he says "has the same problem Jesse Jackson had." He meant, apparently, that the Southern Democrats are used as blacks are to maintain the Democratic Party's leadership and have little leverage, in his view, over the direction of the party. His decision is evidently a resolution of a long-standing tension between the way Southerners register to vote in local primaries and the way they vote in presidential contests. His task, he says, is to convince constituents that in local elections they have been voting a party that simply does not represent their interests or their views on national policy. His defection was the subject of a lengthy article by George Will in the Washington Post and the Hartford Courant and elsewhere.

Rod Gander and the interesting college of which he is President have been the center of a considerable amount of publicity during the past year. A full page feature concerning him appeared in the Boston Globe last summer.

As many of you remember, four years ago Rod was a New Yorker who had spent most of his 26 years at Newsweek as chief of some 65 correspondents and bureaus throughout the world. He had no advanced degrees and not the foggiest notion of how to run a college. Marlborough College, founded in 1947, was a tiny, struggling, fiercely proud Vermont college which needed more students, more money and a new president.

The college, under his presidency, has already shown a couple of budget surpluses, modernized its admissions and recruiting procedures and is gearing up for a capital fund drive. According to Harvard sociologist David Reisman, who was on the search committee that picked Gander, and is one of the college's strongest supporters, it is incredible that the college has survived this long. "With all the laws of demographics, economics, and good sense it shouldn't be there." According to Rod, "In darker days I worried a lot. It could be possible that the odds would be too stacked against us but I don't believe it. If you bet against us you'll lose."

The current shortage of college-age students coupled with the popularity of career education poses the greatest threat so far to the college, but Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith and nearby Hampshire College President, Adele Simmons, feel that the brand of individualized liberal arts education that these two institutions offer should be preserved.

Rod Gander is seen by the faculty, students and trustees as the ambassador to the outside world, the man with the public relations skill needed to make the place visible. Although he and his family had been spending their summers nearby, he had known nothing about the college until his name was submitted to a presidential search committee by a friend. By the time he'd spent two days on campus he "truly fell in love with the college. . . particularly the students."

Lee Booth Witwer has collected six grandchildren, seven by the time you read this. Her daughter Violette gave birth to Dorothy Lee in October. Bravo, Violette!

The high point of 1984 for "E.B." Ogden Tod was the wedding of her daughter Lili to Howard MacMillan III of Wayzata, Minn. The bride and groom are graduates of Brown University. "Happy Birthday!" to each of us turning 50 this past year, with a special celebration, literal and figurative, for Eddie Elson whose attributes as entrepreneur and civic leader are praised at length in a recent article in Atlanta magazine. Atlanta reports, "Elson oversees an empire of hotel gift shops, airport and Amtrak terminal concession booths, print media distributor shops, and the Atlanta News Agency. His charm is disarming and his shrewdness legendary. . . He travels extensively to keep his intellectual edge sharp. He is transatlantic, bi-coastal, perpetually in motion." Atlanta cites not only Eddie's success as a "media baron," but also his major contributions to cultural and social action as the first Chairman of the Board of National Public Radio and as Chairman of the Georgia Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. Eddie and Susie's three sons have all attended Andover and Eton. The article concluded, "Whatever praise or criticism comes Elson's way, it's important to note one thing: He has succeeded at virtually every challenge he has set for himself. He stands as an argument against any stereotype. Is there anything he doesn't do or any role he doesn't play?"

Tom Jensen played one of the most gratifying roles in his Civil Air Patrol career last fall when he helped lead a successful, three-day search for a missing elderly man near Shenandoah, PA. Shenandoah treated Tom and the 175 CAP searchers to a victory supper and a parade down Main Street.

The Lowell Sun portrays Bob Gordon as an extraordinary success as the third generation President of Alexander's Supermarkets in Lowell, with another coming soon; an industrial park; a 50-store mall in Nashua, NH; and two residential housing developments." In the Sun interview, Bob says that among his 1800 employees he particularly admires the many elderly people he has hired to work mornings: "They're more conscientious. They're more compatible . . . people love to talk to them, and they're more careful. They do a better job."

Four hundred doctors across the country were asked to select the U.S.'s best physicians in 24 specialties. Ben Gittes was among 120 named in the Good Housekeeping magazine survey. Formerly of Melrose and now living in Weston, Ben is Chief of the Division of Urology at Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston, and Professor of Urological Surgery at Harvard Medical School.

Your scribe enjoys frequent meetings with Ralph Stuart while we serve on the Long Range Planning Committee for The Fessenden School. I've also had happy but all-too-brief fall visits with Warren Hutchins and Stu MacDonald as they toured New England schools with their children. Meanwhile, I am encouraged to plunge ahead with my serious interest in black and white photography after a successful one-man show and favorable Boston Globe review last December.

Stan Shuman's son David is a Lower at PA; for the sake of David, '52's other PA sons and daughters, and Andover, Stan deserves our best effort to support his work as our Class Agent. I'm particularly encouraged to see Stan getting solid help from new Co-Agents Peter Adams, Ray Foote, Graeme Henderson, Warren Hutchins, Paul Jameson, and William Russell.

50th birthdays lead to a final "sands of time" wish that our 35th Reunion in two years will be a well-attended prelude to our 40th, 45th, and (Good Grief!) 50th. . . . Eibuh.

Well, it turns out I have a guardian angel. Albeit, a little old for the job, but still able to come through when it counts. "I was at a phonathon in Boston the other evening," writes my heaven-sent, Joe Mesics, "and talked to a number of members of our class. I would like to give you some tidbits of my conversations with the hope that they may be helpful to you in preparing your next set of class notes." Helpful? I should say so!

"Dan Cornwell: still living in Valley Forge, Penn., remembers Andover with great affection and promises to be back for the 40th. Paul Brockelman: living in Portsmouth, NH, and in the school business. Peter Perkins: called twice and spoke to wife, Mona. Message was that business is picking up and things are looking better in Plano, Texas. Tom Burnett: living in Flemington, NJ, and thinking about raising sheep. I told him to call Simeon Cotton in Virginia. Bob Clark: all things in good shape in Savannah, Georgia. Promises to come back to an Andover reunion in 1988. Seth Gibson: enjoying his teaching at the Middlesex School in Concord. I saw Seth several times this fall and he looks great. John Scranton: talked to both Brenda and John and all is well on Bleeker Street. John reports Brenda is retired. Tom Brown: missed Tom, but had a nice chat with his wife, Maureen. She informed me that they have six sons, information Tom never passed on. John Bigelow: John busy in Baltimore, MD area teaching math and computer programming to secondary school kids. Charlie Brodhead: found in Elizabeth, Penn. where he moved about two years ago and is busy with Agway. Charlie and family are loving the central Pennsylvania farm country. Tom Shoop: Tom, Judy and the boys spent a night with us this summer here in Andover, passing through on their vacation. Dick Lumpkin stopped by after the Harvard-Yale game with his son, Ben. His daughter Elizabeth is at Suffield Academy and Dick is looking ahead to the day when Ben might be here at Andover. Don Shapiro is busy in New York leading our Andover/Abbot Regional Association in the Metropolitan New York area. Just moved to a spacious new apartment overlooking Central Park and continuing to help Andover in many volunteer capacities.

"Walter Alexander: saw Karen and Walter in Chicago recently at an Andover alumni parent reception and dinner. Son Walter graduated from Andover in June 1984 and Karen tells me he is in Paris. Zeus Stevens: saw Peggy and Zeus here in Andover this summer. Their daughter Amy attended Summer Session and is now a senior at Dana Hall. Their son Steve is at Kimball Union Academy. Ron Baquie: saw Nancy and Ron here at Phillips Academy last summer. Their daughter Ashley attended Summer Session in 1984. George Bixby: we see Margo and George frequently here in Andover. George is in as good shape as ever and can still suit up and play football for Dartmouth. Carl Hoffman: Sandi and I spent some time with them at their Penn. home in October. Son John here for an interview in November. Dick Golden: Dick and Gerry here for Andover-Exeter game in November."

Thanks, Joe. The rest I can handle myself.

Hank Holmes writes, "We live in Thailand still. We've kept in touch with Jim Gale and John Poinier and would like to know where Bob Pelletreau can be reached. Our work concerns training Thais to work effectively with Westerners, and vice versa. Last year we spent the night on an oil rig to observe the Western roughneck supervisors and Thai technicians deal with each other. My wife was the first woman to do that!

Please note, says Graham Rose, "The arrival of my adopted daughter Virginia Sheldon, born 27 June 1984. We think this will be the last one!" The Stafford County Chronicle has a feature story about Don Macleay, headlined, "Terrorist Terrain: Cross-fire." The story concerns a military training ground that is about to be developed for training business executives against terrorists. The land to be used is adjacent to Don's property. A firing range is also planned. "As Macleay wandered through the property," the article states, "he told of the wildlife that lives in the woods. He said that he had moved to Stafford County from Fairfax because it was peaceful countryside." Attached to the article, a note from Don: "The site in question was the H.Q. of the first Regiment of Cavalry of Massachusetts Volunteers during the winter of 1862-63. Do you think anyone up there would be interested in preserving it for historical purposes?"

Neal Robinson writes that he is moving, turning his practice over to a young Turk, and after 20 years in the trenches, taking on a new job and exciting new responsibility. It's with Dupont at their nylon manufacturing plant in Chattanooga, Tenn. Regular hours and the chance to practice wellness and health rather than disease. Seth Gibson sent along a fabulous article detailing a canoe trip to Ungava Bay that was featured in the Rutland Daily Herald. And finally, a note from George Bixby, with the following news: "After 27 years in operations of a privately held manufacturing company, the last five years as President and CEO, I am now seeking a similar position in a small to medium size company or a divisional senior operations position in a larger company."

A nice letter from Bill Whittlesey assures that he will be there to be counted at the 30th Reunion in June. Whit's sharp eyes while scanning the Wall Street Journal seems to be responsible for the bulk of this column, but I never realized how fun and gossipy the WSJ is, so here goes . . .

Eli Jacobs, chairman of Bioresponse, Inc., a Wilton, Connecticut producer of research products, along with former Nixon cabinet official, Peter G. Peterson, and Craig K. Harding, has formed an investment partnership to carry out small to mid-sized leveraged buyouts of divisions of major corporations. The WSJ goes on to make it all sound very exciting by pointing out that "some investment specialists question the timing of the new venture, claiming the leveraged buyout boom is over." In any case, we wish Eli well and suspect that he's made the right move.

Did you miss Dynasty last week? According to the Wall Street Journal Jay Precourt, senior executive vice-president of Hamilton Oil Company advised Hamilton he may sell his 30,000 shares to AB Volvo at the going rate of $19.50 a share which would raise Volvo's stake in HOC from 32% to 48%. At least one outside director, a Mr. Gates, termed Volvo's offer "totally inadequate," and the WSJ couldn't resist opining that "the disclosure underlines apparent discord within the board concerning Volvo's bid to increase its stake in Hamilton." Watch out John Forsythe!

Whit's last observation was of the publication The Mainer's Pocket Companion by Wallace E. Tobin. Whit has promised a future critique, but any mariner who wishes to have Wally's book for his own library, (it's not available in stores), may send $6.95 to U.S. Naval Institute, 2062 Generals Highway, Annapolis, MD 21401. For $8.45 your copy will be personalized (please specify name). MasterCard and Visa accepted with a signature and expiration date. Wally, if this were available at my corner Crown Books, this would have been so easy!

Don't forget the 30th Reunion 7-9 June.

This promises to be an outstanding event, and if, when this reaches you, an affirmative decision would seem like a last minute impulse, do you really think we'd turn you away? Follow that impulse . . . Y.

Hi, everyone. Steve Trivers said that he was back in Andover this last September for the Alumni Volunteer Weekend, and could not believe that Josh Miner was old enough to retire at the end of this year. I think that all of us would agree with that comment. Steve said that he attended the Josh Miner dinner in Detroit, as I did in Houston, along with Ralph and Carol Weaver, and it was a super affair . . . Tim Orcutt said that he enjoyed the Marge and Ted Harrison dinner back in 1983 which was held at Andover. . . . Based on the mail this time I assume that in our own riches to welfare situations, we turn once again to our children. Fred Shuman writes that his daughter Abby graduated from PA last summer and is attending Brown. Grabo Keator produced some hieroglyphics about his kids: William, the oldest, is playing rugby as a junior at Amherst; Matthew, the middle, is playing varsity hockey at Trinity, but stroked the Pomfret crew to the New England Championship and earned a trip to the Henley Regatta in England. Sam, the youngest, is a day student at the Rectory School and loves to play hockey. Elon Gilbert mentioned that he almost broke down and returned to PA while visiting his son in Boston. Elon's eldest is attending the Coast Guard Academy in New London, while his younger boy, age 13, took a blue highway tour through the U.S. and Canada, ending up in Washington state. Elon continued that he is directing some projects in Africa and has a good deal of time for himself which he enjoys thoroughly. Dave Crofoot dropped a line from Bridgeport, CT where he is an architectural partner with the firm of Bane, Yost and Assoc. Dave is also president of Datum Corp., a data processing firm. Married to Pepperrell Merrill in 1960, and still married (which beats the percentages), Dave said that his oldest, Anders, graduated from Andover in 1979 and from Dartmouth in 1984. Kristin, age 18, is attending Walnut Hill's School for the Performing Arts. Tjasa, the youngest, is 13.

We heard from Spike Gummere whose oldest, Bart, has joined the admissions staff at Middlebury after graduation in 1983. Daughter Jenny is attending the Cornell Hotel School in her second year, and, as Spike said, he hopes she works at a very nice resort three years hence so he can rest. GOOD IDEA! . . . Pete Broadbent outlined some changes that have taken place in his life: one divorce, one re-marriage, and a reasonable promotion. Pete adds that after 16 years with EG&G he made the Peter Principle work by being elected treasurer of the firm. Pete, it looks as if you have fallen into many of the categories of the rest of us. Maybe this is the life following PA.

From my own standpoint, my first born will be spending his senior year in China next year but will return to Washington & Lee for graduation. My second, gleefully, went to Stanford this fall, although his father is not overjoyed with the $20K per year it will take to educate this dude at "America's School." My third undoubtedly will be stealing cars and selling the parts by next year, becoming an enormous success, if not a model citizen . . . Meade Frierson writes from Birmingham, Alabama, that after 17 years of practicing law with a large firm, he has opened his own practice. Meade adds that although he has three sons, none of them have attended Andover . . . Got a note from Rod Parke who said, "I'd like to say a special 'hi' to my gay Andover classmates and to apologize for having avoided them during my wonderful but frightened post-grad year at PA. Andover gave me so much, but it took more 'growing up' before I had enough self respect to be who I am."

To wind it up I received a signed card from John Newell which contained two phone numbers, but, alas, no note. Regards, Gee.

The changing of the guard has taken place. Dinah [Hallowell Barlow] officially turned over the mantle of class secretary to yours truly to continue the fine tradition of reporting the whereabouts and doings of our aging but indomitable classmates. On behalf of all '57 Abbotites I want to express my admiration and appreciation to Dinah for the fine job she has done during the past couple of years. I hope I will be able to continue in similar fashion, but it is clear to me that the task will be impossible without the help of all of you in the way of news, brief or otherwise.

We're a bit thin this month, a state I attribute to the fact that the holidays intervened in my pleas for news. I did hear from Jody Bradley Bush who reported that son John is at PA in his lower year and loving it, and son Bill is at St. Bernard's in New York where he is playing lots of soccer, hockey, and lacrosse. (I wonder where he gets those interests/talents?) Jody is doing volunteer work while completing a degree in landscape design which should be forthcoming in March.

I've had a couple of wonderful phone conversations with Dinah and Mimi Ganem Reeder. Mimi has undertaken an MBA degree program and is struggling to find a niche for herself now that her children are no longer needing full-time mothering. Her quandary sounds not dissimilar to many I have been hearing lately among women of our age and stage in life. Mimi is still giving a good deal of time and energy to Andover as well (her phone call was officially part of the PA fund raising campaign).

Dinah is very busy establishing a new life for herself and her two sons in Milton, Mass. The boys are heavily involved in hockey, soccer and baseball. Dinah co-produces and directs an interview show for Milton Cable T.V. and continues with freelance copy-editing for magazines. She is aiming for a "real job" in public relations. "Trying to make the switch from non-profit organizations to the stimulating world of big business is a challenge, but I'm gathering good advice and terrific leads." In her spare time Dinah has learned to play squash, is climbing a "ladies tennis ladder" and has become more active in church.

I am still living in Indianapolis and have even begun to look upon this radically and rapidly changing and improving city as home (though the eyes still look longingly eastward on occasion). Twelve-year-old son, Peter, is in the 7th grade and consumed by computers, electronics, and chemistry. (That certainly does not come from my side of the family!) I am still director of Community Relations at a mental health center in a neighboring town but hope soon to find something closer to home and, like Dinah, in the for-profit area. I'm tired of not knowing whether or not Washington and Indiana are going to keep paying our bills.

I hope to have more news to report in the next issue, but that will depend on you all. In the meantime, Happy New Year!

If anyone received a postcard from me this winter, please respond for the next newsletter. I need to know if all the cards were lost in the mail. The news I have is thanks to Carol Greene Donnelly, who relayed messages from the Phonathon.

Cynthia Worcester Shanks and Vickie Kohler participated; the results were very satisfactory. Anne Moulton Anderson has two teenage boys who are active swimmers. Anne is a manager with Bell Labs, AT&T, for recruiting and hiring in Research and Development. Nancy Dick is building a new house in Chestertown, Maryland, which has involved much interaction with local government. I'll be over for a sail when it is finished. Nancy doctors in the communicable disease area for the county, is on the church vestry and numerous civic groups. She sends "love to all members of the class of '58." Another classmate working on a house is Susie Moore Ferris. She is re-doing an 18th century house in Farmington, CT. Quite a change from living in the Big Apple!

I phoned Jane Christie Smith because she had had a card from Jenny New Forbes, but that was a year old. Jane put out the welcome mat for me in October when I was on the way to parents' weekend at Tufts.

I did have a note from June Hamilton Withington just after our last deadline.

They were on the way to Canada. Then leaving Heather at St. Michael's College in Vermont, seeing Tripp off for a program in diesel technology, and ultimately sending their youngest, Meghan, off on the kindergarten bus. If all this is jumbled, it is because I have just put my husband on the plane for Montana and my three sons are waiting in the van to go skiing. I kept waiting to write this in hopes of receiving some cards. Cheers!

You may think it has been a long time since Ike was president, since Fidel took over Cuba, since Alaska and Hawaii joined the other 48, since Nixon taught Krushchev how to boil water in Moscow, since the IUD was put into commercial development, and since the U.S. Postmaster General banned Lady Chatterley's Lover from the mails, but in fact it has been but 25 years. Those of us who sat up late discussing the global implications of the above (or at least looking for the dog-eared pages of that which the Postmaster banned) 25 years ago, know that it feels like just yesterday — and yet a lot has happened to us in the intervening quarter century. The superb questionnaire that so many of you answered so gloriously points out that, as a class, we have gained just over three-quarters of a ton and have lost, if not some of our memory, at least a lot of our retention of trivia — no, the top song in 1959 was not the "Whiffenpoof Song," it wasn't even anything by Elvis or "Wake Up Little Suzy" as several of us thought, it was "Mack The Knife" (Bobby Darin version).

None of us remembered the name of that year's Nobel Literature Laureate, Salvatore Quasimodo; and fewer remembered the name of one of his best known works, Incomparable Earth, and fewer still the name of the woman, not his wife, with whom he signed into a hotel in Stockholm prior to receiving his prize.

Sven and Ay-Whang Hsia did show up [Reunion, 1984], however, and if Sven was a part of the three-quarter ton, it is an extremely small part of it (and Ay-Whang certainly hasn't seen an extra pound in several decades). Paul Neshamkin was there, too, both he and I the sadder for not having enough money to document our event for posterity (if not public television) but otherwise Paul is well and seeking both money and subject matter for future documentaries.

In the sic transit gloria category, the Dodgers beat the White Sox, Brazil beat Sweden, the Celtics won their first of eight, Billy Cannon won the Heisman trophy, and given what happened to him, we can all be glad that none of us did.

Although Hank Higdon should have, and by the looks of him still could. (You will note that I will not mention anyone who has added to the three-quarter-ton — a symptom of the times, I suppose). Drayton Heard and Randy Devening were there, still looking like they could block for Hank as well as they had 25 years ago, and Mike and Jung Bassett came too, again Mike in as great shape as ever, enjoying the financial markets of New York from the relative (nocturnal) calm of suburban Connecticut.

The commandment that most of us would like to see eliminated, that is the second one we'd like to see eliminated, was the one that goes "Thou shalt not have thy cake and eat it too." Running a close second in the questionnaire was the one that goes, "Thou shalt not have coeds in tight jeans."

You remember the stereotype of our generation? The one about the house, wife, two cars (one a station wagon), and the 2.3 kids? Well, look to the right of you, look to the left, we have met the stereotype and it is us.

Two people whom everyone would have recognized immediately are Tom Kukk, and Giles Payne. Giles may have lost three hairs, but otherwise hasn't changed a bit, and Tom has certainly found an elixir of youth: both look great.

Although we live in most states and several foreign countries, we live mostly in the Northeast. Nevertheless, two respondents live in the state of euphoria, two in confusion and one in chaos.

Forty percent say we drink too much, 40% say not. Twenty five percent smoke cigarettes, 15% pipes, and 80% of the smokers have tried to quit, 90% of them unsuccessfully.

On the question of having more kids, eighty percent of us say "no more" often followed by a truly presidential Expletive Deleted, 10% said maybe, and 10% yes. As one of the latter, Maureen and I are pleased to announce the birth of Matthew on 15 October 1984.

It's great to hear from so many whom we missed at the reunion but who wanted to be there. Eve Hooper Dalmolen ("Candy" to us) is now an Associate Professor at Elmira College. Sons Hans, 8, and Pieter, 6, have a wide range of interests that keep her and husband Al (on staff to re-elect Stan Lundine to Congress — hope he was successful) very busy.

Tina Savell Barker works that she works with very young language disordered kids as a speech and language pathologist and Ed is an international banker at Maryland National Bank. Eddie and Andrew, 17 and 15, are both at the Gilman School in Baltimore. They're swimmers and "neat people to have in my life." Tina is planning to make our 30th. Susie Fox Castellini was involved in a huge fund raiser for her children's school in Cincinnati around reunion time. . . . sad for us but successful for the school. Beth is a senior at Canterbury, Bob a junior at Portsmouth Priory, while Phil, 14, and Ilicia, 11, are at home. Thank heavens Susie still sings! She warbles in the church choir and with a group that entertains at retirement homes across the city. She's also a docent at the Cincinnati Art Museum and did some fund raising for the Christ Hospital in the spring.

Congratulations to Faith Critchley Miller, recently married to Wayne Miller, Chief Warrant Officer in the Coast Guard and stationed in South Portland. Faith has become a Mainiac and works as a free-lance editor. They love the Portland area (Joan Benoit and blueberry land) and are cross-country skiing as long as there's any snow. Alma Grew is also free-lance writing (Mrs. Werner would be very proud of us) and taking writing courses. She was published in the Hartford Courant last summer. PA and Abbot of the 50s are the background for several stories, one called "Campus Brat." I wish she would send us a copy; I can relate to that since Alma and I were the faculty brats par excellence.

Lolly Bell Hetherington emphasizes that they really know how to celebrate the Christmas season in Richmond and appropriately, her first non-Buffalo Christmas in 10 years was wonderfully balmy. She loves the city with its new friends and challenges. Alex, who is finishing his senior year in Buffalo, is No. 1 boy cross-country, private school runner in New York State.

Gale Barton Hartch's three boys are continuing to rack up tennis and cross-country honors. Todd, 17, carried the Olympic torch last June in Hartford. Gale has become a teacher's aide in biology at New Canaan High School as she contemplates her return to the academic world when Greg and Tim (15) go to college.

The Flathers skied their Christmas vacation in wunderbar Lech and Zurs, Austria. Young Charlie was in a group with the Crown Prince of the Netherlands, Alex. The Queen preferred that he take private lessons, but Alex liked his friends, especially the girls. The upshot was that there were always one or two security types whom the kids were forever losing in the powder.

So many of us have seniors this year. Maybe we will meet on the college campuses next fall. Good luck to all applicants. They should all be accepted everywhere just on the basis of having great mothers!

The Reunion is drawing seriously close now. We have all been receiving entreaties, appeals, etc., some with humor, on that impressive School reunion letterhead. If your name isn't among the big hitters at the top of the stationery, take solace in your past decisions not to contribute, hunker down and wait for the onslaught; you can bet there's a price to pay for being a reunion committee person. Note, too, that Messrs. Kip and Quattlebaum await your appearance, serve as the sacrificial reunion goats in the sense that they can't not be there, but don't get listed among the big financiers.

One guy who can't and doesn't want to escape the crush is reunion co-chairman Michael Scharf, who a year ago partially excused himself from too many reunion responsibilities because of the press of outside business. That outside business, which Mike modestly failed to describe, was one of America's most successful companies in 1984. The Wall Street Journal recently listed Edgcomb Steel of New England, Inc., of which Mike is the new chairman and chief executive officer, as one of 1984's best performers in the national over-the-counter trading market, with a stock rise of 365% on the year. Edgcomb is the largest independent metals service center concern in the U.S.

Larry Gillis "got blown away like a lot of other good Democrats here in New Hampshire" in the 1984 elections in his third run for Rockingham County Attorney. Larry is in the private practice of law and lives about a mile down the street from Phillips Exeter.

Chuck Goodell completed the Twin Cities marathon in late September, a race in which he says he'd like to feel he pushed Barry Brown to a new record marathon time for men over 40; however, "I'm not sure if he was aware of the intense pressure I was putting on him from one hour back in the field of runners."

Woody Wickham, after six years as faculty member and administrator at Hampshire college, has moved to a new position as senior Vice President at Jan Krukowski Associates in New York City. The firm helps non-profit organizations with problems of marketing management and development. Woody continues to live in Pelham, Mass., spending 3-4 day "weeks" in New York City. Allen Ross writes that "kids, health, humor and work still OK so far. Looking for time to run a trail; ultra-wrestling, lacrosse and football hurt too much."

Not much news. All the news will come in June. See you at the School.

Much has happened since last I wrote, and news from your classmates abounds.

The first (for me) running of the New York City Marathon in October produced a mini-reunion hosted by Dennis Cross and attended by several classmates who not only went out of their way to attend, but also brought their checkbooks to make good on the generous pledges they ended up making after my performance (?) in the heat and humidity. Something over $2,000 was raised for PA and I want to acknowledge each and every one of you who gave. Andy Graham, the old fox, was the only one who predicted the level of improvement I might achieve from my first marathon. Accordingly, he kept his pledge within safe limits. He knew more than I did, though, and those who listened to my own forecast, fortunately or unfortunately, ended up shelling out big bucks. Oh well, it was for a good cause.

At the post-race gathering at the Yale Club, Dennis Cross announced that his newest daughter, Eliza, was born the day after the marathon, 29 October 1984. Dennis was positively aglow from his part in the birthing process, and was sheer joy personified. Jim Durston appeared and announced that he has rejoined the New York Mets in their PR and Group Sales Division. Jim continues to send notes on a regular basis and is, as usual, an outstanding representative of our class. Alec Walling has brought his real estate career to a close and is moving on to places and projects yet to be discovered. He has a great John Irving wrestling story to tell which measures up to anything you saw or read in The World According to Garp. Alec reports that Steve Most is alive and well somewhere in the mid-west. Steve, if you're out there, Alec would like to hear from you. Les Stroh proved to be quite versatile as he embarks on the establishment of his third major magazine in five years, exports oriental rugs, deals in computer software, and quadruples as a gourmet cook. Craig Whiteney looking hale and fit, told us that he is now Assistant Managing Editor of the New York Times. While he sometimes misses his foreign travel, Craig thoroughly enjoys his new role at the Times. Jon Charnas, who was positively great about breaking out his checkbook, looks as hale and fit as he did as a student, and makes his varied living at Pelican Fashions where he specializes in little girls' apparel, while at the same time doubling as both an actor and maker of commercials.

James Knowles is, perhaps, one of the most interesting people you will ever meet. A sculptor, James has distinguished himself both in the field of art and in the field of communications. His Journals bespeak a sensitivity in words matched only, if not surpassed, by the sensitivity of his sculpture. So those of you in the New York area, James is in Connecticut and is well worth looking up. He sculpts emotion.

Also attending the post-marathon party was Bob Diemar. Bob is an investment banker with Donaldsen, Lufkin, Jenrette in New York City. He is a strong supporter of Andover and someone who, like James Knowles, is making a difference in the world.

I don't know how much he pledged, but I am told that John Engel, a practicing lawyer in Washington, DC, was pleased to bite the bullet and that another lawyer, Ray Keeney was also in on the game. For those of you who wanted to make an extra gift, but somehow got sidetracked, please accept this invitation to send your check or money order to Dennis Cross right now. The distance covered was 26.2 miles, 385 yards. The time elapsed was 3 hours 36 minutes, 24 seconds.

Besides news coming from our New York gathering, I have seen John Spitzer who both writes novels and builds solar homes in Boulder, Colorado. He reports that Bill Stewart is a scratch golfer on the links in and around Cleveland. John also asked for Mike Rosati. Mike's friends frequently ask for him, and I am pleased to report that he is now with American Express, married to an Australian, and when last seen was in the company of a baby stroller.

Feeling something like a squirrel in the winter, I am now choosing to hoard the remainder of my notes. However, I will tell you that you may expect news from Don Davis, Joe Jefferds, Bill (I'm on the dole) Drayton, Brad Donahue, Pete Fuller, Bill Fay, and Andy Cohen in your next column.

By the way, our twenty-fifth is approaching. Stay tuned.

Living in Maine is wonderful. My heart and soul have always been here. And here I've put down my roots at last. We live in the town of Ellsworth, a town of 5500, fast growing and full of young professionals. Being the corridor to Acadia National Park, it bursts at the seams during the summer, but the winters are lovely and quiet. We are building a home on a lake between Ellsworth and Bangor and have already used the lake as our playground for snowmobiling, skating and ice fishing. The kids are happy as clams in a mudflat, are sufficiently challenged in school, and enjoy the spirit, camaraderie and friendliness of a small high school. The tone is much less competitive than in Boston which has served them well. I was working in a small department store during Christmas and am now enjoying some leisure while exploring the job market. One has to be a bit resourceful here but Maine is loaded with opportunities.

I have heard from my faithful correspondent, Karyl-Lynn Kopelman Zeitz, who is moving to Germany for several months and is working on several documentary films, one on Costa Rica, another on the Amish, and a third on silk production in India. She produces 12 to 15 reports a year for ZDF-German Television. She also journeyed to Hawaii and to South America last year and states that her ideal vacation would probably be "three uninterrupted weeks at home!"

How different her life is from mine. I'm sure we might find some things to envy each other for, but neither of us is complaining.

A reminder to you all that our TWENTY FIFTH reunion is coming up in June of '86. But don't hold back news until then.

Al Blum has moved from Kalamazoo College in Michigan to Northwestern University where he is Assistant Vice President and Director of Development. Bill Chickering has returned to Texas after a stint in South Korea and is now practicing medicine in Victoria. Chris Nelson wants to know where the PA '62 Class Secretary is. Chris is now Vice President of Teramura International, a Japanese-U.S. consulting firm with offices in Tokyo and Washington. Pete Ferrara wants to know where Chris Nelson is. Pete writes from L. A. that Roy Durham is also on the coast "where his legal background is taking him down the mine-strewn path of film production." Pete himself is currently editing a book on Los Angeles, a city he recalls Dick Gregory once described as "two Newarks." Speaking of New Jersey, Eric Sparre is living in Lambertville, NJ with his Argentine wife and two young children where he is a painter, "pictures, not walls." Eric had a showing last year at the First Street Gallery in SoHo (New York).

A nice letter from Jim Mettler included not only a snapshot from our twentieth reunion but also news that Jim is now president of Antrim Players, New York's oldest active community theatre group. Last year I ran across a long interview with Harry Tsoukanellis, who is Executive Vice President and Director of Investment Research, Management, and Mergers and Acquisitions at Buckingham Research Group in New York.

Speaking of wondering where people are (as we were above), PA has sent me a list of "lost" classmates. If anyone happens to know the whereabouts of any of the following, please pass along the information to either the school or me: Robin Wynslow, Chuck Boyce, Jeff Brown, Chris Burns, Tod Hawks, Bob Levin, Sverre Maehlum, Ed Moore, Doug Morris, Bob Nunez, Markku Sario, Dennis Wilkinson, and Peter Willing.

It was with great sorrow that I learned of the death of Gerald McCollum. Gerry's brief life included an outstanding career in math, and after graduating from Brown and Harvard (where he earned his Ph.D.) he was a professor of mathematics at Tufts and Michigan State. He was in the process of writing a book on group theory at the time of his death from cancer on 18 August last year. Gerry had a special place in all our hearts, and we extend our deepest sympathies to his family and loved ones. He touched all our lives, and we are the richer for his.

Congratulations to William Pugh, recently named President of Vitasco Corporation, a manufacturer of industrial coating and adhesives. I strongly believe that the PA class of '63 is at that point in our professional lives when we will assume major leadership roles in public and private sectors, profit and nonprofit organizations. Does that mean we can not be YUPPIES?

John Foster and family are at the University of Virginia. Having traveled across the nation to teach in the East, they are learning of the beauty of the Blue Ridge Mountains, Monticello, and Virginia.

Long newspaper article about Dan Hootstein, movie actor! He landed a small role in "The Bear," a story of Paul Bryant, football coach. And, as it happens, this led to an agent and a speaking role in Neil Simon's forthcoming movie, "The Slugger's Wife." His wife, Debbie, heads the ultrasound department at Georgia Hospital in Atlanta. For the past eight years, Dan has been the Regional Franchise Director of Development of Orange Julius of America.

My work as the Director of the Graduate Program in Health Administration at Cleveland State University has been most rewarding. The program has grown from 28 to 157 students in twelve months. And, my book for managers is selling well.

I regret to report that David Duncan Wilkinson-Newsholme was killed in a climbing accident in the French Alps in August, 1983. After Andover, he got a scholarship to Oxford, then over to the London School of Economics. A computer programming background helped him set up his own business, three months prior to his death.

Hope your springtime brings you flowers and brings me your letters with lots of news.

Can it be that the ill fated Orwellian 1984 that we so long anticipated (and dreaded) has come. . . and gone . . . so quickly? Already, my hand which routinely scribbled '84 on every check and letter has become accustomed to '85. Such blasphemy! But before I allow '84 to slip any further away, let me recount the last of its news gathered from a few faithful Abbot rabbits. I would say that for all its foreboding, 1984 turned out to be a rather GOOD year.

I had a lovely note from Margaret Power in August. She wrote from Maine where she escaped the DC heat to rest in preparation for the birth of her second child in late October. By this writing, the wee one has no doubt arrived and is approaching three months! Congratulations, Meg!

Margy Brown Coakley's family moved in August to New Jersey. Her husband, John, left the church to take the position of Assistant Professor of Church History at the New Brunswick Seminary. Mary (their oldest child) entered kindergarten, and Philip, 3, is still at home. Once the dust settles Margy hopes to take music lessons (organ) and tutor English. Their new address is 156 Dartmouth Street, Highland Park, New Jersey 08904. In October a bright purple letter arrived in my mailbox from Maidy Wilkins Haslinger full of good tidings of '84. Husband Karl became a U.S. citizen, young Karl, 8, had a successful kidney operation, and the entire family visited Southern Germany and Austria over the summer. Maidy continues to participate actively in town affairs, PTO, Girl Scouts and the Unitarian Meeting House, and still manages to fit in writing AND public speaking! Now that's what I call energy!

Out in Oregon, the Knolls managed to live through a remodel of the entire downstairs living area during November and December. We frosted our cookies with plaster dust and Santa came in the back door instead of down the chimney. Then the four of us escaped between Christmas and New Years to a lovely mountain spot for skiing and general R&R. On our return, I had a rather large packet on my doorstep from none other than "source person for 100% Andover Reunions, Ann Harris Furgerson. I trust the rest of you also received Ann's communique, however, if you somehow were missed, here's a quick synopsis. Ann completed "The Directory" (the latest news and addresses of AA 1963), and for the paltry price of $3.00 you too can have a copy. It is definitely well worth it. Write Ann at her new address (446 San Vicente Blvd. #104, Santa Monica, CA 90402) if interested. Also, Ann had "The Binder" (a collection of recollections, photos, letters, trivia, etc. of the infamous 20th reunion) published. For a measly $25, Ann will send you your very own copy. Again, get in touch with her.

Ann also reported that choreographer and producer Lisa "Flick" Colby is alive and doing extremely well in London, and welcomes news and visits of AA cohorts, and, that Hilary Hayes married Gilbert Geyer in early December in Florida.

My call to D. C. to elicit last minute updates for this Bulletin found Mimi Dean McBride healthy and busy with paperwork for her new part time job as educational consultant. She and Jon have also been remodeling their 'new' home. We shared remodeling war stories and continued on to brighter subjects . . . "new decades." I imagine for most of us life has "just begun" or will "begin again" sometime in 1985. Here's to our forties! May they be rich, fulfilling and . . . fun!

Sorry we missed the last issue. It took us a while to recover from the Reunion. I also noticed that very few of our neighboring classes had much to say in the Fall/Winter issue. Maybe the deadline came at a bad time. Or maybe we all find ourselves working so much harder at our jobs that we don't have time to open the mail, let alone write any. Does anybody else find that at the same time that you have more to do at home, you are having to put in more hours at the job? Any explanations?

The summer '84 issue was such a bonanza for our class that I felt almost justified in taking time off. Not only did our regular column drop 69 classmates' names, but one of the feature articles, "The Andover Artist," was on Bryce the Toymaker, our own Bryce Muir. In case you missed the article, I almost did, (the picture of Bryce gives no clue) go dig it up. Bryce complained several years ago (to the higher-ups, not me) that the Bulletin kept writing about graduates who were successful, which usually meant making a lot of money, which both neglected the large universe who were doing something else with their lives and tacitly adopted a value system that maybe the school shouldn't be fostering. The Bulletin, at least, seems to have recognized Bryce's complaint, and as a further dividend for us they have now recognized Bryce and given him a forum for a tremendously thoughtful portrait of the artist as a young man, and what is he was doing at prep school.

1984 did have plenty of non-Reunion news, and although most of it is not so new anymore, let me catch up on some tidbits you might have missed. Chris Mayer and Linda Martinson were married in March in New York, while Tom Seligson and Leah Madrid were married in Quoque (Long Island) in September. They are both lovely couples for whom we wish all the best.

Randy and Marianne Hobler joyfully announced the birth of Kieran Burke, their second son and third child, on 26 April. Mark Blankenship announced the birth of his own management consulting firm, Mi-path, for corporate-development assistance to small- and medium-sized businesses, headquartered in Tulsa.

In the realm of world travel, Peter Schandorff missed the reunion in favor of a month-long China trip — "way into the interior this time." Faithful Doug Everett was kept away by military duties in Turkey. His year included a trip to Beirut to treat Marine victims of the barracks bombing and then a move to Barksdale AFB near Shreveport, LA as chief of aerospace medicine.

Laurent Alpert returned to the Cleary Gottlieb law headquarters in New York after five years as a resident partner in that firm's Brussels Office. And the peripatetic Jack Garrity, back at playing weight thanks to two weeks on the Scarsdale Diet, traveled 2½ months through China, Russia, Finland, Vermont, San Francisco and Tucson on his way from and to his home base in Manila. Jack spent his other time preparing a capital development study for six Asian nations and living happily with the Philippines' leading female artist.

Jeff Garten's incredibly lofty stature rose even higher in my eyes when The New Yorker honored him with one of their column-filler items. Quote: "At the annual gathering of the World Bank, the world's economic hoi polloi will toast Mexico's comeback — Jeffrey E. Garten in the Times. Rejoinder: "With Schaefer on tap."

As for me, I appeared on Entertainment Tonight on New Year's Day, opposite the Rose Bowl, giving my Elvis impersonation. Having thus experienced my Marshall McLuhan 90 seconds, I wonder what to do with the rest of my life. Finally, I would leave you with this question from Matthew McClure, assistant editor of the Whole Earth Software Catalog & Review in Sausalito, CA, "How much of the counterculture survives among our classmates?" Bryce?

Allis Brooks Hanley also missed the reunion as she is teaching kindergarten at the American School of Warsaw. Dan works at the US Embassy. They are active in the Cub Scout program which they coordinated at the school. Their three sons are 11, 8 and 5. She'd love to see any classmates who are visiting Poland and is really enjoying life there.

Kit Jones Prager's Christmas letter was full of news. However, I am sad to report that her father passed away last February. I'm sure many of us recall him fondly. Mark, 5, and Alice, 8, are keeping the family busy with gymnastics, dance, piano, Brownies and swimming, to name a few. The family spent a well earned (I'm sure) vacation in Maui and Oahu. Kit is active in Orinda Junior Women, Educational Foundation of Orinda and is an officer of the local AAUW as well as doing volunteer work at the library and keeping up with the children's projects and activities. She reports that the landscaping is all in, and they also enjoy their garden crops. We're all invited to visit . . . the big chores are done.

Once again I'm on the move. I transferred to a new company as a claims adjuster in June. The position is more challenging and I am enjoying the work. Bill's company has entered the computer world and he's busy trying to put it into the black in 1985. We hope to get in a golf trip to Hilton Head in May.

Well sports fans, you all thought I had disappeared, taking with me all of the news and all of the gossip of the true lost tribe, the class of 1968. Information, none of it I can actually vouch for, has filtered down to me through a cheap version of a toy telephone. So don't hold me responsible for errors. Corrections will be made if you call me at (212) 777-4224 and supply some interesting tidbit about a classmate. Well, here it is: Nancy Hibbard Roberts, Applehead to her best friends, has her old husband (married in September of 1980) with a new Ph.D. Congratulations, Michael. Jody Frost, now Ms. Andre Golino, has just added a son to her good works, which include two daughters, designing her husband's office building and adding on a wing of her house. They must spell stress differently in Palm Beach; well Jody always had a lot of energy. Paula Atwood is back in New York, after various nursing jobs all over the country. She is going for her Masters. Daisy Schnepel bought a house in Providence with her true love, Paul. I saw the pictures; it looks promising, especially with Daisy's skills: she is a master craftsman. If you are in the market for beautiful, handmade furniture give her a call.

Karen Seaward wrote me a nice note which I promptly lost; she did sound happy and full of joy, so that's good. Dorothy Cheney Seyfarth gave birth to a nice baby, and that's good, too.

Here comes the spice: Chris Harley, Judy Dillingham Harold, and Lee Sullivan are off to Paris, with their new singing, group Mix. The group sings songs about surfboards, lost fortunes and prisons. Cheryl Hammond and Toby Dondis are owners of an international boutique, the speciality is clothing to inspire at home entertainment.

I shall sign off now. Anyone, who is interested in living chaos, is invited to visit with me and my twin daughters and entrepreneurial husband. Now that's good. Bye.

A decade ago here in New England you often saw cars with bumper stickers reading "Don't Blame Me, I'm From Massachusetts." It was a reference to what many locals considered the good political judgement Massachusetts voters showed when ours was the only state to vote against Nixon in 1972.

This year our voters — our Democratic voters, no less — lacked a comparable wisdom. In September Congressman Jim Shannon narrowly lost the Democratic primary to a guy with a good jaw line who was also the state's Lieutenant Governor. Forget the fact that John Kerry went to St. Pauls. Jim had the endorsement of virtually every group that made endorsements — the elderly, women, labor, high tech business people, Viet vets, gays. Kerry had just that extra bit of visibility that attaches to statewide office. A lot of people are hoping that we will not have long to wait before returning Jim to high office. In the meantime, he has the consolation of being named a senior partner at Hale and Dorr, one of Boston's prestige law firms.

Other classmates have also been busy around these parts. Tom Costagliola is the owner and President of the very successful Infinity Construction. He just built the Cambridge triplex condo that Russian military scholar Bill Fuller and his family moved into when Bill joined the Harvard History Department. Haven't heard from Dave Leavitt lately, but I bet he's still busy down in Pennsylvania designing solar homes. Saw one of Dave's buildings on the cover of Solar Age.

Chuck McDermott was back from LA on tour with a former member of the Kingston Trio, and they got rave reviews in the Boston papers. Phil Santucci has paid me some visits now that he's studying music at U. Mass., Boston. Phil says he's become a straight "A" student for the first time in his life. At U. Mass., Amherst, is agriculturist Art Tuttle, who was married in June and is receiving his M.S. in entomology. Larry Gelb is over at the Harvard B School, after being recently married to a Swedish woman and honeymooning in Africa. Vic Henningsen is Assistant Dean of Freshman at Harvard, writing his thesis in education history, and lives in the yard with his wife and new daughter. I saw a bit of Leigh Haffrey over the summer, when we were each teaching part-time in the Harvard Writing Program.

Eric Louie, M.D., has a new son, — I've heard rumors that Eric is one of President Reagan's physicians. Seems like a good possibility. Dave Ensor is still with ABC News in Warsaw. I saw Dave when I was in D.C., where each of us had occasional visits with planner, Brendan Doyle. Dave says he also saw his old roommate, Dirk Nelson, who is doing computer work in Connecticut.

Over in England Richard Ennals holds an academic position and occasionally visits the states in connection with his work in computers and artificial intelligence. Art Oller is now working as a businessman in Rome. Larry Uhl continues his tremendously successful career as a Wall Street investment banker, and Warren Matthei, devotee of the Rose Bowl and hot tubs, is in the big time of LA banking. An affianced Pete Olney is getting a public policy degree at UCLA, and scriptwriter Rob Sherwood is also in the neighborhood, and recently made the matrimonial leap. Jim Hearty, V.P. for Bonds at Bank of Boston, and his wife, recently had their first child, a boy.

Brad Rollings is busy with business and family life in Tucson.

Jeff Claus was touring Europe with his band, and returned to Cornell where he is finishing his thesis, "a neo-Marxian critique of vocational education." My own vocational education as a plumber continues apace. This winter I'm taking a course in welding, and it's the most fun I've had in school since Kelly Wise's Novel and Drama Seminar. Jeff reports that Cornell Ph.D. Per Bro is working in Africa or So. America on water systems.

Got a nice letter from Crosby Kemper who is now back from teaching English in China and may be passing through Boston over the winter. "Big Daddy" Nate Cartmell is cranking out billings for his S.F. law firm. And over the holidays I had another pleasant visit from D.C.'s Alex Van Oss. We spent a great evening at the Cambridge apartment of potter and Milton Academy science instructor Wayne Barron and Megan Brooks, Abbot '70. One summer's night, Boston city government computer maestro, Jeremy Bluhm, sailed the harbor waters in Wayne's boat. Wayne still sees his buddy, carpenter Scott Dalrymple.

I know how hard it can be to find the time to do those little things that cross your mind every now and then. But if you get a chance, find a post card and a stamp. Everyone's got a story. Often I wish we had more space here to share them, great or small as they may be.

Until next time, keep voting.

I began writing on the Class of '70 almost 10 years ago with the desire to get every member into the notes. I now appreciate how difficult it is to hear from or about everyone. We can't even find dozens of our classmates. I myself will probably not answer any inquiring postcards from the next Class Secretary.

Andover was a rich experience, and we all have different feelings about it. We've all gone in different directions since 1970. I have enjoyed trying to follow what everyone has done. I confess to a preference for the far-flung forest rangers, but we can never give up hope that even the MBA's will someday pursue worthwhile endeavors. We really are a diverse group of individuals.

This will be the last column before our 15th Reunion is held over the weekend of 7-9 June. I hope many of you will return, in spite of the fees the school will force us to charge. I apologize for that, and for the lack of class news in this column.

Bernie Krelinger did write to say that he and his wife will be traveling from Germany for our reunion. Bernie has served as a prosecutor and will soon be promoted to a judge. Norm Selby is on assignment in Dusseldorf with his consulting firm. Dave Diamond is a resident at the Mt. Auburn Hospital in Cambridge. Walt Snickenberg handles personnel matters for the Commercial Credit Union in Boston. And, finally, the New York Times reported the marriage of Fred Sawabini and Gay Luster of the Abbot Class of '70.

Again, it has been an honor to try and follow all of you, even the MBA's. See you in June.

Hello Class of 1970! Welcome to 1985. Hopefully this will be a great year for one and all.

While I don't have much news, Christmas cards brought the following information. First to arrive was an absolutely great photo of Amy Baldwin Bratten's children. Attired in pajamas and accompanied by their favorite stuffed animals, they were an absolute duplicate of Amy when she first arrived at French House. Remember those stuffed animals everyone? Seriously, it was a great picture and thanks so much for sending it, Amy.

Fast on the heels of that card was a note from Sue Cleveland Jacobson. Sue and her family have finally left the wilds of Gillette, Wyoming for the great state of Texas. Needless to say the softball teams down there had better watch out . . . here comes Sue!

Last of the Christmas news came indirectly. That friend of a friend sort of news. Christia "Chris" Steele is now the product manager on Nabisco Shredded Wheat. Yes, that's the one with the picture of Niagara Falls on it. It just so happens that that was the #1 cereal in my family. Would anyone else like a free sample?

In other news I hear that Pauline Cerf and Leslie Breed are still living in the Big Apple. Sylvia Joseph is in the New Haven area. Prilly Mendenhall is supposedly in the Washington D.C. area along with Margaret Cheney and I would guess several others. Sandra Urie Thorpe will be graduating from Yale Business School in the spring — congratulations in advance Sandy.

I hate to say it but that's it for the time being. Our 15th is coming up in June. How about sending in some news about yourself and others? More importantly, come to the reunion and have a great time! Hope to see you there. Have a great 1985.

Join us this month for the continuing drama called Paltry Pursuit, in which this scribbler attempts to decipher signature and handwriting on the back flap of Annual Giving envelopes, to report on fourteen years of existence. It's really not difficult compared to other games, as no one keeps score between fact and fable.

Steven Begay is an accountant for his tribe, the Navahos, in Tuba City, Arizona. Bill Belichick writes that he is still coaching the New York Giants, still working with Ernie "You've got to have strenth [sic]." Adams, and anticipating the birth of his wife Debbie's firstborn. Bill coaches the linebackers, Ernie quarterbacks.

Chris Brescia works in Washington, D.C. as manager for Price Waterhouse. He specializes in legislative issues affecting the firm and clients. Bill Cahill is also getting involved in legislative issues: he was elected in November to the New Hampshire State Executive Council, representing the seacoast region.

For all you high-tech entrepreneurs out there, be assured you have a sympathetic ear in Dick Cashin. Along with Tom Foley, Steve Sherrill, and Bruce Bruckman '72, he works on leveraged buyouts for Citicorp Venture Capital.

Phil Kann writes that after three years as copywriter for Doyle Dane Bernback in San Francisco, he moved onwards and upwards to Young and Rubicam. He is still trying to win a Clio. Gee, Phil, I know this chemical company . . .

Imagine last January 4th in Northern Maine. Cold, dark, and depressing? Wrong. Charlie Perkins married the former Linda Burroughs on that date in Bar Harbor. Linda is an executive for the public television station in Durham, NH, while Charlie continues as a newspaper editor in Manchester. They now live in their new home in North Hampton, NH.

Doug Post writes from the West Coast: "Living in lotus land, otherwise known as L.A., and usually enjoying it, although I have periodic yearnings for the appreciation of more enduring values than those characteristically ascribed to L.A. I'm married to the former Robin Schlinger (Stanford '76); we don't have any children. I work as a lawyer, specializing in admiralty and maritime matters. Looking forward to the 15th Reunion, as my salient impression from the 10th was that there were a lot of people in our class at Andover worth knowing better than I knew them while I was at Andover."

Also from L.A. writes Mike Propper . . . "been living here for four years, working as a staff physician at the USC Student Health Center. Beginning a part-time career as a writer, with an article last June in Off Hours, a physician's magazine. Also co-wrote a book called Canine Problem Solvers. Seth Walworth works for National Signal in Palo Alto, married to the charming and beautiful Susan Chadwell. Mike Carlisle is a literary agent for William Morris in New York. If anyone visits L.A., hope they will stop by." (213-743-5344/658-5012)

The 15th Reunion is a year away, and it's time to start making some decisions about how we might structure the event. There will be a lot of families this time, along with the usual cadre of hard-core celebrants. If you are thinking about attending and have some ideas about what you'd like to do, what faculty members to invite (specially), or what range of costs you consider appropriate, please let me know. Judging from our tenth, and the 15th of prior classes, we should have an excellent turnout and a great time. "Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coute."

Now, Doctor, I'm not making this stuff up.

This stuff really happens to me. I mean, we're talking conspiracy here, we're talking object of the wrath of God, you know? Look, here I am thirty-one years old, whopper of an existential crisis on my hands, having trouble getting a date on Saturday night, addicted to Rum Raisin and cable TV. I go through a day of interviews, doing the blue serge shuffle for four guys who are clearly the children of people who tried to keep my grandparents out of the country, and a woman my own age, Doctor, who was dressed like a nun going home to dinner. Anyway, end of the day, lunch over, I go to get my coat and they tell me I haven't met Hollister yet. So in I go to meet Hollister of Probate, and the guy is a cadaver. He is clinched into this Brooks Brothers suit that looks like it is the only thing that is keeping him from dissolving into dust. The whole time I'm in there, nothing moves on this guy except his eyes, one finger and his lower lip. So I sit down and Dracula looks up from my resume, his lip drops down into what I think is a smile and he says, "I see you went to Andover, young man. So did I. Of course you're too young to remember Zeus Hinman . . ." Is that it, Doc? I mean, is that the end of all this? Sometime in the middle of the next century will I be sitting in some sepulchral corner office, scaring children? Look at these, these came in the mail awhile ago. It's three different news clippings, the only things I got from the alumni office this month, and they're all the same picture of Bill Logan. He was a guy I knew at Andover, not real well, well enough to know he was a real nice guy; he wore his hair a little long, and he didn't talk much. He's got himself a beard now, and horn-rimmed glasses. In this picture he's sitting at a table in the law offices (I guess) of Soule and Soule in Wiscasset, Maine, in front of this whole bank of U.S. Reporters. Both his hands are on the table. On one wrist he's got this serious consumer-good of a watch, and he's got one finger of one hand stuffed into the ball of his other fist. He's smiling, a little tightly, as if he's not entirely sure what to make of this situation either. A little too much projection, Doctor? Probably. It's just that the stories seem so cut and dried. In the Boothbay Register, for example, the first paragraph talks about Andover, and about Vassar, and about the law firm. In the second, four years of Bill's life are summed up in a list of banking jobs. Then in 1983, the third paragraph says, Bill graduated from U Maine Law, did a thesis on Aquaculture Leasing Law, and was admitted to the bar. The last paragraph is only two lines long. It talks about Bill's wife, Jennifer, and the pure miracle of his daughter. Her name is Jessamine. The paragraph doesn't talk in terms of miracles, though. It's more concerned with residence. So, okay. Congratulations, Bill—but especially for that last paragraph. Send a letter sometime. Tell me what color your daughter's eyes are. And what it feels like to watch her sleep. I'll stop kvetching to my Doctor, I promise, Bill. And I promise that I'll tell your friends.

Oh yeah, I told Dracula that even though I didn't remember Zeus, I'd heard about him plenty. I knew his grandson, Doug, class of '72. Dracula was pleased. He blinked twice. Obviously, I didn't tell him that I'd been a bad friend to the guy. We kept it professional. I got the job. Hollister, I'm reliably told, dropped dead a couple months later, or at least his finger stopped moving, so they interred him.

ABBOT

Seventeen years ago an itinerant group began a journey to the Northeast. We, the Class of 1972, came from all reaches of this continent and others. We drifted into and out of Andover at varying times. For many of us June 1972 marked the end of our time in the Bay State.

So where has this motly crew gone? Well, for one-third of the class New England has remained home. Twenty-seven percent of the class still lives in Massachusetts; 15% lives in the Metropolitan New York area; 9% California; 7% the DC area; 4% in Maine; and 3% in each of New Hampshire, Connecticut, Florida, Arizona and the Deep South. Other places have a mere one or two members of the class.

Having determined the whereabouts of our class let's see if we can paint a few pictures about what their lives are about.

Imagine Kate Lilly Jarvey's (Mrs. Frank R.) life. Here's her address: "Yeat Furlong," Wootton-Under-Wood, near Brill, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, England FK3199.

Libby Spader Naficy married a Citibanker (Kaveh) three years ago, who works in that bank's international compensation area. The two reside in Manhattan's upper East Side. Libby teaches lower school science and reading at a private boys' school known as The Buckley School. Her sister Anne '73 teaches kindergarten at the same school.

Liz Hall Jaskulski also married a banker involved in the international arena. Liz married Derek Jaskulski in September 1977, was graduated in the first class out of Tufts School of Veterinary Medicine and is practicing at a clinic in New York City. Her husband, an Amherst grad, deals with yen for Bankers Trust. The two live in Greenwich Village.

Maine seems to be the haven for Meredith Keller Smith and Lucy Gorham. Meredith's address indicates she lives at an inn in Northeast Harbor, while Lucy's new location in Scarborough could mean she's returned to her native state after many sojourns across the country.

Suzanne Eusden is living in New Hampshire and works at the Center for New Hampshire Craftsmen. Following up on her years (1971-1975) as one of the first Appalachian Mountain Club hut girls, she spends much of her time cross-country skiing and hiking. She saw Brownie Richards '71 and husband last summer when they came into the shop and recalled Brownie was living in Philadelphia.

Suzanne also happened upon Don Gordon (Abbot Headmaster 1968-72) at a Dartmouth hockey game last fall. She said he had gone through a divorce, was living in Andover and working as a consultant.

Another Northerner is Joni Blaxter who lives in Plainfield, Vermont with her husband, David Meltzer.

Suze Weaver seems to have moved to Norcross, Georgia from Texas, but I'm not sure just what our lady engineer is up to.

Nina Dorsey has fled New York City, or so it seems, as the call to her listed residence was answered by a woman who said she believed Nina left the city about five years ago. Nina, where are you? Still playing music?

Andrea Putman has remarried and is now Mrs. Sheridan Conway living in

Linda Gilbert Cooper
Spring Valley Road
Ossining, NY 10562

Grosse Pointe, Michigan. Congratulations! Angie Deitrick's newest babe was not christened James Matthews. Baby Matt, as announced in the last issue, became Baby Christopher at the last minute. His coming also marked the beginning of divorce proceedings for Angie.

Laurie Camosy, long a Wisconsin girl by my memory, seems to have taken up the sunny clime of southern California. As has attorney Leigh Brecheen who works at the prestigious Los Angeles law firm of O'Melveny & Myers.

My own local lawyer, Joy Beane Briant, who is constructing a house in the woods down the road a piece from me, has forsworn her clerkship in the Federal District Court and moved to the Stamford, CT law firm of Day, Berry & Howard.

And I remain in the marketing and new business development world as well as being heavily involved with environmental conservation and education for this region. Our family has grown by one yellow Labrador retriever (a gift of my sister-in-law, Sally Cooper '73), who at four months outweighs our four-year-old daughter and adds that touch of chaos that every family needs.

I admit to momentary fits of envy as I realize Peter A. Gilbert '72 is now editor of the Bulletin, living with all the marvelous campus facilities and teaching English at our alma mater. Once he and I shared classes in Bulfinch Hall. But I guess we can't all go "home," can we? Even Peter seems to have stopped off for a law degree and a masters and life outside of Massachusetts for awhile.

Until more months pass and I can once again reflect on the changes that are our lives, be well.

Friends:

This chapter's award for Best Running Narrative of One Alumnus' Ten-Year Odyssey came in a clever, typed letter from Joe Smith, cum campaign contribution. Joe went to Berkeley '76, to NYC paralegal, to Brazil, to LA (law school), to DC via Java, to see Reagan inaugurated and his law firm's regulatory business shrivel, to Berkeley Biz, to a cushy law firm in San Francisco. He specializes in opening "itty-bitty banks," can wave at Lawson Fisher's wife, Christine, from his big office with the awesome view, and is associated with some "very serious partyers." Joe reports, finally, loving the transition to yuppieedom. Lawson's robot-building is still amusing him, and they have a spare bedroom in SF for friends to try out.

Speaking of yuppieedom, Henry Mueller wrote me a note from Nassau, Grand Bahama, where he was accompanying his wife, Jane, on one of her "business trips." The Muellers split their time between maison propre in Larchmont, NY, the Soho loft where Jane's business is located, and occasional jaunts to Nantucket. Now-now. Happy to report a family of four, by now; Henry in his 7th year at AMEX and going strong and up.

Nunzi Sapuppo tried three times to get to the Cape to help with the campaign, but had to settle for contributing only. He's in Cambridge with Symbolics, and offers all PA grads a connection to the world of "artificial intelligence." Pleased to say that I can offer same at the State House. Nunz reports that Bill Kaplan, also in Cambridge, is looking for lunch or drink dates, and wishes to know the whereabouts of Robin Foster and the "elusive" Mike Fox.

A cryptic note comes from Chris Haney that Dick Keating '76 is pounding pavement south of Boston moving radio time to local pizza joints for a Brockton all-weather radio station. "Close hard, Dick," he urges.

Tom Sommerfield reports he is stationed in Hong Kong 'till August '85, and anticipates some trouble changing his diet. Award this time for "most bizarre" comes from Abbot's Anne Howes, who wants four things: A tape of Bill Robinson's music; a copy of "Dancin in the Streets" on 45 by "the group," AA-PA '69; an antique kimono from Seymour House and wife (still in Scotland?); and Bart's copy of "Malcolm X." All right, Annie.

Random notes from random sources: Francisco Tourreilles and wife had a son on 22 September 1984 in Montevideo, Uruguay. David Harsch, my beloved neighbor, fell in love with a girl from NYC, and upon returning from his latest sojourn, reports vaguely on the following: Mike Castro splits time between painting and architecting with his father; Will Schutte yearns for the West Coast, but has committed himself to at least one more year in NYC; he had a big party for his sister Megan (AA'72) at which Mike Pierce showed up without his friend (see last notes). Mike still paints and architects majorly in NYC in the big time; Glenn Ball lives two blocks from Will and has never met him. Glenn has a major ski mag called Snow Magazine. Gene Dallago moved to California, got married and reportedly is opening a high-fashion bridal salon in SF; Jim Hilboldt moved to Japan for a few months to do some legal work; Matt Barry called to say Harsch was a hell of a guy, and didn't leave a number to return the call; Keith Starks is doing something somewhere in the deep South; Jim Rydell is still stockbroking in Vegas, visited Boston again and refused to come to Cape Cod to say hello.

Scott Clemson is a teacher at the Brooks School, where he no doubt coaches lacrosse; Al Cregg was reported to be in the Boston area, either temporarily or permanently; Russ Selby is working on a law career in NYC. A bunch of kooky artists from Cape Cod were following Harsch all over Manhattan.

My favorite news: my good buddy Jim Hackett took a leave from his job to travel to New Zealand for awhile. No one deserves it more.

Friends, many of you helped me, and I'll never forget you. I was victorious in November, and now hold a seat in the Massachusetts Legislature. I'll get you for this. Betsy and I split our time between a Cape saltbox and a tiny closet on Beacon Hill.

One of the most important things in life is to love your work. I do, and I trust that most of us share that delight. Best to you.

Thank you all for the fabulous response to the mailing I did last August. I procured news items from almost half the class, including several who hadn't been heard from since graduation over 11 years ago! Much of that news was printed in the winter Bulletin and this column represents those of you who answered past the copy deadline. Any time you feel the urge to drop me a line, please do so. Or if you'd prefer, give me a call at (212) 595-6212. I (and your classmates) appreciate the time you take to keep '73 up-to-date.

Noreen Markley and I had dinner when she came to NYC on business in November. She looks terrific, loves her job with the Gas Co. and is enjoying her new house (not the mortgage — the fixing up!).

A recent Andover "transfer-ette" to NYC is Ginny Carter who moved here after 11 years in chilly Minnesota. She is currently enrolled in a set design and scene painting school, enjoying her work and looking forward to a mild Manhattan winter. Anne Spader, too, has joined "The Big Apple Corps." She is teaching kindergarten at the tres chic Buckley School and living au pair with a family on Park Avenue.

There was an abundance of news from the West Coast. . . Charlotte Mason is in her 4th and final year of the Ph.D. program at the Stanford Business School. She spent most of the fall interviewing for faculty positions at various other business schools nationwide. Good luck Char! (When you get situated, send me your new address.) Lynn Chesler also is in her last year of law school at the University of Denver. She is thrilled to be "in the home stretch." Call her if you're in the area: (303) 331-0238.

Robin Lothrop married Phillip Pinto and is now happily living in Santa Cruz working on her masters degree in biological oceanography. . . Dee Dee McLaughlin, nee Dodson, has been living in Santa Fe, New Mexico since 1977. She's a partner in a solar construction and management consulting firm. . . Molly Prescott married Dare Porter last year, (but is still going by her maiden name). She's an editor/writer for a large health maintenance organization in Oakland, CA and she and Dare just bought a house there. She sends a big hello to everyone. . . Lorraine Utter also is a recent newlywed. She married Bruce Kohorn last June and they spent the summer honeymooning in Costa Rica where she was studying tropical biology. The Kohorns are now living in Los Angeles, better known as "Tinsel Town," and Lorraine is pursuing her Ph.D. in biology at UCLA.

I had the good fortune to see Don Dubain (PA '73) live and in person on a recent trip to San Francisco. We had a hot night on the town (complete with cable car rides) and it was super to see him! (He apologizes for missing our 10th reunion. . .) Don got his MBA at Yale and spent three years working for a California congressman "on the Hill" in DC. He currently commutes between San Francisco and Sunnyvale where he works for a guy that turns around failing High Tech companies. Alex Polydefkis just moved from Chicago to Tucson, Arizona with her husband, Lawton. He is teaching at the U. of Arizona while she finishes up her studies (long distance) at the University of Chicago. (You didn't mention your married name Alex. What is it?)

New England news as always was plentiful. I heard from Dee Delucia first by letter and then by phone (soliciting donations from the poverty stricken "Abbot Rabbits" .

. . . fun job!). She is still working at Salem Hospital but is also taking a course in securities and investments. In her spare time, she can be found "dancing her way into the hearts of America" at various theaters in and around Andover. There's no biz like show biz, Dee! Kristine Tomlinson recently got her master's degree in History and Museum Administration. Oddly enough her classes included a field trip to the 3rd floor of dear old Abbot Hall, now the New England Center of Documents and Conservation. She reports, "It was eerie! . . . the portraits are still up and still scowling!" She promises to attend our 15th reunion in '88.

Julie Horowitz sends greetings from Boston! She works as a health planner at Mt. Auburn Hospital in Cambridge and is really enjoying her career choice. Brett Cook '72 and Lucinda Leach are very close friends and occasionally Debra Heifetz Stein makes the "adult scene" when her son Alex doesn't keep her knee deep in diapers! Leila Percy Wood has been living in southeastern Maine for three years. She's a professional entertainer now, doing some summer stock and cabaret work. She and her artist/engineer husband are living on a lovely old farm in Dresden which they are getting back into working shape. She would love to hear from Betsy Coward and Mardi Hudson. Her address: Indian Road, Dresden, ME 04342. Nancy Adams Willard and hubby, Al, are also living on a farm in Maine. Hay is the main crop they raise but in addition, they are raising two children! Cooper is 2 and Anna is not quite a year old. Good luck with both of your crops!

I heard from a few Southern Belles . . . Carolyn Naifeh finished up her master's last May at Vanderbilt. After working with the MacNeil Lehrer Newshour last summer, she was bitten by the journalism bug and has taken a job with the VOA's Latin American Division. Mimi Kessler is living in Chapel Hill, NC in a beautiful house with her three dogs. She is head nurse for the Pediatric ICU at the Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill. She's also taking MBA classes at night and plans to go full time in the fall of '85. (We could have used a nurse after all the partying at reunion. . . where were you?)

By the time this goes to press, Henry and Hollis Connor Gabriel will have a brand new bouncing baby! Baby Gabriel was due 8 November and the expecting parents are really happy and excited! They have moved to New Orleans where Henry is teaching law at Loyola. Hollis has "retired," is doing ceramics, and looking forward to her new "mom" status. Congratulations.

That's all folks. . . but one final note. It is now the time of year when we will all be asked to give to the Alumni Fund. Parting with hard earned dollars is tough for everyone, but give whatever you can. No amount is too small and it's a wonderful tax deduction! Stay in touch and have a happy, healthy, '85.

Well, the last round took a while to get into print and a lot has happened since. First off, by now you've probably seen Dana Delany in the "Let's stick to collars" detergent commercial. And another classmate whose visage appears on the tube "selling soap" is Bill Dorman. Fortune magazine is running an ad including the photo of Bill astride a motorcycle that had been used when they profiled him in their "young millionaires" story last year. Joe Malone was candidate Ray Shamie's campaign manager in his recent bid for the U.S. Senate from Massachusetts. Apparently, Joe was spotted holding Ray aloft on election night — that's really supporting the candidate!

On a more prosaic note, there is a lot of career movement in the class of 1974. Keith Kloza has left Boston and the accounting business for insurance in Waltham. Tom Mitchell has joined a Hartford law firm and is living in suburban Rocky Hill. Thomas Flanagan got his J.D. last June; he and his wife, Mary Kate, have one daughter. Duke Burnham has been named operations manager of KevTon, Inc., an electronics manufacturing company. He has moved to Pacific Beach near San Diego and invites us all to "relive" the tenth reunion there. I wonder if Duke has informed the municipal authorities of this rash act. Sara Nelson has left Redbook magazine to explore the wild terrain of free lancing. She reports that she "hasn't missed a meal yet." Richard Gordon, after getting his degree from Harvard Law, has decided to stay at Harvard as director of training at the International Tax Program. He will also teach several tax related courses there. Richard will advise representatives of underdeveloped nations on the creation and implementation of tax systems.

Steve O'Brien is with the law firm of Herlihy and O'Brien in Boston. Further, he is married to Rebecca Flynn O'Brien, M.D. He reports Chris Gannon is working for the Cabot Corporation. Jeanne Frazier Price is a corporate lawyer in Houston. Dave Wray and his wife, Dierdre, expect their first child in June. Dave somehow finds time to referee hockey games as well as practice law. Bruce Bacon is Technical Director of the University of Missouri Theatre and catches as many Kansas City Royals games as he can. Also working in technical theatre is John Friedenberg who teaches the subject in Gainesville, GA. Both John and Richard Morse are married and each have a daughter. Richard is in his second year at Dartmouth Medical School. Caleb Freeman has purchased a farmhouse in Mt. Vernon, near Washington (I presume it's not that farmhouse). He claims to be "happily scraping away 80 years of bad taste." Caleb reports that Tom Herwitz is all business at the FCC; he wonders if Dave Fishelson is making another film or resting on his "City News" laurels; and he congratulates Jim Troup for having made "VIP Officer" of an unidentified bank in Phoenix. Terri Samel Miller writes that she and husband David live in Stamford, CT with their son Sam and daughter Laura. John Pawlowski is a resident at Mass. General in Boston. He is "regularly beaten" at racquetball by Bob Oates, a surgeon at B.U.

During a long evening of nightclubbing in lower Manhattan I ran into Peter Lester, stockbroker, who divides his time between New York and London. Given the hour and general decadent atmosphere, Peter looked quite fit and chipper. Betsy Evans was last sighted on her way to the Virgin Islands. Sloane Citron, after Stanford B. School and a year in Israel, has moved to Miami with his wife, Judy, and is Publisher and Editor-in-Chief of International Voyager Publications. International voyager, Sara Grosvenor, is stopping off in Cairo on her way to an internship in Hong Kong with the Asian Wall Street Journal. Elizabeth Philip Bonner and husband William are partners in Angora Inc. in Baltimore. I run into Kevin Wood here at Columbia B. School all the time. After a stint in the rock and roll business he's going corporate. Ann Blumberg is an economist with Merrill Lynch.

Finally, I have some bad news to report. Jonathan Meath's wife, Ellen, passed away in early December after a lengthy illness. I only knew Ellen as an acquaintance, but judging from Jon's eloquence and courage at the funeral, she must have been a very special individual indeed. Jon is continuing his career in television production. . . . Best wishes for the summer, and stay in touch.

Again the white blanket settles over Essex County, again the wet blanket settles over members of the class of '76 with regard to correspondence. As always anxious to tell all, I must settle for reporting that which has been shared with me, though merely through fund-raising channels. Do feel free to drop a line: the grapes are becoming raisins on the vine.

Speaking of sour grapes, how many had the good fortune to read about Ted Lemon's new career in oenology, that is, winemaking? It appears Ted took his SYA experience to heart and moved back to France — Meursault to be exact — where he is the chef du domaine of a 15-hectare vineyard. According to those who know, Ted's 1983 whites are distinguished for their "finesse and panache." Marvelous, absolutely marvelous, Ted. He took his French lit. degree from Brown in 1980, and a Diplome de Technicien Oenologue at the University of Dijon in 1981.

Carina Kjellstrom writes from Washington, DC where she is working; we know not on what. She's been in communication with Liza Parker who's at work in the Big Apple; Pam Lord, barrister-in-training at the University of Virginia; and Dody Clark Chadwich who's married to someone Carina refers to as a "fellow Yalie." Dody and spouse are currently residing in Calgary.

Lisa Barlow photographs for Public Broadcasting System in New York City, a job it seems she landed while still a student at old PA.

Bill Palmer, nee William Ewing Palmer III, has been graduated from Yale Med

School. He'll be carrying his many awards and sheepskins to UPenn Hospital for a residency. Other area news: Martha Martin was recently married to Alan Shethar. They'll be living in Brookline. Chris Mackie married this fall as well to Annette Overton. Their new home: Durham, NC.

Bob Burnham and his cross-country smoked the competition in an upset victory at this year's interscols. Pam Eaton and I continue to survive nicely here at PA, and look forward anxiously to Big Ten which comes next year. Do write.

Are you a yuppie? Are you sure? Noting in a most informative letter that "this term, yuppie, is the most enduring wisdom Gary Hart's legacy managed to leave behind in Washington," Tom Rothschild revealed his own preoccupation with this new genus. Although he himself seems to be confirmed in his yuppie potential, he's been having some difficulty deciding exactly what species to become. Having abandoned architecture, he has "been floundering contentedly as a free-lance AV technician and photographer, passionately pursuing a pop song writing and advertising jingle career on the side." Reading that, I thought I'd encountered a non-conformist until he continued in the next sentence: "hope to finish at least one graduate degree, perhaps an MBA next year, and once and for all become a real coffee achiever."

Also in pursuit of MBA's are Heather Little and Bob Benner at Tuck; Annette Porter at Columbia; Ellen Jewett at Yale; and Ying Dat Ho at UCLA. Previously Ying Dat worked for the Singapore Economic Board.

Other future professionals (read yuppies) include Martha Dean, who is in law school at the University of Connecticut. Mike Somers is also in Conn. doing his internship at Yale-New Haven Medical Center. Considerably more exciting than New Haven are London and Edinburgh, where Elizabeth Siderides will be spending this spring. Kate Little is already abroad doing biochemistry research at the University of Muenster. Hamilton Mehlmán plans to leave his successful computer company this fall to attend Tufts Medical School.

Also in school but pursuing less yuppyish courses of study are Jay Goodman who's getting a Ph.D. in statistics at Carnegie Mellon; Frank Goodman who (according to Tom Rothschild) has been studying diesel mechanics at the Texas State Tech Institute; Chuck Kimball who left advertising to join a Ph.D. program in history at Stanford; and Laura Scheerer who embarked this fall on a masters program in "Visual Anthropology" at USC. What, you ask, is visual anthropology? Fortunately, she explained that it's the making of ethnographic films. She hopes to "return to Indonesia to do field work and make a film."

Several of us are carefully avoiding yuppiedom by engaging in more un-traditional careers. Henry Eshelman reports that he is "still working at Studio 54," and he's been "developing a freelance party promotion-design," as well as "doing fund raising for Lenox Hill Hospital." Pam Babin, also in NYC is working as librarian for Goldman Sachs while taking design courses on the side. Bill Chambers is working for "Analogic on a fetal heart monitor." Out West, Preston Wright is "managing Marys River Ranch in Nevada," and is "also involved in a partnership with Tim Cain wholesaling and retailing fresh fish in Ketchum, Sun Valley, Idaho," where Tim lives.

However, we do have our archetypal yuppies. This edition's winners are Andy McCarthy who entered a training program at Bank of America this fall; (he and his wife, Betsy, are living in Palo Alto); Louis Boorstin who's been working for Lehman Bros. in NYC; Dave Gutzke who is a junior partner at William Toll & Co., a firm engaged in trading and risk arbitrage.

In a more personal vein, there are several marriages to announce. Mark Caputo who works in New York for Dover Elevator Co. selling elevators and escalators, married Susan Augusty in October. Bill Yun and Bob Benner attended Fritz Thompson's marriage to Rosie Dozier in St. Louis in August; the Thompsons are living in Kansas City, MO where Fritz is practicing law (add one more to the yuppie tally). Bob Colombo, who has been studying for an optician's license and working in Reading, MA, presumably carried out his intentions to marry a physical therapist this past December (Bob, tell us her name!). Eleanor Cunningham has announced her engagement to Trumbull Cary of Buffalo.

After marriage often come babies. Lori Wrobel Alexander and her husband are expecting their first child in late January; Lori and her husband, both army doctors, will begin an assignment at Tripler Army Medical Center in Hawaii in June. Caroline Cunningham Young and her husband, Don, had a baby, Charles Cunningham Young, on 21 December. Congratulations! Is Charlie our first?

My New Year's resolution is to try and not only remember to do all the Class Notes each semester but to also try to get them in on time. Fortunately this time around I have lots of news to report which makes it a little easier since I therefore don't have to make anything up.

On the wedding front we seem to have had a fair amount of activity. Lou Begien now goes by the name of Laura B. Bryan, having married Tim Bryan on 16 June 1984. By now they should be living in the Boston area, having moved back from California. Barbara Roome married Boris Gongaley Lobo in August. The two plan to live in Washington, DC where Boris is attending Georgetown Law School. Lee Apgar, contrary to popular belief, is still not married, though I have to admit, is giving it his best shot here in New York. If you have any suggestions, give me a call. Finally, having recently talked with Sloane Condren it appears she is happily married and shuttling between New York and Boston where her husband is attending Harvard Business School.

I received a great letter from Martha Hill who is teaching skiing and training for the 1986 World Games for the Disabled in Norway. She also reports that there is a half-page photo of her in the November issue of Powder magazine in the article entitled "Champs." I think the article's title says it all. Way to go, Martha!

Jeff Haggin has his own ad company in San Francisco called More Now, and will take any business you send his way.

Wayne Robinson, after graduating from Northwestern, remarried in the Chicago area and is currently in rehearsals for a new production of David Rabe's play In the Boom Boom Room. I'd hate to think of what goes on in there. On a more sober note, Peter Bennett is in the JD/MBA program at B.U. and frequently sees Jim Day and Will Rodgers who are also in the program. A. Brooke Overby is a law student at the University of Iowa and Lisa Tavenner is getting her law degree at the University of Virginia.

Tom Benton, a capitalist at heart, runs two of his own video stores in addition to his job assisting the President of a company that distributes Handyfuel. He claims he may be Business School bound but isn't quite sure.

Jenny Bensley is doing a whole bunch of things. She has her own rug importing business where she imports rugs from Turkey to be sold over here. She is also doing some work as a free lance graphic artist and even had a book of pen and ink drawings of African people and tribes published in Norway. She really knows how to make someone feel boring! Ben Batchelder recently returned from five months of hitch hiking through Europe, Africa, and Asia and is presently residing in Cambridge, Mass.

Brad Bradley is in his first year of law school at Syracuse University. Pam Hochecatner actually should have been mentioned earlier because she is planning to tie the knot fairly soon. She recently finished up at St. John's in New York and has her photos on display at a gallery in the Village.

Russ Bigwood is working for an insurance company in Boston and is underwriting commercial properties, specializing in the lumber and saw mill industries. I spent a great weekend with Patsy Cahill Waulich and her husband, David, at their home in Rye, NH. I promised not to say anything out of line about them, though it is awfully tempting.

As for myself, I'm living in Manhattan, working on the Saloman Brothers trading floor as an institutional bond salesman, at least that's what they tell me I am. I'd love to hear from any and all of you, so if you're in the area, give me a call. If not, drop me a line with any juicy info you may have.

May the New Year be a good one for you!

After such a successful class reunion last summer I became very excited about writing the class notes this winter. I have enjoyed communicating with many of you and would appreciate hearing from all.

Andy Hilliard graduated from Denver U in finance and will be getting married 9 June in Denver. He is currently living in Santa Rosa, CA and plans on pursuing his MBA. Dick Flaherty is in Boston operating his own company, Rentex Inc., selling and renting computers and typewriters. He is also attending Brandeis with four semesters left for his degree in Philosophy. Dick went to Boston with Briggs Tobin who is working with a law firm in NY, and they ran into Dan Goggin who was entertaining clients in an effort to sell them huge blocks of stock as he works for Kidder Peabody. Dan and Mike Starratt were said to have been seen with hooks in their mouths. Peter MacDonald is alive and well in Houston. He graduated from Princeton in '84, majored in Art History, and is now working at the Museum of Fine Arts. Geoff Proctor is a teaching fellow at PA after working his way around the world with jobs in Switzerland, England, Australia, New Zealand and Alaska. Hugh Silbaugh is also teaching at Phillips and Jim Ventre is in his second year with the Admissions Office there.

*HEY, DON'T FORGET REUNION 7 - 9
JUNE

To give you an idea of how much I've been working, my typewriter margins are still set from the last time I wrote class notes. Being in Paris where I'm studying for a year on a Columbia Program at the French University, I have seen very few people from Andover, but I understand how we all have to suffer sometimes.

I bumped into John Bachman at 2 a.m. in an all night bar at St. Michel. I wasn't completely me, having recently turned myself into a polkadotted salamander, hence, all I understood was that he was chauffeuring a blind artist (or was it an author, or for that matter had John become a blind artist?) around Paris. His address (John's, not the artist's) got lost in the course of the evening, and I haven't been into the heavy duty bars since.

Jorge Arteta is also in Paris having just finished an internship in a hotel, he will be starting graduate school here in January. Otherwise, I haven't heard from too many people.

Mary Williamson is working for L.L. Bean in Freeport (Maine, for you non-aborigines). Anna Krumpe is starting carpentry school this January. Got a long note from Kate Thomes who is working at Grey Advertising in New York. She reports that Dianne Hurley is a "success" at Goldman-Sachs (Dianne please say hello to "Dangy" for me.) Dianne, Kate, and Nick Mazzacco got together after the Harvard-Columbia game for a "wildly fun" time.

She also mentioned that Jim Currid is in Alabama training to jump out of helicopters with the army, and that Sally Baldwin is smiling and shaking a lot of hands as assistant of alumni affairs at Bentley College. (Yes, all you conservative youngsters still at PA, life after Andover is nothing but shaking hands and jumping out of helicopters!)

Other New Yorkers are Robert Schapiro, who began graduate studies this fall at Stanford on a Mellon Fellowship. He was planning to spend a lot of time with David Weil who was beginning a two-year stint of investment banking for First Boston. Alan White worked for CBS last summer in New York, while Jennifer Kimball is working for Time magazine.

Moving back into New England is June Glaser who works for Burroughs corporation in software marketing support, and living in Brookline. And . . . (drum roll please) another marriage! Robin Aiello, who is working as a marine biologist at Harvard and thereby scuba diving most every week, will be marrying Warren Allmon (Dartmouth '82) currently a Ph.D. candidate in Geology, on 16 February of this year. She says in the same breath that although Warren is a member of the class of Exeter '78, he's O.K., and that she misses her old Andover buddies. Let's hope she's being honest in both matters. Seriously though, Robin, congrats and good luck.

Sometime this summer I will become a member of the working class back in the states, unless a great job should turn up here in Paris, which I doubt, so I'm afraid that I can't make it to the reunion, unless somebody has a connection for free flights on the Concorde. Nonetheless, have a great time and don't take life too ylsuoirs.

Dear Everyone:

I am taking over as Class Secretary for Steph, as she has now entered the world of (non-profit) big business — more on that later. From now on please send all correspondence to me. I hope all is going well for everyone, and I'm sure you want me to get on with the "real" news, so here goes: First the latest from the East coast, Betsy Biemann writes that she's majoring in modern American history and biology at Harvard, and sings and manages an a cappella singing group called the Radcliffe Pitches. She rooms with Devin Mahony and Ritchey Banker. Tom Banchoff will be working in Washington this summer for Public Opinion magazine, and is currently a history major and managing editor of International Forum at Yale. At Mt. Holyoke, Carolyn Pfat-teicher and Kathleen Kinsella are both playing lacrosse. Carolyn also wrote that she's spending this summer on a geology expedition at Mt. Vesuvius in Italy, and that Karen Stafford is doing well at Bucknell. Ashley Tobin is playing on the Vassar tennis team and is spending this summer teaching handicapped children how to ride horses.

Heading a little further north, Chuckie Richardson appeared in the production of The Wake of Jamey Foster at Bates College. Martha Lane writes that she transferred from Skidmore to UVM, and spent last summer in both the Admissions and Business Offices at PA. She saw Hilary French at Dartmouth and also Paul Hochman. Anne Northrup is taking summer classes at Harvard, and Celia Imrey is taking some time off from Brown and "working on computers, making jewelry, and generally loafing about."

More news from about the country: Cam MacWilliams is living in Vail, loving it, and doing a lot of skiing. Lisa Boyd is in St. Louis at Washington University and says it always rains, and there are no hills. Courtney Starratt writes she's spending this summer in Europe and then going to Germany to study at Tibongen for a year; she hopes to get her drama and German majors by 1986. Also abroad will be Craig Lebowitz who's going to Spain this month to attend the University of Madrid.

Mona Lim is waiting tables at the Mad Hatter and also bartending at the Muse. She has auditioned for the Skipper Singers and hopes to be with them this summer. She talked to Scott Corry who will be at R&C this summer. Kurt Timken is still at Pomona and will be working this summer in the LBJ Internship in Washington, DC. Pierre Valette (I think the post card was from him, though the signature was smudged, so somebody please correct me if this wasn't him?) left Stanford to "ride on a cattle ranch called El Guadalupe on the Arizona-New Mexico border" and is in love with his roping horse, "Mooney."

Now, from the South. Rob Hull loves UVA and says he informally runs the university's Judiciary System. He sees Ted Lameyer, Graham Anthony, and Mike Terry "all the time." I'm here at William and Mary and having a great time. Alex Cochran is in ROTC here and I see him often. Jim Donnelly visited him here and is doing well at school. Ellen Thompson and Liese Cochran ('83) are also here. Phil Berney is the editor of the yearbook at UNC and will be working on a videotape this summer on Morehead scholars. Chandri Navarro is spending this year in Paris and absolutely loves it. Also in Paris is Yalda Tehranian who lives in an apartment on the same block as Chandri. I saw Jeff Hunt this summer — he is now in Italy for a semester and may never return! I also saw Cathi Dupuy ('81) and Scott Smith ('81) over Thanksgiving. Scott spread the news that Rob Stier ('81) is getting married soon. Congrats!

As for Ms. Steph Yoo, our new retired secretary, she runs a non-profit arts company in the Big Apple and is very interested in promoting all types of art. I'm sure she'd welcome any pieces (written, painted, etc.) of art from those really serious about the art world, and those can be sent to her c/o The Creative Arts Farm, 557 Hudson St., NY, NY 10014. I want to thank Steph for all the great work she did as our Secretary, and I hope I can keep it going. Please write in and tell me what you've been doing and any news you may have about other members of our class. I'd love to hear from everyone. Hope you all have a terrific spring and just remember, only one more year 'til the real world! Ciao. . . Susan.

Amy Kellogg

Brown University
Providence, RI 02912

Happy New Year. Contrary to popular belief, we are doing things at Brown besides popping cyanide pills and making a lot of noise. Tom Ullman and I are next door neighbors in Providence and have both had our rooms broken into in the past month. Andrea Feldman's a busy bee, playing field hockey and Varsity lacrosse, starting an internship with a local television station in the spring, and trying her hand in subjects from Computer Science to Studio Art. Susannah Hill has a very flattering short haircut and is singing with a few groups. I never see Gil Maymi anymore. I guess going pre-med (in reference to Gil, not me) has a vanishing effect on people. Harry Elson and Kimi Sato are now at Brown, too. Both seem well, and the last I saw of Kimi was towards the end of his final exam/paper medley — he was Japan-bound and all smiles. Anita Zlatev has a nice boyfriend and teaches English to some Soviet emigres in Pawtucket. Margie Stadelé is a counselor in a freshman dorm. Jon Wetherbee has decided that Engineering is not for him, and is taking more humanities courses. He's spending Christmas break in Mexico with his family. Last I saw of him, he was all smiles too, on his way out, and promising to bring back gifts of Kahlua.

From the other coast, I received a letter from Bob Weisbach, Carolyn McGowan, Robyn Weisman and assorted '84 graduates written after dinner and drinks in San Francisco . . . more of the latter, I'm supposing. According to them, "Carolyn has a good roommate, Robyn has better jewelry now, and Jeff Woodhead ('84) just got off the phone with Mom." Is that how they teach you how to write letters in California? Oh, they also mentioned listening to the Del Fuegos (Warren Zanes) on tape. Also at Stanford is one seemingly content, Ted Tasch.

Trina Moiso is playing volleyball and majoring in drama at UCLA. She claims to miss everyone and the East. Bunny Rea is somewhere out in California, her new home away from home, doing an internship. Quincy Tompkins is no longer at Berkeley. She transferred to Mount Holyoke this fall, loves it, and she and Matt Gilligan are still quite the couple.

Ned Rosen finds sophomore year at Harvard "fun" and he's trying "not to get too serious." He's tutoring at a nearby prison, wrestling, and has started a gun control group. I hear Jeff Rossman directed a play this fall at Harvard.

Laura Culbert, now a sophomore at Columbia, is taking Japanese and spent an exciting week in Tokyo this fall. Also at Columbia is Marc Schwartz who wants to spend next year at Oxford or Cambridge.

I saw Francis Lombardi, Josh Steiner, Dave Trowbridge, and George Caulkins at the "Head of the Charles" this fall. They look great and seem happy. Francis had put together quite an elaborate picnic, and I mooched a beer.

Two more of our freshmen have had successful semesters. After their visits to Australia and Southeast Asia, Jason Bernhard and Cindy Reid are at U. Penn and Wesleyan respectively.

Cindy LaMontagne is in her third semester at UVM and was the New York regional "Face of the 80s" winner after entering the contest on a whim. However, her true interest seems to lie in foreign service, not modeling.

Please stay in touch. Best wishes in '85.

Betsy Leavitt
Box 438 - Bates College
Lewiston, ME 04240

Picking a name out of a hat so not to play favorites, I came up with Sean Flanagan to begin these notes. Along with Sean, however, comes news of Dave Kantaros and Joe Bardetti. All three are reportedly "staying out of trouble at Brown University and taking advantage of Brown's liberal Arts by devoting their time and energy to the studies of Yellow Man, a concentration centered around Reggae music." They also spend time questioning the whereabouts of John Best, the "Lone Wolf." In case there are others wondering about John as well, he has ended his career at Utah State and will be attending U Mass (Amherst) for the second semester.

Apparently having the same taste as Sean, Dave and Joe is Marc Silverstein at Princeton who Janine Coleman (also at Princeton) mentioned is trying to start a Reggae band. Janine also wrote that Paul Huck is really enjoying the social aspects of PU as is Kathie McBride who played on the soccer team. As for Janine, who played on PU's field hockey team in the fall, she is now busy struggling to make varsity squash along with John McCarthy.

While we're on the sports scene, there are many other '84 jocks carrying on at their respective colleges. Jack Whelan was noted this fall as "one of the leading producers at Amherst" by Springfield's Daily News after playing split end for Amherst's football team. Harvard also made out quite well this fall after receiving four of last year's leading football athletes. Buddy Boyda, Kent Lucas, Chris Dole and Dave Cantrell all played for the Crimson's freshman football team. Charlie Welch, also at Harvard, did not play football in the fall but instead decided to devote his athletic skills to lacrosse. Speaking of Charlie, Celia Pastoriza will be taking second semester off from the University of Michigan in order to participate in an Outward Bound program.

Getting back to Harvard, Ester Morgo wrote she was "comping" The Crimson (Harvard's daily newspaper) as well as playing the flute in the pit orchestra for a fall production of Marat Sade by Peter Weiss. According to Esther, Sarinah Kalb is away at Kibbutz Ramat in Jerusalem. Sarinah deferred Harvard for a year but will be in Cambridge in '85. Claudia Kraus currently at Columbia University, worked on a kibbutz in Israel this past summer, but reports she is once again submerged in the intellectual life. She has been in touch with Hee Jung Shin, Sarah Jane Cohen, Catherine Harris and Dinah Leventhal all of whom are enjoying Harvard, as well as Daisy Smith at Yale, who is also doing well.

Taking a year off are John Caulkins, Watt Alexander, Blake Catlin and Joel Post, all in various corners of the globe. John reports he is living in Vail, Colorado and recently had a wild weekend with local coal miner Ned Drummond. Jean Pawlowski, who is studying on the Northern coast of Spain for the year is having "an absolute blast!" Another ex-Paul Reverette, Betsy Biern is also overseas. Bert is in England on ESU and reports that school there is different than Andover ("too strict, petty rules, etc."). While there she met up with Max Ryan and Kristin Cleary both of whom, Bert says, seem happily adjusted to Great Britain. Before leaving the States, Kristin made headlines in her local paper after organizing and hosting a fund raiser for the Cape Cod Hospital at her home in Oyster Harbors, MA.

Nathaniel Crowell also made headlines early this fall after receiving a National Achievement Scholarship for the F. W. Woolworth Co. in New York City. What didn't make headlines but did, I'm sure, make memories for many of you, was our quasi-reunion at Andover/Exeter last fall. With Siberia reserved for Alumni tailgate parties, I think people were pretty sociable. The only one I can recall returning from out of the States was John LaFave coming from Canada. There were others from many miles away though, such as Li Nilson (who loves Wally), Courtenay Carmody, Mike Cahill, Annie Emmick, Jon Higgins, Tracy Tobin, Matt Bergeron, Ted Curtin, Doug Bradley, Jim Moore, Harold Engstrom, Doug Mynter, Al Griffin, Dave Little, Richard Lombard, and Sarah Bullock. It was great to see so many of you again.

Th-th-th-that's all folks: I've got to get this off. I'm in the middle of Paul Newman Day, a Bates tradition where everyone attempts to consume a full case between waking and hitting the sack (most likely passed out). Well, I've never been one to rebel against tradition . . .

Cement-scratching behind the Iron Curtain

The Soviet Union. It's on our minds and on our lips. Math teachers, veterans of thirteen weeks of language study, hold ponderous (halting) conversations in Russian on the steps of GW. As I jogged by the tennis courts recently, I overheard a colleague teasing his opponents at doubles: "Boy, you two looked like the Russian Revolution on that one!" A rather strained simile, but it's on our minds. At cocktail parties we talk of the upcoming faculty trip; we debate the relative merits of ultrasuede, all-cotton, and permanent press, but the wisdom of navy and khaki mix-and-match is unassailed. The virtues of traveling light are taken to new extremes: some of our traveling companions, it seems, will be burdened with only change of socks and an inflatable toothbrush; intelligence and travel experience, we are to believe, are inversely proportional to the weight of one's luggage.

There are other weighty issues to consider as well. Today I overheard a conversation among faculty in Commons, over fried clams and shoestring potatoes; the topic was — again — the Russian trip. Helsinki is our jumping-off point, and one person shared the ironic, sophisticated juvenilia from a Monty Python song about the excitement of tourism in Finland. Another person at the table reported that a Ms magazine article on traveling in the Soviet Union recommends stocking up on bottled water before crossing into Russia. In fact, only in Lenin-grad, which is built on a marsh, is there danger of infection from bad water. But my colleague's over-generalization is a fine example of our tendency to deal with the foreign — the other — by finding some categorical response that we can invoke on all occasions. It is our attempt to define — to fix in one position — something that perhaps cannot easily be encapsulated in a purchased memento, captured in a photograph, or reduced to a Ben Franklinism: don't drink the water. It's lonely — and scary — to be uncertain about the "other" that surrounds you.

A third faculty member reluctantly confessed that the superb journalist, Ellen Goodman, an avowed critic of knee-jerk, canned emotional responses, wrote how even she kissed the ground when she returned to the States from the Soviet Union. Will we react the same way?

I don't know, and although I do hope for an emotional experience as intense as Ms. Goodman's, I certainly hope our group will not become mired in the unreflective ideological rhetoric of either side. There is a more interesting and more valuable reaction to what we see in Russia. We should seek, as all good travelers do, to transcend the easy sloganizing polemics and to find our own way in a foreign culture. We hope to bring our own personal perspective to bear and to find in the Russian people some sort of shared experience that allows us and them to be individuals.

That is, of course, easier said than done. However, one man, a faculty member's father, might serve as an example here. An engineer, he was fascinated by Russian cement when he visited the Soviet Union: what disturbed him was its low quality. He couldn't help picking at it, scratching with his fingernails at cement buildings until he drove his Intourist guide to distraction. The common denominator between him and Russia was idiosyncratic, but it was something: He knew cement! It was as if he was trying to get beneath the surface of what he saw. And fingernails clawing at concrete also conjure up images of frantic attempts to escape from something — or to break in. The engineer is an example of how specific, "concrete" knowledge cuts through the polemics — political or social ("Don't drink the water") — to the personal.

Americans and Soviets are not the only ones who have difficulty transcending national polemics. For example, at the same Commons lunch a teacher and sometimes mountaineer shared what is perhaps the epitome of polarized nationalities. The International Everest Expedition in the early 70s was intended to be a symbol of internationalism, drawing its members from the major mountaineering nations. The expedition was, alas, an ill-fated endeavor. Particularly troublesome were the grumblings about a British conspiracy to have climbers of other nationalities carry the loads and establish the supply caches up the mountain but to have only the Britons try for the summit. Reputedly, the atmosphere in Base Camp was tense when the radio news reported that West Germany had just won a prestigious international soccer match. A bitter German climber was delighted to have something with which to needle an English climber: "Ha ha. Germany just beat England at your own national sport, soccer. We just beat you at your own game."

The Englishman, a blunt man of few words, paused, took his cigarette out of his mouth, looked the German in the eye, and declared, "England beat Germany at its national sport — twice."

That group did not succeed in climbing Mt. Everest.

I am as curious, as I hope you are, to find out how we do respond when we are in the Soviet Union — and when we return home. The View from Grub Street is expansive, and will, in the fall Bulletin, look at the Royal Blue in Red Square. We may not be climbing Everest, but certainly all of us feel a challenge ahead of us — to see clearly, to scratch deeply at the cement.

The diploma circle on the Great Lawn

by Heather L. Parker

Five a.m., the morning of graduation. Sunlight snuck through the open window of a second-floor dormitory room as I leaned against the window frame, broom in hand. I knew somehow, in the quiet of morning, that Commencement — the End — was a process, itself having a beginning and an end, and that the End had only begun last night at the Baccalaureate Service. It had started in the chaos just before the service began, when it looked as if my family and I might not be able to sit with the families of three close friends. At the last moment we finally succeeded in sitting together, and as Reverend Zaeder began, I marvelled that the four of us were actually sitting together for what might be the last time. It had been worth the embarrassment of saving “very empty-looking” pews, just as the year’s inevitable causes for grumbling had been well worth enduring. Only then had I begun to truly question the passing years and wonder about the coming days. To be sure, I’ve often considered what I have accomplished and what I hope to accomplish some day, but not when so many of my peers are doing the same.

As I swept the dirt into the hallway, it also occurred to me that many of us had already spent our last moments with our house counselors. In my own dorm, we had had a party; we Seniors had dined and conversed as honored equals with our surrogate parents. I had sensed in the faculty a desire to impart last words of wisdom to their departing students. Several of my teachers had even candidly expressed their emotions about the approaching End. In the words of one, “. . . the walk home after the graduation reception, after all the students have left, is one of the loneliest walks in all the world.”

What is it that produces and encourages the certain closeness we feel with teachers, friends, and even acquaintances? Perhaps it is the knowledge that our friends will soon be far away. Perhaps it is the unexpressed and mind-boggling realization that our Andover ritual, no matter how original, is reenacted every year. These realizations cause us to search for special and unique experiences — new and old friendships — to remember beyond the unspoken repetition of ritual. And as I swept down the dorm on the morning of graduation, I spied a solitary figure walking past my dorm, and on impulse I shouted “Hello” and ran out to greet him. We had probably not talked for more than ten minutes the entire year, and it felt strange, yet wonderfully normal to talk for a half-hour as the dew disappeared.

Yes, as I swept up bits of crumpled paper and rubbish, remnants of the past exposed in the rush of packing and the moving of furniture, I realized I had known the beginning of the End, had enjoyed the process of the End, and could anticipate its amazing conclusion — the diploma circle on the Great Lawn: beautiful, emotional, a climactic moment for us all.

How appropriate to gather the entire class into a gigantic circle for one final moment, for “even the seasons form a great circle in their changing and always come back again to where they were.” We too, of course, shall always in mind if not body, return occasionally to this place where we have spent so much time, emotion, and energy.

Reunions

Rev. Philip Zaeder, Rabbi Everett Gendler and Father Richard Gross, S.J. dedicate the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister.

The weather cooperated perfectly: the rain fell during the week between sunny Commencement and Reunions weekends. The hot weather came a little later in June this year. The celebrations were all blue sky and summer breeze.

Annual Meeting of the Alumni/ae

Following the Reunion Memorial Service in Cochran Chapel Saturday morning, the Trustees, faculty, and friends of the Academy joined the Baldwin family in the dedication of the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister, adjacent to the Sylvia Pratt Kemper Chapel. After the dedication, the Clan MacPherson Bagpipe Band led the Alumni/ae Parade from the Addison Gallery to the Gymnasium for the annual meeting of the alumni/ae. President of the Trustees, Melville Chapin '36, began the meeting by announcing that Sandy Trowbridge '42 is a new Charter Trustee. (Please see page 24.)

It was the Class of '35 that broke the most records this year, raising $200,000, which exceeds by $32,000 last year's record for a fiftieth reunion gift. The Class of '35 also won the award for the highest reunion attendance — 44%. The success is credited to a well-organized effort and a large committee nationwide, under the leadership of Gift Chairs Ann Cutler Brecheen and Fred Griffin; Special Gift Chairman Bob Cushman; and Reunion Chairs Charlie Miller, Elaine Eaton Perine and Ellen Rivinius Hill. The Class of 1980 had the second highest attendance with 33%.

The Class of 1960 announced a twenty-fifth reunion gift of $90,000, which is headed for $100,000 by 30 June. Head agents Ward Woods and Lynne Furneaux Clark, and Reunion Chairs Ruth Cox Crocker and Charlie Kendrick led their class's remarkable effort.

The performance of the Class of '45 also received well-deserved praise. Not only did it raise close to $70,000, $20,000 more than last year's record, but its total included an amazing twenty-six NON SIBI gifts.

Another milestone has been passed: the Class of '28 is the first class to give, over the years, in excess of $500,000 to the Alumni Fund.

Miriam Ganem Reeder '57, Co-chair of the Alumni Fund, announced that total alumni giving for the fiscal year approached the goal of $1,685,000. By late June, that goal had been reached.

We are grateful beyond words.

Seminars, Marathon, and Tea

Saturday afternoon offered a rich variety of activities. The Class of 1960 sponsored a panel of speakers on Nuclear War and National Security. The panel, moderated by PA History Instructor Edwin G. Quattlebaum III '60 and instructor of a course on nuclear proliferation, included Dr. Perrin L. French '60 (Physicians for Social Responsibility), Wallace C. Winter III '60 (Director, Illinois Chapter of Lawyers Alliance for Nuclear Arms Control), William L. Ury '70 (Director, Nuclear Negotiation Project, Harvard Law School; author, Beyond the Hotline), and Anthony D. Lee '60 (co-director, Beyond War Movement in Massachusetts). Dean of Faculty John Richards II moderated a faculty panel entitled, "What's New at PA? A Look at Teaching and Learning." Faculty members spoke on the School's new curriculum guidelines, the Headmaster's Symposium, the Urban Studies Institute, and the Russian language and his-

From "The Killing Fields" to Andover

Their dreams do not let them forget.

"Sometimes I dream that the soldiers are coming again. I am shot; or my brother is taken, is shot; or we all are shot. Or sometimes I dream about when my mother died." (Ratheany Sak-Bun '85)

"I dream about that last minute, when I was taken from my home. It was about 8:30 or 9 at night, and it was as dark outside as inside; the power, of course, had been cut off by then. Then the soldiers came . . ." (Song Peng Ly '84)

"I dream that they are coming to kill me, to arrest me. Sometimes I dream about when I had to cross over the dead bodies. They were swollen and smelled. I thought, 'How can I lift my leg over this?'" (Van So Chau '85)

"Almost every night I dream about my parents. I dream about their coming to the United States." (Minh Lam '86)

Ratheany Sak-Bun '85, Song Peng Ly '84, Van So Chau '85, and Minh Lam '86 — three PA students from Cambodia, one from Vietnam — are safe now, but they remain haunted by memories of destruction and loss. In the course of the last ten years they have endured starvation, forced labor, harrowing escapes, and the death of parents. Ratheany, a Cambodian refugee and a one-year senior, says, "When I am walking alone, many, many times I picture myself in the fields, maybe taking the ox to feed, then I look down and realize I'm carrying my books."

Song Peng, also a Cambodian refugee and a freshman at Wesleyan, says, "I can't forget it. I think about it once or twice a day, when I'm alone, studying. I think about what could have happened, about what did happen there." For Song

Peng the memories are particularly agonizing. In April of 1975 the Cambodian government (which itself had been established after a military coup ousted Prince Sihanouk in 1970) was overthrown by the Khmer Rouge, Communist revolutionaries supported by the People's Republic of China. On April 17, after his parents left him and his brother to watch the house while they drove some belongings to a friend's house, Communist soldiers entered and took Song Peng and his brother away. "That evening I lost my parents," he says. Later he and his brother tried to locate their parents, but they didn't succeed. "Lots of people died. I have no hope of finding them again. If they had been alive, I think we could have found them before we left." But although he assumes they are dead, he cannot know for sure.

Both Van So, a Chinese from Cambodia and a one-year senior, and Ratheany lost parents as a result of the Khmer Rouge takeover. Van So's father died of a lung disease: "He was very sick. When the Communists took over, there was no medicine; so he died." Ratheany's mother died slowly in 1977, having been ill for several years. At the time Ratheany, who was seven, had been separated from her parents by the government and worked on a farm in Kampot, a half-mile away, but she would run — literally, sprinting there and back — to visit for ten minutes, helping to nurse and feed her mother, who wasn't being given any nourishing food. Her sister and brother were assigned to other labor camps further away and were rarely able to visit. It took two months for the news of their mother's death to reach the brother.

After Ratheany's mother died, her father was stricken with the same symptoms, and Ratheany, who had been moved to a farm several miles away, was now forbidden to visit him at all. "I was afraid in the night he would die and nobody would know," she recalls. So "a lot of nights" she would venture across a graveyard to care for him. During this time she slept very little: "I didn't care if I slept or not. But I was very sleepy; anytime I sat down, I would fall asleep." When she was caught, she would be sentenced to extra labor.

Fortunately, Ratheany's father survived, to escape with the rest of his family, and today he lives in Honolulu with one of his older daughters, who had been in Paris with two other brothers at the time of the Communist takeover. Van So and his family also managed to escape together, and he lives now in Lawrence, Massachusetts with his mother; his three sisters and their families live nearby. Although the parents of Minh Lam '86, a Chinese from Vietnam, are both alive, they are still in Vietnam with Minh's eight sisters: there were only resources enough for Minh and his two older brothers — only one of whom survived — to escape. For five years now, Minh and his brother have been trying to sponsor their family so they can emigrate to this country, but the waiting list is long, and Minh doesn't know when he'll see his family again.

"Whenever I pick up an apple," Minh smiles sadly, "I think about my family. We divided an apple into small pieces, one apple for four or five persons; they were so rare. When we ate together, everything tasted so good — because there was so little food and so many people. I always think about my family when I eat. Do they have what I have?"

All the refugees have known extreme hunger, even starvation. On the ship on which Minh escaped — which carried 3000 Vietnamese — the passengers survived on crackers and canned milk. He went days at a time with nothing at all to eat. When they had almost run out of fresh water, they tried to mix it with salt water, "but the more we drank, the thirstier we got." Their physical discomfort was intense as well: "There were a lot of rats before all the people came in . . . Then it was like the history books, like the slaves — there were so many people that you couldn't even move, people right next to each other."

"When I am walking alone, many times I picture myself in the fields, maybe taking the ox to feed, then I look down and realize I'm carrying my books."

Ratheany remembers being given only two bowls of rice soup, which was mostly water mixed with a little rice, each day. "An hour later," she says, "you are hungry to death." She is unaware of the old joke about Chinese food, and it is just as well. Later, when they were traveling in the mountains, they ate better, catching chickens along the way. ("There are two ways to kill chickens," she says matter-of-factly. "Twist its neck, or hold the legs under one foot and the wing under the other and cut the throat.")

Song Peng recalls the starvation he and other escaping Cambodians from the same village experienced trudging through a lake at night. "People had had nothing to eat since the day before, and there were babies and elderly people. Some of them had no energy to walk through the lake; others had to try to carry them. The water was cold, and people died." The lake, Song Peng remembers, was "huge — you couldn't see anything but water." That night, "I thought of dying; I thought, maybe the time has come. But we kept moving, swimming, walking as long as we had enough energy. If you wait, who cares? Who's going to know you're there?"

"There was never enough to eat," says Van So. "You felt so hungry. If you found anything eatable, you didn't care how it would affect your health — you just wanted to get your stomach filled." He stops. "People told me about a grandmother whose sons and daughters had all starved and died. She had only one grandchild left — and they say she killed and ate the child. I don't know if that's true, but that's what they said." What Van So himself saw were old people, and sick people, who were left to die. "I felt sorry for the old people left behind," he says. "They just sat there, waiting for the time to die. Some food would be left for them, enough for two or three days, then they would die. Some people tried hard to carry the old people, but they couldn't do it, or they would die." Asked if his family had to leave anyone behind, he shakes his head. "But while we were escaping, we saw a man from our town. He was very rich, and fat. When he got sick, no one could carry him. He cried when he saw us, but he knew we couldn't take him." Van So decided that if he had to die it would be better to be shot than to starve. "I saw the suffering — you suffered a long time."

For the Cambodians, death was all around. In April of 1975, marching out of Phnom Penh, Ratheany saw fallen bodies along the road, swollen corpses in the fields. "But my parents told me not to look," she says. Song Peng recalls seeing people lying "near their belongings, looking as if they'd fallen asleep — but they had died. It freaked you out. They weren't buried, and sometimes they smelled. You couldn't avoid seeing corpses; they were all over the place." He pauses. "When lots of troops poured in from Vietnam in 1979, dead bodies became no big deal." Van So too remembers the result of the Viet Cong invasion vividly. "We had to cross over a mass of dead people: some bodies had been there for two or three days, swollen and smelling, and others had been there for two or three weeks, or a month, and were just skin and bones."

During the Vietnamese invasion, the threat of death became palpable. Working in the rice fields, Ratheany heard the bombs coming closer every day. "One day, a bomb landed in the field," she says. "After that we were evacuated." One bomb exploded 20 meters away from where Van So was standing, and Song Peng says, "We saw the bombs falling from Vietnamese fighters. We saw the shore turned into a battlefield." Ironically, he found shelter in old craters left by American B52 bombers.

Both Ratheany and Van So have seen The Killing Fields, the Academy Award-winning film about Cambodia; Van So has seen it twice. "I didn't cry," says Ratheany rather proudly. "I tried not to cry." Then she reverts to her own experience. "I cried a lot when my mother died, when she got sick, when I would think about my father being sick. When I went to work, I would cry alone in the field. But you don't cry when you're hungry — it doesn't help, you lose energy."

Van So feels the movie "didn't describe everything that happened in Cambodia." He singles out "the way the Communists killed people. They usually used sticks, not guns. They tied up the victim, didn't feed him for two or three days, and then they beat him with bamboo, beat him to death." Van So witnessed a public killing, staged by the Communists for the benefit of the people in his village. "They said a man was planning to escape and they wanted to make an example of him. Nobody knew, though, if he actually was trying to escape." A meeting was called in the courtyard of the temple. "There were thousands of people. And some 13- or 14-year old girls started it first, throwing stones at him. Regular citizens joined in. I didn't want to see it, I couldn't believe it — I had never seen someone die in front of me before. Some people cried or ran away. And he didn't yell, he was very tired. Then the leader cut his throat with a knife and they pulled him away. I was very scared."

And now they are at Andover — Wesleyan, in Song Peng's case — where they are grateful for the opportunities they've been offered. All of them began their American education in public schools, impressing their teachers so deeply that teachers, counselors, and others who knew about Andover urged them to apply. Once here they threw themselves into their studies, and they have met with huge success. Ratheany enters Wellesley this fall, and Van So, Columbia. This spring Ratheany and Van So both won the Ayars Prize, which is awarded to "a member of the Senior Class who, through work, perseverance, and seeking after excellence, has established a position of respect and admiration in the School community." Although Minh entered as a one-year senior, he has reclassified as an Upper "to prepare myself better for college." Minh has embraced the Andover experience, announcing with delight, "I feel part of everything here. People are so nice."

But Ratheany feels more isolated. "When I go to Commons," she says, "I sit with the black-haired people. Sometimes," she adds, "I see hate in other people's eyes. I have the feeling they don't like Asians. I don't feel comfortable — when others talk, I'm quiet. I don't have things to say. But many people," she says quickly, "are very nice, once you know them."

Van So also feels the isolation, but he says, "I like it here. I don't have close friends, but I don't try. The cultural background is too different." Asked if he's encountered prejudice, he replies, "I feel some people might have prejudice and look down at me, but they don't express it to me. I can understand," he adds philosophically, "if foreigners came to Cambodia, maybe I would do the same. The people here haven't been through what I've been through. I understand: you live by the society, by your experiences."

Certain things — like the mounds of uneaten food left on trays in Commons — inevitably make these Asian students cringe. They have learned never to waste food. Or time: they feel keenly their missed years of schooling and are making valiant attempts to catch up. "Maybe now people will know why I'm not good in English," says Ratheany, "why I'm not in Math 65. People think I study too much, that I'm antisocial. But they have to understand — I have to work so hard to get a 4 or a 5." Van So regrets deeply the loss of his six years of education. He says as he worked in the fields he "would dream about school;" in those days work began at four and ended at sunset — or,

"When my family ate together, everything tasted so good — because there was so little food I always think about my family when I eat. Do they have what I have?"

"if there was a moon," into the night, with only a few minutes for meals.

There are also regrets concerning their parents. Ratheany feels sorry for her father, once a prominent bank director. "It's lonely for him now. He goes to school at the University of Hawaii and takes care of the house." Similarly, Van So: "I am sorry for my mother. She has to work to support me. And she never had to work for other people before. She doesn't have many friends: she misses Cambodia." But none of them, except perhaps Ratheany, who wants to be a doctor, would ever go back to live. "It is too dangerous," says Van So.

So in many ways the past continues to cut into both the waking and sleeping hours of these refugees, stirring a pain that western conveniences will never obliterate. But they are making the most of their many chances here, as their solid grades and college acceptances prove. They are perhaps more isolated than they would like to be, but they accept this. They seem to ask for only one thing: understanding. Says Song Peng: "Let people realize, a lot of things happened that they should know about, that they need just to think about. In this country people can't think beyond their horizons; they don't even communicate that much with their parents — what about countries halfway round the world? They're interested in their baseball games, the way they've always been interested in them. They don't know much about the world."

The Sound Of Our Town

by Tom Oden

The event was billed as "a sort of homecoming," and the Del Fuegos' performance in PA's gymnasium last April certainly contained some elements of a return to the clan. Three of Andover's prodigal sons, Dan Zanes '79, brother Warren '83, and Tom Lloyd '78 have teamed up with an art school refugee from Wichita, Kansas to form one of America's most critically acclaimed new bands. The Del Fuegos were the first East Coast act to sign a contract with Warner Brothers' subsidiary Slash Records, the trendsetting independent label that is spearheading a resurgence of innovative American groups. Their album "The Longest Day," released in September of 1984, was rated among the top ten releases of 1984 by Los Angeles Times' critics Michael London and Richard Cromelin. Rolling Stone Magazine's Critic's Poll named the band one of its New Artists of the Year, and the current standard-bearer of American music, Bruce Springsteen, went so far as to tell them their single "Backseat Nothing" was his favorite song. Springsteen then proceeded to join the group onstage in a small North Carolina club for renditions of "Stand By Me" and "Hang on Sloopy." High praise indeed for a band that once lived in the back room of a Boston club because the owner gave them food.

Adolescents of every generation dream of forming a band (big band, swing, jazz, or rock 'n roll), but these four men have acted on that impulse. They have deferred college careers, at least temporarily, to pursue their art, surviving in a relentless, often vicious business. Going on the road is romantic until you're out there. What would have been their collegiate years were spent loading equipment into a van, performing for indifferent audiences, and playing Thursday nights in Salt Lake City. Drummer Woody Giessman talked about periods of time when you don't get enough sleep and "you barely maintain a healthy diet," adding that "you have to be willing to make those sacrifices for the music." The band's Andover show was their fifth in forty-eight hours: Thursday night in Sunderland, MA, two Friday — U. Lowell and Holy Cross, and one that afternoon in Keene, NH. While they were excited about playing their school, the sag of their shoulders told of their fatigue. It is difficult to reconcile that tired image of them before the show with their taut, energetic stage presence. It is easier to understand Dan when he talks about "the unbelievable amount of hard work" it took for them to fuse together as a group.

The band has its roots in a chance meeting between Dan and Tom in the cafeteria breakfast line at Oberlin College during the fall of their freshman year. Tom was an aspiring cellist at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music. Dan felt that he was just taking up space at Oberlin, an attitude exacerbated by his status as a scholarship student: "I thought of all the people in this country who wanted to be educated and it just didn't seem right for me to be there." They began to play together and by the middle of the winter, Tom had communicated to his parents that he was thinking of taking a year off from school. Accompanied by a drummer, the embryonic Del Fuegos moved to Dan's farmhouse outside of Concord, New Hampshire, where they could "rehearse in the bedroom and not bother anyone."

That group quickly gained notoriety for its energetic stage show and barbed wit. They moved to Boston and took their "We'll Out-dance Any Band" act all over the Bay State, from parties at Wellesley College to a gig at Walpole State Prison. For two and a half years, the band scraped by — chopping vegetables, waiting tables, and gathering a legion of fans. Still, playing February dates in Allston bars is a far cry from Los Angeles recording contracts. Those white beaches lined with palm trees must seem narcotic in their appeal.

After his graduation from Andover in 1983 Warren Zanes joined the group. Although he lacked the musical polish of Tom and Dan, he contributed a boyish vitality and new eagerness. The band's current lineup was completed with the addition of Woody the following January. Frank Hallowell, of Boston's Pretty Polly Productions, remembers that even at that time, "it was clear that the group would do something, because of the talent in the band. We just were not sure how long it would take." The Del Fuegos always seemed to be on the verge of signing with a major label, especially after they began to open shows for the Slash acts who ventured east. Dan recalls, "We ended up waiting a year and a half for our tapes to be accepted." Finally the group received the green light and headed west to capitalize on their break.

Ironically, that break, which was to transform them into a band of national repute only did so by first reminding them of their own fledgling status and how much they had to learn. On the drive to LA finally to record their album, their newly purchased van skidded on an icy bridge in Ohio and crashed, wrecking some of their equipment. That crash remains the critical moment in the band's history. In a few seconds the exhilaration of being on the road, seeing the country, and making their break was shattered by depression and disbelief. Tom remembers that "we had gotten used to people telling us how good we were, and the accident forced us to realize that we were just as fallible as anyone else." Eventually they made it to the coast, but at first things did not go well at all. The chemistry between them and their initial producer was wrong, and rehearsing brought only frustration and anxiety. Their first producer was replaced with Mitchell Froom, who rehearsed them for another six weeks. Out went the cheap guitars; they were fine for rowdy live shows, but they wouldn't do in a taping studio: tape doesn't lie, and a quality sound is more important than image. Froom stressed that their songs "had to have a groove and had to have attitude." Roughly translated, he told them to play a third less notes and to tune their instruments. Tom remembers, "Mitchell taught us to look at our own music critically. He also impressed upon us that no song was ever finished and that we should be willing to change what we had come to think was great." The Fuegos began to break down their songs and ask a series of questions about each one: what is the song; what do we want to say; what is the best way to say it? They learned that they had to work on a song's notes and lyrics until they coalesced into a unity that seemed so correct as to be natural — even inevitable. As their sound was deconstructed and laid down instrument by instrument, voice by voice, the band members came to understand the necessity of functioning as a group and not as a collection of individuals. In Froom's terms, they developed "attitude." The band that entered the studio having made its name playing wild, erratic sets exulted with hard-learned discipline and control. They realized that the motivation for the hours of practice, takes, and retakes, had to come from inside — from a desire to make the best music possible.

The Del Fuegos returned east in September of 1984 with a new attitude toward their music. "Once we saw how the industry operated out there," says Dan, "we started working even harder to be professional." The Del Fuegos have worked long and hard to gain their current perch, and have no intention of slowing down. No fancy hair cuts, no androgynous costumes, no high tech synthesizers, simply unpretentious rock 'n roll. Amidst the flux and uncertainty of the music business, in which tastes change and new faces commandeer the world of MTV every month, the Fuegos impart a sense of consistency.

The Del Fuegos take a wide swath of American music for their roots, from Gulf Coast blues to Everly Brothers harmonies. Neither "new wave" nor punk, the band simply hopes "to bring people together, not push them apart," according to bassist Tom Lloyd. Although the group makes no pretenses of being political, their message is undeniable. Ask any of the sweat-drenched Andover students who throbbed around the stage, a cauldron of energy and shared emotion. Or ask any of the faculty members who twisted and shouted, reaching back for their own high school dance experience, raising spectres of Roy Orbison, Elvis, and early Rolling Stones. Embedded in this music that brings so many people together is a declaration of sorts. Themes such as personal integrity and honesty in relationships surface repeatedly in the Del Fuegos' lyrics. In a world of diminishing dreams and increasing tension, their defense seems to be trueness of character and the willingness to persevere for goals. Near the end of the show, the band dedicated "The Sound of Our Town" to Athletic Director Paul Kalkstein, who guided Warren through to his diploma long after many had given up on him. The song tells of someone who has lost at love and struggles at work. In spite of these difficulties, the singer holds on to better times:

You say the jobs get worse,
But keep the radio on.
You can still dance to every song.
You say you heard the streets cry,
You say you heard the park
moan,
You heard the buildings all falling down —
It's the sound of our town.

Listening to the fervor of their music, one realizes that their world of girlfriends, classic cars, and a shot of rambunctiousness is somehow redemptive. Other lyrics are more complex, but the simple tunes are egalitarian, Whitmanesque in their appeal.

By the time the Fuegos slammed into their third encore that Saturday night, the PA crowd had long lost its sense of individuality and surged in unison. As the music ended, an almost tangible sigh worked its way through the crowd. Students found themselves on the opposite side of the gym from where they had started the evening; faculty members found themselves winded and disheveled. Most had given up something of themselves to participate in the scene. The hard work, the perseverance, the risks — they are paying off for the Del Fuegos: their music did "bring people together," and it is meeting with wide-spread acceptance. For them and for the unified audience as well, the show was — in different ways — "a sort of homecoming."

Tom Oden has been a member of the English Department since 1983, and has served as Director of Social Functions for the last year. The Del Fuegos' new album is scheduled to be released at the end of this summer.

The Andover Development Board

In October 1984 the Board of Trustees began a new non-campaign effort to raise endowment and capital funds for Phillips Academy and established a new organization called the Andover Development Board. The Development Board is a group of 100 alumnae, alumni, and parents, led by Chairman R. L. Ireland III '38, and charged with the task of securing the Academy's future by fostering its long-range capital support.

The Development Board held its Inaugural Meeting at Andover 16-18 May. The full schedule of events was a combination of reacquainting Board members with the School, describing the School's current capital needs, and explaining the myriad of different ways to make a planned gift. One Board member said that the program addressed itself to "the great end and real business of giving." Faculty spoke on a variety of panels about the curriculum and teaching, perhaps the most poignant and hilarious panel addressing the topic, "Why I Teach at Phillips Academy." Sharing vignettes about several students, Britta McNemar in effect told the Andover Development Board members in human terms why their work was important. Abstractions such as excellence in education, diversity in the student body, and the importance of adolescence in an individual's development became concrete in the stories of individual students. She told of a one-year postgraduate girl from the North Country of New England whom Britta had taken the first day of school for the odds-on favorite for a disastrous year. After a rocky start, the girl, an artist, thrived, and in a teary farewell just after graduation, she handed Britta an original watercolor painting that Bart Hayes had called the finest piece of work he had seen in years. The girl told Britta, "Save this for me. I'll be back to Andover some day and in some way say thank you."

In fact, as a Development Board member said the next day, the room was full of different reasons why the Andover Development Board members support Phillips. For some it is a debt they want to repay — to individuals or to the institution. It may be the conviction that, as Alexander Pope wrote, "'Tis education forms the common mind: Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined" and that teachers of adolescents do the crucial "twig-bending." Or it may be the "selfish" feeling of accomplishment of having done something important, tangible, significant.

The Development Board will seek assistance from a variety of sources — outright gifts of many kinds, planned gifts, and foundation and corporate support — in support of teachers, scholarships, and several brick and mortar projects. President of the Board of Trustees Melville Chapin '36 stated to the Development Board, "For years this School and this country have certainly traded on the goodwill of people who have been willing to serve here at less than fair compensation . . . So a number one priority is increasing faculty salaries to some kind of a more reasonable, fair level in order to continue to attract the best people available in this country." Chapin also outlined the need for scholarship endowments and revolving loan funds to assist able but needy students, and to continue Andover's needs-blind admissions policy. The School's current needs for the physical plant are the expansion and renovation of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, the George Washington Hall stage and theatre renovation, and the installation of an all-weather track.

The Andover Development Board's efforts began that weekend on an upbeat note with the announcements of several important gifts. Bernard J. Ristuccia, father of four PA sons, has given $1 million for the theatre renovation, in memory of his wife, Elinor M. Ristuccia. In addition, more than $500,000 has been pledged to support five scholarship students. Those funds have been contributed by Mrs. Saul Horowitz in memory of her husband, Saul Horowitz, Jr. '42, the Short family in memory of John G. Short '66, and an anonymous Andover Development Board member.

The Development Board takes the School's Armillary Sphere as its symbol, suggesting how, for more than two centuries, Andover has stood both for tradition and for change. It is now, once again, time in Andover's history to assess the present and provide for the future. That is what the Andover Development Board will do.

Wide Open Spaces

by Gary Rieveschl '61

Last spring saw the first Artist-in-Residence at Phillips Academy. The term's topic, "Wide Open Spaces — or — How Sculpture Escaped from the Museum," was based on the premise that space — in particular outdoor space — has become an integral element of and forum for sculpture.

We live in an increasingly picture-oriented society where so much of our optical experience is reduced to framed points of view, such as automobile windshields and bay windows or, now, the two-dimensional flickering of TV screens and computer monitors. We are losing our sense of three-dimensional space. A major goal of my outdoor art projects has been to counter this tendency by encouraging an awareness of the spaces we live in and move through. For me and many other artists, this concern has meant escaping from the limitations of gallery and museum space, where in some cases, art experience has become artificial experience.

Despite the inherent difficulties of moving art outdoors and under the noses of an unsuspecting and often suspicious public, outdoor spacial artwork has established itself in the past few years as an effective vehicle for confronting an enormous audience with art and art-ideas in the "real world."

The Spring Term's Artist-in-Residence Program began with a mini-project, which Bob Lloyd's thirteen architecture students designed and built in front of the Addison Gallery on the first day of class. The drawings for and photos of this project, as well as other student work, were hung in the Addison Gallery in conjunction with an exhibition of works by 13 contemporary artists entitled, "Land/Space/Sculpture." The exhibition outlined the historical development of spatial sculpture and illustrated the dialectical problem inherent in translating outdoor spaces into indoor works. The exhibition also served as the basis for a series of gallery talks that I gave to students in other art courses.

During the first half of the term each of the thirteen students in the program conceived and produced a proposal for an outdoor project to be built somewhere on campus. A jury composed of the Headmaster, a trustee, the acting director of the Addison, and representatives of the Office of Physical Plant and the Campus Beautification Committee then had the difficult task of selecting one proposal for the students to create as a collaborative effort during the second half of the term. The proposal chosen by the jury called for constructing three large trellises, which spell out the word "ART." The students spent the second half of the term building the trellises, installing them on the end-wall of Kemper Auditorium, and planting them with climbing plants. The honeysuckle vines, planted during the last class meeting, will require about three years to cover the letters, thus producing the project's message and ever-changing visual experience. The ground directly in front of the trellises will be planted with white daffodils in the mirror image of the word "ART."

In addition to both embodying the simple but important lesson that art is life and externalizing the building's use, the project reclaimed the area as a green space. In recent years the area had become an unofficial parking lot where soil compaction had killed all of the grass and endangered the health of the nearby trees.

But the students were not the only ones to conceive and produce a piece of sculpture. It would be insufficient for an artist to teach his or her craft without doing it, just as it would be insufficient for a visiting artist simply to do his or her work and involve the students as observers. So it was essential for me to create a work of my own on campus, as well as to facilitate the students' work.

I felt strongly that my project should be one that is shared with an audience larger than the PA community. An ideal site proved to be the triangle of land between the Memorial Gym and Route 28 just south of Cooley House — an area visible to all who drive by. And since the program's theme was seeing and signifying space, the work embodies an idea that speaks directly to the issue of spatial "articulation." Measuring and delineating space is fundamental to any notion of space, and no one's thoughts on the subject are more fundamental than those of Pythagoras.

Using 74 Golden Arborvitae, I planted a version of the classic diagram that illustrates the Pythagorean Theorem, $C^2 = A^2 + B^2$. It is a "Pythagorean Arbor." The evergreens are arranged to define three square, gridded fields adjacent to the sides of an empty triangle. The evergreens delineate the spaces to be counted, for the planting is an exercise in perceiving space: if one counts the trees instead of the spaces, the formula no longer works.

That this first Artist-in-Residence Program was able to accomplish so much in a single trimester can be attributed to the cooperation of the Addison Gallery and the PA Art Department. I extend my gratitude to all of those who have made this program a success, especially Jim Sheldon and Nicki Thiras at the Addison and the Art Department's Bob Lloyd, whose architecture students participated in the program. Bob also offered inestimable support to me during my first teaching experience. That the Artist-in-Residence Program exists at all is due to the generosity of the Elson family: Edward E. Elson '52, Charles M. El-son '77, Louis G. Elson '80 and Harry Elson II '83. I thank them for the opportunity they have created for me and my students and for future Artists-in-Residence and their students.

Gary Rieveschl '61 is an internationally recognized landscape sculptor living in West Germany. His projects can be found in many cities in the United States and West Germany, including Cincinnati, Chicago, Berlin, Bonn, Bremen, and Freiburg.

Headmaster's Symposium III

The Americas: a dialogue North and South

by Myrna I. Santiago

The winter's Headmaster's Symposium actually began in the fall when former Massachusetts Senator Paul Tsongas invited the PA community to participate in a challenging exploration of "The Americas: A Dialogue North and South." Drawing from his personal experience, he exhorted students to study the causes of conflict and unrest in the region and to question what he considered to be the narrow views and militaristic policies of the current administration.

In an effort to bring Latin America to Andover, the Symposium formally opened in the Winter Term with a series of powerful artistic images. The Addison Gallery hosted an exhibition based on the internationally acclaimed book, Inside El Salvador: Work of 30 Photographers. Concurrent with the exhibition's somber black and white photographs, the Audio-Visual Center burst with color, displaying posters, clothing, blankets, pottery, and masks from all over the continent under the title "Latin America: Conflict and Hope." A Mexican dinner at Commons followed the Gallery openings; appropriately decorated in red, blue, orange, and green pinatas and white tablecloths, the dining hall was filled with the sounds of the guitars and trumpets of Mexican mariachis. By the end of the term's first week the entire School community had experienced a variety of Latin American sights and sounds, textures and tastes, without a single hour of lecturing.

Yet more images followed as the Headmaster welcomed the 200 plus Uppers and Seniors and the 25 faculty members who made a formal commitment to eight weeks of extracurricular study. Emilio Mozo, Instructor in Spanish, introduced the theme, "The Land and the People," through his own poetry:

I am not going to give you statistics . . .
I am going to give you a clumsy dance and a sorrowful song . . .
About our land and our people,
A land of contrasts united by a common denominator:
Hunger, war and injustice.

When he finished, the audience saw the documentary film Todos Santos Cuchumatán, Report from a Guatemalan Village, a most sorrowful song about the Mam, descendants of the Mayans, whose 400-year-old culture and customs crumble under the pressure of modernity and dictatorship.

Dartmouth Professor Marysa Navarro discussing Latin American history during the Headmaster's Symposium.

The Oscar-nominated movie El Norte depicted an indigenous brother and sister escaping Guatemala in search of freedom in the United States. Contrary to the stereotypical immigrant success story, however, El Norte ends in tragedy too real to be disregarded. For many students El Norte attached faces, for the first time, to abstractions such as "refugees," "illegal aliens," "Indians," and "peasants."

Anthropologist Francisco Guerrero was the first "expert" to address the group, speaking on the topic of "Race and Culture." A Zapoteco Indian, born in Oaxaca, Mexico and educated in Oxford, Mr. Guerrero came to us from Cuernavaca, Mexico and spoke about "the three Mexicos:" the Europeanized intellectual elite, the mestizo majority, and the invisible indigena. Except for a harsh critique of the famous Mexican intellectuals Carlos Fuentes and Octavio Paz, Mr. Guerrero described a society mirroring what we had already seen on film. The indigenous people of Guatemala and Mexico share a common history and, despite the Mexican government's efforts to preserve indigenous culture and languages, both people, according to Mr. Guerrero, are destined for cultural annihilation.

The newly released British film on Nicaragua, Pasaran, shifted emphasis and struck the most optimistic note of the whole Symposium. The film's obvious support for the Nicaraguan revolution made it instantly controversial. Dormitories, dining halls, and classrooms became the settings for a polemical battle over the film's emphasis, omissions, shortcomings, and merits. The discussion had begun in full force.

The next speaker, theologian David Avalos from Princeton, heightened the debate even further, addressing himself to perhaps the most difficult issue of all: "Religion: Mystery and Justice." Making liberation theology somehow real to his audience posed a tremendous challenge that Professor Avalos surmounted not only by examining the role of religion in Latin American society through the centuries, but also by drawing analogies to incidents from our own North American history and literature.

On 8 February, poet Carolyn Forché and photographer Harry Mattison, coeditors of Inside El Salvador, transported us to El Salvador with their photographs, poetry, and accounts of their personal journey in that country and the emotive stories behind each photograph.

Two days later, a new set of images brought the cultural and political reality of America's southern neighbors closer to Andover. A third exhibition appeared at the Gallery: "Remembering the Disappeared," a show of Chilean arpilleras — small, hand-sewn quilt-like textiles — depicting scenes of fear and repression in Chile. The mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters of disappeared men make and sell the arpilleras both to support their families and tell their stories. Through such a novel form of political crafts, we were reminded that a people's history transcends scholarly books.

Professor Marysa Navarro, Chairwoman of the History Department at Dartmouth College whose field is the Southern Cone and Latin American women's history, spoke next on "Land, Class and Opportunity." Professor Navarro's was an almost impossible assignment: to condense 500 years of Latin American history into sixty minutes; she took us from the Aztecs and the Mayans to the Central American revolutions. Dividing Latin American history into three periods, "pre-Columbian civilization," "Spanish colonialism," and "U.S. imperialism," she criticized the report of the Kissinger Commission on Central America for its ahistorical approach to the region and its problems. Although critical of "U.S. imperialism," she argued that Marxist theory had little to offer in analyzing the reality of Latin America today. Professor Navarro challenged her listeners to put themselves in the places of those who endure misery and hopelessness. Emilio Mozo's poem continued to haunt us:

In the beginning there was corn
Aztecs, Mayans and Incas —
A link between people . . .

Don Quijote comes to conquer America . . .
Encomienda, repartimiento,
tributos—
An Indian in every pot . . .

But a sacrifice intended for stray travelers brings chewing gum, dollars, guns and democracy . . .
the rest is history . . .

Having borne witness to much and having read even more, everyone welcomed the Symposium's climactic conclusion: a Latin American view of the North-South dialogue and a North American view. Berkeley and Stanford graduate Arnoldo Ramos, representative of the Salvadorean Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR), quietly delineated his interpretation of events in El Salvador. He argued that three pillars of power dominated in his country: the military, the oligarchy, and the United States. After discussing the first two, he restated the willingness of the FMLN-FDR to negotiate for peace. Urging his audience to stop U.S. intervention in El Salvador, he remarked that "We, you and I, are locked in an embrace of death." He then asked a stunningly simple question: "What have we ever done to you?"

And, finally, a North American view was presented in two parts. First, the Heritage Foundation's newly released video, Central America: Before it's too late! unequivocally supported the Reagan administration's "domino theory" in Latin America. Second, the United States Ambassador to Kuwait, Anthony Quainton '51, Rhodes Scholar and former Ambassador to Nicaragua, presented his speech entitled, "Freedom, Justice, and Revolution: Implications for U.S. Policy in Latin America," which argued the administration's case. Ambassador Quainton asserted that the U.S. reacts with hostility toward nations that engage in three activities: "the export of revolution," the "militarization" of their societies, and the restriction of "political and economic freedom." Hence, he reasoned, the U.S. can oppose Nicaragua and support Chile without contradiction.

Although Ambassador Quainton's remarks concluded the formal proceedings of the 1984 Headmaster's Symposium, Nicaraguan opposition leader Arturo Cruz spoke at Andover in mid-May, citing the necessity of a non-aligned, pluralistic Nicaragua and calling for an "international consensus to do something positive to bring about a solution in my country."

The Symposium participants ended their deliberations with more questions than answers, with more informed confusion than solutions, with a pressing sense of needing to listen, to read more, to ask, "What can I do."

Myrna Santiago '78, a graduate of Princeton University, spent two years in Mexico studying family history on a Fulbright Fellowship. For the past year she has been an instructor in English, Minority Counselor, and coordinator of the Headmaster's Symposium. Next year she will be studying and working in Central America.

Books

The Andover Bulletin takes pleasure in announcing the publication of books by its graduates and its faculty. Because projected dates for publication often prove unreliable, however, we do not announce a book until we have a copy in hand. All books sent to us will be catalogued and shelved in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with the Alumni Collection.

Aspects of Reality: Reflections by Beverly Hallam, Transformations by Abbott Pattison

by Bartlett H. Hayes, Jr. '22
William A. Farnsworth Library and Art Museum, 1984

This illustrated catalogue accompanied an exhibition of the works of two artists who reside in Maine, Aspects of Reality: Reflections by Beverly Hallam, Transformations by Abbott Pattison. Shown at the William A. Farnsworth Library and Art Museum in Rockland, Maine in the fall of 1984, the exhibition was the result of the efforts of director emeritus of the Addison Gallery of American Art Bartlett Hayes. In his essay Mr. Hayes explains the rationale of juxtaposing the work of painter Beverly Hallam with that of sculptor Abbott Pattison.

Russian Refuseniks: Their Plight—Their Plea, A Rabbi's Report

by Rabbi Harry A. Roth; edited by Thayer S. Warshaw '33
KTAV Publishing House, 1984, 46 pp., paperback

The essays in this paperback booklet come from a series of High Holiday sermons by Rabbi Roth after he returned from touring the Soviet Union as an unofficial representative of the Northeast Region of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. These sermons describe his experiences and convey his reactions to meeting Jewish refuseniks.

The AMA and U.S. Health Policy Since 1940

by Frank D. Campion '39
Chicago Review Press, 1984, 603 pp., $25

This "authorized history of the AMA" chronicles a period of the radical changes in U.S. health care: the explosion in medical technology, soaring costs, and the advent of Medicare and Medicaid. The author calls our attention to the fact that one of the principals in this history is Russell B. Roth, M.D. '31.

The Cornell Manual for Lifeboatmen, Able Seamen, and Qualified Members of Engine Department

by William B. Hayler '40 (with John M. Keever and Paul M. Seiler)
Cornell Maritime Press, 1984, 165 pp., paperback, $5.50

For years the basic source book for lifeboatmen and able seamen has been the Coast Guard's CG-175. Although it is out of date and out of print, the newly published Cornell Manual takes its place. This book contains the official requirements for certificates of service for the several ratings, information about safety practices, and sample questions and answers for those trying for the lifeboatman and able seaman ratings examinations. All the authors are seasoned mariners and faculty of the California Maritime Academy.

Behind Closed Doors: A Handbook on How to Pray

by Joseph M. Champlin '47
Paulist Press, 1984, 227 pp., paperback, $7.95

This book sets forth seven general principles for good private prayer, seven techniques of praying, and exercises for people who want to put the techniques into practice. The author is a Catholic priest and vicar for Parish Life and Worship for the Diocese of Syracuse.

Model Legislation For The States: 1984-1985

by Lee Webb '59, editor (Mark Bohannon coeditor)
The Conference on Alternative State and Local Policies, 1984, 140 pp., paperback, $7.95

This book is intended to assist state officials as they grapple with new and complex problems that previously were handled by the federal government. Webb outlines innovative ways of addressing the problems of campaign financing, job creation and economic development, protection of civil rights, toxic waste, environmental protection, taxation, pay equity, and housing.

Dynamos and Virgins

by David B. Roe '65
Random House, 1984, 218 pp., $18.95

Taking its title from Henry Adams' classic, The Education of Henry Adams, this book is the personal account of a handful of people working for the Environmental Defense Fund who challenged Pacific Gas & Electric's plans to build huge centralized coal and nuclear facilities. Their arguments against building the facilities were based not upon environmental concerns, but upon economics. They use PG&E's own figures and projections to show the company how smaller, dispersed power plants and improved electricity distribution from existing plants might provide power at lower cost.

The Nd-YAG Laser in Ophthalmology: Principles and Clinical Applications of Photodisruption

by Roger F. Steinert, M.D. '69 (with Carmen A. Puliafito, M.D.)
W.B. Saunders Company, 1985, 154 pp., $43

Ophthalmology uses lasers to emit pulses of light lasting trillionths of a second, focused to a spot the size of a white blood cell, thereby creating such a strong electromagnetic field that electrons are torn from their atoms and a strong, localized pressure wave results. This process of altering an object by an extremely powerful ionizing electromagnetic field associated with light is called photodisruption.

This book is intended for the ophthalmologist who wishes to understand photodisruption and apply it therapeutically to the eye. No prior knowledge of lasers, physics, or photobiology is assumed. Section I explores the principles of photobiology and lasers in general and of photodisruption in particular. Section II is devoted to clinical applications of lasers.

The United States and Multilateral Diplomacy: A Handbook

by Richard L. Kauffman '73 (with Norman A. Graham and Michael F. Oppenheimer)
Oceana Publications, Inc., 1984, 266 pp., $17

Funded by a grant from the State Department, this handbook looks at the problems of global conferences as a principal instrument of developing country diplomacy in addressing the issues of energy, technology, industrialization, capital flows and debt, trade, raw materials, and development assistance. The authors outline a program of American preparation for and participation in these global conferences.

Encore Une Foix

by Henry L. Herbst and Hale Sturges II, Faculty
The Independent School Press, 1984, 408 pp., large paperback, $10.95

Written entirely in French, Encore Une Foix addresses itself to intermediate level students. Each of the twelve chapters begins with a story that includes vocabulary, grammatical structures and the conversational topics that the chapter develops further. The pertinent vocabulary is explained in all French definitions, through examples, or by means of illustrative cartoons. The first five chapters thoroughly review, reinforce, and expand grammatical structures learned in a first-year course, while the remaining chapters introduce and develop new material.

The President: Preacher, Teacher, Salesman: Selected Presidential Speeches, 1933-1983

by Thomas T. Lyons, editor, Faculty World Eagle, Inc., 1985, 206 pp., paperback

This volume includes 36 Presidential speeches over the last half decade.

They are divided into domestic and foreign categories. As the title suggests, there are speeches that try to inspire or exhort; others provoke thoughts and create national dialogue. Still others attempt to confront problems and promote fresh views. Brief editorial introductions and a few questions precede each speech, and hard data provides something of the speeches' historical context.

From Russia To USSR, A Narrative and Documentary History

The University of Georgia Press, 1985, 61 pp., paperback

Bruce Smith's second volume of poetry contains poems about his father's life and about the sea. He writes of "the tenuous reality of his father's life, a life of contingency — moonlighting, long-ing, and repair — where the author finds parts of himself." Smith's poems also explore the "selfless thing" that is the sea.

RETIREMENTS

Angel Rubio y Maroto

Walking into Angel Rubio's classroom is like a short visit to Spain. Refrains from Spanish songs on the blackboards and posters and maps of Hispanic countries on the walls create a Spanish ambiente. You may even hear recorded songs sung by a Mexican mariachi group, a tuna from the University of Santiago de Compostela, or a tango from Argentina. What an experience to be transported beyond our New England prep school to a culture, history, and language so different from ours! The students in Angel's classes are expected to participate, and participate they do. Initially it may be only a Spanish phrase or two; it may be preparing and producing class plays in Spanish 22; later it may be interpreting a work of Ana María Matute's or a poem by Pablo Neruda. At whatever level, each student is filled with the intricacies of the Spanish language and culture as well as the melodious Castilian that is Angel's.

Born in San Lorenzo de El Escorial in the province of Madrid, Angel studied there until he found himself in the Spanish Republic Army in 1938. At the end of the war he resumed his studies in Madrid, receiving his Título de Bachiller Universitario in 1940 and his Título del Magisterio in 1943. While at the university he also served in the Army of Franco's Spain from 1941 until 1943. After teaching in Madrid for several years, Angel left Spain in 1949 to come to the United States to improve his English and continue his study of Spanish- and Hispanic-American literature at Washington University in St. Louis. There he received his M.A. in 1952. He then continued his graduate work and teaching at Duke University and the University of North Carolina.

The next step for Angel was to St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire, where he served as one of those triple threat masters — teacher, coach, dorm master. He was at St. Paul's from 1954-1961. From St. Paul's he went to Washington College in Chestertown, Maryland. In 1965 he finally arrived at PA with his wife Cristina and daughter Cristina. To his dormitory work, coaching of tennis and soccer, as well as the classroom teaching he brought a certain Spanish enthusiasm and vigor. In all his roles Angel is always the Spanish don — the perfect gentleman.

Angel has been an active member of the Kemper Scholarship Committee since its inception. He was instrumental in the planning of coed classes at Abbot and Phillips before the two schools merged. He has organized term-long off-campus programs in Madrid and Morelia, Mexico for interested and qualified PA students, and he has been the inspiration behind the highly successful student-faculty spring vacation trips to Spain.

In 1977 Angel persuaded his friend, internationally known Nati

Mistral, to present her musical revue at Andover, and in 1983, he persuaded Jorge Luis Borges to include Phillips Academy in his tour of the United States. What an opportunity it was for faculty and students to hear and talk with this giant of twentieth-century literature during Borges' three-day stay at PA.

However, Phillips Academy has not been Angel's only interest these last twenty years. He has published four books that enhance the teaching of Spanish literature and language. He has been the president of the Bay State Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese, a founding director of the Spanish Cultural Institute of New England, a member of the Committee of Latin American Theater and of the new Spanish Theater Festival, both in Boston. He is on the board of directors of the Boston-Barcelona Sister City Association and is chairman of its student exchange program. Angel has been a reader of Advanced Placement exams and a consultant for the Spanish-speaking in Lawrence who are exploring bilingual careers.

Cristina, his wife, has always been there, complementing his efforts to bring an understanding of Spanish culture to the Andover community. Cristina has been active in his many projects, on and off the campus. Her contributions to PA's Department of Dance have been immeasurable. The Rubios' graceful and elegant dancing at the annual faculty Christmas party is a party highlight. With all that they are, Angel and Cristina have both brought their rich and fascinating culture to faculty and students.

In late April the Spanish government awarded Angel the Encomienda de la Orden de Isabel la Católica in recognition of the work he has done to further a greater understanding between the people of

Alanson P. Stevens III

Years ago I audited Al Stevens' Russian 10-20 out of a desire to learn Russian. Some time later a journalist visited my Italian 10-20 class; in her subsequent complimentary article, I recognized what had happened: the day she visited I had spontaneously used, in Italian, methodology learned in Al's Russian class!

Al's was a circuitous route to academia. After Normandy and the Battle of the Bulge, Al extended his tour of duty and went into the 82nd Airborne Division as a paratrooper; later he became solo clarinetist and

Spain and the United States. We too, on this side of the ocean, honor him. We are pleased that he is not retiring completely, but will be with us part-time next year; it is good that we do not have to say adios now, solamente gracias por todo y hasta la vista! —James H. Couch director of the Division Stage Band. At 28 he was a Dartmouth freshman with a wife and three children; Marie's tales of those years would make a diverting and inspiring novel. Four years later a fellowship took the family (now four children) to Yale, where he earned his M.A. After Yale Al taught German, overflow Latin, and a new Russian program that he began at a New Jersey high school. Why did he become a teacher? "I have always been fascinated by the possibility of influencing those 'impact' individuals who will someday be in a position to do enormous good."

Al was the language chairman and assistant principal designate in New Jersey, when Alan Blackmer, PA's Dean of Faculty, found him: our German Advanced Placement program, barely off the ground, had lost an instructor to Stanford. Al, Marie, and now five children moved to Andover where the German program soon hummed; one of Al's students won a trip to Germany and the national designation as the best student of German at the secondary level. In addition to the classroom, Al kept busy with Stimson dormitory, the Junior football team (15 years), lacrosse, baseball, "jogging and fitness," the School's Work Program, and the weekly scheduling of Uppers for Commons Duty (results guaranteed by Bob Leete and time cards!). In his spare time Al played clarinet with Bill Cliff's Jazz Band on the Hill.

From 1973-78 Al served as chairman of the Russian Department. With ingenuity and verve Al moved the Department forward: enrollment surged from the high teens to the high 60s; the Department developed an Honors sequence; students participated in the newly formed Olympiada Competition of Spoken Russian, where Andover's students took more than their share of medals. Who can forget the astonishing play put on by the students at the Log Cabin, the balalaikas from kits to performance, the Russian films? Students and visiting teachers alike clearly recognized that something extraordinary was going on in PA's Russian Department: one alumnus, a winner of the Faculty Prize, wrote Al, "I miss your ability to kindle our enthusiasm." I recall the reactions of teachers from Russia in residence at PA, as well as the impressions of visiting colleagues: "We have nothing comparable," said one; "Let me know when you have an opening," wrote the chairman of a Russian department in Texas who had visited PA. Those were the golden days: Russian culture was available both to the mind and to the palate in the Stevens home, where Marie was gracious hostess to students and colleagues.

Al — throughout his teaching career; Marie — in her many supporting roles and also in her current position in the Music Department Office — about both we may attempt an apt summary: Nihil tetigerunt quod non ornaverunt — There is nothing they have touched that they have not adorned. Heartfelt thanks, Al and Marie, from all of us you have touched at Andover.

tory programs at PA, including this summer's faculty trip to the Soviet Union. The Class of 1975 hosted a retrospective look at coeducation at PA, and English Instructor Thomas J. Regan '51 taught a class on satire.

Well ahead of the competition in the 2.2-mile Mini-Marathon was Charlie Miers '75, who won the race in 10:07. At a more leisurely pace, the Abbot Tea at Phelps House brought together both Abbot alumnae and former Abbot faculty, including Miss Alice Sweeney.

Approximately 1,100 people returned for the weekend, including William Garrigues '15 who returned for his 70th reunion. One person interrupted a business meeting in Paris to come back; several others came from West Germany, but the winner of the prize for traveling the longest distance was Tony Nahas '75, who came from Norway.

Events

Of the myriad of events on campus recently, many were distinctly international. Indeed, as Headmaster Donald McNemar commented recently, "International experiences are becoming a fundamental part of the Andover opportunity." The Headmaster's Symposium in the winter focused on Latin America. China, too, received much attention: Fox Butterfield, the New England Bureau Chief for The New York Times, spoke in May on the West's misconceptions of the People's Republic of China, and this winter, the faculty voted to establish a four-year program in the Chinese language. This will enable students to meet the PA language requirement with Chinese as well as German, Russian, Italian, Latin, Greek, Spanish, or French.

During the Christmas break 12 students in advanced Russian traveled to the Soviet Union with Russian Instructor Victor Svec. The group spent 15 days in the USSR, traveling on the Transsiberia Railroad from Moscow to Khabarovsk. This summer eighty-six faculty members and spouses will follow suit, leaving Andover on 6 July for a three-week working tour of Moscow, Tbilisi, Leningrad, Erivan, and Kiev. The Citizens' Exchange Council, a non-profit organization specializing in matching travelers to the USSR with their Soviet counterparts, is arranging the trip to include consultations with teachers at secondary schools and universities. Jack Richards, Dean of Faculty and Instructor in History and the Social Sciences, and Donald Kendall, an Andover parent with a special interest in Soviet-American relations, formulated and are effecting the plan.

Andover dominated the Ninth Annual Olympiada for Spoken Russian held in May. The competition drew students from seven New England schools. The competition was divided into two levels. Andover took 22 of the 47 medals awarded in the lower level, including 8 of 14 gold medals. In the upper division Andover swept the field: our nine competing students took 4 of 6 gold, 3 of 7 silver, and 2 bronze medals; PA students took 1st, 2nd (two PA students tied), and fourth through ninth place. Of the 117 total participating students the only students to score perfect scores were from PA. Earlier this spring each of the 25 PA students who took part in the Third Annual United States Olympiada of Written Russian won a medal. Of the 12 gold medals awarded in the upper division of this national competition, four were to PA students.

Spain was the site of the Academy Chamber Orchestra and Cantata Singers' spring vacation tour directed by the Chairman of the Music Department, William Thomas. The groups gave concerts at the University of Madrid and in Toledo, Seville, Granada, and El Escorial, following a special reception with the mayor of that city. Their tour ended with a one-day trip in Morocco.

The Arts

The fourth annual Black Arts Weekend at Andover featured jazz trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie, who gave a master class for jazz students and a concert. The weekend celebration of American black culture also featured a poetry reading by English Instructor Thylas Moss, several movies, and a dance that boasted jazz bands from PA and Andover High School.

Drama and music were particularly vital this spring. The winter Shakespeare play on the G.W. main stage was The Taming of the Shrew. Directors Kevin Heelan and Ann Harper's delightfully boisterous version of Shakespeare's battle of the sexes was set in a boxing arena in modern dress. The spring musical was Cabaret, a moving production with haunting words and music. The Drama Lab was well-utilized with six student productions there, including Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide, When the Rainbow is Enuf, and Alan Ayckbourn's Bedroom Farce. The Music Department too contributed greatly to the rich diet of cultural events available to the PA community. In fact, the spring saw eight concerts, three Senior student recitals, four faculty recitals, and four guest performances. The concerts included performances by the Academy, Chamber, and Symphony Orchestras as well as the Merrimack Valley Philharmonic, the Windsor String Quartet, and the Commonwealth Chamber Singers. In celebration of Bach's 300th birthday the Academy Orchestra and Choir joined with Exeter's musicians to perform Bach's formidable Mass in B Minor.

Students of dance — jazz, ballet, and modern — performed a delightful program with music ranging from Stravinsky and Bach to Joplin and Bowie in the annual Phillips Academy Dance Concert.

The English Department's Spring Writers Series hosted poetry readings by current PA parent Rennie McQuilkin and faculty member Bruce Smith. Thylias Moss performed her one-woman play, The Dolls, and English instructors Craig Thorn and Greg Wilkin each read from his novel-in-progress. Six students also read from their poetry.

A number of lecturers visited Andover as well. Kirk Scharfenberg, assistant managing editor of The Boston Globe, Sunday edition, discussed Reagan's social policies. PA parent Rebecca Sobel, NBC News General Manager, talked about the media's portrayal of warfare. Two professors of physics also spoke: Aaron Lemonick, physics professor and Dean of Faculty at Princeton, focused on man's relation to the cosmos, and MIT physicist Bernard Feld shared his experiences as a member of the Manhattan Project.

Faculty

A number of faculty completed five-year stints in administrative positions. Dean of Faculty John Richards returns full-time to the History and Social Sciences Department, and English Instructor Kelly Wise becomes the new Dean of Faculty. Jon Stableford, Instructor in English, replaces David Cobb as Dean of Residence; David is going on sabbatical. Victor W. Henningesen III is returning to the PA History Department and is the new Dean of Flagstaff Cluster, replacing Sylvia Thayer. After a year away with her husband, Philip Zaeder, who is on sabbatical, Sylvia will assume David Penner's responsibilities as Scheduling Officer. On 1 July Jeannie Dissette assumed the responsibilities of Dean of Admissions at PA; she was previously the Associate Dean of Admissions at the University of Pennsylvania.

Citing Vincent Pascucci's "excellence in teaching and concern for the lives of students," Georgetown University awarded him an honorary doctorate of humane letters. His honorary degree calls him "an outstanding teacher, humanist and life-long educator . . . his own untiring search and pursuit of knowledge is reflected in his continuing commitment to learning . . . A global vision has characterized his teaching and has been responsible for the rich development of the young minds entrusted to him." Vincent Pascucci is the Instructor in Classics on the John C. Phillips Foundation.

This spring Thomas T. Lyons, Instructor in History and the Social Sciences on the Independence Teaching Foundation, was awarded the New England History Teachers Association's Kidger Award for his research and writing, skill in curriculum philosophy, teaching, and service to the profession. Tom, whom Harvard University named as recipient of its "Distinguished Secondary Teaching Award" in 1966, has just completed his eighth book, The President: Preacher, Teacher, Salesman, Presidential Speeches 1933-1983. (Please see page 17.) Tom and Vinnie's students and colleagues, and all alumni congratulate them on these well-deserved honors.

The Abbot Academy Association announced grants to nine faculty members to support creative ideas, ventures, and programs that will benefit the PA community. Director of College Counseling Robin Crawford's grant will fund a consultant in adolescent psychology to critique the interviewing style of each of the four college counselors. To enlarge the scope of the fieldwork done in the Urban Studies Institute, History Instructor Susan Lloyd received a grant to establish internships tutoring and helping needy children. English Instructor Thylias Moss will use her grant to write a stage adaptation of Toni Morrison's book,

The Senior Prom in Draper Hall's refurbished dining room.

Song of Solomon. Psychology Department Chairman Jonathan Marlowe received a grant for the continuation of the Saturday night Graham House Cafe; Computer Director Lew Robbins will use his grant for faculty education and training in computers; and Kim Heelan received her grant on behalf of the Andover Day Care Center in Draper Hall. Art Instructor Stephen Wicks will use his grant to compile his own series of photo essays, and this June varsity swimming coach Loring Kinder used her grant to attend the U.S. Swimming Coaches College in Colorado Springs. Chemistry Instructor Robert Burnham received two grants: one to support a student hiking trip in New Hampshire's White Mountains before school starts in the fall, and the second for a cross-country ski trip in Vermont at the beginning of Christmas vacation.

Alumni Council

The Alumni Council, a group of eighty-four Andover and Abbot graduates who serve as liaison between the School and alumni, held its annual meeting at Andover 25-27 April. This year's topic for discussion was "The Faculty." The program began with talks by four faculty: "The Faculty: How One Grandparents' Weekend was a triple pleasure for Mrs. George LeMaitre who joined her grandchildren, triplets Jim, Ellen and Matt, daughter and sons of Connie LeMaitre '53, Director of PA's Annual Giving Fund.

Keeps Up-to-date," "Andover: the Adult Community," "The Minority Faculty Member," and "Teaching, Coaching, and Counseling: Is It Still Viable?" Groups of alumni and faculty then discussed faculty concerns and issues, including salaries and faculty life. The Council's six standing committees met and conducted business, and History Instructor Thomas Lyons spoke on "Faculty — Yesterday (1963-64), Today, Tomorrow (1995)." Discussion group leaders and committee chairs submitted reports to the president of the Alumni Council, Cynthia Eaton Bing '61, who, as a member of the Board of Trustees, conveys them to the Trustees and the Headmaster.

Grandparents' Weekend

PA held its first weekend exclusively for grandparents on 11-12 May. Well over two hundred grandparents enjoyed beautiful spring weather as they accompanied their PA grandchildren to morning classes, attended a luncheon at Commons, and heard welcoming remarks from Headmaster Donald W. McNemar, John H. Ware '37, GP '85, co-chair of the Grandparent Fund, and William Parsons '85, School President. In the afternoon grandparents watched athletic contests and several films about PA, took campus tours, and attended a reception for faculty and grandparents at the Headmaster's. In the evening visitors were treated to a student recital at Graves Hall and a Jazz Band concert in Kemper Auditorium. The School looks forward to next year's Grandparents' Weekend 10-11 May 1986.

Thought for Food

In response to the strong student interest in last fall's "Foodfright" program, Associate Dean of Residence Priscilla Bonney-Smith and Psychological Counselor Maggie Jackson hosted a conference in April to explore the problems surrounding anorexia, bulimia, body image, and dieting. Catherine Steiner-Adair, a psychologist formerly with the Graham House counseling staff and a specialist in eating disorders, provided the keynote address entitled, "Weighty Issues." Funded by a grant from the Abbot Academy Association, the conference also included five other speakers, a panel discussion, and small discussion groups.

Addison Gallery

In addition to showing selections from the Permanent Collection, this spring the Addison hosted two exhibits: one, an exhibit of photographs by nine photographers, entitled, "Traveling." The photos were of India, Cambodia, Afghanistan, Egypt, Indonesia, and Peru. The second exhibit, "Land/Space/Sculpture," presented photographs and drawings of the work of thirteen landscape artists, including that of Gary Rieveschl, who was the Artist-in-Residence at PA this spring. (Please see p. 12)

Business

The Board of Trustees has voted to increase next year's financial aid program by 18%, to over $3.2 million. This figure includes both outright grants and student loans to particularly needy students and parent loans to qualifying families with incomes of $50,000-90,000.

SPORTS

by Michael Morris, Jr. '86 and Matthew Shine '86

This spring Andover athletics once again excelled in interscholastic competition, with golf, baseball, and boys' crew having the most successful seasons. Golf had one of its best seasons ever, compiling a 16-3 record; Senior Mike Lafave and Uppers John Karcher and Jim Israel each maintained a 79 average during the season. For the first time ever the golf team beat the local powerhouse team from St. John's twice in the same season. The team's losses were to Lawrenceville, Deerfield, and Yale's J.V.

Baseball and boys' crew bounced back from average seasons last year to successful ones this year. Varsity baseball ended with a gratifying 12-6 record. Led by the great play of Seniors John Rigazio and Pat Crowley and Uppers Jeff Penner and Pete Burns, the team was seeded first in the Central New England Prep School Tournament. The team's disappointing loss early in the tournament failed to tarnish the season, for the team finished the term by soundly defeating Exeter. Boys' crew finished its season with a 6-3 record. Led by many seasoned veterans, the team rowed its way to a strong third place finish in the Interschols.

Although boys' lacrosse was not the dominating force it has been in past years, the team managed to compile a solid 8-5 record. The highlight of the lacrosse season occurred at Exeter in the fiftieth anniversary contest between the two schools. Andover scored first and maintained its lead, winning the match, 7-3.

Girls' lacrosse and girls' crew showed dramatic improvement. Lacrosse achieved a 500 percentage record this year; moreover, the girls defeated some of their toughest competition, and they look forward to an even more improved season next year. The first and second boats of the girls' crew finished fourth and fifth, respectively, in the Interschols; future seasons look bright.

Girls' tennis and girls' track enjoyed 7-3 and 6-3 seasons, respectively, each with a number of superb individual performances. The awesome mile relay squad of Seniors Mary Hill, Kim Edmonds, Ayo Heinegg, and Junior Lauren DiStefano smashed the School record by six seconds, and were undefeated during the season. Lauren DiStefano — as a junior — broke the School records in both the 200-meter and 400-meter dashes. Hill also broke her own 300-meter hurdles record. Girls' softball had a great season, finishing second in its league tournament. Nan Khayatt '85 led the way by pitching every inning.

Despite injuries that plagued key individuals, boys' track, boys' tennis, and cycling all finished the season strongly. Boys' track took third place in the Interschols, led by captain Chris Patrick '85, who performed with dedication and heart all season despite beginning the season in the infirmary with mononucleosis. Patrick captured three firsts and a second at the Interschols, and again at Exeter. Senior Peter Meyer's performance was also exceptional: at the Interschols he took one first, two seconds, and a fourth place. Running against Exeter, Meyer won three firsts and a second. Led by captain Rob Cantu '85, the boys' tennis team had a difficult schedule, but played with great intensity and enthusiasm. The cycling team met with mixed results during the season, but managed to enjoy some fine meets.

Girls' lacrosse had a fine season.

Trowbridge Elected Charter Trustee

The Board of Trustees announced at reunions that Sandy Trowbridge '42 has been elected a Charter Trustee.

Sandy's close association with Phillips Academy goes back many years. His father, A. Buel Trowbridge, was an instructor of Religion at Phillips Academy when Sandy was young. As a student at PA, Sandy was extremely involved in student activities, student government, and athletics.

Sandy graduated from Princeton University and served on active duty in the U.S. Marine Corp Reserve in the Korean Conflict. He has been involved in a number of corporations throughout his career and served as Secretary of Commerce from 1967-68. He is now the president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and lives in Washington, D.C.

Sandy has always been an ambassador for Phillips Academy and a marvelous volunteer. He has served the School in a number of volunteer capacities, most recently as an Alumni Trustee, his term having expired in June of 1983.

Alumni Athletic Contest

Set aside Sunday, 22 September, for the fall alumni athletic day. The men's soccer game against the boys' varsity starts at 2 p.m. on the boys' varsity game field. There will be a reception for all returning alumni at Cooley House after the game. Those returning to play should call coach Meredith Price at the Admissions Office (617/475-3400, Ext. 196).

The women's soccer game begins at 2 p.m. on the Old Campus field. Because it is Coach Drake's last season as the girls' soccer coach, Sherm and Dottie will hold a dinner at Quincy House beginning at 5:30 p.m. for all returning soccer alumnae. Returning players should call coach Sherm Drake (617/475-6301).

Athletic Schedules

The PA Athletic Department offers a full schedule of exciting interscholastic sports contests for both boys and girls. Combine a visit to PA with a sports contest, or, if you live in New England, perhaps one of our "away" games is near your home. If you would like us to send you a term athletic sports schedule, call or write Paul Kalkstein, Director of Athletics, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810 (617/475-3400, Ext. 190).

Subscribe to The Phillippian

Every full school week an 8- or 10-page newspaper is produced solely by Andover students. The paper contains news on every aspect of PA life. A Phillippian subscription is a fine way to keep in touch with Andover. Off-campus subscriptions are only $25 for 25 issues during the school year. Send check or money order to: The Phillippian, Attn: Subscription Department, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

The Andover Cookbook, Volume II

The Ladies Benevolent Society is preparing a companion volume to the best-selling Andover Cookbook, and we need your help. We invite

Good News from the IRS

There is good news for the 61 million taxpayers who do not itemize. This year for the first time, they will be allowed to deduct half of their charitable contributions. In 1986 non-itemizers will be able to deduct 100 percent of their contributions to charity. Unless the law is changed, however, this deduction will expire at the end of next year.

Openings in Admissions

Jim Ventre '79 and Beth Moore '80 are both completing their two-year terms as Admissions Officers this next year. The Admissions Office invites alumni/ae interested in being Admissions Officers to contact Dean Jeannie Ford Dissette by 1 January.

Study and Travel in China

As an adjunct to the PA student exchange with the Harbin Institute of Technology, plans have been made for an adult study-travel tour of the People's Republic of China during the summer of 1986. The group will be limited to 20 PA alumni, parents and friends and will involve approximately 10 days of study at HIT, followed by 20 days travel in other parts of China. If you are interested, please contact Joseph C. Mesics, Secretary of the Academy. Reservations will be determined in favor of those first expressing an interest.

Regional Association News

Regional Visits from PA

During the Winter and Spring Terms Headmaster Don McNemar, Dean of Admissions Josh Miner, and the Office of Academy Resources staff traveled to eleven cities, visiting alumni, parents, newly accepted students and their families, and friends of Phillips Academy. Don McNemar spoke about the significant activities and events of the school year, and Josh Miner, reminisced about his 33 years at the Academy as teacher, coach, counselor, and Dean of Admissions. Josh retired from PA at the end of June. Jean St. Pierre, Head of the English Department, accompanied the Andover entourage on several trips and shared vignettes of her teaching experiences with alumni and parents, weaving together disparate images from the PA classroom into a finely spun tapestry of learning at Andover.

During the mid-March vacation, the PA administration traveled south on a whirlwind tour of Florida. A series of five receptions, luncheons, and dinners were held in Palm Beach, Miami, Naples, Sarasota, Clearwater, and Orlando; the events drew over 250 participants. The School and all those who attended the various functions are most grateful to the superb organizers and congenial hosts: Emmy and Sandy Burdett '58 in Palm Beach; Dorothy and David Weaver '61 in Miami; Barbara and Bob Hattermer '49 in Naples; Fredericka and John Pitts '56 in Sarasota; Liz and David Kennedy '60 in Clearwater; and Mary and G. Kendall Sharp '53 in Orlando.

New York

Over 200 people gathered at the University Club on 25 February to pay tribute to Josh Miner at a gala dinner. Among the diners were nine PA trustees, 11 visitors from Andover, and over 180 alumni, parents, and friends of the School.

Don McNemar told us about life at the School today, which turned out to be a marvelous contrast to some of Josh's stories about his early days at Andover.

Other recent events for the New York Association were our annual reception for matriculating students on 11 June, which was a picnic in Central Park, behind the Metropolitan Museum, and our second annual Andover night at the Mets, 17 June, when the Mets took on the Cubs.

Donald L. Shapiro '53

San Francisco

On 18 March students from the San Francisco area who were newly admitted to Andover joined their families and current Andover students, parents, alumni, and friends for dessert and coffee at the beautiful home of George and Cindi Doubleday, parents of Stephen '87. The evening was a delightful opportunity for alumni to visit, for prospective PA students to ask questions — big and small — of students now attending the School. Hearty thanks go to Regional Association President Hobey Birmingham '62 and the Doubledays for organizing and hosting the event.

Boston

On 12 February, 154 alumni, parents, and friends attended a reception and dinner sponsored by the Andover/Abbot New England Association at the Boston Museum of Science. What a perfect ambience for a gathering of PA loyalists. Ably hosted by Laura MacWilliams '74, President of the Association, this event honored Josh Miner and Hilda Whyte, who retired from the PA faculty in June.

The fall promises to be eventful. Alumni near Boston should watch their mail and not miss the Boston Harbor cruise planned for early September. The Head of the Charles is 20 October, and Andover will have a tent full of refreshments and conviviality on the Boston side of the river, upstream of Anderson Bridge, across from the Ground Round Restaurant. Finally, 9 November is the Andover-Exeter varsity football game, at Exeter. The Boston Regional Association plans a picnic and touch football game just before it starts. Anyone wishing either to attend or help plan these events should call Laura Richards MacWilliams at 617/482-0333.

Merrimack Valley

The Merrimack Valley Andover/Abbot Association is happy to report an exciting second year. Our February evening program, "Beyond the Andover Curriculum," acquainted day students' parents and alumni with Kemper and Chinese students, the Washington Intern Program, School Year Abroad, and the Headmaster's Symposium.

On 4 May the Association held its first large social event: a dinner dance. After a pleasant get-together at Samaritan House, the party walked to Commons, where over 100 people enjoyed a lovely dinner. A special auction followed the dinner, thanks to the generosity of many, including Frank Stella '54, Jack Lemmon '43, Joshua Thompson '43, William Hamilton '58, Joshua Miner, Mia Kelly '83, and George Bush '42. Dancing and music by the Faculty Jazz Ensemble lasted till midnight.

The Association is proud to report that the evening's proceeds (around $2,000) will go to our newly founded book scholarship fund. The newly elected Board members for 1985-86, are:

President Suzy Joseph
Vice-President Joe Wennik '52
Secretary John Rokous '76

The Association in the nation's capitol and environs has hosted a whirlwind of events during the last four months that has left the membership highly entertained and the club treasury dead broke — or in the coin of this city, with an unwanted balanced budget.

The Club began its season by sponsoring a special session for prospective Washington area candidates for admission. The "Washington area" is a mere 10,000 square miles lying somewhere between Baltimore and Richmond, between the West Virginia border and the Eastern Shore.

On 1 April a reception was held on behalf of Josh Miner at the University Club library, where he entertained approximately 70 Andover graduates and others with his delightful discussion, "The Curious Child."

The highlight of the season was a unique gathering of alumni at a candlelight sit-down dinner at the nationally renowned gallery, The Phillips Collection. This dinner, which was held in honor of Josh and Headmaster Don McNemar, attracted over 100 people who dined beneath originals by Monet, Chardin, Renoir, Cezanne, and other esteemed artists. The evening was sparked by frequent laughter and ended with a standing ovation for Josh. The Club awarded Josh a Washington-grown cherry tree and an ax.

On 29 April, 40 hungry alumni descended on Sandy Trowbridge's National Association of Manufacturers headquarters for a phonathon and managed to squeeze $12,000 out of hard-core recalcitrants. As usual, Andover left the difficult cases for the Washington chapter who again outperformed expectations. Do I hear a round of applause?

The season ended with a high-brow, by-the-rail, tailgate affair at the Virginia Gold Cup Steeplechase. Some of the 32,000 that attended the race had also attended PA or Abbot.

Thus, it has been a busy season. The club president and loyal secretary, Carina Kjellstrom '76, have tongue burn from licking 1,200 stamps in the past several months. More of these epistles will probably follow, unwelcome 'tho' they are.

Atlanta

The full bloom of azaleas, cherry trees, and magnolias welcomed the Andover entourage to Atlanta on 3 April for an alumni/parent reception and dinner at the Commerce Club. This event, which was graciously hosted by Clem and D. Hayes Clement '54, drew 45 alumni, parents, newly admitted students, their families, and friends of PA. The occasion was a perfect start to the newly formed Andover/Abbot Association of Georgia. Hayes Clement eloquently honored Josh Miner and presented him with a lovely antique bell, which Josh added to his bell collection.

Earlier in the day, Josh gave his "Curious Child" talk to a non-Andover audience assembled at The Atlanta Historical Society. Edward E. Elson '52 had kindly arranged that event.

Philadelphia

The Association held three events, and conducted an Alumni Fund Phonathon, during the first four months of 1985. In January, about 40 friends attended a wine tasting party at the home of Wally and Valerie Phillips (PA/AA '57) and heard the wine steward of Le Bec Fin, one of Philadelphia's premier restaurants, describe six different wines, ranging from a champagne to a dessert wine. His explanations were fascinating, including information about the vineyards where the grapes were grown, the processes of making the wines, and the difference between French and American wines. Arrangements for the party were made by Sara Wedeman '74.

In March Anne and Matt Hall '63 hosted a reception for newly admitted students, their parents, and alumni at their home in Chestnut Hill.

On 1 May the Association held its annual dinner, featuring talks by Dean of Admissions Josh Miner, Headmaster Don McNemar and Jean St. Pierre, Head of the English Department. The dinner at the Merion Cricket Club in Haverford was attended by 75 persons. A short videotape made by this year's students provided a provocative view of life at Andover today.

The newly elected 1985-86 officers for the Association's council are:

President Matthew W. Hall '63
Vice-President John F. Smith III '59
Secretary Sara C. Wedeman '74
Treasurer Peter F. Marvin '63

John P. Stevens III '44

In Atlanta Josh Miner received a bell for his collection from Hayes Clement '54 as Headmaster Don McNemar looked on.

DEATHS

Sumner Smith '08

Sumner Smith died at the age of 95 on 21 April at his home in Lincoln, Massachusetts. He was the senior Academy trustee, having served successively as alumni trustee, charter trustee, and trustee emeritus from 1952 until his death.

Short in stature, economical in speech and long in friendship, Sumner was the ultimate Yankee and the epitome of the loyal alumnus.

Hundreds of his friends packed the First Parish Church in Lincoln for the Memorial Service on 26 April. There they heard his son, Sumner, Jr. '38, describe his father in fittingly succinct words. He said, in part,

Maybe an unbelievable feat of 10 years perfect attendance at school gives a clue to the kind of man we came to know. The boy who cared enough to get to school on time every day all those years became a very caring man.

He cared for his ancestors, whose graves he tended and whose histories he passed on to us.

He cared for his cows, horses, pigs and dogs — for his fields, orchards, woods and buildings, which appeared well tended, all with the good work of his hired men, especially Adam Gradeski, who was Sumner's helper for over 50 years.

He cared for his town — willing to devote many hours, not so much to meetings, which he usually kept short, but more time outside visiting various parts of town, talking with other town officials, attending to legal matters, keeping a close watch on the level of Sandy Pond and searching for a future supply of water.

His backing of zoning before it became popular, and participation in limiting commerce on Route 2, his cooperation in the development of the ball field from his best and only large flat field, and his finding a legal way to eliminate the restrictions on the DeCordova donation, all helped to make Lincoln the town it is today.

He cared for his church, serving on various boards and helping to bring about the joining of the Congregational and Unitarian Churches to form the present First Parish Church.

There's no hiding the fact that Sumner cared for money, but he knew how to handle it and not be abused by it.

Even after Sumner retired in 1970 after 43 years as chairman, he frequently inquired about what he called "The Shop," now Abington, Inc., attending directors meetings from 1920 to the present, and to whose employees over the years he brought carloads of corn, apples and peaches.

Primarily, Sumner cared for people. A few years ago he and I were at the dedication of a new dormitory at PA. When the ceremony was over, the audience was invited to inspect the rooms, which were designed on a new concept. I asked Dad if he would like to go inside. He said, "No, thanks. I want to stay here with the people."

When he finished speaking, the church filled with applause, and smiles, and the feeling that our world is indeed a better place because Sumner Smith lived with us for 95 years.

Sumner's caring for Andover was as deep as his other carings. Shortly before his death he said to his wife, Flo, "Gee I'd like to get up to Andover for one more (trustee) meeting." He didn't, but his imprint on Andover Hill is permanent. The Sumner Smith Hockey Rink and the Sumner Smith Maintenance Building reflect two of his keenest interests. His gift of the Rink, one of the very first in New England, stemmed from his love of athletics and awareness that New England winters could never provide the sustained cold needed for natural ice. His gift of the Maintenance Building bespoke both his love of the trees and grounds and a desire to provide the grounds and buildings crews of the Office of Physical Plant with decent functional space. Prior to his generous intervention, they occupied a catchall of old wooden frame buildings ill-suited to support their efforts.

Many other Andover areas felt his presence: countless Andover-Exeter contests; Trustee meetings, formal and informal, where both his occasional penetrating commentary and bits of good humor were appropriate; his inspection of trees with long-time associate Roy Keene; and his visits to many a faculty home to drop off a basket of fruit or vegetables from his personal garden; and in recent years his first-in-line position in the Alumni Parade.

Finally, no caring surpassed that for his family — his wives: Alice for 54 years and Flo for the last 12 years; his two daughters Elizabeth and Alice; his two sons Sumner, Jr. '38, and Charles W. '46 (who for nine happy years served the School well as Alumni Secretary) and 26 grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Fittingly, the Trustees concluded their formal resolution about their fellow trustee with the following thought: "Sumner was a great citizen who truly understood the word community. We were fortunate to share this community with him."

H. Malcolm Baldrige, former U. S. Congressman from Nebraska and a prominent lawyer, died on 19 January at the Luthern Home in Southbury, Connecticut.

He graduated in the class of 1918 from Yale University, where in 1916 he was tackle on one of the college's most famous football teams. He was captain of the Yale wrestling team and undefeated intercollegiate heavyweight wrestling champion.

He served overseas in both World Wars, as a captain in the Field Artillery in France in World War I, and as an Air Force colonel in the Italian Theatre of Operations in World War II, for which he was awarded the Bronze Star and the Legion of Merit by the U.S., and was decorated by three other countries.

He joined his father's law firm in Omaha after graduating from the University of Nebraska Law School in 1921, where he was also head coach of the University's football team. He served in the Nebraska State Legislature from 1925 to 1926, and then served as Assistant County Attorney in Omaha. From 1930 to 1932 he was a member of the U. S. House of Representatives from Nebraska. An Army reservist, he was recalled to active duty in Washington in 1938 to assist General Lewis Hershey with the passage of the Burke Wadsworth draft bill. He was Executive Director of the Republican National Finance Committee and served as General Counsel for the U.S. Cane Sugar Refiners Association in Washington.

Mr. Baldrige's wife, the former Regina Connell, died in 1967. He is survived by two sons, Malcolm Baldrige, who is Secretary of Commerce; Robert Baldrige of Lawrence, NY, and by a daughter, Letitia Baldrige Hollensteiner, of New York City. He is also survived by six grandchildren and by five great-grandchildren.

1915 George P. Murdock, Devon, PA; 31 March 1985

Professor Murdock wrote extensively. From 1934 to 1967 he published eight books, and after his 80th birthday, he published Theories of Illness: A World Survey and Atlas of World Cultures, which went into its second printing in 1981.

He was awarded the Viking Fund Medal for his work in anthropology in 1949, the Herbert E. Gregory Medal in 1966, and the Thomas H. Huxley medal in 1971. He was elected to the American Academy of Arts & Sciences and served as president of the society of Applied Anthropology in 1947, the American Ethnological Society in 1952-1953 and the American Anthropological Association in 1955.

John H. Painter, Summerfield, NC; 10 February 1985

1916 Gilbert H. Hood, Jr., Winchester, MA; 24 March 1985.

Gilbert Hood, who began his career with his family's dairy company, H. P. Hood, Inc., as a milkman in 1922 with a delivery route in Salem, retired 57 years later as chairman of the board.

After Andover he graduated from Harvard with an A.B. in 1920, and from the Harvard Business School in 1922. He served as a second lieutenant in the Army during World War II.

Mr. Hood's educational, community, civic service and business involvements were numerous: A resident of Winchester since 1941, he served on the Winchester Hospital's Board of Trustees since 1948 and was one of only three people who were elected life members of the board. In recognition of his service and generosity to the Winchester Hospital, a wing was named after him. He served as President of the Boston Chamber of Commerce during the mid-1960s where he urged the Boston School Committee to improve educational opportunities for minorities.

Mr. Hood's interest in youth and education lead to his long service with the Boston Museum of Science. He was elected to the Corporation in 1961 and served as trustee from 1970 on; he was elected a life trustee in 1970.

Wheaton College elected him trustee in 1956, and he also served on the College's finance committee. He was a major figure on the school's Building and Grounds Committee.

He was past president and director emeritus of the New England Council; the Greater Boston Y.M.C.A.; trustee of the Boston Hospital for Women; director of the Boston Municipal Research Bureau and trustee of the Andover-Newton Theological School. His directorships include the Fidelity Funds Group, the Loomis Sayles Capital Fund, the Derry, NH Bank and Trust Co. He was a member of the Boston Rotary, the Harvard Club, the Eastern Yacht Club, the Union Club, the Winchester Country Club and the Royal Poinciana Club of Naples, FL.

Mr. Hood was Class Secretary from 1974 up until his death and also served as an Alumni Trustee and as Alumni Council President; he joined the Bicentennial Steering Committee in 1974.

His wife, Margaret Allan Hood, predeceased him in 1984. Two daughters, Emily C. Hood and Elizabeth Hood Wilson and three grandchildren survive him.

1917 James M. R. Glaser, Pebble Beach, CA; 25 February 1985

1918 Henry J. Kaltenbach, Haverford, PA; 8 April 1985.

At the time that he served as general counsel for the Federal Bureau of Roads, Mr. Kaltenbach, through his expertise in eminent domain law and in condemnation procedure, was instrumental in drafting the legislation which led to the Interstate Highway Act of 1956. From this legislation came funding that led to the nation's biggest burst of construction, the building of the interstate system of highways.

In 1922 he was graduated from Princeton University and earned his law degree at Harvard University in 1925. He practiced law in the Mid-west, New York, Missouri, where he re-wrote the Missouri corporation code, and Washington, DC. He served as Class Secretary until his illness prevented him from carrying out that job. He is survived by his wife, Laura Dean Kaltenbach; a son, Jack; a granddaughter; three stepchildren, and a sister.

William E. Stevenson, Ft. Myers, FL; 2 April 1985.

Mr. Stevenson went on to Oxford University's Balliol College as a Rhodes Scholar after his graduation from Princeton in 1922, where he received the degrees of jurisprudence and master of arts in 1925.

As a Rhodes Scholar and athlete, Mr. Stevenson competed against and came to know Harold Abrahams, president of the Cambridge University track team, and Eric Liddell, both subjects of the 1981 Academy Award-winning film, Chariots of Fire. He was the American Champion in 1921 and the British Champion in 1923 of the 440 yard run and in 1924 he won a gold medal as a member of the 1600-meter relay team that set a world's record in the Olympic Games in Paris.

Mr. Stevenson was elected president of Oberlin College in 1946, and held that position until 1959. During his tenure at Oberlin he was selected as a member of the President's Commission on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services; and was an educational consultant to Japan, India, Lebanon and Egypt for the US State Department; he was a chairman of the National Fulbright Selection Committee. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson were awarded the Alumni Medal for distinguished service to Oberlin College.

In 1959, he was appointed US Ambassador to the Philippines and from 1967 to 1970 he was president of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies; vice chairman of the governors of the American Red Cross and of the League of Red Cross Societies, and director and vice president of the Adlai Stevenson Institute of International Affairs.

During World War II he and his wife, Eleanor, became internationally known for their achievements in organizing and administering the activities of the American Red Cross in Great Britain and on the fighting front in Africa and Italy. Both were awarded the Army's Bronze Star for meritorious service.

He was a charter trustee of Phillips Academy from 1943-1952.

Mr. Stevenson leaves his widow, the former Eleanor Bumstead; two daughters, Priscilla Stevenson Hunt of Cambridge, Mass., and Helen Stevenson Meyner of Princeton, N.J., and three grandchildren.

1919 Richard P. Breed, Swampscott, MA; 6 April 1985 (see class notes)

Dwight P. Colburn, Sharon, MA; 25 March 1985 (see class notes)

Dwight Pettee Colburn was descended from a long line of Andover graduates beginning with his uncle, George Pettee in 1882, his grandfather, brother, uncles and many cousins.

After graduating from Yale University, he earned a Master's of Business Administration degree from Harvard in 1925 and graduated from Suffolk Law School in 1932. He started his business career at the Bird & Son Inc. roofing company in Walpole, Mass. He then worked his way up the ranks at the Sharon Cooperative Bank, located across the street from where his parents ran their general store, serving as bank president from 1950 to 1968. During World War II he served in the Pacific, retiring as a Commander, and was a Naval Reserve Officer from 1942 to 1962.

He is survived by his wife, the former Priscilla Dolloff; 17 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren.

Thomas W. Durant, Santa Monica, CA; 7 December 1984 (see class notes)

Known as "The Galloping Grandfather of the Grand Nationals," Thomas ("Tim") Durant first entered the prestigious Grand National Steeplechase at Aintree, England, in 1966 at the age of 66, and in 1968 he finished 15th out of 47 starters. . . . "he fell off his Highlandie at the dreaded Becher's Brook, but he hung onto his reins and a cop picked up the slim old gent and threw him back into the saddle . . . it is unlikely that any other 68-year-old rider ever will finish a Grand National" wrote Charles W. Kellogg in an article published 1972. In his career he rode in England, Ireland, Denmark, Australia and Sweden.

In 1974, at the age of 75, he became the oldest rider in the United States to ever win a nationally sanctioned steeplechase (the Del Monte Gold Cup at Pebble Beach, Calif., 3½ miles, 19 fences).

Mr. Durant, a Yale graduate, was a former stockbroker; a member of the New York Stock Exchange and a partner in E. F. Hutton & Co. After making his home in Hollywood, Mr. Durant was for years the U.S. representative for Charlie Chaplin, United Artists Corp. He was active in the Beverly Hills Presbyterian Church, as an Elder and a Sunday School teacher. He also devoted many hours of his time to the American Cancer Society. In December of 1981 he finally lost his leg to the cancerous condition he had had since the first year he rode in the Grand National in 1966.

He leaves a daughter, Marjorie Dye, and five grandchildren.

Jules Gregory, Lambertville, NJ; 13 March 1985 (see class notes)

"Jules was the son of an architect and I think he always intended to be an architect. He went to Cornell and later worked for some of the larger offices in New York. He and I drew side by side in the office of Harrison and Abramovitz in the late forties. He went on to his own practice, first in Lambertville and then in Princeton, NJ which he called Uniplan, concentrating most of his work, which was distinguished by precision, craftsmanship and imagination, in the numerous communities in the surrounding countryside.

Jules was active in the American Institute of Architects since the early years of his practice. He held several state and national offices and was a national vice president of the Institute in the early seventies. He and I shared an interest in urban design and I interested him in the RUDAT (Regional/Urban Design Assistance Teams) program which I was then heading. He became involved in the program and served as chairman of a number of teams in various parts of the country.

During the fifties Jules won a Fulbright and he and his wife, Nancy, went to France where he studied under the leading modern architects. His work was recognized in several awards, the most prestigious being the Kemper Award which he received shortly before his death. He was a Fellow of the AIA.

He and Nancy lived in a charming modern home he designed in the rolling wooded landscape near Lambertville, NJ. He took little time off from his work. He had an enthusiastic nature, full of humor and optimism, and he seemed to have an endless supply of friendliness and generosity.

Jules leaves his wife and two daughters, Kathe and Nicole, and a vast number of friends and admirers throughout the country."

As far as I know all seven survivors of 1910 still survive. It is hard to be sure. An Englishman in our age group used to read the obits in the London Times each morning. If his name was not mentioned he assumed he was still living.

Here is your historical note on 1910 for this issue of the Bulletin. In our senior year there was much excitement over the scheduled appearance of Halley's Comet which visits our planet at some 75 year intervals. At the time it was widely rumored that this time it would hit our planet with a loud bang and that would be the end of the world. On the night of its arrival we all stayed up all night and every roof top was crowded with students.

The following morning we found that the world was still with us. As nobody had studied that night, we all flunked everything the next day much to the ire of our teachers. They reminded us in no uncertain terms that while comets might come and comets might go, homework was supposed to go on forever.

Happy, happy days when there was nothing to fear but comets.

It was good to hear from several classmates! John M. Erving from Hartford, Connecticut writes: "We hated to miss my 70th reunion last June, but out-of-state visitors prevented it. Maybe we'll make the next big one, although Ruth and I are each pushing 90 years of age as well as 64 years of happy married life and are still in reasonably good health. It would be very interesting to learn just how many from our class of 1914 are still in this land of the living. Our best to all."

And from Corydon P. Purdy: "Things seem to go on just the same year after year. I am 89 now and all alone. My wife died in '77. I still get around, drive my car, and can read without glasses. However, I stay close to home most of the time." Corydon lives in Franklin, North Carolina.

The Alumni Office at PA has forwarded to me a note written by Mrs. Frank S. Timberlake, widow of Edward J. Winters. She writes that she had accompanied her late husband to several Class Reunions and that they were close friends of Raymond Snell as well as Mac Baldridge, Tom St. Hill and Bob Daly. "I am sad to hear that Mac has just died; he was Eddie's closest friend from Andover days as we lived in Washington, Conn. where Mac also lived."

She asks us to "please forgive the enclosed 'ramble' about Eddie," but we think it is quite interesting, so have included parts of her remarks. "I always loved hearing about how Eddie got to Andover! He came from a very simple (poor) background in Holyoke. He was president of the Boys Club in Holyoke and a man named Carl Hamilton came and spoke to the club (apparently he was a graduate of PA) and asked Eddie if he would like to go away to school — to Andover — and Eddie being pretty smart and anxious to 'go places' said yes. Mr. Hamilton made it possible for Eddie to have a partial scholarship and to work his way through Andover for the balance of the tuition. So Eddie, who was working in the paper mill in Holyoke, saved up, bought a new suit that he considered very special, packed his bag and ran away from home, as he was afraid his mother, who was a nurse, wouldn't let him go (his father had 'evaporated'). When he got to Andover he was a bit chagrined as he was told his new suit 'had too many buttons — get rid of it!'"

"Eddie turned out to be a very successful man, well loved by all who knew him. (He also worked his way through Yale and graduated with the class of 1917.)" Thank you for your story of how drive and determination, and a bit of luck contributed to a very fulfilling life.

On 3 April Hayes Clement '54 hosted a dinner in honor of Josh Miner, retiring Dean of Admissions, and his wife, Phebe. Also in attendance were Headmaster and Mrs. Donald McNemar; Joe and Sandi Mesics, Secretary of the Academy; and Denis Tippe, director of Alumni and Parent Affairs. There were about 40 present, and it was delightful from beginning to end.

Old Guard and the Class of '20.

There were three members of the Elsas family from the classes of 1914, 1928, 1954 and a cousin of Mimi Elsas of the class of 1979.

Josh Miner gave a talk at the Atlanta Historical Society which was enthusiastically appreciated.

The latest report from the Alumni Fund shows that on a percentage basis, our class is behind! Won't some of you fellows, who read this, break out a checkbook if you haven't already done so, and help out on our percentage and also in the needs of a great school?

All of us surviving members of the Class of '14 are bound to remember Mac Baldridge who died on 19 January 1985. I suggest that you read the obituary preceding Class Notes as he was quite an accomplished individual, and a great guy! The class extends its sympathy to the surviving members of his family.

Mert Perry is a Class Secretary's dream, coming up frequently with interesting copy. Here is a poem of his which epitomizes problems common to many of us:

Just a line to say I'm living
That I'm not among the dead,
Though I'm getting forgetful
And more mixed up in my head.

Sometimes I can't remember
When I stand at the foot of the stair
If I must go up for something
Or if I've just come from there.

And before the fridge so often
My poor mind is filled with doubt:
Have I just put the food away, or
Have I come to take some out?

There are times when it is dark out
And with my nightcap on my head,
I don't know if I'm retiring
Or just getting out of bed.

So if it's my turn to write you,
There's no need of getting sore.
I may think that I wrote you
And don't want to be a bore.

Here I stand beside the mail box,
And, boy, is my face red!
I meant to mail you my letter,
But I've opened it instead!

1957 Nancy Ruhlén Skala, Voorheesville, NY; 6 January 1985.

"It is with great sadness that I inform you of the death of my wife, Nancy Ruhlén Skala '57. She passed away during a dialysis treatment on January 6 after a long struggle with the complications of diabetes. Her courage is an inspiration to all whose lives she touched, and I am grateful for being able to have shared a part of her life. . . . Sincerely, . . . George Skala."

The Alumni Office received this letter with regret on 17 January 1985. Mrs. Skala was featured in an article in the Andover Bulletin in November, 1981, entitled, "Don't open doors for me!" In it she spoke of her blindness: "Blindness is my middle-age crisis. I'm grateful I had my sight at Abbot and at the University of Maine, and was able to teach school so long before losing it. . . . Handicapped? Yes I am, but it's my theory that everyone is handicapped to some degree. Every one of us has something we can't do that we wish we could; maybe it's making good music or making a quilt. Blindness is just a further place on the spectrum. How about a multiple amputee? Now, there's real handicap!"

Mrs. Skala was born in Iowa City, Iowa, and was raised in Maine. She moved to Voorheesville in 1963, where she became a first grade teacher at Voorheesville Elementary School. She left full-time teaching in 1978 due to her blindness, but continued to teach two days a week in the science program until April of 1984.

Survivors include her husband, George F. Skala; a son, Galen Plummer of Voorheesville; five step-sons, her mother, a brother, and three granddaughters.

As of last December, Whitney Smith wrote: "We sold our home of 3½ years and moved to a condominium called Milldam Square, which was recently developed by rebuilding an abandoned private high school into 56 apartments. We are on the ground floor with patio. What a chore to dispose of half of one's possessions! Now to Tucson for the winter." Charles H. (Pete) Jones writes: "Going along busily, having lost my dear wife in May '84. May all go well for you and Andover. I don't do much driving off the Cape, especially at night." Our heartfelt condolences to Pete on his loss. Tom Green writes: "Our only news is that we almost got caught leaving our house, and its heap of so-called treasures, for an apartment in the 'fine, new retirement home' just set up here — but we concluded that it wasn't for us; so, no news!"

Joe Chatman would have liked to reunite with the Old Guard this June, but continues to be frustrated by the perennial conflict with the same ceremonies at Williams, where he is heavily involved. However, this summer he plans to be back in Kennebunkport, where he is a neighbor and long-time friend of George Bush's (PA '42).

A number of our class have had interesting careers, but one of the most fascinating was that of Tim Durant's who died 7 December 1984. Tim came to PA from Hotchkiss, where he did not feel at home, for his senior year at Andover where he did. At that stage of his life, his athletic interest was mainly baseball; summers he played semi-pro ball in Meredith, NH. He was also on the PA basketball team. Going on to Yale, he graduated in 1923, after which he went to Wall Street. Now, quoting from the Los Angeles Times: "In 1929 he married Adelaide Hutton, daughter of the legendary Marjorie Merriweather Post, in a ceremony that was heralded as one of the most elaborate ever to take place in New York city. Mrs. Post's husband, E.F. Hutton, presented Durant with a seat on the N. Y. Stock Exchange, and the couple's pictures and names were constantly in the social columns."

"They had one daughter, Marjorie Post Durant Dye, a long-time resident of Santa Monica. His marriage ended in divorce in 1935. Hurt financially by the Wall Street crash, Tim headed West and became immediately involved in the movie colony of the '30s and '40s. He was intimately associated, both personally and in business with Charlie Chaplin and was much in demand as an escort to such Hollywood stars as Marlene Dietrich, Greta Garbo, Joan Fontaine and Rosalind Russell. He appeared in several motion pictures made by his long-time friend, John Huston. For many years in the East he was Master of the Smithtown Hunt and in California became Master of the West Hills Hunt. He followed the circuit of fox hunting and steeplechasing all over the world, and in 1965 decided to go for his 'Impossible Dream' and ride in the Grand National in England, often called the most gruelling race in the world. Despite his advanced age and diagnosis of bone cancer, he managed to convince the stewards that he was fit and able to compete with riders mostly in their twenties and many who were professional. He rode in 1966 and 1967, and in 1968 became the oldest man ever to ride and finish the Grand National, coming in 15th out of a field of 47. The English papers dubbed him the 'Gallopings Granddad.' [Wherever I went in Great Britain, every one knew him; he was a real folk hero there.] He continued to ride and win steeplechases until the age of 75, at the same time traveling the lecture circuit.

He is survived by his daughter and five grandchildren, Post, Tim, Wendy, John and Nedenia Dye." For the above, I am grateful to his secretary of 18 years and Executor, Dorothy Castro. To add to the above: His lectures in the East included Andover (twice — one of them to the whole student body), Holderness (where he spent several days and made a warm impression), Hotchkiss (he found the school of today much more congenial than as a student), and University of New Hampshire. He attended our 50th reunion and, had circumstances permitted, would have returned more often, since he had a great fondness for PA and was a regular contributor to the Alumni Fund. He made two visits to us here in Durham, and we talked on the phone from time to time. He told me about another facet in his career as it came to a close. He went to church and found himself sitting next to Greer Garson, who exclaimed, "Why, Tim Durant, what are you doing here?" He became a devout Presbyterian and a lay preacher. Those who have heard his lectures know that his congregations had a real treat. Tim was a treasured friend, outgoing, courageous and charismatic and he will be missed by many.

Dwight Colburn, a regular attendant at our reunions, died last 28 March. He was with us for his senior year and went on to Yale, where he graduated in 1923. His career started with Bird & Son, but in 1939 turned to banking with the Sharon Cooperative Bank, where he wound up as President. He was also on the executive committee of the Norfolk Country Trust Co. In World War II, he served in the Navy in the South Pacific and was in the Naval Reserve afterward, retiring in 1962 as Commander. In 1968 he went to Korea as Comptroller of the Presbyterian Hospital in Taegu and served with distinction for two years. Dwight had an M.B.A. degree from Harvard, a law degree, and later an honorary doctorate from Suffolk University, where he served as council for the Alumni Association and on the Advisory Council for the college of Business Administration. His honors were many — Town Moderator, Trustee and Treasurer of Norwood Hospital, Rotary Club President, Deacon & Treasurer of Sharon's First Congregational Church, Chairman of Sharon's Library Board, Finance Committee, and Selectman, to name some. With all his accomplishments, Dwight was a modest person and well beloved by many. His wife, Priscilla, who was with him at our recent reunions, lives at 2 Pleasant St., Sharon, MA 02067; he also leaves 17 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren.

Richard P. Breed died 6 April. Following PA he went to Yale and graduated in 1923. He became a partner in the Farquhar & Black Insurance Agency in Lynn, MA, with whom he was associated until his retirement 15 years ago. He was on the Board of Managers of Lynn Hospital, Treasurer of the Boys Club of Lynn, Director of Essex County Bank and Lynn Five Cents Savings Bank. He was a Rotarian and belonged to Tedesco Country Club and Eastern Yacht Club. His first wife, Editha, died in 1963 and he is survived by his wife, Hazel, who lives at 135 Phillips Ave., Swampscott, MA. He also leaves a son and daughter, 6 grandchildren and 6 great-grandchildren.

Peter Nicola, in a nice, newsy letter this winter, says he is still practicing his profession of Petroleum Geologist, in Michigan, where he lives. He and his wife, Mary, travel extensively, having been to Nepal and India in recent years. Mary had a hip operation last year, but they hope she will be well enough to attend our reunion next year. (I hope so, too.)

Bunk Hatch, in answer to a card of mine, says he is still active in Stamford, CT, running some pension funds and estates.

Not being the best correspondent, Ted Booth had his wife, Alice, report to me about their visit to New York this past winter, "doing" the museums, and loving them. This April, they plan to be in England, to be chauffeured through Yorkshire, where Ted's forebears originated. Got a fast reply to my card from Harold Hudner, who was most complimentary about our previous, late Class Sec., Kemp Clark. (With which I heartily agree.) Last year, Harold visited the Holy Land, being thrilled by it. He is looking forward to our 65th reunion next year.

Len Draper, answering a card of mine, sent me a fine, friendly letter. He is back in his home town of Duluth, Minnesota after 53 years in the insurance business in Chicago. Apparently, he is still athletic, swimming a couple of hundred yards daily at the Y pool. He is also very interested in the local Railroad Museum. Very nice to hear from him after all these years.

A very recent notice from the Yale alumni office tells of the sad death of Bill Serat in March in Tucson. Bill had been in failing health for a number of years. His wife, Sara, died in 1969. There were no children. The Alumni Office had just recently informed me of the death of Frederick Lane of New Haven, CT on 6 August 1981. We have no further details other than his sister, Mrs. Veda Richardson of Nashua, New Hampshire survives him.

I took a trip to England last May with my sister, Faith Williams Bisson '19. We had two weeks in Oxford with her son Thomas Bisson, a professor at the University of California at Berkeley who was on a year's Fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford. After our Oxford visit I toured for an additional week on a Glenton Bus Tour of Devon and Cornwall.

In July I had three weeks in Maine with my daughter Ann Hunt and family, then in August a week with my son Robert Cochran, M.D. and family on Squam Lake, N.H.

I heard from Edith Page Bennett recently who reports she is still kicking, still full of projects, and yes, even learning. She keeps fit with half hour stretching exercises and daily walks. She has landscaped and donated a Japanese Garden for the Norwell Library in memory of her husband, William C. Bennett, a former Trustee of the Library. She also has been studying Gaelic in preparation for a trip. Edith has two sons and four grandchildren.

Some of the replies for the mid-winter Bulletin came in too late, so I will begin with one from Juliet Haskell Carrington. She had a cataract removed from her left eye and a lens implant has proved very successful, although conjunctivitis has limited her reading and driving. Her traveling is limited to visiting her children and their families in DeKalb, IL and Wayne, PA. As her vision improves she enjoys bridge three times a week and reads as much as she can.

Marian Rugg Caywood reports that she is "Feeling fine for an old girl!" Her only child, Abby, and two grandchildren live far away on the northwest coast but frequent phoning keeps them in touch.

Ruth Hill English spent some time in Sarasota, FL early in the year and met cousins of mine that are acquainted with her hostess. Now she is luxuriating in a beautiful Philadelphia spring, busy as ever. Ruth's older daughter's husband died suddenly from lung cancer, and their house burned! Recovering from these tragedies, she has gone to college to earn a B.A. degree! Ruth is certainly justified to be proud of such courage and stamina.

Imagine how nice it was to answer my phone last week and find Barbie Goss on the line. She is well and very active. In July and August she will be on vacation in Vermont. She is interested in a mini-reunion.

Clyde and Betty Ohnemus Hicks celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary last 27 October with a cruise to Nassau. Their date happened to fall on the captain's cocktail party so it was truly glamorous! Before they left for Florida forty of their neighbors in Brewster, MA gave them a surprise dinner party in Dennis Port with all the trimmings. Many more happy years to you both!

In Millicent Bartlett Holmberg's note she reported no "special news" then goes on to tell of a three-week vacation on a buying trip to Arizona and New Mexico! Her shop must require some interesting trips.

C.P. Damon Mason wishes she could send some earth shattering news but asks "How much swinging can you do at 81?" She is blessed with excellent health and keeps busy with bridge, scrabble, church work and lots of reading. She's also a baseball fan. It does not sound dull to me. There are no other 22ers nearby but she does see the Thompson twins, class of '21. Her big news is that she has two great-granddaughters that, of course, are beautiful.

Dated 29 April, Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews' card told of just returning from two weeks in Bay Head, NJ with daughter Margot after preparing the house for the summer. Another great-grandchild is on the way in Denver. She hopes to get up this way again and will try to see me again. Hooray!

Jimmy Burr Sanders has moved again and is now at 339 Gifford St. Falmouth, MA 02540. If the mini-reunion several of us have talked about becomes a fact, I hope the girls living or summering in Mass., lower NH and Maine could get together for lunch. Mid-Sept. is suggested and a few years ago we met at the Towne Lyne House on Route 1 in Lynnfield. Would you please let me know how the idea strikes you? I'd like to see such events occurring in many areas. How about it?

I am sorry to tell you that I received a card from Florence Phillips Cooke's husband reporting that she died last 20 December. It was sudden and she did not suffer or know she was going. I know that you all extend your sympathy to Ted with mine.

I am sure that you all remember Mary Elizabeth Rudd '23 who roomed with Ohnemus, Laura Beggs and Alex Wilkins. After being in the hospital and a nursing home for two years, she died on 7 December 1984. So much sad news. Love to you all — Olivia Cheers! A better response to pleas yielded news of our classmates. Eliot Clemons says that he is disgustingly healthy, walks 18 holes of golf daily. Dick Hodges lost his wife, Barbara, in January of 1984 and finds it tough getting along. Many of us understand this, Dick. Our hearts are with you. Earl Merrill and wife are still going strong with only minor "old age problems." They visited relations and friends in Calif. in June '84, and National Parks and Monuments of Utah and Arizona later. He is happy that Amherst won the "Little Three Title" in football in '84.

Alec Gordon hopes to be in Tucson on 20 May to attend the wedding of Laura, the eldest daughter of his son's second wife. My hope is that he can locate me at my new home. I shall report our reunion in the next Bulletin. On a trip to India in Jan-Feb of '85, Wentworth Brown was surprised to find an essentially democratic government functioning. Previous visit was in 1929. Then progress was evident but slow. Went finds his decision to retire in NYC was excellent.

Bill Ellison goes to his office each day but Friday. But he relaxed a few weeks in Ocean Reef, FL. Now he is preparing for the season of boating and golfing. Howard Moody may have the best sense of humor in the class. His card says: "Nothing new. Got out of job of secretary to the Old Men's Club (otherwise called Country Squires of New London, Inc.). They didn't fire me, but I think they were glad to see me go. Red Cross and Library Friends still haven't learned how to get rid of me. The St—e [sic] Library Friends group offers a bit of a challenge: I'm Treasurer; my bank balance (except for a special reserve) totals somewhat less than $1,000; we are about to have an 'Annual Meeting' at one of our better New Hampshire watering holes. Some 100 people at a cost of $10.00 per head. My next communication may be from State Prison." Mates, do write him there.

Winkie Newman, in his letter about the late Al Buttrick (see below), told about meeting my great-nephew, Eric Gazin '87, on the bus to Boston. Winkie was very complimentary about Eric, and I shall forward his praises to the proud parents. Winkie meets Leo Daley now and then. Thus I learned that both Leo and Winkie have new hips. The later writes, "What wonderful things they are!" Like most of us, Winkie, to be 80 in August, would like to correct the failure of Ponce de Leon and find that elusive fountain of youth. Winkie, with your cheerful, warm, philosophical nature, you have that precious water in your canteen.

From several sources, including Allan,

Jr., Winkie, Leo, Bill Ellison, and the class Agent for PA '24, I learned (too late for the last issue) of the death of the popular classmate, Allan W. Buttrick, Sr. I had a very nice letter from Allan, Jr. to whom I expressed the sympathy of the class. Allan, Sr. and Allan, Jr. were not just father and son, they were very close friends. Allan, Sr. formerly lived in Andover, but resided in Ridgefield, CT for the last 20 years. Al was active in volunteer work for Danbury Hospital, in which he died on 29 January 1985. In addition to Andover, he was graduated from the Philadelphia College of Textiles and Science. He was a textile engineer for J. P. Stevens Corp. His sister Martha, Abbot '23, married Irving E. Rogers PA '21, now deceased, who was a publisher of the Lawrence Eagle Tribune and the Andover Townsman. Al left another sister, Mrs. Ronald Livezey of Andover and three grandchildren. To Allan's family for the Class of 1923 your Secretary expresses the deepest sympathy. All of us have lost a great gentleman and dear friend.

It is with regret that I report the death of Emanuel M. Weil on 4 December 1984. Unfortunately we know only that he lived in Albany, NY. We have learned of no survivors. If readers have information about the life and career of Emanuel, please write to me or Phillips Academy.

We also regret to report the passing of another classmate, Gordon R. Weaver of Charlotte, N.C. on 10 November 1984. Gordon was a former self-employed accountant and marketing and tax consultant, who graduated from Yale with a Ph.B. (bachelor of philosophy) in 1928. His wife, Jessie, died in 1967. He is survived by two children, Alan Weaver and Nancy Weaver Johnson to whom we extend our sympathy.

The Larsens' 2800 mile trip home from Arizona had to be accomplished in six days with only two visits to classmates: My Yale roommate Dick Vaughan and wife in Albuquerque and Bob and Sissy Wood in Decatur, IL. Dick's wife, Adele, thinks coach Vaughan is "one popular guy" after she finished writing 32 thank-you notes for all the flowers and cards received while he was hospitalized. Bunny and I were glad we were all able to go out to dinner together. He seemed fine!

Jan, Louie Rugee's widow, we had hoped to see in Arizona but she says maybe next year. She was surprised to hear Bob Wood was busy enough to require an office added to his home in AZ. His former office was the laundry. At least he could launder all his money. Jan's grandson worked at our restaurant and she reports he bought himself a snappy car with his earnings.

Jack Barss, our honorary class member, was sorry to hear of Carl Sandberg's (PA '26) death. Jack had many footballers in his 4 o'clock class. He thinks, as he was a new teacher, they thought they could rest in his class after practice. Said he seldom woke anyone up.

Too bad Bill Viles sold his Rolls Royce. We were hoping he and Elsie would visit us again and park it in front of our house. He reports selling it as he couldn't get decent service. He wondered what my 1923 Rolls (green roadster with rumble seat) would be worth today. Classmate John Holt had two of them. "Get up here soon," writes Bill in Augusta, ME.

In Portland, ME, Dick Bolster wrote to say he's married again as Betty died several years ago. We hope to meet Barbara sometime, Dick. It was good to see you at our 60th.

Bob Clark still plays golf whenever the weather permits and Esther has her Jazzercise classes. Our neighbor from Ft. Collins sends greetings to the Clarks. They live in Dick Knight's house in Green Valley.

Dick Knight will move into his retirement home in North Hill, Needham, MA the end of May. Dick, in his letter, listed all the advantages of a bad memory: two of which are, you can't be a good liar, and you can't tell a long story. It was Dick who introduced us to Green Valley. Jack Basham replied to my query of why he moved from New Preston: no more T.V. dinners, no grass to cut or snow to shovel and no 2½ mile walk to get his New York Times. So how do you get your exercise, Jack?

I sent Bud Mordock a catalog of small furniture for the miniature houses he has in Ft. Lauderdale. Bud and Nancy had two granddaughters with them for two weeks and say they survived. "In Ft. Lauderdale" Bud says "a red light means don't stop, or step on it. . . With 300,000 drunken students under a six week period, its your life if you go out."

Bill Jones sent a card with "Hobo Marks" on it. He knew we travelled a lot and the marks showed where one could get "hand-outs" and where one could "bunk in." You didn't mention your trip to Naples to see Gordon and Marian Brown. Did you use the card yourself?

Vic Earle sent us a map with his letter to direct us to Bridgehampton, NY, but we had to return home because of a full schedule: grandparents day at Andover (Lisa is cox of her Andover crew); a black tie affair at the Harvard Club with the Phil Le-compte's; a granddaughter's wedding; Bunny's 55th at Wheelock College (reception and dinner at our home); our 56th anniversary in Chatham, MA; and two weeks at our restaurant. Otherwise very quiet!

Eddie Thompson would have liked to be aboard the fishing boat with the Jack Ottaways on the Florida Keys. "What a day!" writes Jack, "groupers, snappers, mackerel and even a 35 lb. barracuda." Ed is the 1924 fisherman supreme. The Ottaways go back to Michigan each May.

Bev Thompson must have missed the fact it was the 1924 Class Secretary who Poynter caught using a trot [sic] — really Bob Layton's — and Bob almost fainted when I tore it up before the class.

Dick Morris writes that Andover meant more to him than college. How many times have Bunny and I heard that same remark? Dick said he got all A's his first semester due to his Andover education. I just called Dick in Philadelphia — sounded fine. Fred Beck up in Ithaca, NY says all goes well with him and Anne. Doctor Fred says "Our physical reserves are diminished so we don't travel."

Gordie Brown reports George Stevenson showed up in Lake Forest looking no different. Gordie lunches at the club with Hunt Eldridge and says Hunt is an excellent golfer. He sent an article from Time telling of the honorary doctorate from Yale Joe Wood received. "Smokey Joe" coached Yale baseball for 20 years. He won 34 games for the Red Sox in 1912 — 10 shut outs. The Red Sox sure could use him today.

And Yale dedicated "the Enormous Room" of the Graduate and Professional Student Center to our Chemistry Prof, Ed Fischer. Ed writes to many members of 1924. At 86 he's a marvel. One letter to me was hand printed and 14 pages. Congratulations, Ed.

I still think Tony Leach should be a T.V. sportscaster. He's a natural. He sent a picture of Gary Fenick, all Pro Chicago Bear and former Yale star. He mentioned other famous athletes, one was Bill Lord's son, Carter. He apologized for his long letter but he wrote after he finished his 1040 and his pen couldn't stop.

Laura Williamson, Abbot '24's scribe, has phoned twice while I write. She has sent her news in early this time. Laura has planned another mini-reunion at our restaurant in May. She was in Winter Park, FL; Atlanta and Charleston this winter. Reports seeing Nick Danforth at King's Chapel in Boston and he looked well. Nick always does. Everyone is so happy over Nancy's successful eye operation. We hear from Dot Converse Abbot '24 and she is looking forward to our next reunion.

Berry Grant, down in Charlotte, NC hopes I'm correct about the A-E game score. Likes his new home — a large 60-year-old — and Berry Jr. and family are with him.

Ed Renouf says he dreams of his old house in Mexico, "breakfasting in a flowering garden the year round." All apropos of seeing the windows in his New York apartment all frosted up. "I felt I was living in an igloo."

Bob Hamilton wrote of Bill Keator's death on 20 March. We heard from Bill's wife, Lucy, and also their son Gerrit who is Headmaster of the Promfret School in Connecticut. While in Andover Bob saw a book by Claude Fuess The Andover Way. He was able to identify a changed name as Fred Van Peski, our classmate from Holland. It reminded Bob of the time Fred substituted for Dr. Pfatteicher playing the organ at Sunday Vespers. "Evidently," says Bob, "Fred's tempo was out of the rhythm to which we were accustomed and it caused much mirth. The minister of the day had to remind us we were in God's house."

Long letter from the Sandborns, Red and Fonty. While in Scandinavia last summer they met a man from Tallahassee, FL. He raises Beefalos who are ¾ buffalo and ¼ cattle. The Beefalo's high in protein and low in cholesterol. He used his ranch as a tax shelter (Bob Clark, please note). I thought Red was suggesting it for our restaurant. Their granddaughter Pam made Dartmouth and she will be the fifth generation of Sanborns!

Had two letters from Jane Foote, Al's widow, in answer to our class note of sympathy. I remember going to a comedy show with Al and others in New Haven. Al's infectious laugh had the whole audience laughing over him. He was funnier and upstaged the show.

Bill and Min Dickerman spent most of February in the Caribbean. They have no nieces at Wellesley now so we don't see them as often. One granddaughter is spending a year at Oxford. From Sun City Center in FL, came a letter from the Len James, former head of the History Department. Wife Maja sent the recipe she served us "free" when she heard the Four Seasons charged a friend $600 for a Flame Cake recipe. I have it and will send it free to anyone. Her friend's lawyer said she must pay!

We were sorry to hear from Ralph Blank recently of the death of his wife, Grace. It didn't seem possible as we all had a dinner she prepared late October in Summit, NJ. Her death on 3 March was also the date of their 51st anniversary.

Madelyn Shepard Curry says Boca Raton, especially the beaches, have changed too much since she has settled there. She would like a class list to discover other '24s in Fla. . . . Jane Allen Kilby has just returned from Greece with the Andover group. She has been interested in raising money for Ethiopia, especially for blankets. Mary Harvey Kindel has a pacemaker. She says "It is a miracle of modern science, for I am told I can do anything I feel like doing." Elizabeth Bragg King says she is in "perfect health." Only regret, she is too far away to return to Abbot. Frances Platt still keeps busy with her nine hours per week on the church organ and "pulling her weight" in her library.

Susanna Smith Lockhart writes that her grandson Charles Bowlin has been given a porringer, for he is the class grandchild for AA '96. Our class of '24 wants to catch up and send our 1924 class baby a 60-year-old gift. Surprise?

Priscilla Draper Mansfield would like to attend our reunion at Pillar House, but she will be away, "so sorry!" Elizabeth Wilson Naetzer was "absolutely surprised" by the phonathon call. She has an Abbot daughter, two grandsons, and a great-grandson of five. (We now may have the first great-grand class baby!). Caroline Straheley Reeder was delighted to hear from Abbot '24 for the first time in 60 years. We had a really long catch-up chat. Carol keeps very busy, especially with four great-grands nearby. Maybe one of them will be 1924's great-grand baby! Constance Twitchell and I talked on the phone for the first time in 60 years during the recent phonathon. She, too, wants a class list to catch up with current addresses of old friends.

Peg Colby Williamson says she leads a quiet life, but not on Mothers' Day weekend. After having her daughter Molly and her husband for a few days, her son's two sons came for what might better be called grandparents day! Sybil Bottomley Talman says her eye operation proved to be well timed, for she will be able to come to the Pillar House on 20 May. Her only complaint was boredom, except when friends come calling. Kay Hart Mitchell has given a talk on Russia and it was well attended. Now, she is off on a second trip to Germany, this time for a family party on a Baronial estate. And in the meantime, she has been pre-occupied with the local police, who are trying to find out why a huge flashlight was on her hall floor! Now, she must have her wrist in a cast for two weeks; she still bubbles with happiness! Ruth Kelley Perry and her husband have hoped all winter to come to the "mini" at Pillar House. But driving is too difficult. Our classmates are asked to visit them to see Elwyn's gardens and Ruth's charming little house.

The phonathon was great fun, but too many facts to include here. We tried to reach the following many times, but there was no answer: Tommy Thompson English, Elsie Phillips Marshall, Geneva Rumford, Polly Bullard Holden, Barbara Loomer, Marion Shryock Wagner and I had a long phonathon chat, and it was Marion's birthday! We had fun reliving our 60th and forgetting our ills, especially Marion's, in the last two months.

News arrived that Polly Bullard Holden and John spent March in Martinique enjoying the beaches, mountains and French friends who invited them. Then they couldn't resist sailing around Tortola, BWI, with son Spike, his wife and two other American Airlines' pilots in a 50' sloop. "It was exciting, great swimming and fun dining at 'The Last Resort' on Bellamy Cay." Polly returned to get the surprise of her life on receiving the first "Anniversary Award" of Planned Parenthood of Northern New England at the annual meeting banquet in the Woodstock Inn (VT) of recently merged VT and NH organizations. The gift, a Danforth pewter bowl from Bristol (VT of course). John rehearses for Orpheus in the Underworld, an opera to be produced in August in newly resplendent Barre (VT!), Opera House.

For me, time seems to fly by very fast here in Boston. One must choose among many varied past-times for senior citizens in libraries, theatres, museums, conservatories, churches and universities. Mattapoisett (Mass.) on weekends with Elleda and her two, brings the family together. Stuart, Jr. will be racing on his "big" boat in mid-June in Newport, RI, then all of us will be together for the annual Scudder work weekends at Shelter Island, N.Y. Then, another Elder Hostel for me.

We 1924s hope to reunite again at Pillar House in October, so do plan a visit then to catch up on your "old" 1924 classmates. . . . Laura Friday evening, we cocktailed at 1924 House, home of Dean Stephen Carter and his wife, Adele, mingling with the Old Guard and classes of 1920 and 1930. We then had a delectable buffet at Flagstaff Court, followed by a meeting at Cochran Chapel, honoring Josh Miner.

Saturday, following a memorial service, the alumni parade, the annual meeting of the alumni, our class picture and picnic luncheon, we held a class meeting at our headquarters, Elbridge Stuart House. Charlie Poore, Chuck Eeles and your scribe all agreed to continue as Class Agents and Secretary respectively. Ed Bartlett volunteered to serve as Class Endowment Agent, soliciting bequests for PA. Also, it was agreed that contributing classmates contact non-contributing on a one-to-one basis to improve our percentage of participation in Annual Giving. We gave over $30,000 as our 60th Reunion Gift. Kudos to Charlie Poore and Chuck Eeles.

Saturday we had a broad range of seminars, athletics and various events to fill the afternoon. Around 5:30 p.m. we gathered for cocktails at Stuart House and then made our way to the Andover Inn for our class dinner at 7 p.m. — the climax of the weekend. Thirty-four attended and it was ably M.C.'d by Frank Foster in his inimitable, genial way. Informality was the keynote of the occasion. Some nifty, outrageous stories by Jack Whitham, Al Keedy, John Farnham (his first time back), Lawry Clarke and Hugh McCandless panicked us with his reminiscences of Abbot. Al Whitney gave us the latest statistics on the class. Based on those listed in our senior year, we now have 92 living members. Your scribe conveyed messages from Bill Healey, Dutch Brodhead, Spence Marsh, Joe Hague, Bob Hazard and Phil Bastedo, who were unable to attend. He also expressed thanks to Charlie Poore and Chuck Eeles for their splendid job as Class Agents and to Jack Whitham and Charlie Poore for all they did to make the Reunion such a great success. Dan Layman was awarded the prize for coming the longest distance — from California.

As is the tendency of many of our vintage, Chamb Ferry has signed up for a retirement community, Whitney Center in Hamden, Conn., encouraged by Hugh McCandless's enthusiasm for it. A big change for Chamb and Barb, who have been happily located in Old Lyme for many years. They spent last winter cruising on the east and west coasts of Florida and visiting friends in the Bahamas.

It was back to school for your scribe and wife when we attended a seminar on Thomas Jefferson given by Princeton at Charlottesville last March. A most stimulating and informative study of one of the most creative and gifted of our nation's founders.

Hugh McCandless wrote as follows, "I shall be warming up for our 60th by preaching at my 60th at Trinity School, N.Y., which is 275 years old this year. In fact, Andover is the youngest school I attended (Yale 1701, Trinity 1709, Andover 1778).

This is what makes me so stuffy and old fashioned." Hugh participated as Rector Emeritus of the Church of the Epiphany, New York city, in the Good Friday and Easter services. Hugh further relates that Clare Barnes is very much involved in the preparation of a Souvenir Book for the 55th Reunion of the 1929 Yale Class, utilizing Clare's expertise for design and layout.

Spence Marsh, having retired some years ago as a senior officer of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, was recently appointed as Class Agent for the class of 1929 at Princeton.

Our heartfelt sympathy to Ben English on the loss of his wife, Eloise, in early May. I'm also grieved to report the death of Gordon Tweedy, a distinguished member of the class, on 25 March. He had graduated from Taft and Andover, received an AB degree from Yale and graduated cum laude from Yale Law School, where he taught for a year. He practiced law with Sullivan and Cromwell and with the SEC and Department of Justice in Washington. At the outbreak of World War II, he left for India and directed the activities of China Defense Supplies. He then became associated with C.V. Starr & Co. and was widely known because of his international insurance interests and involvement in international law and aviation. He became Chairman of the Board of C.V. Starr and later semi-retired as a lawyer. He is survived by his wife, Mary Johnson Tweedy, and daughters, Claire, Ann and Margot. We extend our deep felt sympathy.

The Alumni Office informed me in March of the death of Harold M. Baker of Aptos, Calif. on 18 September 1984. He leaves two sons, Richard Baker of New Mexico and David Baker of Buffalo, N.Y., and a daughter Susan of Brooklyn, N.Y. Unfortunately, we have no further details. Reunion Notes submitted by Elaine Boutwell von Weber.

On Friday, 7 June, three elderly Abbotites came to Andover under their own, almost, full-steam. Frances Howard O'Brien, Elizabeth Burnett Horle and Elaine Boutwell von Weber registered and were assigned to their quarters in a dormitory where they had rooms on the top floor while the Andover '25 contingent was on the lower floors. They treated us, if not with kid gloves, with endless, warm-hearted friendliness and generosity including two cocktail parties and helpful transportation when needed. All sorts of entertainment was offered us and we chose the best, of course. We were with the "Old Guard," the 1920 and 1930 groups, at most of these. A reception was given by Steve and Adele Carter at 1924 House complete with cocktails and goodies; a buffet supper was held on the lawn at Commons; and at 9 p.m. we attended a reception to meet the Josh Miners who were retiring after 33 years of service in many fields to the School; and finally that day, an informal class reunion was held in our quarters.

Saturday began bright and beautiful, and after breakfast in Commons we gathered before the Addison Gallery for the class-by-class parade, led by the spectacular Clan MacPherson bagpipers, to the gymnasium for the annual meeting, reports, photographs and buffet luncheon. When we recovered from that we went "home" and had our own meeting to discuss fund raising, appoint or re-elect a Class Secretary, Fund Chairman, and Reunion Chairman. We, of Abbot, promptly re-elected them all. Later we went to a reception at the beautiful home of the Headmaster, Donald McNemar and his charming wife, Britta, exclusively for all Abbot Alumnae. At that reception we re-encountered Alice Sweeney and Helen Ripley, Susan Ripley's sister. At 6 another cocktail party was held at "our house," and then on to our Class Banquet at the Andover Inn.

When Fritz Howard O'Brien was doing her rugged work in fund raising for our class, she wrote endless letters and garnered most of the following news: Marion Quain Kaiser, a widow (Marion was Class Baby), has been ill for many years. Marion is like the rest of us, has her good and bad days. Dorothy Beeley Marsh is one of our talented musicians, who teaches music, and gives concerts. She is our Class Secretary whom we re-elected for this year. She planned to come to the reunion, but the air strike foiled her plans. Ruth Connolly Burke is well and active and was with us in spirit only, as she, too, was unable to attend. Manon Wood Hale would have liked to be with us, but it was a bit too far for her to drive. She is quite well and keeps trim with aerobics, exercise, square dancing and gardening. She takes frequent trips with AARP, has a son John and a daughter Sandra and two wonderful grand children.

"T" Jova Howell has been a Grand Co-Agent for Fritz but was unable to attend the reunion. Emmy Lou Wylie Kuhne had a wonderful trip to Greece this spring she reports. "Ted" Johnson Severns has just returned from London. She is busy sponsoring "All The Arts" and is president of the Musicians Club of New York. Lois Lord is having an exhibit at a Soho (NYC) photography gallery the first and second week in June. She is still teaching at the Bank Street College in New York City. Betsey Righter Farrar has four grandsons, one granddaughter and one great-grandson. Ruth Davies Hawn has made a fantastic recovery from a double hip replacement a few years ago. She had a spring vacation in England but returned with a miserable virus. She says "hello" to everyone.

Frances (Fritz) Howard O'Brien, our hard-working Class Agent is very pleased with the generosity of so many of you in this, our sixtieth year. At home she is too active in too many civic and social activities. She teaches weaving two days a week to other senior citizens. When in California this winter she had long chats via the telephone with "Quain" and "Dot" Beely but couldn't get to see them. Elizabeth (Bubbles) Burtner Horle noted "It [Reunion] was completely satisfactory and the PA 'boys' were outstanding in their attentions to us. So good to be with Fritz and Elaine again." Eunice Huntsman hoped to join us at Andover for Saturday luncheon, at least, but pressures of duties and shaky health kept her at home. She has reserved a room for herself at a retirement home in Concord, Mass., but does not plan to move in immediately.

After my unwanted stay in the hospital last year, I am doing absurdly well for an antiquated female. We three, as mentioned above, have had a truly delightful time and have revelled in the feeling of being accepted by our fellow (in the literal sense!) classmates. Elizabeth Horle is giving me immense pleasure in a pre- and post-reunion visit, but how we wish that all of you could have been with us here.

Ben Gilbert has agreed to serve again as Chairman of our 60th Reunion to be held Friday, Saturday and Sunday, 13, 14, 15 June 1986. Accommodations for our class will be available at the Andover Inn and we hope to have a meeting room there which would be our headquarters. Start planning your trip to New England now! More later.

It is with deep regret that we report the death of Dr. Daniel B. Hardenbergh on 25 March 1985 in Bridgeport, Connecticut at the age of 75. He is survived by his wife, Betty Jane, whom he married in 1938; two daughters and two sons, Ann H. Parker of Reston, VA, Margot H. Weiss of Stony Creek, CT, David of Dallas, TX, and Evan (PA '72) of New York City. A brother, Albert Hardenbergh (PA '21) of Bronxville, NY also survives. "Hardy" entered Andover as an Upper Middler in 1924, and served on the Phillipian board during his senior year. Upon graduation from medical school, he interned at Roosevelt Hospital in New York City. During World War II, he served for 2½ years in Auckland, New Zealand at the 39th General Hospital, a Yale unit, and in Saipan. After the war, he specialized in internal medicine and cardiology at the Bridgeport, Connecticut Hospital. As his wife Betty Jane put it, he was really a good "old-fashioned general practitioner." His hobbies were skiing and sailing, with a particularly great interest in navigation. Also was an avid traveler both in this country and overseas. It was on a trip to New Zealand in the early part of this year — his first visit since the war — that he was stricken quite suddenly with a virulent form of cancer. He died in a matter of weeks after returning home. He will be greatly missed by his many patients, his friends, his classmates, as well as his family.

In March I had the pleasure of welcoming old friends to my house, friends whom I had not seen since 1926! Lucy Sanborn Urbain and Ruth Perry (both class of '27) frequently walked to and from school with me when we were all at Abbot. Ruth lives in Tucson, AZ now and was visiting Lucy who lives in Lafayette which is not far from Berkeley. It all came about thanks to Ruth's sister, Betty, and her husband who braved the freeway traffic to bring them over and join us for lunch and to Fonty Flagg Sanborn who had told Lucy where I live. Fonty has been a dear about writing, and that's more than I can say about most of our other classmates. She and her husband, George (PA '28) spent forty-four years as Andover faculty, sometimes with the students in dormitory housing, sometimes in a house of their own, but finally retired to Kennebunkport, Maine, where Fonty had always spent her summers. They still enjoy going to reunions but says she doesn't see many of our classmates there. Perhaps we should make a special effort next year for our 60th.

In the meantime it would cheer me up no end to get some news from my other classmates.

Bob Nordhaus writes from New Mexico: "We had a family ski reunion here including three grand children from Andover — Jeff, Bill's son; Monica, his daughter and Hannah, Bob's daughter. Jeff is President of the Phillipian board." Your secretary adds that as a representative to the AYA (Association of Yale Alumni) Assembly last month, as part of the program, he attended a most interesting classroom lecture by Bill Nordhaus, an outstanding professor of economics at Yale.

A letter from John Bennett reveals that after the Andover Bulletin described his experiences in the El Salvador elections he received a handwritten note from Vice President George Bush '42.

A lengthy article, "All's Write in the World of C. Colburn Hardy" appeared in Business/Day 1 in which Coly was described as the "poet laureate of Palm Beach County financial writers." The article goes back to Andover and Yale and then progresses through his very varied career of being a salesman of drug and photo products in the midwest, owning a newspaper in New Jersey, serving in the New Jersey legislature, joining the Naval Air Combat Intelligence Office in 1943, then back to the business world with Merck & Co., Carl Byoir and Associates, doing public relations and finally to General Dynamics until his retirement, having done extensive writing in all of the above areas. He then took up free-lance writing in earnest and still edits and writes "what's now called the Dun & Bradstreet guide," described as "a financial primer, guide and reference book combined." He has written many books especially oriented to retirement, as well as magazine articles, and in addition to all his work for the elderly and retired is working on a new book on retirement planning.

From Water Island in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands Ed Robertson sends the following: "This is mainly to let you . . . know that I have retired for the third and last time. The first two were after 32 years in the Navy and 9 with Raytheon. This third and last time is after 16 years of owning and operating Shoreline Marine, where, although I was president I also emptied my own trash basket.

"I do not believe I shall now die from inactivity. On this little island the residents have had to organize in order to provide some of the essentials of present day life such as roads, trash and garbage disposal, police protection, etc., which the Territorial Gov't. does not provide. I am the president of this group, a job which closely resembles running a three-ring circus."

A card from George Allen Swindells tells us "Now 77 yrs. (young) — one son (41) who's been married for 17 years with three daughters, 3, 8, and 14. He's in international trading — U.S./Saudi Arabia; lives in NYC. Went to Yale and Swiss graduate school, wife, Heidi has a very responsible job (German Government) at the U.N. We divide our time about 50-50 between Dedham, Mass. and Naples, Fla." (P.S. George Allen was adopted at age 27 by the Swindells family.)

Jim Reynolds sends the following on his activities: "Mickey and I have just gotten home from a very informative and rewarding two-week trip to China where we were were fascinated by China's newfound love affair with capitalism."

It is hard to realize that one-and-a-half decades have, in the imperishable phrasing of Dizzy Dean, "slud by" since Nancy and I took leave of Andover Hill via early retirement after 35 eventful years in the PA administration. Four more years of gainful employment, divided between the ABC program in Boston and promotion of the flora and fauna of Tucson's extraordinary Arizona Sonora Desert Museum closed the gap to "complete" retirement and location in Tar Heel Terr., where occasional toil of one sort or another is not subject to remuneration. Throughout the interval, via assorted "official" alumnic connections, and renewal of valued associations in and out of Andover, MA, we have followed the progress of Phillips Academy and many of its people (past and present) with interest and pride. The Bulletin, the Phillipian, and the admirable Parents' Newsletter have kept us well posted, not sparing inevitable warts here and there, on the leadership transitions from John Kemper to Ted Sizer to Don McNemar, and on the impact of coeducation, now thoroughly applauded by even the most of its erstwhile ardent opponents.

Of particular interest to a onetime D. of A. was a recent Phillipian item anent the appointment, after much fine screening of candidates, of Josh Miner's successor as Dean of Admissions, the commendably photogenic Jeannie Dissette, of whom more will surely be reported elsewhere in this issue. What Ms. D. told a student meeting of her background and aims bodes well for the selection process of future PAs. From our vantage point Phillips Academy in 1985 is a vital, contributing institution on the American scene (read your Bulletins, including many class notes, for substantiation).

This led to the inevitable wafting of an enjoyably needlesome communication to the editor of the Maine Times to reinforce the preceding commentary. (Editor Peter Cox, an Exeter product, had visited his Alma Mater with one of his staffers, a Maine high school teacher named Fischer, to exhibit the operation of a real secondary school and waxed well high ecstatic in his editorial reflections.) For the honor of Ould PA and The Class of 1928, the following riposte seemed only decent: "The editorial on the subject of Exeter (1/18/85) recalls the late, unlamented debates in which one candidate withered the opposition with a leering 'there you go again.' Editor Cox confesses to having 'gone to Exeter,' after asserting that it has 'the highest level of academic excellence of any secondary school in America,' and is 'just across the border.' This dubious chauvinism is comprehensible, and even pardonable, to those who are fortunate enough to claim allegiance to a more venerable and less cloistered institution across two borders, the original Phillips Academy in Andover, Massachusetts, founded by Samuel Phillips, Jr. in 1778, which inspired his uncle, John Phillips of Exeter, NH, to attempt to emulate the far-seeing example of his nephew by establishing the Phillips Exeter Academy in the wilds of New Hampshire. Under the heading 'figures' Mr. Fischer reports 2000 applicants for 300 places. The Andover admissions office processed 3500 applications for 440 places. Could there possibly be a good reason for this discrepancy? In the interests of enlightened accuracy Exonian Cox and staffman Fischer should plan a pilgrimage across two borders to Andover, Mass. They would be welcome — and deeply impressed."

And now, with no apologies for editorializing on an important subject, we're off to the Gentlemen of '28, from whom communications have been, of late, in shamefully short supply. Too late for inclusion in last issue were reports on moves from Jim Ames and Bob Walker. Jim and Sue from Cambridge to Lincoln, MA, "smaller house, more space for garden and other country activities — looking forward to welcoming classmates at 12 Browning Lane." Bob and Alice from Wayland to Needham's "North Hill" after "meanderings" to Portland (with Wellesley Friends of Art), Chicago (with Vassar Friends of Art), Princeton (with Friends of Alice and Bob Walker)." Bill Farley and Louise were once again hosts to PA participants in L.A. wingding in the form of a luncheon honoring Josh Miner's retirement, which included Phebe M., the McNemars, and assorted other Royal Blue Brass. Bill was planning to return to Andover Hill for Spring Alumni Council meeting, reviving memories of his Samaritan House visits of yore, when he was somewhat less than enthusiastic about beautifully behaved Lab Retriever named "Sneuter."

Mike Cardozo was a participant in another D.C. Miner hoedown at the home of the Phillips Collection, at which Josh and Phebe were the recipients of a cherishable cherry tree to top off the accolades. Good letter from Bick Bicknell reports self and Barbara healthy and happy, extensive familial visitations (AZ and MI) via EAL "Get Up & Go" passport, son Bob, wife and three kids Andover resident. Bick still actively examines applicants for insurance, bowls for exercise, sagely suggests, "If everyone would write once in a while you could keep up your column re. '28 Phillips. Hope they do and you do." Amen, Dr. B. Classmates be so kindly as to nota bene and inwardly digest. Last issue's printer's boo-boo made Dan Dorman "Don". Sorry, Dan; we all know you're not Don. Dept. of Inspirational Jewelry: In superb script from the Rev. H. Barres, "Dear Spike: Perhaps you'd like to pass along to our classmates some seeds of wisdom harvested over 75 years of living. On Tobacco: I have found the best pipe tobacco to be 1) Brooks Bros. #346 brand, 2) over-the-counter Borkum Riff Black Cavendish, and 3) New Haven's Owl Shop's Patterson's Special. On health: Drink more water as you grow older. On Religion: Live to please God. From the above you are right to conclude that my life is one of smoking, drinking, and raising hell. Cordially, Hertie." Yea, Verily, Rev. Herster. Thankee for them words of wisdom — with a slight, modifying "Ouch!"

The Alumni Office reports Bob (Speer) Watt's death, via returned mail, with no details re date or place.

My mail has not been extensive from Andover classmates lately, but the quality makes up for the absence of quantity.

From Carl Burnham of Black Butte Ranch, Oregon, "Just a note to let you know that I am alive and well. I retired ten years ago and built a home here on the seventh fairway. We have two golf courses, four swimming pools, twenty-eight tennis courts and over 15 miles of bicycle paths." Carl adds that this is his permanent home. He hunts pheasant in the fall; he goes to warmer climes for a few months in the winter. (I hope he gets some rest then.) He and his wife expect to visit Andover in early October for the first time since graduation.

A long letter came from Sherman Chickering. You will recall that after school he went to Stanford and then to Harvard Law School. He then returned to San Francisco where he has had a distinguished career in the law and was senior partner in the firm of Gregory & Chickering until 1977. His letter to me covered a wide range of activities which were dizzying in scope, not directly concerned with the law. For example, he was a consultant in China under the Marshall Plan; San Francisco campaign chairman for Presidential candidate Barry Goldwater; delegate to the Republican conventions in '60 and '64; active in Reagan's campaigns for Governor; thirteen years on the California Fish & Game Commission (three terms as president); three times chairman of the State Wildlife Conservation Board. He was also a trustee of the California Academy of Sciences and the University of California Medical School. This is only a sampling of his past activities. I'm glad to report that despite all of these pursuits, he has had time to smell the flowers along the way. He is a collector of Sierra Nevada wild flowers for the Florida State Museum, having collected about 350 species for the Museum.

I sadly report the death of Webster Briggs who has been blind and in ill health for several years. John McGauley has stood by him all through the years.

Art Rogers had an operation in Florida, but is well on the road to recovery.

The Academy has informed me of the death of David G. Wood as reported by his brother, Robert J. Wood '24. He died of a heart attack in Washington, DC in February. He leaves two children, Michael M. Wood of Washington, DC, and Susan W. Manley of Flint Michigan. The class extends its deepest sympathy to the family of David.

Reunion Notes: Old PA — new PA — we had them both in a glorious weekend!

Twenty-four members of our class joined by six members of Abbot 1930 enjoyed and participated in a never-ending program of events, chronicled elsewhere in these pages, that made us even prouder of PA. For PA 1930 our big event was our class dinner in Cooley House (PAE) admirably arranged by our Reunion Co-chairman Bill Robertson and his wife, Anne. The dinner was scrumptious, the setting hospitable and the program most informal. A round robin of mini-life stories brought general agreement that retirement is far busier than life before it and that PA and its outstanding faculty helped in a big way to set our course for later life. Those who "volunteered" were:

Ame Bradford who has given up the life of an RV nomad but came to Reunion, nevertheless, in his camper. He's now settled in Arlington, Vermont, has a grandson at PA and greatly enjoyed a Grandparents' Weekend seeing PA through a student's eyes. Yard Beers stopped in on the way to a cruise around Great Britain. He's a junior at the University of Colorado and has just been honored with the Jacob Van Ek award for academic achievement and community service. Jack Bloombergh plans to retire from medical practice this coming fall. Rod Brown keeps busy with gardening and golf. Mal Choate is deeply involved with Senior Citizen activities in Reading while Grover Churchill is busy as ever with lobstering down Maine. Fred Curtis is an avid gardener in Robbinsville, New Jersey. Xan Evans came all the way from California, and Bruce Gelsner is happily retired in Rochester. This year Ken and Alice Keenly celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary in Ontario, California. Stan Kellogg's multi-farious activities include being our Alumni Fund Agent and he reported over $20,000 raised for our 55th Reunion gift. Jack McLanahan carries on at Rainbow Ridge near Berea, Kentucky, a residential cooperative community he founded to promote cooperatives and peace in central Appalachia. Gene Mintkeski spoke fondly of his many years as our Alumni Fund Class Agent. Leeds Mitchell is still "into" ocean racing near Newport, Rhode Island. Ted Murray says he's just about mastered his personal computer. Russ Neff thanked the gathering for its Alumni Fund giving at our 50th and, later on, presented our class officers' slate. Jim Noyes divides his time between Madison, Wisconsin, and Maine. Charlie Pickett came from Waterloo, Iowa, with his wife Frances. Whit Whittelsey joined us again from Greenwich where he still has a finger in the real estate pie. Dick Wengren said that retirement beats banking.

Dick Kimball was married to Katherine Allen Smith, St. Andrews Episcopal Church, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands on 29 April. She is a retired Army officer too. Bud Kenway is still practicing law part-time in Marblehead. Don Jones is president of his company, Charles Jones, Inc. which distributes title search information from computerized data in New Jersey. He manages, besides, a 200-acre hay and grain farm and serves in a wide variety of pro bono publico activities in New Jersey. Dick O'Kane is now a retired Rear Admiral in Sebastopol, California. Cy Cousins in Ellsworth, Maine, sends his best to PA classmates as he recovers from serious surgery. Charlie Dufton is presently at University of Otago, Department of Marketing, in Dunedin, New Zealand, his fourth round as visiting professor there.

At our dinner's conclusion the class nominating committee: Joe Lambie, chairman with Ed Batchelder, Russ Neff and Dick Wengren presented the 1985-90 slate: Reunion Chairman Bill Robertson; Alumni Fund Agent, Stan Kellogg; Class Secretary Dave Cory. All unanimously elected. The evening concluded with the reading (excerpted) of a recent column produced for a contemporary class reunion at Wellesley, bits of nostalgia that made us acknowledge our age although we don't feel it. Don't miss our 60th in 1990.

Reunion Notes submitted by Donna Grace Ogilvie: For those of you who didn't come to our 55th reunion, you missed a good time! There was so much for us to do that I didn't get to it all.

The first of us, Grace Hadley MacMillan and Dick, Betty Perry Lewis and Lyn and DBO and Jack, met at 1924 House Friday where we had cocktails and hors d'oeuvres on the lawn with the PA men and their wives. It was very pleasant. A buffet supper was held at Flagstaff Court for all alumni/ae and families. After dinner Josh Miner gave a great talk in the chapel. There was more but I folded! Next morning after breakfast there was an alumni memorial service where Hilary Patterson Cleveland '45 gave a thoughtful prayer. There, with balloons and bagpipes, all of us plus families set off for the gym and the alumni meeting. As we started to march H. Ripley appeared and then Posy Castle Olivetti. Once at the gym we heard reports on class giving from Cynthia Eaton Bing '61 President of A/A Alumni Council, plus a good talk by Headmaster McNemar. There were five people on the dais and four were Abbot girls! And our banner was right up there with the PA banner.

We had lunch on the Bell Tower lawn and Ruth Baker Johnson arrived and we all, plus three spouses, ate and chatted. At 4 o'clock there was a lovely tea at the McNemars for all Abbot alumnae.

Ruth, H. and Posy left, so at the '30 dinner which was at Cooley House, there were only six of us. We were warmly received by the the PA "boys," especially by Bill Robertson and David Cory who were the PA Reunion Chairs. They did all the planning and I thank them warmly for all their efforts on our behalf. Cocktails and a delicious roast beef dinner was followed by introductions all around and after dinner drinks. Again I folded!

At the Abbot tea, Betty, Grace and I read letters from Janice Lovell Jenkins, Kathie Fellows Leiserson and Barbara Lord Mathias. Barbara stayed home with her grandchildren so their parents could go to their 15th. She says she "won't get committed so I can make our 60th." They are moving to a condominium in Saratoga Springs after 30 years in Harrison, NY. Janice sent along a picture of 35 of her family members taken at their 50th wedding anniversary and says "the old body will just not co-operate. Do give my greetings to all of '30 . . ."

Posy looked lovely as usual. H. hasn't changed a bit, and Ruth, Grace, and Bett looked the same except for a few grey hairs!

It was all worth the trip and I only wish more of you would make plans NOW for our 60th. We missed seeing you. —DBO

P.S. Since so few showed up I will have to choose a chairman for our 60th, and, so, one of you — get ready for a note from me.!

By the time this reaches you, our 55th will be a memory, one of the best, I hope, for each of you who was fortunate enough to have shared in that special gathering. I wish I might have been one of you.

Kay Dutton Leidy, I know, echos my sentiments. She is recovering from a broken hip and wrote, "I enjoyed our 50th and looked forward to seeing the girls again. None of you live near me. Give my love to everyone." May she have a rapid and successful recovery. For the past year, Pat

Brewer Dericks has been living, almost literally, out of a suitcase. She writes that she and her husband have touched down in France, Hawaii, John's Island, Fla., St. Maartens, and Dallas. In between all this, she manages to play some bridge, tennis and work on the literacy program in Tulsa. Keep it up, Pat. Our congratulations to Janice Lovell Jenkins. She and her husband celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary last year assisted by 36 of their 43 children, grand and great-grandchildren. She was looking forward to seeing her roommate Christine Hollands Struck in April. Christine wrote that she had spent Christmas in Naples, Italy with her two sons, one of whom makes his home there. We're happy for you, Christine.

I sent a note to our much-loved Mary Carpenter Dake, so important a part of our Abbot days. She replied graciously saying that she wished she could be with us at reunion, having had many happy memories of the class of 1930. She added that she is very happy in her new home at 526 Medford Leas Life Care Home, Medford, NJ 08055.

A Christmas letter, "MacMillan Mutterings," tells of the hectic but interesting year lived by Grace Hadley MacMillan and her family. Besides welcoming two new grandsons, they travelled extensively and were engaged in many interesting projects. Thanks, Grace, I plan to use more of your letter later. Katharine Bigelow Heberton writes that she and Betty Stout Volz have kept in touch these many years. How about some news from you, Betty? Kay still spends a week, twice a year, in Sturbridge for meetings at the Village. Isn't she fortunate, for that as well as having five grandchildren scattered across the country and two greats in Denver?

My chapel seatmate, Alice Eckman Mason, attended her 50th at Smith and has moved from her house to a condo apartment in Winnetka. She spends the winters in Tucson and would be glad to see any Abbot visitors there.

Of Donna Brace Ogilvie and her busy life I am happy to report that I have first-hand knowledge, as Marianna Smith Hile and I had luncheon with her in March. She looks great and was enjoying a restful time in her home on the beach. I hope that each of us appreciates the time and effort she continues to expend to help the school, not forgetting all she has done for our class. The personal notes she often writes at the end of the printed letters deserve an answer.

Kay Foster Haviland's welcome note says that they enjoy their life in New Hampshire, especially having Posy Castle Olivetti nearby. How about a note from you, Posy?

I went over to Orlando to tour EPCOT and returned last night, so here I am trying to beat the deadline and get this to Andover on time. My plan is to spend most of the hot summer in Denver with family. I enjoy it a lot. If any of you is heading that way, please drop me a line.

My thanks to each of you who wrote and a "pretty please" to the rest of you. —

Ange graduated from Yale in 1935 and went to work for the E.I. duPont Company in Wilmington, Delaware. He became Director of Men's Wear Marketing and retired in 1973 after 32 years service. As a Lieutenant, j.g. in the Navy, Ange was commanding officer of an LSM which served in the Pacific in World War II.

Casey Jennings died early this year in Huntington, W. Va. The class extends its sympathy to his wife, Elizabeth, who lives at 2159 Washington Blvd., Huntington 25795.

The New York Times reports the death of Arthur Malsin last November in Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y. After graduation from Yale, Art received a master's degree in architecture from Harvard and became a partner in the architectural firm of Malsin & Reiman specializing mostly in residential design. During World War II he served as a lieutenant in the Navy and saw action as an intelligence officer in the Pacific. Upon the death of his brother in 1964, Art joined the Lane Bryant chain founded by his mother and later became president. At the time the corporation was sold in 1982 for about $100 million, it owned more than 200 stores under its own name as well as Coward Shoe, Smart Size, and Farr's Shoe Stores.

We are happy to hear from Mary Elizabeth Olson Crum who writes that she and her husband, Calvin, a Virginian with a B.S. from the University of Virginia, hope to be back at Abbot for our 55th Reunion. Calvin has never been to New England and Mary Elizabeth has not been back since she graduated from Wellesley. After college she and Nanine Wheeler Allender came across each other through sorority functions of Alpha Phi. Mary Elizabeth joined at the University of Missouri and Nanine at the University of Texas. Both were married during World War II and their ways parted. Perhaps we can all be together next year!

Skip Allen Carroll keeps busy with volunteer work at a thrift shop, lots of gardening and her favorite hobby of reading. Six grandchildren from ages 2 to 23 must really keep her in touch with the next generation. Gertrud Van Peursem Bell and her sister Cecile Van Peursem Lane '35, had a wonderful trip to India and Kashmir last spring. She writes, "It was with some trepidation but a feeling of nostalgia that we returned after 55 years." The group consisted of 32 alumni and friends of Kodai Kanal School in South India (where Gertrud, Cecile and I went) and Woodstock in North India. They left New York, had an hour stopover in London, then nonstop to Bombay. After a little rest they traveled by launch across the harbor to the Elephanta Caves which is really a large Hindu temple carved out of solid rock and dedicated to the god Siva. A bus tour of the city followed with an interesting visit to Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Museum where Gandhi lived from 1917-34.

From there they flew south to Madras where they were entertained at dinner by an Indian dancing girl in a gorgeous red costume. The next stop was even farther south to the city of Madurai which is noted for its famous Hindu temple with its 1000 columns and ardent devotees.

From Madurai they had a long bus trip up to Kodai Kanal, elevation 7,000 ft. They were awakened at 7 am with morning tea or coffee, still served British style with warm milk. An early morning walk on "Coaker's Walk" from which one can overlook the plains 7,000 feet below afforded magnificent views. A tour of our old school was a highlight for the graduates. How it had changed! The enrollment had quadrupled, classes go through high school and it is now an international school — 50% Indian and others from 52 different countries. (We were all Americans when we attended.) A visit to the Van Peursem's old home, now owned by an Indian woman physician, a row on the beautiful lake nestled in the mountains, and a touching visit to their brother's grave was the culmination of their visit there.

The next stop was Delhi where they visited the Red Fort, the towering Qutab Minar, and the famous iron pillar that has never rusted. Fable has it that if you can reach around it backwards all your dreams will come true. Other sights included Mrs. Gandhi's home and areas where Nehru, Gandhiji and Mrs. Gandhi were cremated. The highlight, of course, was the visit to Agra, sight of the unrivalled Taj Mahal. This they visited twice, in the afternoon and by hazy moonlight and found it as spectacular as ever.

The final side trip was to Srinagar, Kashmir, from where the view of the snow-capped Himalayas was glorious. They spent three nights in the unforgettable, deluxe house boats on Dal Lake. Shikaras carried them across the water paddled by one man with an oar the shape of a heart. Each houseboat had four bedrooms, each with a private bath. Beautiful carved pine lattice work separated the living and dining areas. (No glass curtain as in M. M. Kaye's Death in Kashmir.) Visits to three colorful gardens including the famous Shalimar (abode of love) and a visit to a carpet factory were most interesting. They watched whole families weaving rugs, some silk, some silk and wool and others of all wool. These top-quality carpets are shipped duty free all over the world. With Iran out of the picture, Kashmir is progressing well and has no unemployment. Shopping for souvenirs was even more outstanding than in Delhi.

Gertrud did a lot of reading on India as well as seeing the recent movies on the country so she felt it was a very worthwhile trip. She was happy, however, to get back to modern, clean airports where plumbing worked and bathrooms had toilet tissue!

Thanks, Gertrud, for such a fascinating account.

The class extends sympathy to Emily Bullock whose sister Caroline Bullock Blaker '33 died 3 February at her home in Key Largo, FL.

We have lost track of two alumnae: Catherine Ireland Lenz and Mary Jane Manny Lewis. If any of you have recent news and addresses, please let the Alumni Office and me know. Thanks.

By the time this issue of the Bulletin reaches you summer will be in full swing, but here in mid-New Hampshire our reluctant spring is just appearing, along with the black flies.

Ruth Tyler Smith and Ev added a grandson to their previous list of 6; this newest one is almost a generation younger than his oldest cousin who graduates from Milton Academy this year. Ruth and Ev saw a good deal of Helen Allen Anderson and Harry at Vero Beach this winter, and for the next issue will have a report on a trip to Great Britain.

A card from Flop Dunbar Robertson says she and Randal will be heading for Tanglewood again this summer where she and her son Hugh will attend the Berkshire Choral Institute for a week. In September Flop will be a lay deputy to the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in California.

Among the travelers is Toddy Welles who went on one of those exotic Love Boat cruises through the Panama Canal and the Caribbean last fall.

I didn't hear from Betty Holihan Giblin, but of her from Va Lawton Wolfe who says Betty cornered her into being Class Agent for a year — congratulations. . . I think.

Harriet Wright Hight and Don are some of the most peripatetic of our class; they went to the Cayman Islands in February, are in Germany as I write this, and will return in June in time for Don's 55th at Dartmouth. Harriet is doing "a little project" for the 80th celebration at Aloha Camps where two of her granddaughters will be, and then in July she and Don will return to the Mirimichi River for their annual salmon fishing expedition.

Molly Marshall Dudis lives not far from me in Athol, Mass., and sometime when I'm on the way to my mother's family farm in Oakham I hope to stop and see her. Meanwhile, she too has been to Europe and had five weeks in Florida.

A permanent resident since last November in the sunny state is Priscilla Donnell Anderson. She wrote me at the time of her move, but I think I neglected to put her new address in the class notes: 4443 Atwood Cay Circle, Sarasota, FL 33583. She and Austin are thoroughly enjoying their new life, with church and college clubs, but she adds that they are going to spend July and August travelling in New England. Their neighbors report that they are missed in Andover.

The other half of the twins, Marie Holihan Foley, had a short trip to Florida, Chicago, and North Carolina during the winter, but since Tom is still working they tend to stick close to home.

The history Kay Brigham Callanen was completing last year was of Brewster, on Cape Cod where she went every summer as a youngster, and still vacations. She and others there represent five generations now. Before they return this year, she and Gardner will have cruised the islands off Central America and the West Indies. They have recently acquired an adorable, adopted Korean granddaughter who has joined quite a group: in September four of Kay's step-grandchildren will be in college, two are in high school and then there are two tiny ones, three and four. That's enough to keep any doting grandparent busy.

In mid-April, at a 28-hour meeting in South Hadley to plan our 50th Reunion Gift for Mount Holyoke, I saw Isabel Arms at several meetings and meals. As is so often the case we never had a chance to put more than two words together, but she writes that she is now off on her third Elderhostel trip — this one to England and Dublin.

My own news is scattered between our Cambodian refugees (I am still tutoring the mother and grandmother), a trip to Georgia in February to see the marvelous exhibit "China: 7,000 years of Discovery" (which is going to be in Boston 1 June to 1 December) and trying to become acquainted with a computer which has been given to our church.

Someone has said that all things come to him who waits. Well, we waited for Santa Claus, and he came; we waited for the groundhog, and he showed up, however briefly; we waited for spring, and it seems to have arrived; we have waited. . . and waited . . . for mail, carrier pigeons, smoke signals, and tom-tom messages from PA '33ers . . . We have embarked on a special diet regimen aimed at longevity, in the hope of being on hand when some word arrives from one of you. PLEASE save us from a lifetime of wheat germ, kelp, and alfalfa!

We pause to blot a big tear from the page. Meanwhile, a couple of items we squirreled away when the end of our space for the last issue arrived rather suddenly: A kindly soul has forwarded a newspaper article to us from Longboat Key, Fla., featuring our long-lost Tom Jones, whom we last saw as a fellow student under the unforgettable Zeus Benner. The article celebrates Tom's many years of service to Longboat Key, currently as Code Enforcement Board Chairman (sounds as if a pair of six-shooters should go with that title), with years of service in various capacities in the Planning and Zoning Boards since 1963. Much to our delight, the chronicler also closes some of the gap since 1933. From PA Tom went on to Harvard, was studying law for admittance to the Pennsylvania bar when WWII began, turned in his law books for a Navy pilot's wings and spent the war flying photo recon missions over the South Pacific in a Liberator bomber. Back to the law in 1946, Tom spent four years as Deputy Attorney General in Pennsylvania, then was elected to the State Legislature in 1950, where he had a distinguished record on the Judiciary Committee. After four terms, along with many other good men, he went down before the sweep of John F. Kennedy and his party and returned to the law until he moved to Longboat Key in 1963. Tom also finds time to serve as Senior Warden of his church, bank director, member of several power squadrons and the Longboat Key Garden Club. Judging from Tom's photograph, this is The Way To Live.

We see Dave Haviland frequently around St. Luke's, Montclair, continuing to look The Happy Retiree, although his life sounds a bit more strenuous of late. Dave told us recently of his impending move from a rather large home of many years, to an apartment in Montclair, and of the path he is wearing between his home and the Salvation Army depot with years of accumulated treasurers from the attic. He hangs in there, however, buoyed by the vision of the thousand Islands this summer. Dave's parting advice to all: Clean out your attic NOW!

We have a note from Jim Martin saying some what cryptically that he has retired "for the second, and last, time." We can't tell from where (fill us in, Jim?), but we believe Jim is still living in Dallas (Texas, that is).

Regrettably, we must close once more with the loss of two classmates: Lloyd B. Makepeace died in Greenwich, Conn. on 22 March 1985, leaving his wife, Jean; a son and a daughter. Jean lives at 32 Grahamp-ton Lane, Greenwich, CT 06830.

Chauncey F. Howe died in March also, in Delray Beach, FL. We do not have the date. He is survived by his wife, Katharine, who lives at 1002 Harbor Drive, Delray Beach, FL 33444; and two daughters.

Lloyd and Chan were two of the people we always associated with PA '33. We shall miss knowing they are there. We extend the sympathy of the class to their families.

Did you all receive and read the flyer with pictures of exciting Andover? Helen Rice Wiles wishes us a good summer — and I do, too. Along with this mailing was the card on which we could indicate our Alumni Fund contribution. Now turn the card over. There's lots of nice space for you to give interesting bits, and they'll be sent on to me for the class notes. I'll be watching for some.

In February I talked with Olive French Sherman. She had her son visiting her in Naples at that time. During World War II I had her son in my fourth grade. That is way back, but pleasant to recall. Olive now has five great-grandchildren (or maybe it's six). Can any of you top that? A note of sadness — her mother passed away last November. She was a lovely lady. It had been my good fortune to know Olive's parents.

Merrill and I had a lovely Easter. We spent two days with the Valkenburghs, (Alice Schultz) in their delightful new home in Winter Park. A happy call after our Easter dinner was from Mary E. Burnham Gazlay. Bea is now in her home in Hingham, after some five months with her daughter in Palm Harbor, FL.

Having no other news bits, I'll write about us. Merrill and I leave in ten days for Ohio. We'll be there about three weeks. Our #2 granddaughter will be graduating from high school in early June. We plan to be in Columbus for a week prior to that to be with our four-year-old grandson. Already I have figured on the route to the zoo! In August and on into September, we are scheduled for a cruise of the Mediterranean. A learning, relaxing experience we hope.

I must point out the demise of the citrus industry we see all around us. It is a tragic drive within 60 miles of Ocala in most directions to see the acres of dead trees. Efforts for a comeback seem to be to no avail. I guess we'll be turning more and more to horses.

We are sorry to have to report the death of Caroline Bullock Blaker who died 3 February 1985 at her home in Key Largo, FL. She was a sister of Emily Bullock '31 and a granddaughter of Harriet Bullard Bullock, class of 1862. All for now, Peg.

Edition II of World Travelers and Other Activists. Breen Ringland didn't make it to our 50th in June last year, but he made his own pilgrimage two months later, showed his wife and youngest son the campus — his first return to PA in fifty years. It's a marvel that he could recognize anything, but he says "everything is beautiful and brought back many memories." Congratulations to Ed Seymour, married again on 20 August 1984. His bride is Anne R. Sailer, who shares his trauma of combining two households. Soapy Chamberlin, returning from his world travels to greet Anne's two new grandchildren, will be spending the summer at Anne's camp in Disborah, east of the Soo, Canada. Sad news to report: Paul White, who with his wife, Ruth, added so much to our 50th reunion, underwent two operations between October and Christmas, had a stroke in January, another on the first of February and mercifully passed away on 3 February 1985. Thanks, Ruth, for writing, and our sympathy is extended to you. Dick Sargent, we have learned, died this year on 19 April, but I do not have any details.

Stimulated by the real and apparent world traveling reported in the last issue, Steve Powelson, Monty Munroe, and Do Miller all reported exhilarating spasms of extensive world travel. Based near Paris, Steve's travels are, like those of his Dutch uncle, Odysseus, heavily influenced by the events related in the Iliad by his tutor, Homer. Having now committed to memory the first eighteen of the twenty-four books of the Iliad, Steve, since his memorable recital at our 50th, has recited in New Orleans, was taped for television by the Hellenic Arts Society there, performed at Loyola University, taped an interview for National Public Radio, and rhapsodized thereafter at Groton, Exeter, Harvard and PA for audiences of students and faculty. He comments that since last October he has spent all his available time, about an hour a day, reviewing the first 18 books over and over in sequence to avoid losing them!

Do Miller says, and I believe him, that he and June have been around the world twice, the first time, a combined vacation and business trip twenty years ago. Then in 1984 to celebrate their 45th wedding anniversary, they did it again: New York, San Francisco, Shanghai, Nanjing, Xian, Beijing, Moscow, Kiev, Leningrad, Helsinki, Stockholm, New York. The eighteen hours flying from New York to Shanghai impressed them with the fine meals and friendly service offered in a jam-packed plane by China Airlines. Wish I had room to relay all the fascinating nuggets reported in Do's letter, but can reprint only the tantalizing vignette of Shanghai: "Riding at night in a bus emitting only intermittent flashes of light on dark streets among what must have been most of Shanghai's 13 million inhabitants riding their 5 million bicycles."

Not to be outdone, Monty Munroe writes about his travels with Eleanore for the last fifteen years. What they have done is stupefyingly Bunyanesque. If only I had the space to reprint all of Monty's letter! But here are a few highlights. Besides extensive air travel throughout the USA, including Hawaii, and throughout the Caribbean, Central and South America, they have transited the Panama Canal three times and sailed 12 times to Bermuda and the Bahamas. Since 1973, Monty and Eleanore have flown to Europe annually, concentrating on the U.K. and Western Europe. Then in 1980 one of those richly satisfying two-week cruises to the classical sites of the eastern Mediterranean. Monty has sailed on 49 cruises since the late '60s, his favorite ship being the QE II, on which he has made thirteen voyages. And guess what? On 5 May he embarked on her for the 14th time. Perhaps you wonder how Monty could do all that traveling and have any time left over to earn a living. Perhaps you have guessed. He's a travel agent. Sail on, Monty!

Can't believe time has passed so quickly since the last Andover Bulletin and it is just about time for another issue. My apologies for not following more closely with you but I have been up to my ears in activities. Retirement is never dull.

Was just about to despair of having anything to tell you when Ann Place Henderson wrote the following: "Life is very exciting living on the oceans: Atlantic and Pacific. This winter was busy with moving furniture in Carmel house back to Marblehead, cutting down huge dead pines, painting to ready house for selling. Having fun times with 3 daughters who live in Carmel, Santa Cruz, and Pescadero. Moved to Carmel in '61 but returned every year to Chatham, Cape Cod, which is really home. Live in an old windmill on the beach and an old stable overlooking the ocean."

"Had the good fortune of reaching Ginny Holden Keep in Madison, Conn. Anne Bunny Hurlburt Bradley '35 visited last May '84. She is coming again after her 50th Reunion and, hopefully, Ginny and Bud Keep will drive to Chatham to reunite with us. Have written to Sally O'Reilly Loria and hope she will visit some autumn to enjoy the colors.

"I am renting a house this fall on the island of Mallorca which my son found when he was over there racing a boat."

"Marcia Gaylord Norman '33 is a talented artist and lives in Chatham as does Mickey Barlow Hinshaw '35. I see a lot of them."

We are sad to report the death of Mary Moore Gustafson of Key Colony Beach, Florida. Mary entered Abbot in 1929 and left in 1933 to be with her mother who had been injured in a fall from a horse. After she left Abbot she enrolled in Ferry Hall School in Illinois where she was valedictorian of her class. "I was so lonesome for Abbot I would write Miss Bailey about once a month," she wrote. She then entered the University of Michigan and graduated cum laude with an A.B. degree in 1937. She and her husband were the parents of six children. Her husband, Floyd, lives in Key Colony Beach, Florida.

Reunion Notes: WHAT A GLORIOUS REUNION WE HAD! So many were back and all were in good spirits. The weather was even kind to us. The rain stayed away Saturday afternoon.

We proved to the Academy and all who were present, including other classes, what a great class 1935 is. We won the 1891 Memorial Trophy for the highest percentage of participation in this reunion year, if not since the award started — 44%! The count was approximately as follows: from Andover 54 classmates, 42 spouses, and 2 children. Including Abbot the total was 128 attending.

Then, too, we broke the Academy's record for the largest 50th Reunion Gift. It was $200,000 and the nearest to this figure was $163,000 by 1934. Special thanks for this fine performance are due to Fred Griffin and Bob Cushman.

For those of you who were not present, I am going to mention the highlights. Friday afternoon we had a lovely reception and cocktail party at the McNemar's home, the beautiful Phelps House. This was followed by an open air dinner at Flagstaff Court. Saturday morning following a special breakfast, again at the McNemars, for Non-Sibi givers, we had a memorial service in the lovely Cochran Chapel. Following this the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister was dedicated. This is a new set of rooms set behind the Sylvia Pratt Kemper Chapel which is in the basement of the Chapel. Then, as usual, we lined up in front of the Addison Gallery and marched to the gym, where Cynthia Eaton Bing '61, President of the Andover/Abbot Council, presided. There were announcements and speeches and, of course, 1935's two magnificent awards.

Following this meeting in the gym, we had our class picture taken on the steps of Bulfinch Hall and then an outdoor luncheon. The threatening overhead clouds were kind to us.

Saturday night we had cocktails, dinner, and dancing in a dining room in Commons — the one assigned to our class in our senior year. We had some of our former faculty members join us as our guests. One highlight of that evening was the piano playing of Barney Hurlbutt and the singing of the lovely song "Spring Will Come Again" which he wrote for this special occasion.

An amazing 44% of the Class of 1935.

The orchestra that Ed Cregg and Joe Dana selected was excellent.

Early Saturday afternoon we had a class meeting in Stearns House, our Headquarters. The following elections took place: Stew Leonard, Class Agent (Stew needs helpers. Volunteers, anyone?); Fred Grant, Class Endowment Agent; Fred Griffin, Non-Sibi Agent; Norm Cross, 1990 Reunion Chairman; Charlie Miller, Class Secretary.

Our thanks for this successful reunion not only goes out to the Steering Committee of Griffin, Cross, Cushman, Cregg and Dana, but also to our class agent Stew Leonard, Charlie Meyer, our Trustee, and to those of the Academy like Connie LeMaitre and Dennis Tippe and also to our two young helpers in Stearns House, Alan and Mindy.

Now to the sad part of this column. George Miller writes, "My wife, Elizabeth, died 2 October 1984 in Istanbul, Turkey. I have been able to cope pretty well with the help of three caring daughters. George's address is Box 932, Columbia, MO 65205.

We lost Adam (Jake) Wolf on 29 October 1984. He is survived by his wife, Patricia, and his daughter Nancy. Mrs. Wolf may be written to at 2025 Ammer Ridge Ct. #302, Glenview, IL 60025.

Only recently have we learned of the passing of Dick Ross on 13 November 1982. He is survived by his wife, Margaret, and two children. You may want to drop a line to Mrs. Ross at 2111 Popkins Lane, Alexandria, VA 22307.

And then, too, we have lost Jim Swihart, a member of a family whose father, a brother, a sister, a son, and a granddaughter all went to Andover or Abbot. After graduating from Yale in 1939, he worked for the National City Bank until 1942. He then joined the Department of State. His assignments included service in the American Embassies in Brussels, London, and Tehran. After retiring in 1968 Jim held many civic and community responsibilities in Casco, ME. Jim is survived by his wife, Susannah, five children, and two grandchildren. Susannah's address is Box 36, Casco, ME 04015.

Attendance Chairman Norman Cross '35 accepts the award for the highest reunion attendance — 44%.

Reunion Notes: What joy to be there on the Phillips campus Friday, 7 June. It was a spectacularly beautiful, crystal clear, sunny day.

Congratulations are in order for the superb job done by all the committee for planning and executing our 50th reunion. For all of us I say "thank you" for the hard work, devotion to the School, and for the sacrifices that were undoubtedly made in many different ways. The results were rewarding to all!

I am sure you are first interested in learning who of our Abbot '35 class came to celebrate our 50th. The following came for the whole weekend: Lucia Nunez Atlas, Anne Hurlburt Bradley, Ann Cutler Brecheen and her husband, Joel, Doris Anderson Clark, Frances McTernan Coan, Claire Cregg Derby, Eleanor Johnson DuToit, Katharine Scudder Fraser, Anne Humphreys Hammond, Ellen Rivinius Hill and her husband, Chan, Cecile Van Peurse Lane and her husband, Norman, Barbara Chamberlain MacCreedy, and Yours Truly with my husband, Wes. Others who joined us on Saturday or for parts of Saturday were Barbara Symonds Day and her husband Webster, Sue Hildreth Goodwin and her husband, Edwin, Shirley Powers Haseltine and a friend, Elizabeth Jordan, Doris Schwartz Lewis and her husband, Allen, Claire Oppenheim Marum with her husband, Hans, Jane Dawes McLennan and her husband, John, and Phyllis Harding Morton and her husband, Heywood. How about that for a good representation! Evelyn Chappell Swayze had planned to join us but because of the death of a dear friend, she changed her plans.

Registration at Andover, as always, provides plenty of reading material — the problem is finding time to read it! I hope others found the time. If I had, I may possibly have found the time to squeeze more in. At the beginning I wanted to stay at Abbot headquarters, a wing of Stevens House near the Andover Inn, to greet arrivals.

What fun to watch the reactions and hear the outbursts as friends recognized each other and that 50-year period melted away! There was always something planned, but some found it pleasurable just to amble around the campus. Because of the varied program we Abbot girls were not always together, so consequently this report is limited.

The reception Friday at Phelps House for the 25th and 50th classes gave everyone an opportunity to meet and talk with Don and Britta McNemar. Weather permitted cocktails to be served in their lovely garden. We walked leisurely across campus to Flagstaff Circle for the barbecue supper after which we Abbot girls gathered at the Bertha Bailey House (the second house up the hill from the Abbot Art Gallery and now a home for the Dean of the Abbot Cluster) for a few hours of reminiscing and going over photos, scrapbooks, etc. provided primarily by Ellie, Frannie and Cile. Congratulations to them for having kept these records for half a century. They prompted much hilarity. Morton House where we had planned to meet is being renovated to be used as a faculty home.

Following breakfast Saturday a.m. there was a memorial service in the Chapel where we heard the new organ that was installed two years ago. This provided time for serious reflection. This service was followed by a dedication of the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister. Mr. Baldwin had been chaplain at Phillips for many years. The ground level of the chapel has been transformed into a series of areas and rooms to form the cloisters, a truly wonderful way to memorialize a man who had served the School so well and to beautify a place formerly displaying utility pipes and such.

Next came the parade of the reuning classes. The bagpipe band led us up the Elm Arch toward the gym for the alumni/ae meeting while raindrops threatened to no avail. The large block of seats reserved for the venerable class of 1935 was impressive in size. Perhaps you heard the roar when it was announced we won the silver cup for the greatest percentage of attendance ever and a still louder roar when it was announced that our class went way over our goal of $175,000 for the Fund, achieving instead $200,000. After speeches and singing of "America" we had our class pictures taken, ate a delicious lunch around the Memorial Tower to the ringing of the carillon, until we were dispersed by raindrops.

At our class meeting, Annie Brecheen said she would continue for another year as our Class Agent, Anne Bradley volunteered to hold the new position of Class Endowment Agent, and Lucia Nunez Atlas graciously said she would take over the gathering of notes for the Bulletin three times a year. So, in a sense, this is my swan song! Please start sending your news notes to Lucia at 31 Eastern Avenue, Annapolis, MD 21403.

The Saturday afternoon program offered sports, seminars of varying topics, School movies, and the Abbot tea at Phelps House. Before Ellen and I could take advantage of any of these, we had to decorate the dinner tables with flowers and candles, this with the help of Barbara. After this I was glad to have time before the evening festivities to get some shut-eye; Ellen went on to hear a stimulating seminar. Ellie told me later that she took advantage with Scud of the "Spoil Your Supper" Ice Cream Party arranged for the offspring of alumni/ae. Picture them eating gooey sundaes while seeing the movie PA 200. Annie availed herself of the seminar on "Nuclear War and National Security" during which she "alarmed" everyone when an alarm went off in her bag.

In a dressier state we gathered at the Commons for the class cocktail party. It was crowded to say the least as the 27 tables required did not leave much room. We were entertained by Barney Hurlbutt PA '35, who played the piano continuously for about two hours — all the pieces that are so familiar to us. We appreciated his sharing his talent and his inexhaustible repertoire. He also commemorated a song he had written to our class and provided each of us with a copy. Very special! Our Abbot guest for the dinner was Mrs. Crane, former headmistress of Abbot. An orchestra arrived at the end of dinner for our dancing pleasure on into the evening.

We were pleased that Barney had discovered that there was a piano in the lounge at Stevens House, so many gathered there for listening and singing pleasure. Barney never seemed to tire as request after request was made and he could deliver! Gradually the group got smaller. We were reluctant to bring to a close a wonderfully happy reunion. I hope all the spouses who joined us had a good time. In the case of Wes, as we had been to my college reunion the week-end before, he said he'd be good to me through those two weekends but after that, watch out!

The next morning thanks to Annie Cutler Brecheen's urging, I took the tape recorder with the tape of Abbot songs and the song sheets to breakfast. We put two tables together and had our own songfest — all the old Abbot goodies. We were even complimented by some who said they enjoyed hearing us!

Packing time was then upon us. We truly needed two more days at least with no programs or schedules. It would have been a joy to walk through the sanctuary, around Rabbit Pond, around the Abbot Circle, and to take more time to learn more about what has gone on during the past 50 years. Let's start planning now for the 55th!

Since coming home, I have learned about Helen Tower Stritmatter. Mariatta, her sister, was visiting her brother Charlie where they recently had a big family reunion in Greenwich. Helen, prior to the family reunion, had broken her ankle which confined her activities considerably. She has now returned to Seattle. When I saw Mariatta she had some good pictures of Helen who looks so much the same that I am sure you would recognize her!

I hope we may all be on hand for the 55th.

A word from Chester Nourse "Still love retirement — involved a bit in Rotary and Country Club. Striving to hold a 10 handicap. All three children were with us in Florida for Christmas: #1 Alison (Abbot '69) is school principal in Manassas, VA; #2 "K.T." (Abbot '72) holding forth in Marblehead as merchandising exec.; #3 Victoria (Andover '76) is budding Wall Street lawyer." Chet concludes with a question, "Where is Bud Boutwell?" Answer, 122 Sea Breeze Circle, Jupiter, Florida 33458.

The Reverend Raymond Korndorfer: "Although I passed the 65 year mark last year, I am continuing as the Pastor of St. Paul's United Church of Christ in Taylor, PA (my eighth year here). I do have thoughts of semi-retirement one of these days. My golf game is still holding up (a 73 on a par 71 layout of 6000 yards), although I confess that I do better on shorter courses (a 102 on Valencia, a Robert Trent Jones master). Editor's note — to non-golfers that jargon means that the Reverend even though he shoots in the low 70s is still trying to get strokes. In almost the same breath he puns, "I will shoot for reunion in June 1986." See you then, Ray.

Here, as continued, from our last Class Notes are additional claims to glory PA '36 can make at our 50th reunion: largest participation in World War II; legendary teachers, such as Archibald Freeman, who taught their last class our senior year; Mel Chapin groomed for Chairman, board of trustees; defeated Exeter in all major sports our senior year. Come on, let's have some more claims to glory. They don't even have to be 100% true.

The class mourns the loss of Melchior Chapin Jennings. Mike died at St. John's Island 9 March 1985. He was born in Sewickley, Pa. (lived there during Andover/Yale days) and moved to John's Island in 1976 from Columbus Ga. where he had lived most of his adult life. Survivors include his wife, Gay Henry Jennings, Americus, Ga.; a son, Melchior, Jr., Columbus, Ga.; a brother, Richard G. Jennings, Jr., and four grandchildren.

John Bishop, Bill Hart and Hank Wood attended the memorial services. Andover and our class had no more loyal supporter and friend. Mike's love of Andover started his Junior year when he would extol life on the Hill during vacations, and "recruited" your secretary along with others. This Andover affair stayed with him all his life as witness the years of writing these Class Notes; frequent night phone calls to many; annual pilgrimages to the East to discuss his latest idea in the wonderful world of sports which truly was Mike's world. Mike was our Poet Laureate. At our last reunion he sent in a few lines, some of which are repeated here: "Our School is still here so the world is all right/Let us wave that blue banner as we did before/And pray to God that we make it once more."

The sadness that Mike will not make it once more is diminished by the joy and memories he provided and received during all associations with his widest of friendships in the class.

Much activity in the Andrews family as reported by Archie in his Christmas message which belatedly arrived at my desk. Space will permit only the highlights. Wife, Nike, whose "mysterious ailment of '83" has finally been diagnosed as polycythemia, not leukemia, is now much better under the proper treatment. Once confirmed bachelor son Archie III (Buzzie) married Lindsay Fallon, a charming British lass, on 3 September. Buzzie is a free lance computer consultant; the newlyweds will make their home in the Alexandria area. On 8 August Matthew Murphy Andrews arrived in the Duncan Andrews' Wellesley, Mass. household.

Duncan is currently with Wang Laboratories. Peter, the remaining bachelor son, is an architect in the Annapolis area. Daughter Tania, back from the West Coast, should have her airline stewardess position by this writing. Archie, Director of Exporters' Services of the Office of Export Administration (OEA), has survived the "turf battle" between the Departments of Commerce and Defense over the jurisdiction of OEA which Defense claims since the expiration of the Export Administration Act of 1979 in September 1983. There is a happy ending now to this bureaucratic drama. It appears that OEA is back under Commerce and Archie can now look forward to retirement in 1986 after completing 25 years of government service. Our collective congratulations to each of the Andrews family.

Our man in New Haven reports that De-laney Kiphuth, "our Class Agent Chairman (Yale '41), was presented during the Alumni Fund Convocation, with the Alumni Fund Chairman's Award for his long service to the Fund. Kip was also featured in the Yale Daily News for November 1 and 2 in an extensive interview on his 22 years as Athletic Director and his valiant defense of amateurism in collegiate sports."

Our crusading member of the Fourth Estate, Seth Heywood, forwarded this bit of Merrimack Valley news of interest to the Andover community, especially PA crews, and to conservationists and ecologists everywhere: "The big issue in our area (Nashua, Merrimack, Litchfield) is a proposed hazardous waste treatment plant to be sited very close to the Merrimack River, Annheuser-Busch brewery, and part of Nashua's water source. Naturally, there is strong opposition to the proposal and the Village Crier (see Class Notes Andover Bulletin, fall '84) is strongly supporting that opposition. (I just wrote a 'dilly' of an editorial on the issue — so if you read about a newspaper publisher found floating down the river, you'll know who it is!)"

My immediate reaction to this: Contamination of Nashua's water is bad enough but of the brewery — unthinkable! (Joe Coors take note!)

This update from Tom Lenagh: "In the middle of 1984 we changed Systems Planning Corp's name to Greiner Engineering and moved its headquarters to Dallas. I remain Chairman but no longer as CEO. I continue to commute from New York to Los Angeles and in 1984 went on the board of three Southern California entities: Tosco Corp. in Santa Monica; True Data Corp. in Costa Mesa; and the Western Airline Pilots Pension Fund in Los Angeles." It would appear from all this that Tom has no intention of joining the exclusive ranks of the LBAT's.

The Princeton Class of 1941 held its annual mid-winter reunion in Hilton Head last March for a few days of fun and games. It was a huge success in spite of the weather which was less than cooperative. There was something for everyone: golf, tennis, cycling, canoeing and jogging for the athletes; Savannah for the sightseers; seafood for the gourmets; pelicans and cormorants for the birders; and much more. Andover was represented by the Jacobs and the Rounds who shared a villa overlooking the ocean. Carl's needlepoint was the talk of the distaff side. I suppose that's one way to impress the ladies. Indeed, we are blessed with good friends and the opportunity to enjoy them.

The 1983-84 Annual Report reveals that 89 classmates (52%) participated in Annual Giving. Special recognition goes to our NON-SIBI donors: Al Brady, John Deming, Anne Sawyer Greene AA '37, Harry Hornblower, Carl Jacobs, Ralph Leavitt, Bill Quinby, Chuck Rounds, Howie Selby, Gordie Smith, Dick Tweedy and Jack Ware. The class can also be proud of its participation in The Addison Gallery and Baldwin Cloister Campaigns. In the fall issue of the Bulletin we will include the results of the 1984-85 campaign and will be able to evaluate the effect of the Co-Agent Network on Annual Giving.

I am saddened to report two deaths: Nathaniel Cullinan on 24 January 1984. He is survived by his wife whose address is 3221 Oberlin Drive, Greensboro, NC 27405; and Fred Horne in January 1985. He is survived by his wife whose address is P. O. Box 65, Rye, NH 03871. To their families the Class of 1937 extends its deepest sympathy.

Anent my sentimental write-up of Mike Garnett in the last issue I received a nice note from Mike of 8 November 1984, alluding to our visit and filled with cordiality; and then, in mid-March, a letter from Laurence Viney telling me Mike had died on 12 February 1985, of a heart attack. I wrote his widow, Tiz, expressing the great sense of loss to '38 and to me. I still hope to meet this lady who appears to have had such a wonderful influence on Mike. While on this unhappy subject I have to add notes on the deaths of two more members of our class:

I received word from the school in March that George Castle had died on 13 November 1982. I had had no word of George since 1959. He is survived by his wife, Nell, and she lives at 4000 Woodridge, Miami, FL 33133. To this must be added Jules Gregory who died 13 March 1985. I learned of this in a letter from Henry Steinhardt, a fellow architect with Jules, a long-time and admiring friend. They had had many professional as well as personal connections. Jules was a good correspondent, but I had not seen him since school days. The class extends its sincere sympathy to the family members who survive these deceased classmates.

To the brighter side: Ted Harrison is now associated with Devine, Baldwin & Peters, Inc., executive search consultants in Boston and New York. It was not difficult to guess he could never be idle in retirement (from Andover). Harry Adriance wrote of his continuing work in travelogues (Britain) and taking jazz piano lessons. He also enclosed an announcement of a showing of George Tooker paintings at Marisa Del Re Gallery, NYC, in February.

Two — repeat, two — letters from Paul Pattinson, from Escondido, CA. He'd been visited in December by Hank McDonnell and "delightful frau, Kit." I liked his description of Hank: "as with all of us, more handsome, suave and sophisticated and with a bundle of stories to tell." Hank is selling for Quanex Steel Co. Paul is in property investing. The second letter reported a lunch hosted by Fred Kent to get the West Coast contingent started on our 50th. Also present were Tom Conlin, Jim Lee, Joe Mayers and Tom Taplin. I got the impression of some business, good food and lots of stories, but no news . . . Pat Flournoy wrote asking for Garnett's address, so got the bad news. Other than a diatribe on some women, he didn't tell me much, either. But I do like hearing from these gents! Johnny Day has a place in Falmouth Foreside, ME., for summer use, the rest of the year being spent in Annapolis. He reminded me of the tragedy of Burge Thomas in 1973: John had seen him c 1970. Andy Palmer sent a card of Mt. Cook, New Zealand, urging my going there. We are set to go in Sept., but I am threatened with a DES trial that month and will probably have to cancel.

In happy contrast to Flournoy, John Rogge reported the approach of his 65th birthday, 42 years of which have been with a wonderful wife, and all marked by the continued existence of his father, aged 98! An active member of his N.J. community, John runs his own realty business; is President of Caring Medical Day Care Center in Atlantic City; Atlantic County Board of Taxation, and Brigantine Republican Club; and is a Director of Presbyterian Homes of N.J.; Betty Bachrach Rehab Hospital, and US Navy League (Lee may be in the latter). John's and Betsy-Anne's son Scott (PA '65), gets his M.D. degree this May; he already has a law degree. (He can now fight malpractice suits.)

At the Yale '42 dinner in NYC on 16 January were Abelson, Harrison, Murphy, Schulhof, and Wilhelm, but other than the pleasure of seeing them, especially Doc whom I have not seen in some years, I have nothing to report. Talb Allen has a Westwood, MA address, but lives in Millis, about 20 miles SW of Boston. Having sold his restaurant in Dedham, Talb now operates a 24-hour convenience store in Millis. Twice a widower, Talb married a lady younger than his children, and to keep pace with her, frequents a health spa, and joins all his family in an active life on Cape Cod. He has sons living in Wilton, CT, and Boca Raton, FL.

Now comes some embarrassment. I pride myself on using promptly mail sent from PA, but I discovered a fistful of old stuff: The oldest is a sheaf of papers on Dick Dyer's retirement as special assistant to the president of Colby College, Waterville, ME in 1983! But what a history: he'd been at Colby since 1950; had two books, including the 1954 Colby Oracle dedicated to him; received a Colby Brick for meritorious service to the College; wrote a lot of articles, and was honored at a dinner with three Colby presidents. I called Dick to apologize and gab, and found he's not totally out of Colby and is enjoying retirement. Another oversight was a brochure from Rudy Borchardt (August, 1984) on his plans to set up a part-time management consulting firm, featuring a variety of talents. This followed 42 years of experience in like manner for retailing, manufacturing and service industries. You can find him at 55 Bennett Avenue, Huntington Sta., L.I., NY 11746 (516-423-1843). Fred Born apologized for the delay! I wrote him 30 August 1983 and he answered in November '83 and here I am writing it up on May '85. He and Ellen were in the throes of a retirement move from St. Louis to Sarasota, FL (5149 Marshfield Lane, 33580), tel. (813)371-4479. But no news. Please write, Fred; I will do better. A last "timely" item was an article on Ted Yardley from the Falmouth, MA Enterprise of 5 September 1984. He was priest-in-charge of the Church of the Messiah, in Woods Hole, although, curiously, he attends services in Falmouth with wife and offspring. He was due to retire and return to the Falmouth church in December. He had been chaplain at St. Paul's School for some years. I had seen Ted who baptized my grandnephew at Quisset in mid 1983.

So my profound apologies, Dick, Rudy, Fred and Ted.

Lastly, a long note from Fred Kent reporting on his So. Cal. luncheon and PA efforts en route: visiting Jean and Bob Young in Phila.; Bob still active — law and tennis; telephone to Bob Wigley Vice Chairman, E.F. Hutton, but with little news; Ann and Dave Wilhelm at Tucson, Ariz., experiencing a touch of cattle-raising; Larry Barker and Bill Lynch: Larry en route to Indonesia, Bill farming north of San Francisco; and then the group mentioned above under Pattinson. Fred missed Hank McDonnell and Joe Hotchkiss. Maybe he ought to be the class scribe.

I would deeply appreciate any suggestions for lines of inquiry for a 50th-year Pot Pourri which I am urged to get going on. What interests you? What would you like to know or your classmates? Talk retirement, or forget it? Health? Grandchildren? Please write.

Another classmates whose death we learned of from the 1983-84 Alumni Fund Phonathon is John M. Loutrel who died in February of 1984. Unfortunately, we have no further details except for the knowledge that he is survived by his widow, who lives in Euless, TX.

Our only news is of the publication of another book authored by a member of the class. Congratulations go this time to Warren Blanding for his book Practical Handbook of Distribution/Customer Service, described in the advertising brochure as "500-plus pages packed with the 'wealth of the Indies,' the rich experience of the one person who has done more to establish customer service as a professional discipline in its own right than any other individual in the field." Indeed, an examination of the table of contents and list of 96 illustrations, forms, and checklists convinces me that Warren has said everything that there is to say on the subject. I hasten to add that I in no way qualify as an expert on customer service, having as a boy encountered stubborn resistance even when it came to selling the Ladies Home Journal to my mother.

Warren describes the advertising material as hyperbolic, but does say of the book: "It's the kind of book about which people will say 'It fills a need,' but beyond that it's hardly destined for the New York Times list." Warren leads a busy and productive life. This is his twelfth book on business subjects, he is the chief Operating Executive of Marketing Publications Incorporated of Silver springs, MD, and he is in constant demand for speeches and seminars.

As I collate these notes to meet a mid-May deadline, I see that it is May Day. Time was when that expression did not mean a disaster. I seem to remember that date in 1939 or 1940 when with other classmates we ate a huge breakfast at Andover Town Hall, courtesy of the Andover Workers United or perhaps Harry Bridges! It was considered daring at that time and was, I believe, arranged by the Society of Inquiry and "Doc" Baldwin.

Tom Rowen has done such a splendid job on Reunion that it would appear from a phone conversation today with the Alumni Office that we have 30 definite returnees, with almost the same number of "possibles." In addition to our hardy perennials there are some interesting potentials we have not seen for many a year. Listed too is Fritz Gerner who was an exchange student in 1939-40. The numbers are singles and do not include "great and good friends."

My mail bag runneth over with interesting notes sent through Alumni Office as well as direct posting to Bermuda. You are now aware of my address!: From Florida, Ponce de Leon's contribution to Western man, an eager group clamour for attention: Arthur Horwitz with a heavy-weight weigh-in, reports that he sold his Pennsylvania retail chain and is now living in Sarasota. Art has been in touch with Mort Brody and invites any other Gator-Staters to contact him. I can advise him that Al Goulard writes that he has now retired from medicine and lives in that Sunset State, and although he does not say where, I believe it is near Jacksonville. Al keeps busy fishing, gardening and tennis. Strange isn't it? I last saw Al when I stayed with him in 1940 in Westfield, NJ. Now my second son, Stephen, has bought a home in that town not far from Al's old home.

Tom Lewis lives in Fort Meyers and I know kindly Tom, although first a golfer, would be happy to see these former Northerners. Tom sent me a subscription to Guide Posts to contribute to my spiritual welfare. I appreciate the gift although I can never remember if I find a little Peale appalling or a lot of Paul appealing!

Further retirees: Bill Hart who left Columbia Gas Systems in July '84, moved to Duxbury, Mass. and commenced lecturing in the law in January '85 at Stonehill College.

Bill Hayler now on his last port 'o call to the Orient and Tontalavo with the California Maritime Academy, hopes to return in time for Reunion.

Tom Dea has been with the U.S.M. Corporation for 30 years. Tom, in Beverly, Mass., enjoys a life with family and I hope we see him in June. Jack Malo checks in from Denver with the news that daughter Libby Herter had produced twin granddaughters for Jack and Betty — a class first, I believe. A news item from the Watertown Sun of Belmont, Mass. reports that a Christmas Cantata was performed by the United Methodist Church in mid-December last. The paper reports that this Cantata was composed by Daniel Pinkham, director of music, King's Chapel, Boston, and a leading American composer.

A nostalgic note from Tom Healy advised that he is still attorneying with the N. Y. Central. Here's hoping we see him at Reunion. A visiting New Englander advised that he sees Tracy Dickson quite often in their home town of Hingham, Mass., and that Tracy is another hopeful for the June affair. An Irish friend advises that he will be attending a Foreign Affairs Forum in New York city on 7 May. Featured speaker is the Prime Minister of Eire, Dr. Garret Fitzgerald. The moderator, of course, is to be none other than our own Walter J. P. Curley, one-time U. S. Ambassador to Eire. A further item advised that Walter, with Dave Gile and Knobby Walsh helped Mabe Childs at the marriage of his daughter Laura last September.

I leave you with the thought that the world has to be a better place now that the head of the U.S.S.R. and the United States' Secretary of State wear fedoras that seem to have originated at Brooks Bros.!

Reunion Notes submitted by Dorie Sawyer Hoar Gordon. Shame on the Abbot class of '40. Only two graduates showed up, Mary (Myndie) Howard Nutting and me. Deanie Nichols Lane Sexton planned to come but at the last minute on Saturday, could not. You all missed a very special event.

The Andover Campus was spectacularly beautiful and we were blessed with gorgeous weather (a few rain drops during the Saturday outdoor picnic did not deter our fun). Ann Walen '45 and brother Ted '40 took turns holding my umbrella as we ate, and waited to be called for our class picture. Everyone laughed when a male voice said, "Hurry up, I can't hold my stomach in any longer." Sound familiar?

My husband, "Monk" (Westminster '29) joined me Friday evening for the 1940 and '45 class reception at Stow House. The cocktail party was held outdoors and we were welcomed with open arms by old and new friends and it took a lot of coaxing to get us all to move to Flagstaff Court for the buffet supper. It was a ball (with our same group) and we dined and chatted until after 9 p.m. A full and varied program was planned and executed for our enjoyment and education Friday through Sunday noon including a parade of all the alumni/ae. Of special interest on Saturday afternoon was an Abbot tea at the home of the Headmaster. We were graciously greeted by Don & Britta McNemar. Miss Sweeney was there and so popular that I was lucky to say "hello" to her as she was leaving with her niece, Joan Sweeney '45. I learned that Miss Hersey is living at Carleton-Willard Village in Bedford, Mass. which is an attractive retirement and nursing complex. The tea was a lovely event reminiscent of yesteryear.

Saturday evening was very lively with cocktails and dinner in Commons, and we were feeling very much at home by now with old and new friends, their husbands and wives. The dining room with its chandeliers lighting up the tables elegantly set for six and eight, brought to mind the tea dances held here, if you remember, and being here we felt quite nostalgic I must admit. A marvelous dance band played through dinner 'til 12 midnight. It was a fun time with wonderful music.

Myndie Howard Nutting who deserves a medal for her steady loyalty to Abbot-Andover over the years attended with her husband, Ed. Ted Walen and I sat with the Nuttings at dinner and it was fascinating to learn about Ed's Heifer Project and what it accomplishes all over the world as well as in this country. In a nutshell, Heifer Project International is a world-wide, self-help organization, inter-faith, non-profit, and financed by voluntary contributions that provides livestock, poultry, training and related agricultural services to people in de-

Myndie and Ed recently went to Vermont to pick up sheep. If you are interested in finding out more about this "Better World" project, call 617-281-2125. The brochure entitled "It Really Works" tells it all, with marvelous pictures. I got hooked, how about you?

I know you all want to know what has happened to our Abbot Campus, and I am happy to relate that the dorms are all in use except Draper Hall which is now used as a day care center for faculty children (first) and then open to the public. McKean is used for storage and the John Esther Gallery is being used by the New England Document Restoration Center temporarily.

This year, for the first time since the merger of the two schools in 1974, the senior prom was held in the Draper Hall dining room. It was painted and gussied up. A yellow and white tent was erected on the "green" and the seniors arrived at the prom in elegant style by horse and carriage. The walkways were lit up and it was a huge success with a large attendance.

The Abbot Cluster is one of six residential clusters. I am told this is one of the most active and popular on campus. So ladies, do not despair, Abbot does live on in Andover and very happily and successfully. All of life changes and Abbot was and is lucky to continue giving superior education and life experiences to our following generations. And where is there a more beautiful prep school campus?

Myndie and I plan to organize informal winter luncheons to renew Abbot friendships between now and our 50th Reunion in 1990. Ladies, we may never have another chance!

Mary Dean Naff Pugh, your Class Secretary, sent in replies she received from a pre-reunion questionnaire: Molly Chase Foster has collected another grandchild, first girl in several generations on both sides. She loves retirement on Ipswich Bay and is still doing usual civic jobs and plans to travel more. Peg Rabling McAvoy was widowed last September. She has six children and seven grands scattered throughout the country. She had 18 for Christmas. Winifred Wigglesworth Midden writes from Cynthiana, Ky. She has a son in Nashville, Tenn. and daughter in Lexington, Ky. Betty Weaver Alberts' husband is in a nursing home on Cape Cod and they could not come to reunion. Betty has three sons, one daughter and a grandson.

Jeanne Cowles Fleischmann writes from N.Y.C. that she is a housewife who paints. Her husband is board chairman for The New Yorker magazine. They have a son David Cowles Wilson, 31, a lawyer. Their daughter Nicole Wilson Beeke died in 1983. Jeanne has three Beeke grands and one step-grand. Her comment on being over 60 — "disbelief!" Priscilla Williams Dorian is an antique dealer. Her husband is a surgeon. She has three children and six grandchildren. Her interests are children, dogs, horses, and world peace. Loves the challenge of "being over 60." Deanie Nichols Lane Sexton is at home in Weston, Mass. Her second husband is a wool salesman. Deanie has five children (seven between them) and four grands. Two children are nearby, and three are scattered: Berkeley, Calif., Mexico City and Pakistan. In '83 Deanie visited Evelyn Gottschalk Zivy in Switzerland and they met again in England and Scotland. Deanie travels a great deal and she did plan to attend Reunion on Saturday. She is off to Pakistan this summer to be on hand for another grand, and to visit Evelyn Gottschalk once again.

Connie Cross Robbins is retired from Bell Telephone Labs. Her husband is an electrical engineer. They have two sons and two grandsons. 60 plus? "Hate being slowed down but love being a grandma." Eleanor Balcke Thompson is widowed and a free-lance editor. Ellie has two children and three grands. She had hoped to make reunion and thinks 60 plus is "wonderful." Mary Howard Nutting (Myndie) from Gloucester, Mass. is our most faithful Abbot class of '40 alumna. She is now coordinator for Alumni Presidents Council of Independent Secondary Schools. She and Ed, a retired minister, have two sons. Myndie can't believe she's 60 plus, and says "life is full and good health a blessing." She helps Ed with Heifer Project International, which I mentioned earlier. Jane Littauer Parriott, is now single and is a baker and loves it. "Taxi" has four children and five grands. She is "looking forward to retirement and more time to be creative and to stay in God's plan rather than my own." Susan Place Duncan is a partner, along with her retired husband, in a book publishing business. They have three children and a grand that was due in April '85. 60 plus? "I hope to have the time and energy to do everything still on my agenda." Rosamond "Pat" Elliot Sullivan has three children, her daughter Nancy Jean is an Abbot grad — '69. She and John have two grandchildren. 60 plus for her: "I'm happy with my life and look and feel younger than I ever expected. I can't make reunion, but I loved Abbot!"

Phyllis Crocker England is retired and widowed. She has three children and two grands. They remain close as a family. On being 60 plus: "I feel great and keep busy with good causes." Dorie Sawyer Hoar Gordon — I'll sign off adding that my second husband, "Monk," and I have been married 21 years and we recently moved from Maine back to Lincoln, MA. We have eight children between us and ten grands. One grand so far for me, Parker James Hoar (who lives in Montana), so we travel a lot and most of the children are scattered. I sold my art gallery in Kennebunkport, Me. so now have time to paint, bird, collect art, play tennis, travel and do a trillion things. Monk repairs ship models — if you sail by Squirrel Island, Me. this summer, come say hello!

You all missed a fabulous reunion. Our Vice President's brother, "Pres" Bush '40, came along with other PA '40s and their wives, so make a date for 1990, our 50th — Wow! — and join the fun and frolic. You can't miss the big one!

Keep in touch with your Abbot neighbors in between '85 and 1990 by writing to Mary Naff Pugh, our Class Secretary. You were sent up-to-date addresses this spring, so keep writing in your news, please. Let's make up for lost time in praise of our school. A-women.

Your replies to my request for a snapshot and news prove that Abbot Class of '40 is an attractive group of interesting women! Here's what I gleaned: Jeanne Cowles Fleischmann is an artist; Priscilla Williams Dorian is an antique dealer; Eleanor Balcke Thompson is a free lance editor; Mary Howard Nutting is coordinator for alumni Presidents' Council of Independent Secondary Schools. Janet Littauer Parriott is a baker at Sucheles Bakers, Lenox, MA; Susan Place Duncan, book publisher; Marietta Meyer Ekberg, family therapist, broadcaster, professional CLOWN, MIXIE!; Frances Chandler Futch works in her husband's office (he is a very attractive physician); Peg Rabling McAvoy is a board member of Wisconsin State Garden Club and an environmentalist; Pat Elliot Sullivan has retired from her business, "A Secretary for All Seasons" and is now director of Hawaii Literacy, Inc. a not-for-profit organization; Nadene Nichols Lane Sexton is a retired teacher; visiting her five children makes her a world traveler. Connie Cross Robbins has retired as a textile engineer and computer programmer and now is a genealogist.

Traditional housewives, tireless volunteers are: Marie Bertram, Winnie Wiglesworth, Betty Weaver, and I. We are all family oriented, concerned with improving our environment, our moral values, creating world peace, and stopping government waste.

From famine to feast — thank you classmates. I have received much news in the mail so this will be a full column. Bob Neilson even approached me in person at my wife's father's memorial service so I have one first-hand account. Bob is a realtor in Wellesley, Mass. so if you are looking there, Bob is the man to know.

Bill Bacon sent a card from Chicago with the news that he is no longer in management at Bacon, Whipple, but he remains a director. They have five children and eight grandkids. A severe back injury has driven Bill's golf handicap from 6 to 18. He is trying surgery and therapy and spends time at Vail (no skiing) and Delray Beach, Florida.

Arnold Reiche reported that he met Howie Lebowitz '81 in the Canary Islands. Arnold wishes to be remembered to his classmates. I hope that he writes with a full description of his present activities.

Someone sent an ad for Howard Boats clipped from the Barnstable Patriot. The "Bun" Howard in the ad is our own John G. Howard. They sell The Barnstable Cat Boat and the easy rowing Howard Skiff. Barnstable is one of the nicest coastal towns so John must have the best of all worlds. Joining John in small town living but in another part of New England is Tony Lynch. Tony is positively joyful when he contrasts the laid-back atmosphere of the Lake Champlain region with the toil and sweat of NYC where he paid his dues for many years.

I am so pleased to have a note from my roommate, Andy Chafey. It has been over 20 years since I've heard from him. I have been anxious to show him my respectable golf game, but I will have to go to Palm City, Florida for the match. Andy retired from Bethlehem Steel in 1981. Also retired in Florida in the Palm Beach area is Don Green. Don can now enjoy the water cruising along with some tennis and golf. Don met the McNemars recently at an Andover function in Florida.

Ray Peck must win the dubious honor of having the longest commute in the class. Ray's yarn company, L. P. Muller, recently moved its headquarters from Philadelphia to Charlotte, and Ray makes the trip south and back each week. I hope that he has joined Piedmont's frequent flyer program. Another commuter right behind Ray in distance is our Clinton County (N.Y.) Family Court Judge, Bob Feinberg. Bob will be holding a term of Court in White Plains in October as part of a judicial transfer program in N.Y. Bob and Laurie spent several weeks in the Soviet Union on a legal study tour. Bob writes, "We should never take for granted how heavenly blessed and fortunate we are." By the way, the Feinbergs live close to Montreal, and they know the best places to eat and stay in that interesting city. They'd like to share the information.

George Heiner wrote a long note from Pittsburgh describing their six grandchildren (ages five months to 15 years, four boys and two girls) as well as his business and charitable activities. George has served for 29 years as chairman and president of the Marshall Elevator Co., a family concern. In looking back at his industry (he also serves as a director and VP of the National Elevator Industry group), George is pleased with the way in which his industry serves the public.

Alan Cook is retired and lives in Westport, Conn. He has always wanted to write and to teach, and Alan is now doing those things. He and Pat have been married for over 40 years. Two of their children live in New Jersey while their daughter Kathy is TV Director of ABC's Wide World of Sports, and she lives nearby in Greenwich. Alan thinks that the class or at least some of its members have overcome Claude Fuess's description of us on one painful morning in George Washington Hall. I will agree with him if you keep sending me reports.

Some sad news — Randy Harrison died in Richmond this past winter, and Willo Fisher died in Castine, Maine in October. The sympathy of the class goes to the surviving family members of these deceased classmates.

In mid-May spring has definitely established herself in these parts of New England, but with the glory of the apple blossoms the orchardist must still be wary of overnight frosts. Those hardy perennials, asparagus and rhubarb, are flourishing and being enjoyed at tables in all their fresh flavor.

The Class Notes in the recent spring edition contained two errors for which the editor has profusely apologized. In reference to the 40th Reunion of the Yale Class of 1945W, the all important "W" was edited out. Also Bruce Calder was listed as PA Class of 1941 when in truth he is 1942.

What must I do to stimulate correspondence in this direction? My mail box has been significantly devoid of letters from classmates. With the more relaxed days of summer now at hand, please share your news with me and the class at large. Thanks for your efforts in this regard.

The April 1985 issue of Squash News reported that Jim Carrington was second seeded in the men's 60 yr. flight of the U. S. Squash Racquets Association National Tournament held in March at New Haven, Conn. on the Yale University courts. Jim made it to the semi-final round where he was beaten by Bob Stuckert who went on to win the championship. Good work, Jim!

Nate Cartmell, our Class Agent for the Alumni Fund, and I had lunch together recently to catch up on PA activities. He reports our dollar giving to this year's Fund appeal is holding well in comparison to past years, but the percent of givers is down so far. Let's write our checks and help keep up our good record of Alumni Fund participation.

Nate and his lovely wife, Ruth, had a major family event on 18 May when their oldest daughter, Sara, was married in Westchester County, N.Y. to William Tennis, an attorney with Lord, Day & Lord in Manhattan. Sara, Vassar 1976, will graduate this June from Yale Medical School and will begin her residency work in gynecology and obstetrics at N.Y. Hospital-Cornell Medical School.

Nate and Ruth have three other children including Nathaniel III, the oldest and only son, who is married to a law school classmate; they have a son to cheer their grandparents. Their third child, daughter Leah, studied at Vassar and is now doing theatrical work in New York City. Rachel, their youngest, graduated from N.Y. University in 1983. She lives in Portland, OR, working for radio station KEX, as a promotion and program coordinator.

In 1982 Nate succeeded Peter Welch as our Class Alumni Fund Agent, and continues to do a sterling job influencing us to give our fair share to the Annual Fund drive.

A letter from his son, Manuel E. Tavares, Jr. '69 informs us that Manny Tavares died on 11 December 1984 in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic after a long bout with cancer. Manuel, Jr. has two sons, six and four, whom he hopes will continue the Andover tradition in the Tavares family. He can be reached at Apartado Postal 146-2, Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic. Our sympathy and condolences go out to all of Manny's family on their great loss.

Have a good summer, keep healthy and please write me.

Got a little news for this issue without having to ask for it, and I can tell you that is a pleasure. Fred Miller writes that he is well settled in the Twin Cities selling for a New Hampshire company and with a territory about as big as New England. According to Fred it is almost 1 million square miles and since it includes the Dakotas there should be ample opportunity for bird hunting. Herb Shaffer reports that he recently spent some time in Italy visiting his son and daughter-in-law and attending a seminar in Venice on Historic Preservation which was right up Herb's alley as his business is commercial and residential restoration in Cincinnati. From Ned Tebbetts we learn that his career has been as Pension Actuary after training at MIT and the University of Michigan. Ned is a fellow of the Actuarial Society and also much interested in Democratic Party politics: so much so that he is taking graduate courses at Harvard in government.

Joe Houghteling comes through from San Francisco with the word that although a staunch Democrat he was appointed to the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency. Joe has served the area well as a conservationist having chaired both the State Park Commission and the San Francisco Bay Conservation and Development Commission. Hitting 60 this January, Joe was feted with a luncheon given by Nory Burmeister, Ray's wife, who was on her way to meet Ray in the Far East.

Phil Drake our classmate-Trustee sent me an interesting clipping about his Greenwich law firm, Cummings and Lockwood, of which Phil is managing partner. The firm was recently awarded a certificate from the Newcomen Society for its achievements in its field. It is not usual for Newcomen to honor a law firm.

And finally from Charlie Arnold an article about his company, Homer D. Bronson Co., one of the nation's largest hinge manufacturers which recently celebrated it's 100th anniversary. Charlie has been chief honcho since 1960 taking over from his father. It is expected that Charlie will be elected Chairman of the Connecticut Business and Industry Association this year. For a swinger like Charlie he certainly picked the right business.

Well, that's it folks, until this fall. Have a great summer and please call me if you are around the eastern Connecticut shore.

Your flow of news is dwindling, but I'm happy to pass on the word from a few more of the faithful. Nancy Corwin Wintter certainly has a far-flung family; a son and two grandsons in Fairbanks, Alaska and a daughter who has "gone up to do a bit of dog sledding with them." The Wintters anticipate retirement at the end of the year and we hope that will permit more time for using their houseboat in the next phase of their lives.

A cheerful note from Barbara Kaufmann Rosenwald which I'll quote in its entirety: "Hope everybody is well and happy and in good health."

More reference to our increasing maturity comes from Cornelia McMurray Brooks who sounds quite satisfied with retirement outside Charlottesville, VA and is enjoying the experience of being a grandmother to three grandsons.

Cynthia Teel Bouldin leads a full and active life in Ithaca, NY where her husband is an agronomist. In addition to a great variety of civic and human service volunteer activities, to say nothing of having raised four daughters, the Bouldins have lived in the Philippines for several years and should be recently returned from several months in Brazil. Welcome home!

I don't mean to sound ungrateful to any of you good people; you have yielded a better than 27% return on my postcard effort so far, and, eternal optimist that I am, I check my mail with eager regularity for word from more of you.

Let's see. Where were we . . . We left you in 1968 to go work in Europe, the experience of a lifetime. We returned, plus one child, in 1975, putting our nose back to the U.S. grindstone (no wine with lunch). Suddenly it was 1982, and our employer announced an incentive for those who would go do their thing and no longer his. We thus became gainfully unemployed, cashed in Greenwich, and removed to a piece of paradise called Skidaway Island.

To those appalled at our reappearance on the corresponding secretarial scene: you had a chance to volunteer.

A vote of thanks to Woody Dulaney for his service before he had to pass the baton. Long or short term, the job of fabricating news about classmates who won't write is daunting. Always felt Du and Dan Carroll did their bit covering the gaffes on the soccer field.

Among our world travelers, Anne and Jerry O'Brien have returned from a couple of years in Moscow where he was involved in getting things done in, and the bugs kept out of, the new 11-acre U.S. consular complex. They are at Box 981, Westport, MA. 02790, and plan a summer of basic R&R, much deserved. Then perhaps to take pen in hand for recounting and analysis of living vis-a-vis your friendly Moskovite and hopefully reflections on doing business with a lot of people in the world you'd rather not see again.

Mary Alice and Peter Roome, whose peregrinations probably cover as many miles inside the U.S., are now at 98 Putnam Park, Greenwich, Ct. 06830. Of recent note, Pete assayed the main line brokerage business and has now returned to scouting out private opportunities, where he can get his hands into the real issues and away from eager cherubs praying to the Great God Dow. Daughter Barbara recently married, living in D.C. Son Peter in Texas piling up degrees like a thermometer in July.

In case you didn't know or hadn't guessed, our class motor, Pete Stevens, has his eye firmly fixed on 1994 and has rounded up a great group, from Ault to Wofsey, to insure our 50th will be the biggest in all ways. Obviously, more will follow.

Somewhere out there is a notebook file on classmates we put together 20 years ago. Roger Strong, Dick Bull, J. Montague Fitzpatrick '42, or whoever has it, please ship it to Savannah.

With regret, we belatedly report the death by accident of John Franklin Lord in July, 1983. No further information is available. Our class extends its sympathy to his wife.

Reunion Notes: Brotherrrrr! Asking your Class Secretary to submit notes two days after a 40th reunion party like ours is really cruel and unusual punishment! I hope I don't leave anyone off the list of attendees.

The weather was great and, as usual, '45 broke all previous records! Our class dinner seating of 116 was 30 more than the biggest previous 40th. With thanks to John Blake, our Class Agent, our class gift to the Alumni Fund of $64,000+ was by far the largest for a 40th and was the third largest for the weekend, exceeded only by the 25th and 50th classes. We have the largest number of Non-Sibi givers of any Andover class (23). (Non-Sibi contributions are $1,000 or more). All in all, we're a pretty classy (and modest) bunch!

Many of the people listed below were with us from the opening salvo on Friday to the end of Bill Moore's and Vera's marvelous lobster, steak and clam bake on Sunday. Some were only present for one or two events. All were welcome and great to see again. Here they are: George Baldwin and Vera Faust, Bob Beach, Lee Bergstrom and Ann Allen, Brot Bishop, John Blake, Irv Bonbright and Shirley, Jim Burns and Ellie, Reg Collier, Brewster Conant and Elizabeth, Dick Couch and Cathy, John Ettelson, Myrt Gaines, John Gallagher and son, Charlie Gearing and Genie, Frank Greene and Marge, Pete Grosz and Lillian, Fred Hayes and Mike, Jim Herman, Pete Hetzler and Sally, Pete Holmes, Chet Homer and Carolyn, Jack Horner and Patty, Huston Hunting and Gwynny, Charlie King and Louine, Ted Kingery and Ann, Larry Kohlberg and Ann Higgins, John Lampe and Nan, Morey Levine, Phyllis and Morey's Dad, Jim Lebenthal and Jacky, Len Lewis and Ann Marie, John Little, Lenny Lunder and Wilma, George MacLellan and Mar-yann, Hal McInnes and Drue, Chet McCracken and Sally, Dunc Mauran and Louise, Ed Mead and Maurita Snyder, Jack Moffly and Donna, Artie Moher and Cornelia, Bill Moore and Vera, Harry Morgan and Caroline, Frank Naughton and Liz, Bill O'Shea, Burt Page, Howie Reed, King Pfeiffer, Bill Prior, Bill Saltonstall and Janie, Lee Siskind and Mynda, Ken Sutherland and Suzy, Jack Thorndike and Dorothy, John Vollmayer, Larry Ward and Edie, Dick Welch and Lulu, and Ed Wheeler. What a group! We also had the pleasure of nine Abbot '45ers and spouses joining the party (see Abbot '45 notes).

Also at the class dinner we were pleased to have Bob and Kate Sides, Deke and Dene DiClemente, Clara Maynard, Helen Bronk, Helen Leete, Steve and Stephanie Sorota, Dick and Norma Pieters, Jack and Helen Barss and Bob Hulburt. Fred and Sue Stott joined us at the Moore's and numerous other faculty celebrities dropped in at our hospitality room.

Four of the highlights of the weekend bear repeating (I can't remember them all!). Saturday afternoon Mead called Joe Wogan in Phoenix, AZ, person-to-person, collect, so that Joe could have the pleasure of talking to all his old buddies. Forty-five minutes later, Wogan was still pleased, but I'll bet Mead gets a collect call next time Wogan's in Afghanistan, Nepal or some such place! John Blake put on a memorable limerick-and-song fest at the class dinner assisted by the Doo-Ah-Ditties, Lulu Welch, Suzy Sutherland, Cornelia Moher, Ann Kingery, and Maurita Snyder. Broadway, watch out! Howie Reed did a solo basso rendition of an Alaskan 40th year lament (at least that's what I thought it was) that brought down the house . . . not applause, vibrations! Chet McCracken read a letter from Clara Maynard which described the many humorous and touching episodes that took Bob from being an anti-Abbot merger leader to the most ardent femmophile (!) on the faculty.

The Rev. Bill O'Shea was a major celebrant of services on both Saturday and Sunday and did a great job. He also acted as counselor to several class members who evidenced disorientation after various non-athletic events. Dr. Ted Kingery scrutinized quite a few skin outbreaks and zits, while newly-elected Lacrosse Hall of Famer, Dr. Myrt Gaines was available for questions on liver ailments. We were in good hands and all at especially discounted '45 class rates!

The low point of the weekend was the reading at the class dinner of the list of departed brothers which is now at 38.

At a meeting which I was asked to conduct after the Alumni Luncheon on Saturday, we permanently fractured Mr. Robert's Rules of Order and railroaded various citizens into class jobs. Ed Mead is the new Endowment Agent who will work with the School to try to get us to remember PA in our wills and also to make living gifts to the permanent endowment. John Blake graciously agreed as his arm approached the nape of his neck to serve as Supervising Class Agent for "one more year," but he will now be assisted by Ken Sutherland, Pete Hetzler, Hal McInnes and Brot Bishop. Additional volunteers would be welcomed. I somehow slipped back in as Class Secretary and Reunion Chairman to be assisted on future reunions by that dynamic group who fostered this great weekend — Bill Saltonstall, Dick Welch, Jack Thorndike, and Pete Hetzler.

It's such a pleasure to get together with a great group of people who share a love for our beautiful school. It's like going home to a family reunion and 72 hours of reliving one's youth. We missed those of you who didn't make it and sincerely hope you'll resolve not to miss the 45th.

Reunion Notes: I am writing these Class Notes just after a great 40th reunion at Andover. The weather was perfect, the program interesting and best of all eight of us from Abbot '45 showed up: Biz Marsh Birney (with husband Jim), Sally Leavitt Cheney, Gretchen Fuller Frazier, Ann Walen Churchill, Joan Sweeney, Jean Mulvey Friedmann, Marjorie Milne Winston and yours truly. We attended an Abbot Tea at the Headmaster's home (where we were able to chat with Miss Sweeney), held a class meeting (where we elected all of you who weren't present to difficult and time-consuming jobs), marched in the parade, partied and dined with PA '45 and their spouses.

Biz seemed to have the most news. While trying to raise money for Abbot she was able to talk on the phone to many members of the class (the best part of the job, she claims). Molly Robbins Blue is still in Babylon, N.Y., Mary Jane Kurth Longabaugh in Pittsburgh, Helen Norris Stearns in Coatsville with a horse about to foal (that's her business — horses), Bea Van Cleve Lee in Princeton, N.J. (with a daughter who just got married in May), Joan Mitchell Norton working in real estate in Connecticut and Mary Taylor Sherpick in Farmington, Ct. Biz and her husband have just retired to a farm on the eastern shore of Maryland, went on a trip to Greece this spring and were on their way to Freeport, Me. to visit a son who is pastor of a church in Yarmouth (where Sally Spear Morse is a parishioner!).

Jean Mulvey Friedmann has moved to Princeton, N.J. Her husband, John, (who came to the reunion dinner) has retired and all three children were out of college as of June '85. Jean is still reviewing books and has seen M. J. Hodges who lives in New York and Conn. and who works for Reader's Digest. She also reports that Judy Gage Moses' husband has just retired and they were able to travel around Europe in a camper for four months. When they returned they moved to Nevada. Others with whom Jean was in touch are Madge Twomey Keepin who is back in Los Alamos after two years in Vienna, Barbara Beecher Carl who is now living in Santa Barbara, Calif. after her husband retired as a bookseller (antiquarian and rare books); and Pete Boynton Pawle who is a librarian in Falmouth, Me.

Joan Sweeney lives in Mesa, Arizona during the winter and says that anyone coming through should get in touch. Marjorie Winston goes to Naples, Fla. (when it gets too cold on Lake Winnepesaukee, N.H.) and also welcomes travelers.

Other news came by letter from Ann Dorsel Monroe who was really sorry not to be able to get to reunion. She and her husband hope to visit their daughter who will be moving with her family from Sierra Leone, W. Africa to Sydney, Australia. Ann retired two years ago as school librarian and now tours school groups at the zoo and conservatory and does "grandmother duty" with three grandchildren in Charleston, S.C. and a brand new grandson in Denver, Co.

Sally Leavitt Cheney is living in Bethesda, Md. and is hoping to move to a new house in the same area. Grace Lurton is an account executive with Merrill Lynch in NYC and Ann Bushnell Bailey has just returned from a trip to Tashkent, U.S.S.R. (an unlikely excuse for not showing up at reunion!).

The very best news is that Gretchen Fuller Frazier has agreed to act as Class Secretary and will be doing the Class Notes from now on. Her address is: Mrs. Donald Frazier, Calderwoods, R.D. #1, Box 180, Far Hills, NJ 07931. Please keep the news coming.

The saddest news is that we had word of the death of Joan Hoagland Humphrey in July, 1984. Joan lived in Northport, Long Island, N.Y. and had conducted a television-interview program, "Artists' Quarters," in Worcester, Mass. before her marriage. We send our deepest sympathy to her husband, Dr. Burton G. Humphrey, Jr. and to her four children.

As the hair thins and the waist spreads, five years seem to fly by like no time at all. Next June will be our 40th! An anniversary to celebrate. Mark your calendars, lads, (13-14-15 June) and plan to come back again (or even for your first return) to spend a few days on the Hill with olde friends.

A note which was received from the Alumni Office from Roger Neuhoft reads: "All is well. Our daughter Marion was married on October 6th in Edgartown. I received a note from the manager of the Edgartown Yacht Club where we held the rehearsal dinner, with this statement: 'In the history of the EYC, never have so few drunk so much.' It gave me a warm glow." Another more recent note from D.C. and "old R.A." reads: "Louise and I will join you for the 40th festivities if you will guarantee festivities." Rog's Company, Eastern Broadcasting, has expanded recently purchasing WEAN/WPJB in Providence as well as WAVZ in New Haven. Years ago I first heard the old joke, "don't make waves" from the Zoot, now he's bought them.

Dan Anderson, who is also coming back for reunion, was named (last fall) chief financial officer at Guilford Transportation Industries. Now if Guilford isn't exactly a company whose name you hear mentioned alot over drinks at the Bull and Bear, get this: Guilford is a privately held railroad holding Co. based in New Haven, that consists of the Boston and Maine, Maine Central, and the Delaware and Hudson Railroads, and employs 4,500 with 4,000 route miles between Buffalo and New Brunswick, and Montreal and Washington. We are hoping Dan will attend in his private Pullman so we can set up headquarters down the hill.

I'm in real estate in Manhattan at this writing, selling condos exclusively for Bartlett Associates on East 56th St. Our listings are computerized and when the name James Mellor, developer, flashed on the screen recently, it aroused my curiosity. Subsequently, I chatted with the one and only Jim and he informed me that the project on East 63d was an old deal no longer in his hands. The Mellors may come back in the fall (growing).

Jimbo Morse recently remarried. Congratulations. More later. The Fridays have moved from Greenwich to Lyme (not Olde Lyme), Conn. more later. The Beigens are back from Europe, summering again in Weekapaug, R.I. The Lazos are still living in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Late April and early May have passed, and still no word from Heard. That uncashed ticket from the Belmont Stakes '84, is no longer any good, Cy, in case that was to cover your stay in town. Hank Ross is reported retired from Pfizer.

Charlie Vail, Dick Weeghman, Jay Cherry's wife, Ed Jones' daughter Abigail, were among the many with whom I chatted during the annual phonathon for PA. Abigail graduated from Vassar in May. P. K. Fisher has taken over from Martin Begien as Class Agent. We shall now rise for a standing ovation to Bege for such a great job over the years. (Let's have a long Martin with a Bege on the end.)

We are looking for a volunteer to chair the Reunion for 1986. Do I have any volunteers? All the best from New York. Have a good summer.

I have a note from Bob Remis which accompanied his Alumni Fund contribution. I apologize, Bob, if I failed to decipher properly the rather poor Xerox copy of your note that I received but here goes . . . "Ruth and I are both well and totally occupied — Ruth as a trustee of Tufts University, and I with business and as Overseer at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Three boys doing diverse things: Richard (Andover '72 and Harvard), Vice President at Bank of Boston; Bill (Loomis-Chaffee and Tufts), Vice President, Sales, Vernon Leather Co.; and John (Loomis-Chaffee and Tufts), TV productions in N.Y. and media productions, Boston."

One advantage of being a little late in making your Alumni Fund contribution is that you are apt to get a call from an old friend. Chuck Leach called last night on that account. He had recently talked with Dan Lackey in Boston and Bill Wood in Winnetka, both of whom are doing well. Chuck's daughter Alice Mary will graduate from the University of Richmond law school in 1987 which Chuck reminds me will be just in time for our 40th Andover reunion.

After reading my column about spending some time at Bethany Beach, Joe Champlin wrote that he had probably jogged past our cottage as he had been spending several weeks there each summer for the past ten years. In addition to his weekend parish work and regular office work as Vicar for Parish Life & Worship in Syracuse, Joe continues his authorship having recently completed Behind Closed Doors: A Handbook on How to Pray and Healing in the Catholic Church: Mending Wounded Hearts and Bodies, and working on Seven Special Signs of Grace: The Catholic Sacraments. Joe is also working on three 30-minute videotaped television programs for Argus Communications on preparation for marriage.

It is with regret that I inform the class of the death of Owen P. Stearns, Ph.D. He died at his home in East Sussex, England, from an apparent heart attack on 27 December 1984. He graduated from Bowdoin College and earned a Master of Arts Degree from the University of Wisconsin and a Doctorate in American History from the University of Rochester, New York. Subsequently he obtained a Master's Degree in Library Science at Simmons College in Boston. After teaching for a period at the Berkshire School and at M.I.T., Dr. Stearns moved to England where he continued to teach American History. He leaves his stepfather, Alvah W. Lyle Hall writes that he and his family have moved to a farm in Dover, Mass. where they are raising sheep and where he serves as Rector of St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church. He is also chairman of the board of the Stackpole Corporation, manufacturers of electrical and electronic components with plant locations in Boston, Canada, Mexico and the Far East.

Bob Baldwin and one of his real estate ventures were recently featured in a very extensive article in the Boston Globe. Bob, who works with LandVest, a Boston real estate brokerage and consulting firm as Director of Industrial and Commercial Services, was assigned to find a buyer for the old Lawrence Print Works complex. Despite a lot of interest from prospective buyers, the size of the property seemed too overpowering with a 20-acre lot on Merrimack Street that has nine buildings with 1.7 million square feet of space. After tiring of trying to find a buyer, Bob, who is also the head of the Yankee Technology Corp. of Lowell, said he drew up a conceptual plan for recycling the property and then decided to buy it himself. The mill, known as the Lawrence Print Works, for almost 50 years was one of the largest cloth printing operations in the world. Textiles from all over the world were sent there to be dyed and printed.

Three months after Bob purchased the property, the GCA Corp. of Bedford, a high tech manufacturer of semi-conductor equipment, needed more space and decided to lease 232,000 square feet of the new complex. With this major tenant along with the existing 10 tenants occupying another 350,000 square feet, Bob's group is able to concentrate on a 5-year rehabilitation and recycling project of the whole establishment. Plans include areas for light industrial research and development, office and retail use, and a restaurant and hotel. This would be the first hotel in the state to come out of a recycled mill building.

Work has begun on the first phase of the renovations including converting about 85,000 square feet into new office space. Two buildings are being demolished to make way for parking and plazas. The Governor's office has committed funds for construction of a 2,000-foot long walkway along the river adjacent to one of the plazas that is being constructed. Improvements planned by the developer and tenants are estimated to amount to 40 or 50 million dollars.

It has finally come to this! Despite the expenditure of $3.36 for 12 double postals and some time spent routing around for the proper addresses, my investment in the class of '48 has yielded only an empty mail box. I hope my tale of woe will inspire some sympathy and an uncapping of pens among you; as for the recipients of my cards, you must be feeling wretchedly right now.

What it has come to is a monologue by your secretary. Harry and I have three beautiful daughters who live in an enchanted castle in Boston. None of them is engaged in spinning flax into gold but the eldest will enter the practice of law in September so she at least is set up with a loom. We are coping with old age by alternately denying it and embracing it. Last fall I qualified for the Boston Marathon by running a marathon in 3:37. This March Harry and I went to Germany for the commemoration of the taking of the bridge over the Rhine at Remagen in March of 1945. His division, the 99th Infantry Division, had been one of the first across. And so it seems we are in a state of equilibrium at the moment.

Please write. If you don't you might get some more thoughts from me on subjects such as politics, carbohydrate loading and Bob and Ray. You wouldn't want that.

Reunion Notes: The 35th Reunion was a grand success, and generated a lot of enthusiasm for a giant gathering for our 40th in 1990. Nineteen members of PA '50 (and briefly, two from AA '50) turned up in Andover. Distance honors went to Erick Mack, who travelled some 10,000 miles — from California to Andover via Europe — to return for his first reunion ever. Erick, who is a vice president of Union Oil Company, brought his wife, Dagmar, and son Carter with him. James C. Miller II also made a first appearance at PA since 1950, arriving Friday afternoon from Oyster Bay, Long Island, with his wife, B.G. Jim was so taken with the warmth of the reunion that he agreed to chair a super 40th reunion five years from now. Others present who had not turned up at a reunion for a long time (if ever) were Todd Terry and Valerie from St. Louis, Dudley Yost from Cleveland, and our class prize man, Thomas P. Gordon. Tucker arrived from Pittsburgh with his wife, Katie.

Travelling the least distance were architect Jim Malcolm and Beverly from Andover, while Dan Collins and Mary journeyed all the way from Plaistow, NH (Dan practices medicine in Haverhill, Mass.). George Jacoby and Lee came from Marblehead with their son Rob; George specializes in infectious diseases at Massachusetts General Hospital and teaches at Harvard Medical School. Tony Herrey arrived Friday and reported that his daughter Dorothea did indeed graduate from PA the previous weekend, and that his wife, Maria, took her Ph.D. at Harvard the previous day. From Concord we had Charlie Flather and Kitty, whose daughter Kate has also just graduated from PA. Kitty, AA '59, is knowledgeable about reunions, having last year co-chaired an enormously successful Andover-Abbot 25th Reunion. Herkus W. von Lettkemann came for dinner Saturday; Lucky is with MIT and a captain in the active Naval Reserve.

Dick Suisman arrived Friday from West Hartford, where he is now developing real estate with his brother John. Saturday also brought regulars Bill King and Sue from Woolwich, Maine. Bob Martin and Joanna, both senior foreign service officers, flew in from Washington. Palmer Y. and Eleanor, a.k.a. Pim and Hutch Epler from Stratford helped represent Connecticut along with Dick and Anne Bell from New Haven and George Webb and Judy from Darien. George and Judy's daughter Emily did fine service Saturday evening with the hors d'oeuvres trays, and young George III very professionally recorded the entire weekend's proceedings on videotape. He edited and spliced late Saturday night so that we could have continuous showings at the class brunch Sunday morning. The tape will now be a permanent fixture at all future 1950 reunions, rivalling the grainy silent film of the 1949 Andover football triumph over Exeter.

On Saturday afternoon there was a brief class meeting, to re-elect your Class Secretary and Class Agent and to round up additional agents to help Pim Epler with the Annual Giving Campaign. George Jacoby, Charlie Flather and Dudley Yost agreed to serve. There was a good deal of talk about our next reunion in 1990, and after testifying movingly to his delight at returning after 35 years, Jim Miller volunteered to chair our 40th. After dinner Saturday there were some impromptu toasts; Dick Bell paid tribute to the class, noting that PA's historian, Fritz Allis, has characterized 1950 as a transitional class — between the benign paternalism of Claude Fuess and the "frequent, thorough and unannounced searches" of John Mason Kemper. There were special thanks to our co-chairmen, Gibb Cornwell and Leigh Quinn, to their respective wives, Nancy and Mary, and to Dick Suisman, for organizing a wonderfully successful reunion, entirely worthy of 1950.

The Class of '50 at the Memorial Gym.

Josh Miner, who is about to retire as Dean of Admissions, was guest of honor at an Andover-Abbot Association dinner at the Phillips Gallery in Washington last April. Noelle and George Beatty were there, representing Andover-Abbot 1950, as well as Bob Biern, M.D., from Annapolis. I also saw Eric Wentworth and his wife, Ansley Wallace, who report that they have opened the Wallace Wentworth Gallery — exhibiting contemporary paintings, sculpture, and other work — near Dupont Circle in Washington, D.C. Eric is a vice president of the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) — also near Dupont Circle — and does some painting of his own as time allows.

I hope that you have responded generously to the appeal for our 35th reunion gift to Andover from our hard-working Class Agent, Palmer Y. Epler. Pim is also on the Reunion Committee, which is directed from Dartmouth College by Hematologist Gibbons Cornwell, M.D. Leigh Quinn of Quintone is handling local arrangements from Winchester, Mass., and you may have had a call from Committeeman Dick Suisman urging you to return to PA in June.

Anthony Herrey writes that he'll join our proceedings after first turning up to see his daughter Dorothea K. Herrey graduate after three years at Andover. Last fall John Clark Pratt, Lieutenant Colonel, USAF (Ret.) and Professor of English at Colorado State University, published Vietnam Voices: Perspectives on the War Years 1941-1982 (Viking, Cloth, $25. Penguin, paper, $12.95). This is a wonderful melange of material — everything from GI graffiti and letters to cables, speeches, journalism and chunks of novels about the war. John's former and current professions, his own experience in the Vietnam War, and his literary skill, combine to produce a remarkably evocative collection.

And a final note that Tom Keefe, President of the Galveston-Houston Co., has been elected a director of Lennox Industries of Dallas, Texas, a national manufacturer of heating and air-conditioning equipment.

Her eldest daughter, Susan, lives in Portland, Maine; she teaches fourth grade and her husband is with Power Products. Jody, the middle daughter, is a social worker in Manchester, NH and lives in Concord. The youngest daughter, Debbie, recently married Rudi Widbiller, who works for Dartmouth college; Debbie is employed at Mary Hitchcock Hospital. Joy had the fun this winter of traveling to Germany to visit Debbie's new in-laws. Joy reports a wonderful trip, even though she speaks no German and her hosts speak no English!

Mary Jane Greenwald Denzer now has two women's specialty shops, one in White Plains and one in Westport, Connecticut. Her husband, Alan, has joined forces as business advisor and Mary Jane is very excited and enthusiastic about her career. She hopes that any of you who are in the vicinity of her stores will give her a ring and come by. Mary Jane and Alan's youngest child, Holly, is a student at Greenwich Academy.

Noelle Blackmer Beatty is a freelance writer and editor in Washington, DC. Noelle is also the mother of three children — one an actor in Cambridge, Mass., one a sophomore at Carnegie-Mellon University, and the third a high school student. Noelle and Alice Russell Farnar are the co-chairmen of the Gifts Committee for our reunion gift and we appreciate their time and effort in this undertaking.

I would have loved to have been at reunion, and certainly would have attended but Joe and I have for some time planned a trip in June to celebrate our thirtieth anniversary. While you were waving your yellow banners, we were in the Scottish Highlands. But we thought of you all. I hope that someone will write me the news!

luncheon in the Boston area. How nice to hear of our class keeping in touch.

Just think, next June will be our turn for a reunion at PA. The School is working on it now. Please mark your calendars for 13-14-15 June; we will keep you informed. Barbara Gibson Roth said she would drive up to attend the All Volunteer Weekend, September 28th to represent our class, and to see what ideas they have for our 35th reunion in June.

One evening last January I had a phone call from Marcia Crane Starcher, Orlando, Fla. She wanted to know if I could give her the APO number of Sally Mason Crowell. Ed Goldman's wife, Bizzie died 17 August 1984. They had been married for 16 years. From what Ed told me, it was a long, difficult fight against cancer that she faced with great courage and dignity. Ed is now Vice-President of Phoenix Federal Savings and loan. His son, George, 14, plays American Legion Ball as an outstanding quarterback. His daughter Melissa, 9, is a diving champ who does as well out of the water ("three B's" she told me, "all the rest A's") as in.

Neil and Barbie McCorvie were in the middle of giving a dinner party when we called to tell them our car had broken down in Fairfield. It was amazing. They picked us up in five minutes. Brought us back to their house. Gave us dinner. Beds. Toothbrushes. And after breakfast the next morning, helped us find a mechanic. It was a great evening. We got to hear about some of the things Neil has been doing in his new capacity as a marketing/sales consultant for major U.S. companies. And they got to hear about our fuel filter.

Al Korschun sent us a copy of an article he'd written for Florida Realtor on the subject of real estate rentals: "Rentals are my business, my only business." Al has also written articles for Real Estate Today and American Salesman, and currently does a feature series, "Profiles of Real Estate Success," for the Kendall-Perrine Board. For the record, Al also mentioned that he'd opened up his own real estate company in Miami specializing in rentals . . . that he was on the local Board of Realtors as chairman of the Education Committee and a member of the Ethics and Arbitration Committee. Due to an out-of-town Christmas and unforwarded mail, I unfortunately missed the deadline for the spring issue of the Bulletin. But I have not missed the deadline for the summer issue, so will include first the news I received back in the winter months.

Muffy Grant Lynch writes, "Our oldest of five daughters, Melissa, was married in September and Elizabeth graduated from Middlebury last May. We have two others in college currently and an 8th grader at home. I'm currently president of the Board of the Family Center, the family counseling agency of Greenwich, following a term as President of the Greenwich YWCA Board. Had a wonderful visit with Julie Gaines Phalen and Cliff last summer, and with Anne Oliver Jackson recently." A lovely article co-authored by Anne is in the Fall/Winter Andover Bulletin.

Ann Zuill Williams announces the marriage of her daughter Ann Julie on 8 December 1984. Betsey Hitzrot Evans had a visit with Zoo's oldest daughter and baby in Bermuda where she and her daughter Katy were visiting the Hitzrots for a school vacation. The Zuills and the Hitzrots have become friends over the years.

I had a nice visit over breakfast with Connie Weldon LeMaitre, Director of Annual Giving for Andover. Connie still lives in Andover and has five children. Kathleen, in her first year at Georgetown Medical, George, Jr., a junior at Stanford, and triplets (two boys and a girl) at PA! She urges any traveling alumnae to stop by the Alumni Office for a tour and visit. Connie is doing a super job, and would like to hear from all of us!

After my post card barrage, I was hopeful of additional news which happily I have received. Hurrahs to all who have sent news! Please keep it coming! Carol Hardin Kimball has occasional visits with Connie LeMaitre, when Connie's job takes her to NYC. Carol urges all of us to aim for 100% contribution as a vote of confidence for our classmate who is doing a fantastic job. Carol works for the Environmental Defense Fund raising money. Her daughter Jennifer (Andover '80) is a senior at Amherst, and son Andrew a sophomore at Hamilton.

Dorothy Giles Ham married James Arthur Tufts on 25 August 1984, and is living in Exeter, NH. Youngest son, Caleb, is expected to make almost full recovery after six weeks in a coma, the result of an auto accident. Her real estate business in Seacoast, NH continues to thrive. Libby Hollister Zimmerman spends a lot of time on Cape Cod drawing and painting in the field while her husband writes an ecology book for the layman. She had a nice visit with Pat Eveleth Buchanan and husband, and says Pat seems to be happy with her commercial art. Also had a phone conversation with Ellen Smith. Libby's art work is of birds and landscapes, and having viewed one of her brochures, I can say they are exquisite!

Bernadette Boyle Gutter is now associated with a violinist, Karen Greenwalt, with whom she performs regularly. The two of them hold classes of about 40 students who play and perform chamber music. She has two daughters at Lehigh University, one a sophomore and one a senior. Another classmate involved in the performing of music is Diana Stevenson Banat. She and husband Gabi played in Spain last summer with their Banat Baroque Ensemble, thus justifying a wonderful vacation. In the early fall, Diana joined the N.Y. Philharmonic tour with Gabi to Japan, Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Indonesia, Singapore, and three cities in India, playing three concerts in Japan with the baroque group. Next summer the violin will take her to Europe, E. Germany, Hungary, Athens, Istanbul, and Israel! We have some real talents among our class. Let's hear from more of you!

Anne Oliver Jackson, recently a Trustee of Andover, is now President of the Independent School Chairmen Association, an organization of approximately 125 chairmen of independent boarding and day schools. She is Chairman of the Board of Sewickley Academy and on the Governor's council on public education. Sounds like a busy life! Ann Kennedy Irish is the new and first woman Chairman of the Board at North Central Michigan College in Petosky. She has two married daughters and awaits her third grandchild in September. A third daughter is at U-Michigan in Art School, and a son who is a senior in high school. Her husband, Dave, recently sailed on a 12-meter boat in Bermuda, and their Irish Boat Shop is busy and healthy. Ann's goal for 1985 is to increase our class percentage of donors! Hear that Connie? Let's all help her achieve that wonderful goal. Your secretary is thrilled to announce that I am a PA parent as of this September when son Daniel becomes an Upper. Will be such fun to talk to Andover boys and I look forward to frequent visits to the campus.

The silence is broken! News at last, in this order. . . Johnny Bloom, headmaster at Worcester Academy for the past 10 years, has resigned to look for new opportunities. Johnny joined Worcester Academy as a soccer coach and mathematics instructor just three weeks after graduating from Brown in 1958, and was named headmaster in 1974.

Worcester's board of trustees president, Duane Sargisson, said that . . . "Bloom's resignation came unexpectedly to the board. He has done a marvelous job as headmaster." . . . Another of our class academics, Charles Dickinson and his wife traveled to China early last summer, and in the course of their travels, read two hours of poetry to some 200 Chinese students and teachers. Reported the New York Times, "Some [students] clutched tape recorders. Others followed along with mimeographed copies of the poems. The rapt silence was interrupted by periodic applause and laughter as Charles E. Dickinson and his wife, Joanne W. Eaton, acted out the poems, employing a variety of voices, accents and body movements that most Chinese scholars would have considered beneath their dignity."

Dan Woodhead's son Jeff graduated from Andover last June, and spent a tough summer, Dan says, working aboard the Royal Viking cruise ship. . . . Peter Behn, who is very active in the Vermont real estate development movement, offers to help find accommodations for anyone who plans to ski at Sugarbush. . . . Les Blank was recently honored by Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History. This fine institution presented a major retrospective of Les's films, and Les was there to introduce and discuss them. His newest film, In Heaven There is No Beer, about Polish-American polka dancing, has been awarded the Golden Eagle award to represent the U.S. in foreign film festivals. . . . Frank Stella was the subject of a marvelous profile in the New Yorker last winter; hope you all caught it. One of Frank's works was recently unveiled at the entrance of the Prudential-Bache building; another in the lobby of New York's new Rivergate condominium; and a third in the lobby of One Seaport Plaza, a large office tower adjacent to South Street Seaport in New York. . . . A nice note from Dave Underwood reminds me that the NON SIBI drive continues, seeking individual contributions of $1,000 or more.

Bob Carmody's going to be a busy fellow so long as the government continues its active crackdowns on government contract frauds (e.g., GD, GE). Bob's been made Special Assistant U.S. Attorney in Washington, with government fraud prosecutions as his special focus. . . . Ken Pruett was unable to make our 30th reunion, writes that he made his 25th at Harvard, but still prefers life in Hawaii to the Yard. . . . Bill Dove wrote that his son recently graduated from the University of Wisconsin. . . . Newby LeRoy's son Bob is following in his old man's footsteps at Andover, class of '88.

I've had some very pleasant meetings in New York recently with Malcolm Swenson, who runs a major stone importing firm called Ameristone. . . . Had a long talk with Bill Agee '55 at the Josh Miner celebration dinner in New York during the winter; Bill's an art critic and curator who's now trying his luck as an independent art consultant in New York. . . . Talked with Tim Hogen who's become a major help to Dave Mackenzie in our annual alumni fund raising drives. . . . and while bicycling through Central Park one day, encountered Steve Wilson and his lovely lady Pauline. . . . My public relations business continues to thrive; we've just added Hertz, Howard Johnson's and Manville Corp. to our growing list of major corporate clients. . . . I hope you'll keep sending in your class notes; you have a lot of friends out there who would like to know what you're doing.

Peter Gilbert's debut spring Bulletin was grand — except 1954's lack of representation was sorely missed! Send your news ANY time — pre/present/past, or by post card, or how about even a phone call?

What an interesting year so many of you have had! Grier (N.J. Smith) Catledge traveled with her son to Russia on a professional tour of medical facilities and to present a paper. Last year N.J. traveled to China with the same organization. When home in Florida she continues to operate her Therapeutic Learning Center. Sam Thayer finished her sixth year as a Cluster Dean at Andover and is looking forward to a year's leave in '85-'86. Husband Philip goes on sabbatical so they will be traveling to England and other European countries, and the Caribbean. New Hampshire will be home plate. Andover will miss her unending energy and enthusiasm!

I always love hearing from Pana De Cholnoky-O'Connor in France. Pana writes she loves "to hear what is going on in the lives of friends who, sadly, I haven't seen since leaving Abbot. . . ." (see how much joy your news generates?). Two of Pana's children (one 21, one 16) want to move back to the states, so maybe it won't be long before we can have a gathering upon her return. Mimi Ludlow Crandall returns to Attleboro from Minnesota. Husband John was called to be Rector of the Episcopal Church. Their son Bill has one year left of college in Duluth; daughter Meg a sophomore in high school; and eldest son John working in Bedford will be married in May — and speaking of weddings (good grief! is this Life, Phase II?) Nancy Donnelly Bliss's daughter Sarah was married 25 August 1984 to John B. Seamans. The wedding took place in Marblehead with grandfather Rev. Daniel Bliss, D.D. performing the ceremony. Nancy's son Daniel graduates in June from Bates and plans to teach and lead canoe trips on the Allagash Wilderness Waterway. Nancy continues to teach kindergarten, work for the Red Cross, and enjoy their time in Maine!

Ferd and I will be in Greece celebrating our 25th wedding anniversary (and Ferd's big 50) and in Switzerland and England on business so we are unable to attend the wedding of Audrey Davis Trowbridge's beautiful daughter Duane — disappointing, but Audrey and I have plans for a reunion in Boston this fall. Would love to see Sue Larter Lingeman too. Sue writes she has become a serious painter-artist, but continues her involvement with Hospice. Sue's eldest daughter, Anne, is spending her junior year from Smith attending Amherst where she met Paula Priol Folkman's daughter Laura. Sue's other daughter Sarah attends Windsor School and is busy applying to colleges for fall of 1985. Byron continues as ophthalmologist at Mass. Eye and Ear . . . just as busy is Sarah Harrington Williams (with husband, three dogs, five cats) and three grown step-children and five grandchildren all living in the area. Sarah is involved in a computer operations course, training hearing eye dogs, and bowling in three leagues. . . busy but happy. And so is Marti Belknap Brennen and husband, Bill, who are building a home in Gold Hill Co. Marti is teaching preschool, gifted children and university graduate courses for teachers. Her first book Taming Your Dragons will be published soon. We'll be watching for it, Marti. Congratulations!

Diane Cookman Stallworth and her husband, Clayton, were in Pittsburgh so we all had lunch together; talking more than eating! It was a great afternoon and Diane looks fabulous — so did Vicky Schwab Aronoff in all the Ohio election pictures. Husband Stanley won by 70% and is Senate Majority Leader. I had thought D would see Vicky during a paddle tournament trip to Cincinnati this winter, but having the flu and playing (my partner and I won the Reprieve Cinn. Open) P couldn't get to see her. Next time!

Our daughter Betsy is District Manager Automotive Div. Union Carbide in Cincinnati so I try and get there often. Eric graduates from St. Lawrence in May and Sandy is a freshman at Northwestern, so we have filled our nest with dog, and cats Hobie and Schooner! Another chapter begins. . . time, talents and space ebbing away — happy summer and remember to send me a card from wherever you are or will be!

Reunion Notes: Time: 7-9 June 1985. Setting: PA campus and nearby Methuen, MA. There is a manicured appearance and lushness to the setting which suggests painstaking maintenance and a refreshing rain for the preceding three days. The weather, however, will be generally sensational during the action with just a sprinkle or two during mid-act II to satisfy a 30-year-old tradition.

Synopsis of scenes:

Act I — Scene 1: A late Friday afternoon reception with the Class of '50 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Mesics.

Act I — Scene 2: A picnic repast in Flagstaff Court.

Act I — Scene 3: Entertaining address by Josh Miner in the Cochran Chapel.

Act I — Scene 4: Evening of nostalgia and good spirits at the Graham House Headquarters.

Act II — Scene 1: Dedication of the Graham Baldwin Memorial Cloister (a must-see on your next visit).

Act II — Scene 2: Reunion Parade and Alumni Luncheon.

Act II — Scene 3: Class of '55 Dinner.

Act III — Scene 1: Traditional brunch at Chez Doykos with the Class of '80.

The Cast (in alphabetical order): John Adams, making his first reunion appearance, is an attorney in NYC who will be leaving in August for Montana to help his brother build a log cabin. Bill Agee with his daughter Cintra who enters Andover this fall, in from Bronxville, NY, a Smithsonian Fellow in 20th Century American Art and is a freelance consultant to various museums on how to enhance their catalogues and exhibits.

Tony Barlow, with sons Ethan and Ben, is planning a career change from banking to the financial aspects of the ecological or fine arts field. Olin Barrett, who with wife Ann and daughters Carolyn and Amanda, topped off a cross country vacation with a 30th reunion, is VP at Scudder Stevens & Clark, LA investment counselors. Dale Blake and wife Eleanor in from Glastonbury, CT where he is a design engineer with International Fuel Cells.

Brian Claxton, director of this production while standing in as a Principal Product Planner for National Semiconductor. Fredrick A. "Fritz" Cooper, making his reunion debut while here to see his daughter pick up a PA diploma, is an Andrew W. Mellon Professor at the American School of Classical Studies in Athens. Coop is looking forward to a repatriation later this year. The John Doykos' clan numbers ten from Jack in the Class of '55 to Bernadette in the Class of 2000. The world's jolliest pedodontist, with wife-mother-hostess Joanna and daughter Cassie, who was reunion Chairman for '80, capped a great weekend with a scrumptious brunch Sunday morning at his home in Methuen.

David Haartz was with an attractive guest named Marilyn Fingerhut in from Cincinnati where he is with the Drackett Division of Bristol Meyers. Karen and Charlie Helliwell, a Deputy Director at MIT, returned with daughter Holly who was celebrating with the Class of '80. The Helliwells observed their 25th anniversary recently by moving into a new house in Dover, MA. Tat Hillman is a free lance computer programmer in Radnor, PA and a strong contender for the Dorian Gray Award. Bob Johnston is much better at trading index options in Charlottesville, VA than at explaining to an unemployed Hollywood actor what an index option is. Winner of the Class Secretary-awarded Dorian Gray Award, was attorney Gerry Jones who was short on news about himself (his wife, Emily, was in attendance of his portrait in the attic), but couldn't say enough about PA senior daughter Ginna, co-captain of the girls' hockey team and heroine of many a crucial play which proud dad will enumerate with minimal encouragement.

Laura and Walt Levering made a surprise appearance Saturday with a camper loaded with a graduating daughter's school furniture and supplies. Walt is in the restaurant and hotel business in Vermont where he also does some sheep farming. David "Beez" Morton was in late Saturday from New York where Skidmore College established a memorial prize in the name of his wife, Gail, who passed away this spring. The Gail Moran Morton award will go to the Skidmore student who best exemplifies the qualities of graciousness and style for which all of us who knew Gail will remember her.

Attorney Art Murphy and wife Ellen, famous for their dance floor endurance at past reunions, will have occasion to get back to The Hill from Newport, RI. Daughter Lucia will enter as a lower this fall. And attorney Bob Nordhaus with his wife, Jean, was in to pick up daughter Hannah who will pick up a PA sheepskin next year. Don Oasis and David Page performed in cameos Friday evening before other commitments took them away. Don still dentists in Sudbury while Dave is an architect who has just put the finishing touches on the new New Hampshire State Penitentiary.

Pelham, NY's Dick Smith has taken sufficient time from his public relations chores to complete a second novel. The first was reviewed in these pages about 20 years ago. This output rate could qualify Smitty for another Class Secretary-awarded prize, the J.D. Salinger Prolificity Prize. David Steinberg enjoyed a short break before taking office as President of Long Island University on 1 July. His formal installation or, as Dave puts it, his "being dipped in cement," will occur at the Brooklyn Academy of Music with many bells and whistles on 13 Nov.

Sully Vinciguerra, back with his wife Grace, explains that his absence for the last few reunions was the result of a stint in Tokyo as the head of the Far East Division of testing materials manufacturer, Instron Corporation. After moving from Far East operations to Western Hemisphere operations, Sully quite naturally became president of the company. PA has not been without Vinciguerras; Sully's daughters graced the classes of '82, '83 and another will graduate in '87. Jon Weisbuch took some time off from fund raising activities for a comprehensive program for fitness and preventative medicine.

The couple that best exemplifies the union of Andover and Abbot is Debbie and Mike West in from Pittsburgh where he teaches at Pitt. and is a Petersen Fellow of the American Antiquarian Society of Worcester, MA. A Huntington National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowship will bring Mike for an extended stay to the Huntington Library in San Marino, CA in November. Bill Whittlesey, at his first reunion all the way from Salt Lake City, is a consulting engineer in instrumentation, and hones his talents as a genealogist at the incomparable genealogical library of the Mormon church.

Guest Cameo Appearances: Bob Hurlburt, Ted Harrison, Phil Weld, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hoitsma and Mrs. and Mrs. John McClement.

Closing Credits: Newly re-elected Class Agent Jack Doykos announced that after our record breaking 25th reunion gift of over $200,000 to PA, the Class of '55 has broken all records for a 30th Reunion class with a dollar total of over $65,000 and a smashing participation level of 66%! In the words of the poet, "Hot damn, we're good!" . . . Y.

Reunion Notes: You wouldn't have thought it would be so special, so good to see friends that you knew thirty years ago and see only infrequently, that we would have had such fun, but it was and we did!

Nancy Eastham Iacobucci, Kathy Lloyd, Kathy Stirling Dow and Debbie Green West arrived on Friday. The fifth and final member of our Abbot group, Peg Holbrook Birch arrived on campus at 10 p.m. Friday night, missing the receptions for reunion class groups at various faculty homes, the cookout supper, and the evening program, but not too late for us to all rendezvous at our class headquarters with PA '55 for a drink and the beginning of a weekend of exchanging current news and past memories. Four of us were staying on campus in a PA dorm, in adjoining rooms, sort of reliving school days. It made it very easy to do everything together.

We gathered Saturday morning for the parade and affixed eye-catching tags emblazoned with "55's 30th" to our "parade costume," plain navy umbrellas, and matching tags for our lapels. Not only were we smart looking but a little drizzle at the luncheon picnic buffet following the alumni/ae meeting brought envious glances from other reunioners at our foresightedness. We retired to Nancy and Kathy's bedroom after lunch for our class meeting. We recruited volunteers for jobs for the next five years: Nancy for Class Secretary, Kathy Dow (and Dee Fleming King in absentia) will continue as Class Agents for the Alumni/ae Fund, and Peg will be Reunion Chairman for 1990. With this essential business behind us, we went on to have a very interesting hour. We have decided we need to communicate more as a class, and will have the above volunteers serve as a "class committee," soon to be in touch by mail, with a current address list of classmates, an info form to generate news for the Class Secretary and hopefully a "class report," and info on the Abbot Fund, its purposes and expenditures (for those who would like to see their contributions carry more of an Abbot label). We would like to see our class percentage of participation be higher, regardless of the amount, and we agreed that though this shared reunion with our PA counterparts was most enjoyable, it was essential for us to be together separately for part of the time to regenerate a sense of "Abbot-ness."

And so, suiting action to words, we set out (joined by Debbie's husband, Mike, and by Robert Johnson, both PA '55) on a tour past Nancy's old family home, and on to the Abbot campus. It all looks much the same outwardly, but some of the buildings are no longer used by PA. Some space is rented to a business and a nursery day care center, some lies fallow awaiting a buyer/developer, some slowly decays, serving as temporary storage, awaiting demolition or extensive restoration. From this exercise in melancholy we went on to a delightful Abbot tea, held in the Headmaster's home, where we saw Miss Sweeney (fragile, but charming), Miss Ritchie (retired last year from PA's athletic department, brisk and cheerful), and Mlle. Baratte (who has put on a little plumpness around her face (!) and looks wonderful, spritely and delightful).

Stuffed with tea and canapes, we changed and went over to our Graham House headquarters for drinks, lovely hors d'oeuvres, and a very nice catered dinner with PA '55. We were under fifty altogether, and dinner was relaxed and civilized; we all enjoyed being together.

Sunday we went to Kathy and Kim Dow's lovely antique farmhouse for breakfast, chat, photo opportunities in the garden, and goodbyes before we separated for travel homeward. We wrote up capsule biographies for use in the next Class Notes. We all looked so much the same: Nancy Eastham Iacobucci is still energetic, earnest, honest and cheerful; Kathy Lloyd is keenly observant with a twinkle in her eye and a dry sense of humor; Debbie Green West is gentle, sympathetic (and still loves good food and eats as slowly as ever); and Kathy Stirling Dow still has that delicate, fair complexion, gets gently flustered, and is an amazing font of class (and other) knowledge; if we ever need a class genealogist or archivist, she should be it. Me, I just bubbled with enjoyment the whole time. The modest investment of time in phone consultation with my PA co-chairman of reunion, who did most of the work and arrangements, was amply repaid by the pleasure of sharing time with these friends. We all had a lovely time, and wished more of you were with us. We'll all be there in '90; join us!

Again, remember our new Class Secretary is Nancy Eastham Iacobucci (Mrs. Frank), whose address is: 172 Royalavon Cres., Islington, Ontario M9A 2G6 Canada. Please help her out with her first column for the Bulletin which will be the fall issue, by writing her with your news. I know all of us are anxious to hear news of one another. Thanks, Peggins

Gracie Callahan Hagstrom is still doing diagnostic evaluations and special needs teaching for the Gloucester public school system. Her son Kyle (Andover '82) is a junior at Colby College and her daughter Alison is a freshman at Bates. She and Alan have only two cats living at home these days. Jane Tatman Walker writes that while in New York in March she got together with Winnie Ward Henchey. They had fun catching up — after twenty-six years!

Phoebe Estes Bryan is still in Williston, VT, and still teaching at the University of Vermont. The Waggs and the Rylands (Cemmie Kelton) had an enjoyable, but unfortunately last, dinner together during Hamilton College Parents' Weekend, since our daughter Sandra (Andover '81) graduates this year and then is off to England to begin her career in banking. I think that's when the "empty nest" is going to finally hit me! Cemmie sees a lot of Marge Orr MacIver, who has been working hard on the Wellesley College Class of 1960 Reunion. I have been working since the fall on an exhibition and catalogue on an early twentieth century Canadian architect, Ernest Barott (don't worry, nobody else has heard of him either), for the Canadian Centre for Architecture, a museum and study centre located in Montreal. I'm also involved in a project at McGill cataloguing the drawings of two other Canadian architects and enjoy the variety that free-lance work affords.

Marcia Colby Frame wrote a wonderful, long letter which started out with "nothing too exciting from here. . ." and proceeded to detail trips to Holland, Belgium, France, England, Scotland, Denmark; moves back and forth between Colorado and Rhode Island, the death of her father last fall, starting a new business, and finding out that she was not dying from lupus or a vasculitis disease, as had been diagnosed, but was allergic to sulfites (preservatives). That doesn't sound too dull to me!

Marcia said she often thinks of Penny Post and her work on environmental health hazards. "I am a victim and greatly annoyed at the FDA's reluctance to require labeling no matter why or how sulfites are used in a product. It's a perfect example of how great is the influence of the Washington lobbyists."

She and Hank are planning to move from Rhode Island back to Denver where he has a finance business. She promises to tell us more in upcoming Bulletins about the business she is planning to start with two friends.

A card from Anne Luquer Boswell says she is happy and busy working on a project which was an outgrowth of her interest in sailing. She has a son at Bowdoin college, a daughter on her way to Vassar this fall and one son left at home.

I was interested to hear about Marcia's bout with allergies as we are going through tests to find out whether my son Peter's ongoing depression may be related to food allergies. After thousands of dollars spent on therapy, someone suggested that might be a possible cause. It's a lengthy and tedious process (for a 12-year-old) of eliminating everything from his diet but some health foods, fresh fruits and nuts, fish and lamb for two weeks and then bringing back the suspected foods (usually the person's favorites) one at a time. Nothing is conclusive as yet, but it is certainly something to keep in mind if any of you are having similar problems with yourselves or others.

Classmates will be saddened to learn of the death of Nancy Ruhlin Skala on 6 January 1985 as a result of complications caused by her long battle with diabetes.

You may remember that Nancy was featured in a Bulletin article in November, 1981 which recounted her struggle to maintain her independence despite her diabetic blindness. Despite her loss of sight she still ran her household, cooked for her husband, George, and son, was a volunteer teacher at an elementary school and co-chaired the education commission at their church with her husband.

She used to say there were only three things she couldn't do that sighted people can: "read a picture book, ride a bicycle, drive a car." Clearly, with that attitude, Nancy was far less handicapped than most of us. [See her obituary under "Deaths" at beginning of Notes.]

That's all the news I have from you. A gentle reminder, once more, to all—please send me information about what you are doing, thinking, learning, feeling. This is your column and I know you enjoy reading about your classmates. Logic would suggest that they would enjoy reading about you!

Charlie Kellogg writes from Hong Kong where he works for IBM. His children, Natalia, 15, and Waters, 12, attend the International School in Repulse Bay while his wife, Gillian, is studying Chinese at Baptist college in Kowloon.

I was delighted to hear from Ed Simon who writes that his last correspondence with PA dates back 20 years! Ed lives in New York city with his wife, Argie, and two sons, Alexander, 6, and Peter, 3. He reverse commutes to Stratford, CT where he is a vice president of Sikorsky Aircraft, a division of United Technologies. Any one interested in Helicopters is cordially invited to drop in at Sikorsky which is just off Exit 53 on the Merritt Parkway.

Mark Woodbury became a father for the second time in December with the birth of an eight pound, 5 oz. baby boy.

It is with deep regret that I inform the class of the passing of Craig F. Stafford who died suddenly at his home on 5 December 1984. Born in Philadelphia, Craig was a graduate of Haverford College, class of 1962; and the University of Virginia Law School, class of 1965. He was a member of the Virginia Bar Association. Surviving are two daughters, Robin Ann Stafford and Eleanor Jane Stafford, both of Woodbury, Conn. The class extends its deep sympathy to Robin and Eleanor and to other surviving members of his family.

I have much happier news from Stephen Mochary. In early 1984 Steve was diagnosed as having cardiomyopathy, a degenerative heart disease, for which neither the cause nor the cure is known. The only solution was a heart transplantation which was performed in November at Stanford University Medical Center. During his month of recovery in California, Steve was in touch with many classmates and found the renewal of old acquaintances most helpful. Steve returned to New Jersey in December and by March had resumed a normal life which includes a law practice, jogging, racquet ball and scuba diving. Steve writes that his experience "has taught me to really savor moments a lot more than I used to."

Steve Larned's daughter, Susan, is presently our home guest. Susan and my daughter Kristen are classmates at the University of Michigan. Susan reports everything is well with the Larned family.

Looking for your cards amid my junk mail is like panning for gold. Please send more nuggets. Abbot friendships are amazing. My note to Jackie Locke Neaville, mentioning that our vacation plans include Seattle, netted a warm invitation by return mail. Jackie also wrote that she is three times a grandmother and has only a sixteen-year-old at home. She still works at West Seattle Hospital, is a soroptimist, and is on many boards. She is president of an employment search group called H.E.L.P. Along with all this, Jackie travels with her husband, Alan, who is 2nd Vice President of the National Postmasters and is on the Board of the Postal Credit Union.

Susie Tidd Augenthaler had lunch with Liz Artz Biem in New York. Susie's youngest, 17, will spend July in France. Ah, bien.

Many of our children are starting new adventures. Betsy Gardner Riley wrote that Bart graduates from Middlebury this month and goes to Cornell on a five-year fellowship in material sciences. Lynn is transferring from Skidmore to Denison where she will have a double major in English and music. Son Jeff is entering Babson. Along with encouraging such varied interests, Betsy does her own job with R.S.V.P., working with 100 ladies in four towns.

Another mother of three is Doris Ward Lawson whose card from Phoenix said that her children are in three different high schools. She's busy "keeping public education from nose-diving into oblivion and special education on track." Doris admits to being a housewife who does word processing, publishes a newsletter and acts. She hints of new directions next year.

Faith White Hyde and her husband, Bob, have taken their new path. The Cape has always been their dream location, and now they have moved from Connecticut to Chatham, MA. Bob is teaching at Cape Cod Academy. Their three children are Peter, 22; Mark, 20; and Matt, 11. Faith discovered that Anne Bossi Kiefer lives in the next town "successfully running the Orleans Guild for the Arts."

Tiki Owsley Thomas took time to write that her daughter Laura will marry Jim Beh from Washington, D.C. on 15 June. Maybe that means Tiki will be visiting here. She added that she still travels to golf tournaments. Do we have any other sports enthusiasts?

I was hoping Jane Christie Smith's son Tim would choose Georgetown so I could return Jane's hospitality. However, he had decided on U. Penn. Jane and the boys had a relaxing spring break in Barbados.

My news sounds repetitious. Bob has won another election to City Council. Virginians love elections! I love my jobs but am looking forward to dropping the tutoring for the summer. Love you all! —Sandy.

One of the most perplexing questions of our time, of course, is what it is that makes some people return for Andover reunions, and others not. Upon nearly one year's reflection, it seems clear that good looks play a very important part. The throng assembled last year was a hell of a good looking group of men, women and kids. Some of the people who were there who haven't been mentioned yet, and who certainly fall into the good looks category, are Bill Bell, the Jameses Bishop and Bailey, Dave Gas-kin, Roger Hooker, Charlie Kivowitz, and Fred Kriebel.

Basil and Jane Cox, and little Nell, were at the Reunion, Basil having just left the high minded employ of Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood to let his more entrepreneurial juices (no pun intended) flow as Marketing Director of a local Pittsburgh chain of restaurants called Eat 'n Park.

At a delightful Andover dinner at the Merion Cricket Club here in Philadelphia in May, (where else?) John and Susan Smith, Volker and Denise Oakey, and Maureen and I joined several dozen other Andover grads to salute Josh Miner, as he retires from more than 30 years at Andover. Although both the Oakeys and John had been at the reunion, we hadn't had a chance to talk much, and it was good to catch up with them, while cheering Josh and Phebe on. Volker is working for Bethlehem Steel, and Denise is running a small business at home — a business that has nothing to do, we're assured, with the mid-dinner phone call alerting them to the fact that some of their sheep seemed to have escaped while they were in Philadelphia. . . . Susan Smith is also running a small business and John continues to work huge hours as a Philadelphia lawyer.

Lee Webb took the biggest risk of us all by bringing Judith Daniels to the reunion — the risk turned out all right, however, because despite that experience, Judith agreed to marry Lee, and they did so on 14 October last year.

On a more scholarly note, Bill Butler who is Vice President for Government Relations and Counsel for the National Audubon Society, has been a visiting lecturer for the past year at the Yale Law School. Just got a note from Chris Costanzo saying that he has just arrived in Mogadishu, Somalia as the new U. S. Consul there. Duffy Hughes, whom I'm sure I reported was looking terrific at the reunion, reports that 1984 was his first year of mid-life crisis. I don't know if that was caused by the reunion, but in any event it appears to be suiting him well since he entered his first triathlon, and finished in the top third, and he also ran the New York City Marathon, also finishing in the top third. If that's what mid-life crisis is, play on!

Although I expect you will be hearing, at least from me, about this reunion for several years yet, I do want to mention a few other people who were there — all, of course, falling into that good looking category: Fred Shirley, Pete Pochna, dancing up a storm, and Quinn Rosefsky.

Dave Smoyer, who is doing a great job as Athletic Director at Swathmore, was there, as was Scotty Thompson, who I must say looked a bit tired after what must have been some very exhilarating and probably frustrating years in Washington, D.C.

On a somber note, I am sitting in Philadelphia writing this column just days after the terrible confrontation in West Philadelphia which resulted in many deaths and vast property destruction. The issue in this case is not so much who was right and who was wrong, but how quickly something can get out of control. In our increasingly complex society it is important to realize how fast totally unpredictable events can and do dramatically change what could have been a well-planned, well thought out strategy. So be well, and don't cut the corners too tight.

Reunion Notes: The Reunion. It was, in a word, successful. Not in the rah-rah sense (surprisingly little of that), nor in the happy smiles (not too many), nor the funds raised (about $100,000), nor the turnout (about 50), nor in our collective good looks (questionable) at ages 42-43. The glory of the 25th Reunion of the Class of '60 was the individual and collective understandings, reached privately and undoubtedly in numerous different ways, of what that experience circa 1956-60 means, what its relative value was to each of us, and what surprisingly similar, if mixed, feelings each of us had about the School. The reunion gatherers were an eclectic group, probably an appropriate cross section of the Class: the alienation, even nihilism, each of us shared in greater or lesser measure, the ability to admit it, and most significant, the overall quality of the Class were dramatically surprising and nearly tangible revelations of the weekend. The Reunion was a success in the most serious sense.

It all started on a lovely, sunny Friday afternoon when the School, in early June, looks its most beautiful: the soft air, the magnificent trees, the seemingly endless green lawns, the stately brick buildings with white steeples/cupolas/towers, and that simply great feeling of the late New England spring were all there. It was magic. And then the Class was together, first at the Headmaster's reception and then all over — in the booze line, at the chicken dinner, strolling near Commons, drinking beer at Fuess, or just rushing past in the haste to get to a television for the Celtics-Lakers game. You somehow felt better when you'd said hello to everyone at least once — then you got down to reacquainting yourself with everyone. For most of us, not more than a third of the attendees (and by extension the Class) were recognizable after 25 years. Some of us allegedly look the same (e.g., Schulman, Campion, Kenny, Robison, Fox); some of us (e.g., Foster, Scharf, Winter, Lee) have lost a little hair; some have added facial hair (Schulman, Wood, Danforth, Datlowe, Butler, Brownrigg, Posner); some have added a pound or two (Wickham) and some haven't (Danforth Turchik, Richardson, Kenny, Campion); some of us look glorious (Okie, Campion, Woods); some look comfortably suburban (Kendrick, Wood, Campion), and some don't (Quattlebaum, Burlingame); all of us have added a touch of grey. Everyone was there, armed with wives, finances, kids and the like, but all with a mature curiosity about what's happened.

There were lots of meals and lots of talk and not all that much booze. A "Class Meeting" was held, chaired by Mike Scharf, at which Charles Kendrick was elected Reunion Chairman for the fete five years hence, Frank Velie was elected Class Agent, Larry Butler was named Class "Editorial Cartoonist," the poor Secretary was retained, and Tom Campion offered catcalls throughout; the predictable amount of competition for such vaunted posts pertained, amongst numerous observations that most of the class didn't show so they wouldn't get elected. There was a class picture taken in front of Bulfinch, in which we showed our age; in the view of at least one class member, we were at least not one of those "Sibi" groups, in their beanies, blazers, banners and affluence.

Saturday afternoon featured a seminar, put on by Tony Lee, E. G. Quattlebaum, Wally Winter, Perrin French and Bill Ury '70 on Nuclear War and National Security. Each of the presentations was well done, and each speaker shared a predictably common viewpoint; hawks were, in other words, in short supply, and in Frank Velie's view, the really interesting issue was who would be the first (don't hold your breath) to call for a strike-first nuclear program; no one won. To one observer, the outstanding quality of the presentations, and the thoughtfulness and moderation of the speakers, marked a dawning understanding of the real enduring and diverse quality of our Class. Late in the afternoon, an official reunion 2.2-mile footrace took place around the playing fields with start and finish in front of the Addison and heavy participation from the class (Turchik, Campion, Ingelfinger, Kenny, Velie, Fox) and three members of the Quattlebaum family.

Saturday evening saw a hugely successful class dinner at the Log Cabin in the Sanctuary, featuring lobster, chicken, mussels, clams, sausages and the presence of the Mesics and the Headmaster and Mrs. McNemar. A highlight of the evening was the "official" presentation of a certificate of recognition by the School to non-graduate classmate and the New York Times reporter and Pulitzer Prize winner, John Darnton, ostensibly for his "contributions to international journalism" but really, in light of his proximity to his friends from the Class, an acknowledgement of thanks for the reflected glory of his Pulitzer. The real highlight of the evening may in fact have been John's acceptance, which, alternately wry and gently jesting, recalled the incidents behind his non-graduate status, eloquently and softly labeled the recognition as "restitution without reparation," and brought the attending class members to their feet with laughter and feeling.

Sunday was a fitting close to the festivities: warm, sunny and still soft. The morning witnessed sober and not-so class members drift off to their respective sections of the world.

Superlatives? Charlie Hanson came the furthest (Frankfurt, Germany), easily outdoing California's Leroy, Quinn and Fox, Idaho's Campion and Tucson's Robison. Campion was the loudest (arrested development?) but not particularly. Evans was a notable no-show, Sid Bass's ('61) name did come up, Woody Woods (nb: all Class members must read the July edition of M - The Civilized Man; repeat, it is mandatory reading and features a lengthy, color profile of "The Sporty Banker" — one of our own) made only a cameo appearance, and Scharf in some ways was best of show. The nuclear war panelists probably reflected the general leftist leaning of the class, the absence of Brad Reynolds as a suitable counterpoint was commented upon frequently, and the absence of a class career politician (where was Larry Gillis?) was noted.

It was a good show. The School still looks the same, although there are more buildings, probably too many, and we don't know them all anymore. Beyond the physical appearance, a lasting and striking impression of the School, the weekend and the Class of 1960, is the Class's quality and the diversity of intelligences. Our class, individually and collectively, shared a sense of disaffection and alienation — from each other, from the School, from the whole tough experience, and it was mentioned and noted a thousand times. And our Class, again individually and collectively, reflected and reflects a diverse but distinct quality of intellectualism and thoughtfulness. For those of you who didn't come, you missed an interesting experience, but you can be assured that those who were there represented you fairly. It wasn't perfect, our time at Andover wasn't perfect, but we sure analyzed it and had some fun doing so.

Curiously and by way of postscript, an interesting letter from one of our classmates arrived shortly after the Reunion with a sufficiently different, personal perspective of the proceedings that it bears repeating, at least in part. It reads:

"Dear Albert: For me, the 25th Reunion began by avoiding Denis Tippos's notices, envelopes asking for payment, and registration at the Underwood Room. Justification was easy: our Class Secretary was doing the same thing; besides, I wouldn't go register because I had to wait until my houseguest arrived from Long Beach via Providence with his chauffeur/conversationalist.

"First tangible step: Headmaster's backyard, 6 p.m. Friday evening, in sharp late-afternoon sunshine. Ruth spotted the Kips and bee-lined towards their familiar faces. I bee-lined towards the bar. Who would I recognize first, I thought, looking away from my classmates and toward an anonymous bartender? Elliot Miller must have sensed my predicament and generously came over to me and broke the spell. Suddenly, it was 1957 in Pemberton Cottage, and only faintly 1985. It stayed that way the rest of the evening, through several more handshakes behind Phelps House in the sinking sunshine — with Okie and his wife Rowdie, Peter Beck, Peter Brownrigg, Larry Butler of the superb beard (en famille), Tony Lee and Wally Winter of Nuke Panel fame, Joe Ingelfinger (of Ingelfinger, Heffelfinger, and Quattlebaum), Jeremy Wood (who made cameo after cameo), Marilyn and Bob Beale, and Joe Prah. We did what you would expect us to do, stand and talk with drink cups in our hands, as our feet got tired. But this time it was not boring. In fact, the collection of small moments from the 1950s — a ping pong game in a dorm basement, a taxidermy triumph by Bob Beale in biology class, a humiliation suffered in math class — was intense exercise, and Prah later left me exhausted.

"On the walk from Headmaster's to Commons, Joe Prah yelled at several of us to 'Don't Walk.' Seems he saw an orange sign flashing that message, and interpreted it to apply to the entire class, on whatever pathway we might be walking. On Salem Street, approximately 95 feet from our Commons destination, a whizzing car slowed down, and Okie leaned out the window to offer me a ride to Commons; pressed against the back window was the handsome nose of Bob Leroy, giving an expression that makes you think of a face trying to imitate the other end of you during a 'moon'.

The Commons Picnic had the obligatory chicken. But as I stood in line, I saw a tanned and fit Woody Woods, dressed the way my mom wishes I would dress — in a dark suit that fits. You don't spill butter or corn cobs or wipe your chicken fingers when you wear that, unless you sit near Albert Fox, Class Secretary. Kit Moore was also in line and had a serene, southwestern Colorado look. Bob Leroy and his fiancé were great fun but kept avoiding me. Frank Velie and Fearless Fred Kenny tried to butt into line in front of me, but their comely daughters (PA '88) shamed them out of it.

"By 8:50 p.m., for those with priorities in order, a deadline pressed — the 5th Laker-Celtic game telecast scheduled for 9:00. Abruptly, the haze of the 1950s lifted, the gladhanding diminished, and a hasty retreat to a private television stirred those with jet lag and their friends.

"Saturday morning meant an early morning jog, avoiding breakfast at Commons, and watching Gus play a little league game a mile away from campus. For houseguest, it meant a splash of Osage Rub and walking almost as bowlegged as his chauffeur/companion.

"Lunchtime, and the living is easy over in front of the gym, where first the Sibis and then the Non-Sibis got photographed. Then, a quick exercise in speech-writing, and two hours of Nuke Panelling.

"I'd tell you about the evening festivities, but my report is now complete. Suffice it to say that Saturday night at the Log Cabin saw lots of attractive women lusting after studly Andover '60ers and a few attractive men lusting after the attractive few Abbot '60 representatives. But this was our 25th, so the lusting was done sotto voce and early in the evening. Darnton's 'restitution without reparations' was the most brilliant moment, although I demand to shred the rest of his discipline record."

You get the point. It was a fine 25th.

A truly nice, unsolicited letter about one of our classmates arrived recently, written by an eager history student and PA Class Secretary, '43. It reads in part: "I just finished an evening course at Connecticut College in New London taught by your classmate, Assistant Professor Michael Burlingame. Burlingame ranks with the top two or three professors of my academic career. He is articulate, lively, extraordinarily erudite in American History, in short a superb teacher. The course that I took was 'Lincoln and the Civil War' and through Burlingame's eyes, Lincoln lived."

Another nice letter also recently arrived, this from Dr. Bob Beale of Washington, D.C. Bob practices family medicine and bariatrics in Washington while living 45 miles away in Columbia, Maryland with his wife of 22 years (class record?) and 15- and 16-year-old daughters. Bob writes that for the past 15 years he's been a member of a motorcycle club known as the Juggernauts, who spend weekends riding up and down the east coast on their Harleys "scaring the honest citizens." Exotic?

He helped establish 2½ years ago the Conflict Analysis Center, a nonprofit organization focusing on international conflict and the implications of citizenship for conflicts and peacemaking, and as well recently completed editing The Hundred Percent Challenge: Building a National Institute of Peace.

Reunion Notes: Twenty-five years later, the ten members of the class, who gathered on the PA campus for reunion, easily identified each other. The possible exception was Aida Sharabati Shawwaf, a stunning, slim blonde accompanied by her daughter Lara. (We were told the Andover grads had to read their name tags.)

I arrived first at the registration booth and received a list of those class members who had responded to the invitation. Ten. Such a disappointment. At the Phelps House opening cocktail party, I was soon joined by Susan Brennan and Kathy Stevens. As we were pouring over the Abbot yearbook, we were found by Sally Barngrove McQuilkin, Hannah Jopling Kaiser, Sally Foote Hubby and her husband, David, Wendy Bolton Rowland with her husband, David, and Marcia Saliba Newcomb and her husband, Fred. Three respondents were not present: Aida, Sarah Von Der Hyde Richards and Adrienne Davis Whitehead. Aida and Sarah showed up in mid-afternoon on Saturday. Where were you?

We thoroughly enjoyed renewing our friendship bonds. ("Bond" reminds me of the Bondes. The Saturday night clam bake at the Log Cabin was excellent. We missed a lemon square or Heavenly Goo dessert. I passed on the Abbot banana recipe to Sally Barngrove. An aside: the evening before reunion, my mother made, and Beth Crane '62 and I gorged ourselves on, prune whip with custard sauce).

Saturday morning, Kathy, Sally, Wendy, Hannah, Sally and I marched to the pipes in the parade with Abbot blue and white balloons floating above us. Kathy was wearing her Gargoyle beanie, her "A" pin and an athletic badge. Sally Foote Hubby had on her Abbot ring — after removing it from her daughter's finger. At the following Alumni meeting, our entire class — Phillips and Abbot — were recognized for their substantial donation to the School. Sally B. McQuilkin was commended for coming all the way from California to attend.

After the general meeting, we gathered for a class photograph. Aida showed up just in time. Susan too! Marcia came later for the picnic and to agree to help me this year with these notes. We had a very brief, informal meeting to appoint Sally B. McQuilkin as the new class fund raiser, Wendy B. Rowland and/or Kathy Stevens as 30th reunion chairwomen, and I offered to serve as Class Secretary.

The Abbot tea was held late Saturday. Miss Shirley Ritchie and my mother, Mrs. Alexander Crane, were delighted to see each of us and vice versa. Sarah Von Der Hyde Richards arrived for the tea and clam bake. Aida, Marcia, and Susan were not able to stay on, but the remaining seven of us spent a wonderful evening, until midnight, showing off photos of children and reminiscing. A major portion of our conversation was devoted to wishful expressions that more of you had shown up. Kathy hopes for a good 30th and then an especially fantastic 40th in the year 2000!

NEWS: I have just received my Master of Library and Information Science from the University of Texas at Austin. My first professional position will begin in September at the Tower School in Marblehead, Mass. The school is Nursery through 9th grade. James G. (Gil) Leaf (PA '58) is the retiring Headmaster. My two children, 19 and 22 years old, remain in Austin to finish undergraduate work at U.T. We three visited Susan Lothrop Koster and three of her four daughters in Florida over our spring break. The second one, Robin, has been accepted at Andover. Susie and I carried on as usual.

Sally Foote Hubby is designing greeting cards under the trade name "Figments." Sally Barngrave McQuilkin is Head of Alumni Relations for a California school. Kathy Stevens is teaching at the University of Lowell. Susan Brennan is Director of Social Services at a Boston Hospital.

Wendy Bolton Rowland is an up and coming sculptress in Lexington, KY. Hannah Jopling Kaiser develops alternative sentences for criminals. Sarah Von Der Hyde Richards is a Boston-area pediatrician.

My apologies to you nine. I visited the Alumni office mid-June on deadline day — unbeknownst to me. I am trying desperately to remember all those notes I took during reunion — which sit happily in Barnstable.

But more important somehow is trying to find the appropriate words to let our non-attending classmates know how happy and excited we were being together again. This was a first for several of us. I was reluctant to come without my best Abbot friend, Susie Lothrop Koster and did miss her. However, I believe we ten are closer now than even then. Our nostalgia aside, we are anxious to contact everyone and I will try my best to include you in the Class Notes. Thanks.

When I wrote my last column, I promised you I would cover certain classmates in this issue. I would like to break that promise and do that column next time.

I have been pondering this column for a long time now. I have had it in my head to request your permission this once to just write some reflections which have been up for me lately. Of course, as a captive audience you can't withhold your permission; your attention, yes, but at least I get to present these reflections.

I was in Washington about a month ago to look after some athletes at a road race, when I happened to pass the Vietnam Memorial. I was running at the time, in an eastern drizzle and haze, and the monument had a dark attraction for me. It was strange that two names from our class leaped into my mind, complete with their smiles, their laughter, their gritted teeth and the strains of athletic competition on their faces. As I stood, randomly, in front of one of the endless slabs of marble, my heart skipped a beat as I focussed on Bob Holt's name. It was as if my consciousness of him had created his name in print before my very eyes.

I looked up Bob's vital statistics: branch of service, date of birth, date of death, and continued in a state of heart-pounding emotion to do the same for Dave Hackett. There were others I knew from other places, too, but Dave and Bob kept reappearing in my memory and I was sad that they were missing all this life.

Then I remembered another classmate, Jim Wissner, with whom I had once run many miles. Lanny Wright once reported that Jim had gone to prison for draft evasion and I had wondered how it was that Jim could be mentioned, much less honored, in the same breath as Hackett and Holt. As I stood in that Washington drizzle, I finally understood the paradox, and how opposites can exist side by side with neither contradiction nor conflict. Again, I felt a wave of sadness, this time for all the things we do to each other in the name of "significant things."

It wasn't long after that that I received one of the biggest shocks of my life. From out of nowhere, after 23 years, I received a letter from someone I have loved and missed for just that long. You may recall how many times I have asked you for any news of him — and never a word until now. When I read Steve Hobson's letter and shared his life through his communication I felt the same feelings I had felt seeing Hackett's and Holt's names at the monument. I was taken with a sense of life and living, of wanting to share and wanting to make a difference in the daily living of those I came across. It seems not enough to glide by day after day, taking it all for granted. It seems that a higher intention is required.

There's more to say, but even more to do. To those of you who participate in this with me I say, let's keep going! To those of you who don't, I request that you start — now. . . A.T.A.

Thanks to Molly Upton who did the Andover Phonathon, I have news of some classmates. Loring Low Stevens has an 18-month-old daughter and is expecting another child in September. She still runs her own business and lives in Cambridge. Sherry Craig Lowe sounds very happy as a mother of two kids, ages nine and five, and has started a stained glass business. Spotty Stringfellow Lyon has retired from the work force and is getting adjusted to the idea. Kitty Stahlbrand and Dean have a three-year-old daughter, Erica, and Kitty has published a book on partners which deals with getting children to help each other in learning situations. Danna MacCorkle is still in the Big Apple with her 18-year-old daughter and 15-year-old son. She grinds her own lenses for telescopes and has won a prize. Eileen Keegan Pakstis and husband and two children are now in Andover after stints in Colorado, Virginia, and western Massachusetts. She has switched to the administrative side of social work and runs a program at Melrose-Wakefield Hospital. Marney Harriman Ives is still in Wayland and is involved with her daughter's school.

My winter/spring has been: coping with recalcitrant banks and mortgage loans; recovering from surgery; childrens' broken bones; a teenager in love; working on a new tennis program for the area; trying to get a house built by September — regular life stuff.

Our 25th is one year away. Am really looking forward to seeing you there.

Abby von der Heyde Summersgill is still with New England Life. Her oldest son is a freshman at Middlebury and her second son Michael is fifteen and a freshman in high school.

A second generation friendship is blossoming between Linda Swanberg Musser's daughter Leila and Pauline Gray Briger's daughter Annabel who are classmates in the third grade. When I spoke with Linda she and Bill were looking forward to a two-week trip to Italy this spring.

Carolyn Dow has been with IBM since she graduated from Connecticut College. She is based in Chicago now, but travels about 50% of the time.

Darcy Wheeler Bacon will be joining Beth as our class co-agent. We have a great record as a class. Let's keep it up and make these busy ladies' work easier. In addition to sharing the Class Agent's job, Darcy and Beth share great enthusiasm for the areas in which they live. Darcy has been involved with writing and research for a public television show on politics and is currently working half-time for a political polling firm. Darcy's husband was recently made editor for Economics and Foreign Policy for the Wall Street Journal.

The Bacons have two daughters aged nine and fourteen who had the wonderful experience of accompanying their parents on a trip to India and Nepal. The Bacons built a house on Block Island in the summer of 1984 which Darcy is looking forward to enjoying more fully in this non-election year.

Beth Crane is practicing law in a partnership which specializes in representing employees in their various claims, as well as criminal and general litigation. Her youngest son, David Henry Beale Crane Tejada, was born 26 September 1984 and accompanies Beth to work "commuting twelve miles . . . through the most beautiful scenery in the world." Her second son, Alex, is now fifteen, and Randy '81 will graduate from Wesleyan in June.

Sally Allen Mandel's third novel, Portrait of a Married Woman, will be published in February 1986 by Bantam. "Everybody has to read it."

Mary (now Mae) Concemi Bradshaw is completing her second year as a sole practitioner of law after working in a firm for seven years. Her husband, Jack, is the Associate Deputy Commissioner of Capital Planning for Massachusetts.

Anne Ripley is still working as a nurse practitioner in Boston and running conferences for nurse practitioners, but is "examining her options."

That's the news from about 10% of you. Let's hear from the rest of you in the next issue.

Richard Bull writes of his life in Cincinnati, "a delightful city," where he is Associate Professor of Surgery at the University of Cincinnati's College of Medicine. He and his wife, Mimi, enjoy their special times with four-year-old Brendon. He reports that Tachi Yamada recently moved to Ann Arbor to head the Department of Gastroenterology at the University of Michigan. And, to round out a newsy report, the note continues: Bill Donnell manages the Mandanock Building in Chicago. Thanks for the news!

As if to prove the axiom that learning is a lifelong process, Dwight Stephens received his Ph.D. in 1984 in Indo-European languages, writing his dissertation on the structure of primitive Indo-European mythology. Timely too, since his first child, Laura Ellen, was born in August, 1984. His wife, Ann, practices dermatology in Charlotte. Babcock MacLean also practices — he's a tax attorney in New York — and writes extensively on tax planning for the Research Institute of America. Also practicing, "as my second career now for seven years," John Kessler specializes in real estate law. His young adults now age 15 and 13; his wife, Nancy-Jo, directs the Lincoln Nursery School.

Joseph Rice works for the Minneapolis investment banking firm of Hunter, Keith, Marshall & Co. Donald Way "still has fun" managing Thoits Insurance Company in Palo Alto, just a few blocks from the Super Bowl. And, Francis "Mike" Garvan ran into Eagle Pass's own Rocky Avery in Aspen. Rocky works at a lodge with his wife, whom he met while casting nets as a fisherman in Ireland. So, what were you doing in Aspen, Mike? Let me know.

News from abroad: Paul Doherty will move from his present position as a trade officer in the U.S. Embassy in Ottawa to Washington in the fall, trading cold winters and snow for balmy climates and cherry blossoms. Mike Francisco has been flying F15s for a decade, "still stationed in the Netherlands . . . have orders to return to Montgomery in July." Mike notes that his wife, Pat, is on the faculty at Texas Medical Center, teaching clinical dentistry. A master of understatement, he notes "we commute."

My work at Cleveland State University continues to be successful and rewarding. I shall be in Israel and England this summer, doing research and lecturing, and taking a family vacation.

Cooper Wood wrote about his reunion with Josh Miner in Denver this past fall. Josh remembered that Cooper was the first student at the Outward Bound program in Colorado in 1962. Now back in Fort Collins, Cooper provides a lot of community service (a.k.a. volunteerism): designed an employee orientation program for the city, gives time to the library's media department, and works at the soon-to-open visual arts center. And, in his spare time, he starred in Moon For The Misbegotten.

This note from Cooper reminds me of the recent retirement of Josh Miner. I spent several years in Stimson House when he was the "boss." The Miner family provided an important stability and a special sense of what is right, especially when we were wrong! In numerous roles at Andover, he has influenced a generation of young adults. PA will miss his influence. Continue to have a good summer.

I hit a gold mine of Abbot rabbit news when I called Mimi Dean McBride last night. Mimi had participated in an Andover fund raising phonathon on 30 April and had touched base with many from the Class of '63. Unfortunately, she had mislaid her crib sheet, so these tidbits of information are not as detailed as they will be when she takes over as Class Secretary this fall. But here they are. . . .

Notes from Mimi's 30 April calls: Cindy Sorenson will once more teach sailing at the Boston Sailing Club this summer after she completes the school year as a special educator. Cindy relayed an unconfirmed report that Jackie Sutton Cleverly had moved to Canada. True or false, Jackie? Joan Carter Green is well and still principal of a private lower school in Far Hills, NJ. In February Carolyn Holcombe Damp passed the 40 mark with the help of her neighbors who threw a big surprise party in her honor. Sarah Holbrook is very happy and enjoying her life immensely. She and her family left the hustle and bustle of New York City for the serenity of a farm in Shelburne Falls, MA. Sarah is a full-time mom and chicken-coop architect/builder among other things. Emily Moulton Hall reported she is fine and that sister Bo Moulton Cocks is moving . . . Mimi couldn't recall if it was from Sidney to Melbourne or vice versa! At any rate, Bo hopes to visit the States this summer. Finally, Sue Burton has moved into a lovely new office at the National Geographic Society and spends weekends planting perennials in the gardens of Pigeon Hill Farm, a friend's home in Virginia.

Mimi had a brief visit with Bettina Proski Walker when she and Jon were in Arizona for a conference in April. Bettina is enjoying motherhood and had lots of stories and pictures to share with Mimi over a delicious dinner in Tucson.

I had a wonderful, long letter from Helen Watson Collision whose life sounds full and fulfilling. Her eldest, Blaine, is on to the University of Pennsylvania next year. Chandler, a sophomore in high school, is in a nationally recognized drum and bugle corp and will tour with them this summer. Helen is about to move into management with Digital Equipment while Terry is an Executive Vice-President of a company marketing software for the medical equipment industry in Harrisburg, PA.

Not much new news from the Knolls except we're looking forward to our July trip to the British Isles in conjunction with the annual ABA convention. After a week in London with the solicitors, we'll tour the castles of Wales while our kids ride horseback with their aunts in North Carolina.

Speaking of horses . . . Mimi and I are switching mid-stream. From now until the infamous 25th reunion of the Class of '63, Mimi McBride will act as Class Secretary. I know she anticipates hearing from each of you, so don't disappoint her — keep her mailbox full (at 3704 Blackthorn Ct. Chevy Chase, MD 20815). Meanwhile, I will look forward to reading about you and seeing you in two-and-a-half short years!

Not to leave anyone hanging from our last visit, puffin-sculptor Bryce Muir has assured me that the only counter in his culture is the one he eats lunch at. That leaves me, perhaps, with Andy Crane, another rugged New Englander, who has been appointed executive director of the State Ethics Commission after serving four years as Vermont's Defender General. Crane had been in charge of providing legal services to over 10,000 indigent criminal defendants — which is more indigents, let alone more criminals, than I would have guessed Vermont had. According to his new boss, "Crane combines impressive legal skills with a solid track record as head of a major public agency." Of more interest, the press announcement added that Andy is married to Nancy Kaufman, assistant bar counsel for the Massachusetts Board of Bar Overseers.

One day in May, while sitting securely (I thought) at my 32nd-floor desk in mid-Manhattan, a stranger swooped in, smiled as if I should know him, and deposited a business card in front of me. "Charles Dana Waterman III, Attorney at Law, Lane & Waterman, Davenport, Iowa" was on a break from meeting in the next office to mine as an Iowa client of his was selling a computer software program to Time's circulation operations. After graduating from Dartmouth, Dana returned home to Iowa Law School and for 14 years has been with the family firm in Davenport, now doing mainly corporate work. Later this year Dana will be moving — with wife Faye, originally from Council Bluffs, and their children Jon, 11; Ann, 8; and Rian, 4 — into the house his parents, and before them, his grandparents called home in what is now a Waterman family compound. Dana sounded involved in the affairs of the Quad Cities and looked, with the help of his 6 a.m. bicycle riding, as though life in the heartland, amid his roots, agreed with him.

Perhaps looking for more roots, our worldly peripatetic Jack Garrity was in New York this spring on home leave from his Asian Development Bank post in Manila, talking to members of the international banking and investment banking communities with an eye toward returning to the States. Jack's sometime wife, Pacita Abed, was as floral as ever and undaunted at the prospect of transferring her award-winning trapunto wall hanging designs to the different jungle of the New York art world. Jack has been in touch with Chip Nevius in the Philippines and visited with Dan Badger in Paris, where Dan still works for the OECD.

On the family scene, two classmates who sent in notes with their contributions this quarter both bragged of having four children (is there anyone out there with more?). Bob Greenberg, in Massachusetts, has four between the ages of 6 and three months. Bob Foreman didn't provide the ages of his, but noted that he coincidentally has traded the ski-bum/jazz- musician life he led in 1970-75 for teaching chemistry at Walnut Hills High School in California.

John Herfort, a litigation partner at Gelberg & Abrams in Manhattan, moved last year to the newly opened New York office of the Los Angeles-based Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, now the nation's fifth largest law firm. And in a mailing right out of Witness, I received word that Kent Ross on Valentine's Day, 1985 married Carole Lindell at the Multnomah Monthly Meeting of Friends in Portland, Oregon. The bride's daughter, Laura Lynne Dell Hoyt, announced the marriage, and our classmate, furthering the nominal complication, will henceforth be called Kent Lindell-Ross.

For those of you who missed Craig Bonda's "intelligent and insightful" letter to The Wall Street Journal, a PC Week columnist reprinted his prescription for computer literacy in our schools with such favorable editorializing as, "I wish Mr. Bonda ran our schools." Whether this view would be shared by Mr. Bonda's former teachers at Andover is uncertain, where Craig is probably better remembered as the Torque who wore a glove 20 years before Michael Jackson. Craig's message is that schools should be teaching everyone "what computers are and what they do — translatable information that transcends technological development" — not computer programming. The need to make the younger generation universally computer literate in this sense "exists, not as many assume, because computers are proliferating in the work place, though that's true, rather, it exists because the world in which our children are expected to make a living is growing ever more complex, and man, faced with this need, invented the computer to help him deal with complexity."

PC Week then nominates Craig to be Secretary of Education in Washington where, first, he would have to take on the notorious Simple brothers. "Bill continues to chase the hounds in pursuit of being the last of the devil-may-care, bon-vivant bachelors of the 20th century. Nat continues to work on such modest tasks as tax reform, deficit reduction and Third World finance." Guess which brother we have to thank for this provocative comparison? One more clue: "Nat Jr., 5, goes to a private school that costs twice as much as it cost his father to attend PA, and Carter Fitzgib is next." And that is without computers!

In March she was in LA producing TV commercials for Continental Airlines. She'd love to see any classmates who journey "down under." Suzanne Woodward Quirk has been raising dairy goats for the past five years and is now earning money in the show ring. She visited the University of Reading (England) dairy research station to see what was up abroad. In addition to the goats, she is head teacher at a nursery school where she enjoys teaching the wee ones French, no less. Susan Localio writes that she was settling in for a long snowy winter after putting summer in jars and the pig in the freezer. She remains challenged by teaching which, as she says, is never dull.

It seems that there is never a dull moment. No sooner had I put the copy in the mail for the last issue but my employer announced a move to the LA area. Reunion Notes: Our 20th reunion saw us all (about 35 in total) come together from a multitude of directions and activities. While a few grey hairs could be seen (plus an occasional paunch), by and large the class reflects a strong image of our times. Conversation was lively, activities were many and we all realized we didn't have to call our old teachers "Mr." anymore!

Those of you who could not attend missed an opportunity to wallow in a little nostalgia, but more importantly, to meet the people we have all become. What was most interesting was the observation that as a class we are probably more diverse in our chosen careers than classes before us (certainly as well as those who followed (probably)). Our chronological position during a tumultuous period of social history and how we all reacted to it made for interesting discussions.

However, that our Saturday night dance was the last party on campus to close and attracted members of the classes of '70, '75 and '80 would indicate that our talents for enjoyment are still finely tuned! It augurs well for our 25th reunion (will we really still dance to Beatles records in 1990?).

Attending the festivities (in alphabetical order and hopefully comprehensively) were: Rusty Bennett, Morrison Bump, Peter Burkhard, Alba Briggs (winner of the best beard award), Mark Carnevale (purveyor of our sound system), Peter Clapp, Warren ("not Squire") Clark, Skip Comstock, John Fox, Chris Harte (hasn't changed a bit!), Paul Henry, Terry Kahn, Bud Kellett, John Levine, Joe Magruder, Steve Marshall, Peter Marshall, Colin Matthews, Mac McCabe, Mark Melamed, Roger Murray, Peter Perault, Tim Perry, Doug Pirnie, Richard Platt, Alex Preston, Ed Samp, John Samp, Franz Schneider, Charles Sheldon, Don Shepard, George Strong (winner of the long distance and family awards — coming from the Los Angeles area with four beautiful kids), Steve Tottenham, Roger Valkenburgh, Peter Vanderwarker (the dance sensation) and John Whisnant.

If anyone wants to get in touch with anyone, we have up-dated address lists.

All in all a splendid weekend. The School looked terrific under nearly cloudless skies and the changes ("Stimson is a girls' dorm?" "There is another new dorm?"

Doug Pirnie '65 and Tim Perry '65 visit with J. Derek Williams '65, Chairman of the History and the Social Sciences Department.

"Whaddya mean I can't drive around the West Quad?" "It's okay to walk on the grass?" made it a stimulating and fun weekend.

By now, our 20th Reunion has passed. To those who attended, it was fascinating to see and discuss the many different paths we have chosen since our days on the Hill. If you were there, it was good to see you; if you could not make it, we'll see you at our 25th!

Among pre-Reunion news, John Jameson is a doctor in Las Vegas, New Mexico (not Nevada), where he rodeos and climbs mountains in his spare time. John Deane, wife Andy, and son Rob (6 years), live in Lake Tahoe where John is Chairman of Great Western Leasing of Reno.

Eugen Indjic, our resident concert pianist in France, is the proud father of two children. And Steve Shedd has stayed close to his Newport Beach, California roots where he has an antique business which sends him traveling throughout Europe. The Shedd's have two children, including eight-year-old Brandon (a future quarterback).

Hib Kline and wife Pam welcomed Hibbard IV to the family last September. The new addition has seemingly not interrupted Hib's activities as Legal Counsel for Central Missouri State or Pam's as Associate Circuit Judge nor their successful Devon cattle ranch. Rick Boydston is a law partner in Cincinnati and father of three. He recently discovered that he and Stu McLean work in the same building. Lou Rorimer, another advocate of the legal profession, is now a partner at Jones, Day in Cleveland and father of two; and Dick Sharples is Vice President of Marketing for Diamond Shamrock Corp.

The North Carolina School of Journalism recently inducted Jeff MacNelly into its Hall of Fame, and Jeff has, for the third time, won a Pulitzer Prize for editorial cartooning. Congrats are certainly in order.

Reunion Notes: Class of '65 where were you? We had a small but select group show up for the 20th Reunion. Sarah Watson Decew, Kathy Abler Harvey, Anne Mc- Dermott Higgins and husband Andy, Toney Hopkins, Sarah Messengale Gregg and husband David, Sunny Morrill Rugg and husband Cliff, Marjorie Strauss Power, Anne Rahilly Crawford, and me. Marjorie and I came all the way from the west coast (Washington and Oregon respectively) and we were disappointed that more of you who live closer didn't come.

We were housed in Stimson Dormitory along with the PA '65 class. Stimson is down the road from the Andover Inn by Rabbit Pond and the Cochran Sanctuary. There were events scheduled for the whole weekend but the highlight for most of us was an unauthorized, self-guided tour of the Abbot campus, including the defunct McKean and Draper Halls. They are being used mainly for storage now and it was distressing to all of us to see the campus and buildings looking so neglected and run-down.

At the Abbot tea held at the Headmaster's home on Saturday afternoon we met up with Betsy Foote's sister who took all our names to send to Betsy in beautiful Friday Harbor, Washington. I know why Betsy didn't come — it's gorgeous up there in the San Juan Islands. Other Abbot people we met there were Mrs. Crane, Jean St. Pierre (now chairman of the Andover English Department), Shirley Ritchie and Mlle. Baratte. Miss Ritchie retired last year and is now living in Maryland. I also heard that Miss Foulke and Miss Way are living in northern New Hampshire refinishing furniture.

The news from those of us who were there is . . . Sarah Watson Decew is "alive and well in New Canaan." Kathy Abler Harvey flew in from Chicago on Saturday morning and arrived literally seconds before the class reunion picture was about to be snapped — her usual timely entrance! Susie Voorhees wrote Kathy a Christmas card saying she was going to be married in May but we have no confirmation that this event took place — well, Susie? . . . Kathy also sees Bonnie Ware Stepan '66 often. Bonnie lives in Winnetka. Sarah Massengale Gregg was married in December to David, and they have moved to McLean, Virginia where she sometimes sees Mitsi Major '67.

Toney Hopkins gets the "most resourceful alumna" award for her enterprising abilities at breaking and entering. She brought along her dog Puck who was our watchdog extraordinaire, and who could have a career ahead of him in Hollywood after his display of tricks late Saturday night. Toney offered to be Reunion Chairman for our 25th reunion after a small amount of coercion. She would appreciate it if someone would volunteer to help her with this project. Please get in touch with her at 1249 Beacon St., Waban, MA 02168. All of us discussed possibilities open to us for the 25th — such as having a separate Abbot '65 function or two, and having it at the Abbot campus. The dining room there was fixed up this year for the prom, and it and the courtyard looked good.

Anne McDermott, along with her husband and two children, is preparing to move from Newton Center to Newton. Sunny Morrill and her husband drove down from Maine with Mac McCabe and another friend. Sunny says she has a great recipe for home brew if anyone would like one. Marjorie Strauss Power is living in Olympia, Washington. She published her first book of poetry in 1983 and is now working on a second.

Anne Rahilly Crawford went to visit Ellen Huntington Bryant in Flagstaff, Arizona in February. Ellen's husband changed jobs and they moved to Flagstaff in September '84 with their two girls, Emily and Sarah. Anne also moved last fall to Wenham, Mass. She and husband Luke have two small boys, Phillip, 2, and Alexander, 11 months, so that is why there has been no Abbot '65 news for awhile. I volunteered to take over the job as Class Secretary because my youngest, Holly, is 3½ and almost approaching being a real person, out of diapers and all that baby jazz. My boys, Jesse, 10, and John, 7, are fairly self-reliant, so now it's a matter of ferrying them to soccer, little league, and their other activities. That takes up a considerable amount of time because we're 7 miles out of town. I keep busy doing volunteer work in my kids' classes at school, gardening, bookkeeping, and generally doing all those things that it takes to keep a family of five going — like a mountain of laundry!

I tried to talk Janet Barker into coming to the reunion but she was teaching her final class of sixth graders and couldn't skip out on them the last few days of school. Janet is leaving teaching this year to illustrate a series of children's books. She is also hoping to publish a book on how to make teaching fun for teachers — is anyone out there in the publishing world? Janet is still in Missoula, Montana.

We had a great time visiting with each other at the reunion — sharing our lives, and families, and, of course, Abbot memories. We are all hoping for a big turnout for the 25th so everyone mark their calendars for June 1990 (yuck! can we really be that old?). Until then, if you want to read anything in here other than the adventures of my three children, please write me so I'll have something to say. P. S. Everyone looked much better than they did 20 years ago, and Emily, I sure wish you had come!

Greetings again.

Dave Farley reports that he is the manager of Benefit Plan Services for GTE. Dave and wife Elizabeth live in Norwell, MA with their three children. Sam Miller is practicing law with the firm of Morrison and Foerster in San Francisco where his wife, Maude, is a professor of law at the University of California. They have two boys, Eli, 5, and Nathaniel, 2. Joe Schepps is the proud father of a year-old boy, Michael Lee. (Sam Miller reports that luckily he looks like his mother and has hair on his head not his back.)

Peter Buchin is dividing his time between teaching medicine at Columbia Med School and his private practice of internal medicine and gastroenterology in New York City. He recently had a chapter entitled "Medical Management of Disorders of Swallowing" published by W. B. Saunders in the November '84 Otolaryngologic Clinics of North America. Jim Kunen has moved to New York City and is writing and editing for Newsday on Long Island. He reports that Richard Casey has become a successful producer of rock videos in Hollywood. That's all for now.

I have managed to garner a few bits of news about our classmates, and continue to hope that more of you will let me know what's happening in your lives.

Debbie Stone Paris wrote in quite a while back that she and her husband Jay, a journalist, have been living on a farm near her hometown in Ohio for the past ten years. They have two children, Owen, 3 and Sophie, 9. They also run a few businesses on the side and sound most content.

On my way to the Caribbean for a vacation this winter, who should be on the same plane but Elizabeth Walker Compton and her husband. We had to change planes in New York but talked non-stop from Boston while our husbands looked on in boredom. She is involved in basket making and gives lessons in Boston as well as in the Deer Isle, Maine area where she lives. Her daughter Sarah attends school in NYC and was joining them for a trip on a chartered sailboat. Last she heard, Fran Jones was teaching in a Montessori school and Drewry Hanes was married with several children and living in Texas.

Melinda Miller Patterson and husband John had a baby last fall, their second son. Melinda is happy being at home where she also helps to run a Christmas tree business.

Beverly Armsden Daniel and her husband announce the birth of their third child, Benjamin, born in October, 1984.

I have had a difficult year due to health problems and am taking a year's leave of absence from my counseling job. I'm looking forward to being a full-time mom and having more time for tennis, piano and gardening. Bill and I are planning a trip to France in the fall where we hope to visit Peigi Donaghy Huseby. She and her husband, Tom, and their two sons will be spending several years in France beginning in July.

I'll have more time in the coming year to spend on class news. I hope to get out postcards to everyone but I know that many addresses are missing or incorrect. I'm sure I'll also be involved in planning next year's 20th reunion, so please, take a minute to send me your address if not your news. Let's get it together for our 20th!

After a long dry spell, I'm happy to report some news once again. The majority of it comes from the East Coast, as usual. But there are those of us who have journeyed into the frontier beyond New York state.

Among those who have journeyed West, Diana Bonnifield Jillie sends greetings (and what a cute greeting card it was!) from Cupertino, CA, in the heart of Silicon Valley. Diana, husband Don, 5-year-old Max, and 2-year-old Zak, decided to pack up and leave Greater Boston in the fall of 1984, when job opportunities knocked. They have been sharing their home with a young woman from Sweden for the past year who has been "enriching our lives, sharing cultural perspectives, and helping us in our daily routine." Diana invites Abbot '67 grads: 10300 Phar Lap Dr., Cupertino, CA 95014.

Back across the continent, Anstiss Bowser Agnew sent in a brief update. Her son Christopher is now nearing two, and she is working part-time in a psychiatric residential treatment program in Westchester, NY.

On to Greater Boston. Claudia Arragg has completed her ophthalmology residency at Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary. She is on the Harvard Medical School faculty, works at Mass. Eye and Ear, has begun a private practice in Lawrence, and she and her husband, Howard, also a physician, have two children. Phew! When do you take a breath?

Marjory Kaplan writes that she is still teaching deaf teenagers in a Boston public school and would love to hear from other alumnae in the Boston/Cambridge area (617) 787-5313.

I use whatever sources I can find, and A.I.S., PA '33, gave me the scoop on you, Jeanie, and sends regards as well. I'm speaking of Jean Haley Hogan, who is now raising two children, a boy and a girl, and has made the move from Arlington to Weston. Well, that is heading west in a way.

Finally, I got a lovely letter from Roxie Wolfe in Exeter, NH. She has begun her doctorate in clinical psychology, and voices enthusiasm for both school and work (part-time in a community mental health center). I wish you continued enthusiasm, Roxie, and thank God that I'm no longer in similar shoes. Toward the end, it was sheer will-power that got me through; the enthusiasm had somehow bitten the dust. Luckily, though, it turns out that there is life after dissertation! Oh, and Roxie, there's also the possibility of some semblance of financial security after dissertation as well! Keep up the good work! In her spare (what?) time, Roxie is still an avid bicyclist, and she also threatens to stop in and visit Jill Singer Schoonmaker in nearby Durham.

That about wraps things up for this time. Stay in touch.

Well, guys, no one notified me about the deadline for the last issue, but the Alumni Office made up for it this time with a load of information.

First the exotica. Brian Spear is living in Paris and has set up a specialized medical distribution company called Prothia. Classmates can be found in reactionary countries, too. Dan Koch is working for a law firm in Seoul, where the Army recently hired his wife, Leah, as a pediatrician. "I spent two weeks in South Africa in March looking for my roots. I have more than 90 relatives in what one cousin calls her 'beautiful, benighted country.'" Quite an apt phrase.

Dan Goddard and his wife took a year off and sailed from San Francisco to Costa Rica, then toured Europe for about six months. They're now living in Sausalito. Bill Gladstone, whose wife is expecting their first child in July, writes that Randy Herman has returned from Italy and is teaching in New York while sculpting and painting.

Bink Bacon's second son, Nathaniel Phelps Bacon '02, great-grandson of W. T. Bacon, '02, was born 20 October. Lawyer

Rob Barber ascended to a partnership in Looney & Grossman in Boston on 1 January. John Barclay is an account supervisor with Long, Haymes & Carr, a Winston-Salem, N.C. advertising agency and has two children, Amos, 9, and Alice, 3. Also down South, Les Callahan is a shopping center developer in Marietta, Ga.

Al Clark is front office manager at Chicago's Executive Hotel. Doug Dodd is living in southern Maine with his wife and two girls and is a general contractor building condos. In neighboring Vermont (Woodstock), Dick Dumez is still managing the Rumble Seat Rathskeller (always loved that name), has two children, plays piano and coaches soccer.

Rod McNealy, who handles baby products for Johnson & Johnson and is starting to worry about our 20th reunion, picked up a tennis instruction book by Rick Devereux, who is still enjoying life as director of a sport complex in Wellesley.

Peter Evans hasn't had it so easy. A Broadway show he was in closed soon after it opened when critics panned it — though they didn't attack Peter's performance. He says he is "bloodied but unbowed." But Peter, you're supposed to take bows.

Moving from the sublime to Cleveland, it's no surprise that Bruce Hearey's law firm, which includes his wife Dianne, represents the Cavaliers basketball team. Bruce's 9-year-old son Leif startled his dad by liking ice hockey. Bruce's daughter Jill, five months, likes to stay awake all night.

Skip Jensen and wife Kitty have left the green of Wall Street for verdant Fairfield County, Conn. They have given up smoking, drinking and eating dessert. They haven't abandoned everything, though; they have a two-year-old and another baby is scheduled for delivery in June.

I can't figure out whether Charlie Liberman is doing physiology or psychology research at Harvard. Each time I get something, the handwriting isn't clear. I do know he's at Harvard though. Bernie Mulholland became a father of twins, Brad and Scott, on 28 April, 1984. Bernie left his post as an assistant D.A. in 1983 and went to work for law offices of Bernie Cohen in Brockton, MA, doing mostly civil litigation and worker compensation cases. Bernie just beat out Andre Spears, whose wife had twin sons, Lukas and Samuel, in August 1984.

Cabe Warren gave up teaching to become a stock broker with Prudential-Bache in its Hyannis office. "I wanted to find out what all this Yuppie stuff is about," he says. He reports that Vin Crowley got married. Howie Whitehead became a proud papa on 6 May, 1984.

Here in D.C., Scooter Libby has left the State Dept. to become a partner in Dickstein, Shapiro & Moring, which does a lot of white collar crime work — should you need his counsel — as well as many other things. Hunt Deming has moved to a different slot with the D.C. Corporation Counsel.

Keep the letters coming.

Dear Classmates:

As June rolls around I invariably think of those bagpipers, and, in spite of our knowing looks, that innocence of so long ago.

Patty "Rocky" Rockford called from San Diego where she is the proprietor of Rocky's, a wine and beer bar. She promises drinks on the house to any Abbot or Andover prepette from the class of 1968. Chris Harley, Simone Huval and Florence Newcomb Verrill, please call Rocky at (619) 270-3738 — she would love to hear from you.

Tiny bits of paper come in the mail from Andover with tiny bits of news. Joanne Sapienza Evangelist works in advertising in Winchester, MA. Judy Dillingham Harold is tending Sumer, 6, and Elizabeth, 2, in Santa Cruz, Calif. Barbara Camp Gatewood is busy decorating builder's homes with her own company, while taking care of two kiddies, Elizabeth, 5, and Catherine, 3. Atta woman, supermom! Kathy Wies Dietz lives in Andover (some people couldn't give up the Andover Shop) with a husband and three short ones, Martha, Stephen, and Carl. She recently left her job as an analyst to be a full-time mom. Kathy, very smart! And always a trend setter. Plus more time to play tennis.

Simone Huval wrote from Union, Maine (207) 785-4642. She and her husband, Jim, have had a very rough year. They found out that their twin sons, now two years old, are profoundly deaf. Simone's time is spent with therapy for the boys and teaching them cued speech. Any classmate wishing to write, please do, at RFD 1, Box 821, Union, Maine 04862. Simone, we all send you our good wishes.

Jody Frost-Golino sent me a threatening note from Florida, promising to expose my checkered past if I wrote any more nonsense regarding her or her family. Jody, the pen is mightier than the sword. So there! (Whatever that means!)

By the time this reaches y'all, summer will be in full swing. For all of you with midgets (children) enjoy these golden days. The summer laughter, bright days and firefly studded evenings will too soon be past, as they wander off to their friends and callings.

Summer for me has always been a more reflective time. As privileged people, try and spend some time remembering the other worlds, the other people. You can make a difference. As Bruce Springsteen sings "Born in the U.S.A." in the background I think how pleasant and how full of answered dreams all our lives have been. With fondness, Cher

Here's the latest edition of the printable news.

We'll start with something safe and reputable, like the papacy. David Ensor has moved his ABC news beat from Warsaw to Rome, where he's now Vatican correspondent. While in Poland David married Anita Luzinska, who was working for NBC. Given the Pope's travel schedule, Dave should be kept busy. He had a "gruelling but fascinating" trip when John Paul II visited Latin America a few months back.

There's more matrimonial/familial news. Last summer Steve Madsen married Rebecca Wetherill Howard, who, like Steve is a lawyer with Cravath, Swaine & Moore in NYC. Rob Sherwood and his wife Barbara, of Venice, CA, had their first child, a son, in January.

Down in the Caribbean, Manuel Tavares is a family man who thinks ahead. He's figured out that his two sons could be PA '96 and '98. Perhaps not unlike other people, he is wondering about the "symbolic gesture" of entering their names for admission. If his children do enter Andover, they'll be the third generation of Tavares at PA.

Crosby and Kate Kemper have returned from teaching English in China. As Crosby explains it, "Those of you who may have been confused by China's recent moves to the right will now understand." Kate is now at Columbia Teachers College, while Cros is part-time at CUNY, and part-time chief fund raiser and Director of the British Institute of the United States. "Sort of a well-dressed pan-handler," says my old roomie.

Jeff Kilbreth, family man, continues as an internal management consultant at Digital. "Technology-driven companies adjust with some difficulty to increased competition, but the adjustment process is fascinating," says Jeff. And down in New Haven, Rich Randazzo, M.D., was married this winter to Abigail Moody, the director of the Radiography School at the Hospital of St. Raphael, where Rick practices.

Larry Gelb and his Swedish wife, Anki, had a vodka-herring party one recent Saturday afternoon at their place in Cambridge. Larry's trim and lively, and manages completely to belie any of those stories you hear about the gruelling horrors of Harvard B School. He's looking forward to working in hospital management after he graduates next year.

All this married life is inspiring to some of us who are still bachelors. Sometimes I sit at home watching the Celtics on the tube. I sit there with my roommate, and I realize that the pleasures of single life in one's thirties have their limitations. Last year my best buddy, Jeremy Bluhm, was reading through a report of classmates from college, and one of his conclusions was that the deepest, finest feelings seem to come through when people wrote about their families, rather than their jobs or travels or achievements. So, hats off to each and every one of you who works and raises; who persist in that long process of love.

But when it comes to travel, the award this time around has to go to Jeremy himself, who this winter visited his parents at their new home in Sydney, Australia. Jeremy seemed to fall hard for the Australian people and their way of life, which he found far more relaxed than life here on the East coast of the U.S. of A.

One of the people I'm asked about most frequently is Sid Stern. Well, here's the word from the man himself: "Shannon may be an ex-congressman, Ensor with ABC News, Fuller at Harvard and Strauss at Yale — but I'm the goddam President of the Greensboro Jaycees!" I knew that a lot of people were disappointed that Sid couldn't make the reunion last year, but he's put his reputation on the line and become the first to promise to be present and accounted for in 1989.

From way up north comes a news report that Dan Kunkle is heading up canoe trips through the Canadian wilds. The Alumni Office sent me a clipping which said that Dan's partner had the nickname "Injun Hands" because of his calloused hands. Dan got stuck with the nom de canoe of "Injun Nose" because his nose kept peeling from the sun and wind. This from the Rutland Daily Herald, which also reported that Dan is a math teacher at Mercersburg Academy in Pennsylvania.

Word comes from the "other" coast that Tim Mahoney '65 is involved in theatrical and film production, both in LA and NY. What should we look for, Tim? And what about our other Mahoney — Pat? When last heard from he was doing lighting for big rock tours on various continents.

That's all the news we've got this time around. Summer's here and the time is right for dancing in the streets — and maybe for a little letter writing. Send a note, and be guaranteed that your name will find its way into a highly reputable journal. Stay well.

Reunion Notes: Monday morning. My head felt like I'd sat in the front row at Minsky's. I stared out through the sign on my office door. "YRATERCES SSALC." Then it all came back to me like a hot kiss at the end of a wet fist . . . Chip Boynton, vice-chairman and welcoming agent for the reunion, met me at Logan. Several hours later we checked in at the Underwood Room. Peter McCallum was already in from NY, where he's still in charge of career development at Bunge Corp.

Johnson Hall. Elisabeth and Bernie Krei-linger had two days left of a five-week camping trip across the U.S. They had visited Don Rollings in Tucson, Jim Quinby, who manages a resort in Mammoth Lakes, and Fred Bauer in Burlingame, Calif., who was busy with a three-week-old daughter and a new job on Raychem's legal staff. Bernie later won the prestigious Andover letter-opener award for coming all the way from Ergolding, Bavaria, where he's just received a lifetime appointment to the bench of the county court.

The bar in Johnson was several bottles deep in every category. Doctor Royce hosted the first cocktail hour. Kiki and Rob Robinson had arrived from Detroit. Rob's a vice-president with the National Bank of Detroit. Chuck Willand with wife, Emily, is now employed by a biotech firm in Stoneham, but he said he's thinking of teaching again at Andover. John Pynchon came from Maine, where he's a member of an architecture firm. Gina and Carl Higbie brought young son "Buddy" along. Carl took a day off from his life as an investment banker in NY.

Chip took a nap. I torqued over to G.W. The mailroom was empty but still ringing with those voices from the day in April when all the letters came. How did they all get there at the same time? Did the 'Burd fix the whole thing? Wendy and Jim Cahill drove in from New Hampshire, where he serves as an assistant attorney-general. Marc Poirier, of the D.C. law firm of Spiegel & McDiarmid, agreed to help with the 1990 reunion. And Harvie Branscomb, in from Watertown, mentioned that he was in the business of rebuilding amphibious automobiles, and has a large inventory for sale.

Johnson Hall. Fred Sawabini and wife, Gay Luster of Abbot '70, had arrived from NY and Connecticut. Harry Twombly brought along an extensive wardrobe of casual wear, and promptly outfitted Rob Christie with a Hawaiian shirt. Harry's a writer in Portland, ME, and Rob has accepted a position as assistant maplemaster with Christie's Maple Farms while he waits for his business ventures in Houston to reorganize. Chip, up from his nap, showed films on his VCR.

10:45 AM. The Parade. Bagpipes. Charlie Wyman and his wife Rosalind Cooper stayed for lunch, but they were busy moving to Lexington, where he's the new Conservation Administrator. Joe Little, in from the upper west side with his wife Inca Indriso, had switched from banking to a role with a software company. Ginny and Ker Colburn were accompanied by their daughter. They live in Westport, and Ken's doing well with First Boston in NY. Mel Brown and his wife Inka Rudnycka also marched in the parade. Mel is a freelance pianist in NY, and is a performer in the chamber music series at the Whitney Museum-Philip Morris.

Class photos. Kevin Doyle was in the rare position of being on the other side of the lens. He's still in the men's fashion business, and was with his wife Lacy. Bill Ury, who was accompanied by his wife, Lynn, is now assistant director of a negotiation program at Harvard Law School. He has authored several nationally publicized books on negotiation, and spoke later to the Class of '60 on controlling a nuclear crisis. We had our own crisis to control. Mark Kelly was talking to Headmaster McNemar about the spirit of reunions. As we had done so often there, we turned to athletics, pounding the Class of '75 in stickball. We gave away 5 years, but the talent was still there. Kelly came back to hit 2 homers. Mark's with the NY law firm of King and O'Connor. Owen Hearty roamed the outfield, and is one of NY's famous bond traders. Elmer Rynne, down from his family's sporting goods business in Lowell, caught everything hit to left field. Jim Shea, now in private practice in Baltimore, was back solidly at short. Bill Roth, a lawyer with Millbank, Tweed in NY, had his son Andrew pinch hit for him. And, Mark Baldwin, in from Truckee, CA where he manages a restaurant, completed the line-up. Mark was traveling with his finance Deb, or "Weedle." This was practically the same team that won on Memorial Day, 1970, with the notable absence of Steve Marshall baying in center field.

Dinner in Commons. Chip had done an excellent job in keeping us busy, organized, and stocked. Burr Tweedy finally arrived from Boston where he'd been working on an upcoming trial of an alleged crime-boss. He mentioned that Frank Mondano was a member of the defendant's legal team. Mark Swanson is a prosecutor in Iowa, but mostly of drunk drivers. Mark helped out at the post-dinner dance. We'd never seen him work so hard.

Back at Johnson Hall. Don Celotto remarked that the common room was beginning to remind him of Serengeti National Park. Don, a New Haven attorney, has been devoting himself to sailing on his new boat.

Sunday. Blue Skies. Charlie Finch worked on his tan, before returning to NY where he's running Carol Bellamy's mayoral campaign. Charlie was also part of Gary Hart's campaign and will no doubt

Hello Reunion Class #15.

I'll lead off this article with news I had received before the reunion. Pauline Cerf Resnick will follow with reunion news. I'm sorry I couldn't be at reunion; I hope those that made it had a terrific time. Here's the news: First, belated announcement that Debbie Naman Meyer gave birth to a son, Stephen Christian Meyer, on 14 April 1984. Her daughter Laura is now four. She had recently seen Tammie Elliott Rogers who has a son, 4. Debbie also has seen Jo Jayne Swift Soule and Pam Mallen Carlson. Priscilla Mendenhall Coudoux has returned from France and is now living outside of Washington, D.C. She is engaged in a study of Thai textiles with the hope of publishing and mounting an exhibit in the near future. She finds the research fascinating and plans to learn how to weave and speak conversational Lao and Thai within the next year. She's enjoying being self-employed.

Sandra Perkin Van Brunt writes that she and husband Jeff moved to Appleton, Wisconsin in December of '83 where Jeff joined Kimberly Clark as product manager on Kleenex/New Products. They now have two daughters, 3-year-old Alena and 8-month-old Blair. Congratulations, Sandy and Jeff.

On a final note, I'm now living in Westport, CT and have just changed jobs — I'm now Director of Marketing for Act Now, a division of Act Media, a national in-store promotion company. Those ads on the shopping carts are ours!

And now . . . heere's the reunion news!

Leslie Breed and I (Pauline Cerf Resnick) have volunteered to undertake the writing of this column from now on. We need your full cooperation in disclosing pertinent details of your lives or those of any '70 alumnae; if you are among the more private members of the class your time has run out.

Reunion news: It wasn't an exceptionally large turnout but those of us who made it were glad we'd come. Leslie, Jenny Williams Katsh and I came up from New York, along with radiant opera singer Adelle Nicholson and her stage-manager husband, Stuart Heyman. Jenny has retired from the law to become a Soho potter. Sue Johnston Peyton was there with her adorable look-alike, Meredith, Tobi Solomon Halpern and husband Dick appeared Saturday with six-month-old Ben, arriving in such haste that little Ben was thrown from his stroller and showed up sporting a freshly bruised forehead but grinning nonetheless), Sandy Urie Thorpe and Penny Snelling Sullivan had their respective redheads in tow, three-year-old Katie and four-year-old Tripp, along with Penny's husband, Bob, and Tamara Elliott Rogers had four-year-old Sam put in a brief appearance. Tammy is now in the admissions office at Harvard, a useful piece of information I could have used earlier this year when my niece applied. Those of us who left our children at home were me (baby girl and two boys), Elise Straus Bowers (two girls in Maine), and Sandy Perkin Van Brunt (two small girls heedlessly abandoned in Wisconsin). Elise is a part-time violinist with the Portland and Bangor Symphonies. Betty Huhn, Marian Boynton, and Nancy Grassi Treiber made the trip, as well as elegantly-dressed Francine Amore Koris (freshly graduated from law school, having long ago given up a promising career in fast food) and her orthopedic husband, Mark. In time for the Saturday night bash were happy new-lweds Gay Luster and Fred Sawabini (PA '70) who live in a small town 50 minutes north of NYC whose name I can never remember. Blonde and beautiful Lisa Sweitzer drove down from Portland, Maine, where she is a reporter and weekend news anchor and producer for the CBS affiliate Channel 13. And of course Stephanie Dantos was on hand in her official capacity as Reunion Chairman to ensure that all ran smoothly. Thank you, Stephanie — it was great and I know we'll be able to count on you in the future.

Now for news of those who missed the reunion. Margaret Cheney McNally (whose mother attended her reunion of the class of '45) lives in Washington, D.C. with her husband, John, and is expecting their first child in the fall. Debbie Prudden Lathrop's third child, David, was born in the fall of '84, as was Sylvia Joseph Galambos' daughter Andrea. Sarah Bowen Blades lives in Fair Haven, CT with her husband, Fred, an ophthalmologist, and children Sarah, seven and Charlie, four, and has long ago despaired of ever seeing her name on these pages. Linda Moore lives in Salem, NH and has a little girl. Maura Markley Pollak and her husband live in Tulsa, OK with two sons, Zack and Joseph, and a baby born last winter. Maura is a substitute pre-school teacher. Now there is someone who must like children a lot. (Some of us feel three pre-schoolers are enough.) Now I have gotten to the last page of Sandy Thorpe's notes from the fall of '84, and there is a final scrawled reference to Marcie Rickenbacker — forgive me, Marcie, if I've deciphered this incorrectly. Marcie has a son, David, born 29 February (1983?) whom she refers to as "a one-man disaster team," and a four-year-old daughter, Libby. Marcie is active in the Garden Club and is vice-president of the neighborhood organization in Chalfont, CT, I believe. Sandy also heard from Lynn Waller Stellings, who enclosed a cute picture of Carrie, ten, and Tiger, eight. Lynn and George's home in Rock Hill, NC was included in the Junior Welfare League's Spring Tour this past April.

Let's hear from those who disappeared into the twilight zone some 15 years ago. Has anyone heard anything from Sue Stein?

A thankless but necessary task is the gently urgent solicitation of our dollars to support Andover's role of excellence. This is the charge of Class Agents, who remind us that Andover continues to need our help. For more than 10 years, Dave Ennis and Tom Foley have organized this campaign with an acute sense of duty, and rare humor. Dave and Tom deserve special thanks for their leadership role.

In this same vein, our 15th Reunion requires a special effort to help plan and organize the weekend and the related fund drive. We need about 20 Class Agents to make everything a success: if you can participate please contact me, or Sarah Gurry at the Alumni Office.

Dave Andrews wrote that he has a hectic schedule — being simultaneously a neurosurgery resident at Cornell Medical Center, husband (wife Sarah was a Stanford classmate), and father to nine-month-old daughter Erin. Despite being on call every other night he had received a visit from Harry Chandler. Harry is Executive Producer of an L.A. TV station, as well as father to Margot, 3, and Peter, 9 months. Dave also reports that he was very impressed by Pierce Rafferty's film Atomic Cafe, which he got a chance to see in London last year.

Please note my change of address — I'm back in Andover.

Well, folks, you have two new Class Secretaries, Sandy Rollins (25 Hatherly Rd., Brighton, MA 02135) and I will jointly report all the news of the class of '71. So let's hear from you! Write either one of us, or both of us, and we promise you will see your name in print for the next issue of the Bulletin. We want to know about careers, families, moves, etc. Sandy mentioned she took notes from several of you when she participated in the phonathon last November and she passed them on to the appropriate people — we apologize for that news not appearing in the Bulletin. I will be sending each one of you a copy of our class mailing list in the near future so you can get in touch with long lost friends.

In the news, Dr. Sally Browning married Dr. Rich Pellman in June 1984 at a lovely wedding in Mystic, CT. I understand they will be moving to Seattle this summer. Sandy and I both attended the wedding and had a chance to bring each other up-to-date on our lives. Sandy is graduating from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard in May '85. Congratulations! Personally, I've had the joy of becoming a mom — our son Mark was born in February 1984 and he's been my full-time job ever since. Again, LET'S HEAR FROM YOU!

More Yuppie blues, or excerpts from our various works in progress. Like a photographer friend of mine once said, "once you take the picture, all you got is the picture." These notes arrive from the top of a fornicia table, out of a blue typewriter, culled in the main from little white scraps of paper with two to four lines of Xeroxed handwriting: peoples' self-selected details of their lives to-date for consumption by other ghosts of our adolescence. On the whole, therefore, I can report that this has been a very good quarter. We are getting rich. We procreate. Somewhere, in some school-room out of Dante, old Claude Fuess is smiling.

In late November Gordon K. Sze, M. D., resident at Moffit Hospital in San Francisco, attended a radiologists' convention in Washington, D.C. where he visited Joseph McDermott, still counsel to Congressman Trofo Sunia of American Samoa. Jeff Kita was married a year ago last April. He's started up a software consulting company. Vic Crosby is still in the Air Force, a flight surgeon at Moody AFB, still married, still with two kids. Evan is two now, Colin's four. Ralph Senior married Janice Antonelli in September of last year. They're living in Natick, Mass. John Buchanan reports that 1984 brought another boy to his brood — following hard on the heels of 1983's new model: the new guy's named Ben, the trade-in, Grier. Sam Powell has recently been appointed Manager of the A-6E Upgrade Program in the F404 Project Department of General Electric's Aircraft Engine Group in Lynn, Mass. He's finally finishing the kitchen cabinets in his condo, and invited people to send him their sisters. Jim Crawford and Aleta (Reynolds) are still in Needham, and Jim is starting a three-year research fellowship at Brigham and Women's Hospital. Jim and Aleta have two children, Bristol, age four, and Jenness, age three. Mark Brown has joined the Los Angeles law firm of Kinsella, Boesch, Fujikawa & Towle, where he practices bankruptcy-related litigation. He claims to have no impending marriage plans, and, more importantly, no children to announce. Steve Blutter is having a great time in Chicago, is an Andover rep in the area and is out looking for prospects. And Lewis Howe, in a really beautiful and sort of Zen note, notes that he would like to report the birth of their first child — a son — on 7 March 1984. All is well, says Lew.

On a more physically observed note, Sam Butler and Marea Adams have had a second child, also a daughter, named Marea, called Mimi. I have heard her crying over the phone. Tony Leggett, I'm reliably told, has been reading these notes and thinks there's something wrong in my head. Tony still works for Swiss Bank last I heard. Ed MacPherson, too. Butler's in commercial lending: his note to the Alumni Office is an obscene parody of Dick and Jane, too rude even for me to paraphrase. And Leggett thinks I'm unhealthy? Kevin Threadgold is a mysterious presence in Boston, doing advertising. Rick Mc-

Kallagat has dozens of children. Peter Gilbert edits this magazine.

Saw Doug Hinman playing rockabilly in Brookline the other night. We compared paunches and receding hairlines. He still plays good drums, but the drums need some repair and he lives in Providence most of the time.

And, just to round things out, this boy will graduate law school soon enough, and take the bar, and start work this fall for the aptly-named law firm of Goodwin, Procter and Hoar. The last couple of months, in a paroxysm of anti-professional frenzy, I grew a beard. But when I get up in the morning to brush my teeth, I still see a kid with braces staring back from the other side of the mirror. And the yearbook's getting dog-eared around the edges.

You guys should have been there. Saturday night, 10:45 p.m., at the local ice rink. Our own Joy Beane Brieant, a hot-shot attorney by day, swept around the back of the net saving a puck from the ignominy of entering the wrong team's goal. She skillfully carried and then shot the puck down to the proper zone, namely, the other team's net.

Blue helmet, mouth guard, shin and elbow pads, red padded shorts and a pink jersey — if the attire seems inappropriate for a litigator in a prestigious law firm, or you're getting confused as to what could possibly be going on, you will simply have to travel to Katonah, New York and join Joy and me as we play in a women's ice hockey league. Great fun!

Just to lend the spark of rivalry every team needs, I often find myself facing off for the puck against a woman who wears an Exeter hockey jersey. Consider the gauntlet thrown. We hereby issue an open call for all Abbot alumni hockey players (field or ice) — we'll train.

It beats me how Joy manages to squeeze in her lawyering after joining the firm's softball team, weekly horseback riding lessons, playing ice hockey and building a house. Nonetheless her head is buried behind piles and piles of paper for so many hours each day that I am convinced she has simply stretched the number of minutes each day has to offer; clocks and calendars be damned.

Attorney Leigh Brecheen has been specializing in entertainment matters from her Century City location in the office of O'Melveny and Myers in Los Angeles. Leigh reports that although the entertainment industry is filled with preppies, most of them seemed to have attended Lawrenceville. All you young Californians should give Leigh a call at her office (213) 669-6730.

Harper & Row attorney Linda Rawson and her husband Charles Harrison '67 have found a new home on West 38th Street in Manhattan.

Nancy Pinks has moved to Natick and works at Computer World in Framingham, Mass.

Aleta Reynolds Crawford writes she and Jim '72 are enjoying their new home in Needham, Mass. Jim is a pathology resident at Brigham and Women's Hospital with about three more years of research to go before he sets up shop on his own. With his Ph.D. and M.D. his career seems designed for research and teaching. Meanwhile, the little Crawfords, Brice (age 5) and Jenny (just past 3 years old) have been keeping "Mom" pretty busy.

Joanie Lichtman works at the Psychiatric Research Institute in New York City, while Lynn Graham Goldberg is a planner at the Student Loan Marketing Association in Washington, D.C., or so I am led to believe by the informative class list supplied by the Alumni Office.

Sometimes I feel as if I am grasping at threads of undated fact to put together these columns. Any of you that have current information to share, I would be much obliged.

Sandy Reynolds enjoys married life and has settled in California, or so I hear from a Vassar classmate of hers. In fact, while attending a dinner party at said Vassar alumna's home a while back I was introduced to a young gentleman and his wife. Shortly thereafter we recognized our common roots in the class of '72. Harrison (Rocky) Taylor '72 and his wife, Sandra, live in Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., are expecting a baby in July, and are involved in the shipping business and Junior League. Rocky is currently landscaping his property with astrological elements providing focal points. He sees Mark Lawrence '72 fairly frequently and asked after Brenda Friend, our class actress in Manhattan, and Nancy Pinks. You guys should get together. After all, New York and Boston are only about four hours apart.

Maybe you all could come for a class hockey game. Hmm. Now that has possibilities.

Contrary to our previous suspicions, evidence has arrived via post and telecommunications that the Western Contingent is no longer incommunicado.

Steve Sullivan sent a letter on Stanford University Medical Center letterhead which indicates he is Chief Resident of the Med School. That, and the news he includes, leads me to conclude that there are Andover alumni on the West Coast who work for a living (a dangerous statement for a politician to make). Steve reports much news: Peter Shanholt and wife Cindy added an 8 lb. 10 oz. boy, Vander, in early April. They have been in San Francisco since his '81 graduation from Stanford Biz with Peter Beck, Phil Kemp and Dave Victor. Steve reports, with dubious veracity, that Peter is already teaching his 3-month-old child how to play stick hockey and wiffleball. But they're living in a marina near the Golden Gate Bridge, so water polo is sure to follow.

Marty Scott is in his ninth year of post-graduate study, which comes as no surprise to Steve. While trying to teach Marty internal medicine, Marty insisted on discussing the molecular biology of the AIDS virus — this would have been fine, but it was making the patients he was examining a little bit nervous.

Steve then made a startling admission. Although Cathy Armsden '74 and Anne Hoover '73 were well-known to every classmate I know of, Steve was, for the first time, introduced to them by mutual Exeter alumni, and thereupon spent a weekend with them at the Dartmouth Cabin in the Sierras, hiking and swimming. With that, he now becomes the envy of his peers. He further reports the emergence of one of the class ghosts, Bill Adams, who dropped into San Francisco on a 3-day business trip from Chicago. Bill arranges hospital financing for NuVeen & Company.

Mystery of the quarter: from somewhere in the South came a recorded telephone message to the Sullivans from Mike Fox who refuses to reveal his whereabouts, and did not call back.

Steve expresses great admiration for Phil Kemp, who is reported to be on the "yuppie fast track," recently transferred from Chicago to London by Salomon Bros.

Finally, Steve crows that he and his wife, Jay, are parents of one-year-old Katie (born June '84) who is walking, squawking and ruling the home life; and he is soon to finish his residency and hang out a shingle in Menlo Park.

In the last issue of the notes, I reported that Will Schutte had decided to remain in New York City for one more year before fleeing to the coast. I am sorry to report that he recanted on that promise, having been made an offer by his employer he could not refuse. This means he will not likely be abusing the Hyannis Port golf course this summer, or any time in the near future, which makes me sad, and the membership happy.

One good thing to come of this was a smashing goodbye bash for Will at his flat in New York City, attended by a quorum of New York alumni. Amidst shots of assorted malts and blends and a long line at the bathroom, the following bits of information were divulged:

Matt Barry lives in Brooklyn Heights and works for the old-fashioned money-makers; Ted Wood is doing his graduate thesis at University of Missouri; Casey Sheahan is in Berkeley doing a book on cross-country skiing for Sports Illustrated; Gregg Hutton is finally finishing law school at University San Diego (this wreaks havoc on the California bar); Fritz Drury lives in New York and allegedly teaches at R.I.S.D. two days a week; Brooks Bloomfield is a chef in Park City, Utah (I just received a message on my answering machine from Brooks that I should never believe anything that Schutte says about him, and that I should expect him on my doorstep on the Cape this summer, but I shouldn't open the door).

Anyway, Will is headed to Hollywood, a place that, knowing Will, will make him sick.

Some random notes reached me via the Alumni office: Tom Sommerfield is still in Hong Kong, with a brief interlude with family in Switzerland; Bill Brown, Harvard B.A., Villanova Law, assistant general counsel to Governor of New Jersey, recently wed Kristie Forsythe of Yardley, PA; Bill Robinson got a B.M. in Music Composition from N.T.S.U., dabbling in science and wants to hear from Peter Sellars '75; Leo Haviland, Cornell Law '79, became V.P. at Goldman, Sachs, N.Y. in April '84; and James Jackson's note arrived incomplete, but mentioned that Chad Nehrt and Crafford Harris celebrated something in fine form.

Here are some tidbits from Abbot's class of 1973: Jane Cashin Demers reports a lot — she's enjoying ambulatory care work at medical center in Wakefield; Marcia McCabe marrying soap director named Goutman; Elizabeth Rollins working archives at Polaroid in Cambridge; Lori Goodman marrying in New York City recently; Charlotte Hamlin Wilson married and living on houseboat in South Dartmouth; Connie Petty recently seen in New York City by Betsy Kent. Amy Rogers lives right around the corner from Betsy and me on Beacon Hill, just bought a condo and edits a magazine for Cahners Publishing Company.

The more news folks send me, the less room I have to exercise rapier wit; or is it that I am losing some while participating in partisan debate. So much the better, many may say.

Finally, the Morin residence on Cape Cod is open to any summer weekend visitor willing to both stock the bar and be humiliated on the golf course. Reply to above.

New York, NY 10027

First things first: Sara Knowles reports to my correspondent that she had recently gone to the dentist and that she felt rather poorly for the experience. That is all. More forthcoming was Rob Stimson who detailed his eleven-year spiritual and geographic journey in a six-page handwritten letter. He is a Sikh and has changed his name to Gurumander Singh Khalsa. He is married to Jai Kim Kaur and they are expecting a baby in early summer. He finds living in Houston, doing renovation work, recording music, and "getting closer to God" very agreeable. He informs us that Ralph Stell has also pursued a spiritual path over the years. Ralph is associated with a "new age Christian group," is married and will also be a father by the time this is published. Ralph reports that Ned Whittemore is building guitars in Minneapolis.

On a different track is our spring crop of M.B.A.s. Margaret Downs is going to consult for Bain in Boston after returning from a European vacation. Louisa MacKintosh has completed hers at Babson. Mary Ittelson is leaving sunny Stanford to consult in Chicago. I am staying here in New York to work at Citibank in mortgage finance. Tom Boyle is working for a Manhattan competitor — Chemical Bank's Capital Markets Group — after getting his MBA from the University of Chicago.

David Corey is splitting his time between the East Coast and the mid-West. He commutes between NYC and Boise, Idaho, learning about sheep, potatoes, and meat products. Chuck Smith is working to build a "City and Country" architectural practice, entailing six months in each. David Bonbright has entirely forsaken the urban jungle to collect drums in Africa for the Ford Foundation. Just back from two years in Africa is Bill Berkeley, now on a fellowship at Yale Law School. Meanwhile, Gar Waterman is in Italy sculpting marble. I can't think of a better place to do so. Katherine Keesling Newland writes that rather than "doing taxes at Peat Marwick" (as reported in this column — oops!) she is working for the State Dept. in Caracas, Venezuela.

Peter Anderson, Scotty Coates, Betsy Evans, Peter Currie, and George Ireland all made it to Tony and Emmy Hobson's wedding last September in Cincinnati. This reunion of the notorious "Foxcroft Gang" must have been something to behold. Peter A. lives in the wilds of Nathrop, Colorado. Peter C. works in the wilds of the London financial district for Morgan Stanley. He and wife Betsy had a seven-pound, eleven-ounce boy in February. Scotty is an architect in San Francisco, married, "with at least one kid." Betsy E. has returned from the Virgin Islands and now works at the Addison Gallery. Apparently, George's duties as treasurer of Asarco take him to South America so often, that upon seeing the profusion of visas stamped in his passport, customs officials advise those behind George to "go to another line, this is going to take awhile."

Andy Hallberg married the "girl next door," Amy Jones, last summer. They live in Manhattan where he is an orthopedics resident at the Hospital for Special Surgery. Andy writes that Jackson Hee, his wife, Patty, and their two-year-old daughter live on Long Island. Adam Lerner is an intern at Boston City Hospital, while Tim Segal is studying medicine in Brussels. David Petros is Chief Resident at Fitzsimons Army Medical Center. His wife, Heather, bore their first child, David, Jr. last January. Lisa Landsman Oliveri practices law in Hartford, Conn. and lives with husband Jack in nearby Glastonbury. She is trying to rake in enough cash to "be a ski bum without working." Wally Corwin apparently has combined work and play in Salem, Mass. He works for Horizon Sail and spends a lot of time racing. Bill Cunliffe sounds like he has some fun as well. He tickles the ivories in the Buddy Rich Band, and just returned from touring Europe with Frank Sinatra.

When not playing volleyball at the beach near his house, Lincoln Smith is lead design engineer for Quivus Systems, developing fire equipment dispatching software. Volney Steffle is also in high technology, working for Status Computer in Derry, N.H. Robert Streete is a professor of computer science at Mills College in Oakland. Oystein Haugan lives in Oslo but occasionally surfaces in New York as his work in the computer business demands.

Definitely not in the computer business is Celia Lewis who is a zoo keeper in charge of hoof stock (i.e. antelope and gazelle) at the North Carolina Zoo. Libby Yoakum is studying painting at the National Academy School of Fine Arts, here in New York. Nina Rutenburg is organizing a traveling exhibition on the "French Style in America." She is looking forward to extensive research in Paris.

All in all, the class of 1974 seems a well diversified portfolio. (Excuse me, please, all this finance theory is beginning to get to me. They say a good stiff shot of reality is the only cure.) Best wishes and stay in touch.

Reunion Notes: First things first: The Class of '75 would like to thank Margo Kent Timble for her efforts as Class Secretary for the past ten years. The new Class Secretaries are Steve Bache, Roger Strong and myself, Mari Wellin King. Please keep the news coming.

I think the majority of the participants at our 10th would agree with full hearts that the reunion was more interesting, enlightening and just plain fun than all of us had anticipated. The reunion would not have been the success it was without the leadership and humor of our chairmen, Anne Rollings and David Vipond. Nor would the beverages have been abundant without the efforts of Mary-Jo O'Reilly Smith and her husband Ford. The class also gives special thanks to John and Helen Metcalf for sponsoring such a wonderful reception in honor of their late son, Jay Metcalf. He is missed by many.

It is difficult to capture the essence of the reunion for all of you that found excuses not to attend, i.e. Helen Levin, Brad Geier, Chris Finn, Lewis Butler, Priscilla Perry, George Cogan, Peggy Stern, Richard Hersch, Paul McNicol, Scott Nassar, etc., etc. (where were you guys?!). The following quotes from various attendees, however, will provide the flavor of our weekend in Andover:

Dave Scott: "Never has so much beer been consumed by so few people in such a short period of time."

Holly Vickers: "What a release from the past, and I rejoice in the present. What a great class and reunion!"

Bill Whiteford: "When I get fired from my job at Texaco I am joining the pro-surfing circuit!"

Yogi Pappas: "You look marvelous!"

Geoff Richards: "I can't say that I wish I weren't."

Dennis Pratt: "This is the first time we could party in Adams without having to use the fire escape."

Brian Burke: "Beat LA. I'm using my best lines and still . . . nothing works."

Frank Lee: "Glad to be here; who is Lew Laskey's hairdresser, anyway?"

Mike Boldt: "Final escape, graduation from law school . . . and then this boondoggle — all in one week. What a way to go."

Dana Horowitz Halsted: "Go Lakers."

Paul Murray: "It's been very good."

Mari Wellin King: "Did you hear I married Dick King?"

Peter Wyman: "I have to leave early on Sunday so that I can mow the lawn with my new lawnmower!"

Mrs. Peter Wyman: "With such loving, jovial, dashing, bon vivants in the class of '75 as I have met this reunion weekend, it is no wonder that Peter has such a well-rounded personality."

Mark Mullen: "I think I'll go back to EST!"

Felicia Elias: "We're having some fun

Betsey Redmand: "Love those cheese grits!"

Cannon Labrie: "Unbelievable!"

Lawrence Kemp: "Isn't it neat that Bill Whiteford manages Claude's Hair Salon in Venice Beach?"

Frank Skokan: "Glad to be here, sorry to leave again."

George Redmand PA '74: "I'm not over the hill . . . but . . ."

Dick King: "Did you hear that I went to the Boss's wedding?"

Cecily Harshman: "Great weekend! I finally made peace with the past, and had fun in the process."

Tony Nahas: "I came (from Oslo), I saw (these '75 crazies), they conquered (my heart). I'll miss them."

Dan Cooper: "I will never forget this weekend!"

And for all of us who participated in the reunion, let's not forget the incredible soccer maneuvers of Arthur Kell, Joanie Bozek and Rob Lenk, the flower children dancing in upper left, the baked beans served at Saturday's dinner, the wonderful music jamming of Arthur Kell and Tom Chapin, and of course the beautiful offspring of Jody Harrison Silipo, Yogi Pappas, Mary-Jo O'Reilly Smith, Kurt Silverman, Debbie Rogers Doherty, Scott McKusick etc.

A very special part of this reunion was to learn how interesting everyone is, how little they had changed, and to make friends with someone you may never have known while a student at PA. Many thanks to old friends and new friends for making the 10th reunion a happy memory.

Besides me, the Class Secretary position will be shared by Stephen K. Bache, 2760 Third St., La Verne, CA 91750 and Roger L. Strong 220 E. 57th St., NY, NY 10022. Please keep in touch.

Have you ever thought lawyers were boring? Well Susan Jameson and Harry Bull's summer plans should relieve you of that misconception. Harry is heading eastward around the world as soon as he finishes the Illinois bar exam. His itinerary is flexible, but he intends to visit Scandinavia, Egypt, and Australia along the way. He graduates from the Univ. of Chicago Law School this May; in October he will return to Chicago to work for the law firm of Jenner and Block. Susan, who is about to finish Cardozo Law School, will leave the New York bar exam far behind while she is trekking in India during August. Following her explorations of Indian mountains, she will enter the caverns of Manhattan's midtown where she will be working for the law firm of Chadbourne, Parke . . . All sounds pretty exciting? Well, I can beat them for challenge and adventure: I'm spending this summer back at good old PA teaching Colonial History at the Summer Session. Can you believe I'm going to be a house counselor and soccer coach?

Another lawyer, Marty Koffman (yes, it's true; he's already passed the NY bar), reports seeing Bruce MacWilliams on the street here in New York where Bruce is also working. Marty joined Will Iselin, Dale Robbins, Peter Boit, Sara MacLean, Tom Hartman, and Debbie Segal at a mini-reunion at ChaCha Hartwell's last fall. Not surprisingly, they "had a blast!"

Preparing eventually to join the ranks of PA lawyers is Judy Sizer who just finished her first year at Harvard Law. Also doing graduate work are Kent McCue who began a doctoral program in plant physiology at UC Davis this year; Peter Crowley who hopes to receive a Ph.D. in Near Eastern Studies from Princeton "sometime in the next ten years;" and Donna Fernandes who is working towards a doctorate in biology also at Princeton. UC Berkeley will by now have awarded Caleb Ross a BA in Russian Language and Literature. Although he hopes eventually to work for the State Dept., during the last eight years he has become "an expert lock and safe technician, owner and manager of C.D. Ross, Ltd." Is there a relationship between locksmithing and the foreign service? Perhaps metaphorically.

Eulah Sheffield also lives on the West Coast where she has been painting (pictures not houses) in Seattle for the past two years. Steve Wilson's creativity received recognition this winter when Ad Week cited his ad for Leggs panty hose. Excellence in the subject of female legs surprised none of us who know Steve well. Also engrossed in New York's creative industries is Isabel Schaff who has been working for an interior design firm for the last two years. Up in Boston, Judith Conroy is assistant to the director of communications for a large commodities firm — she professes to loving Boston and her job. James Knowles works as a microwave project engineer at MA/COM in Burlington, Mass. After earning a degree in computer science at Univ. of Bridgeport, Michael Shellman has been working in Norwalk, Conn.

Wedding bells are ringing all over the country. Albert Tyson, who after a stint in the Air Force is studying electrical engineering at the Univ. of Arizona, is married and has a son born 24 June 1984 (what are your wife's and son's names?). Wendy Sonabend reports that Debbie Bedford was married on 10 April 1985 to Heinrich? Debbie and Heinrich have been living in Oakland and going to school in the San Francisco area. They plan to settle in Heinrich's native Germany when they finish school. Rich Riker, who has been living and working in Brussels for the past year, is soon returning to the States to be married sometime this fall. Culturally Ned Andrews' home in Glover, Vt. is probably farther removed from NYC than Brussels. On 7 Sept. 1985, he plans to marry a Glover native (Ned, what's her name?). They will take up residence in a one-room schoolhouse he has been renovating (wood stove, no running water or indoor plumbing — see what I mean about cultural disparity?), while he continues to work on the local newspaper where this year he has been "acting publisher." Beth Brodie also lives in Vermont where she teaches Latin, French, and Spanish at Mount Snow Academy in West Dover. She plans to be married in June (to whom?). Sally Kemp and Eleanor Cunningham's weddings are also scheduled for June — on the same day in fact! Eleanor is marrying Trumbull Cary. Sally's future husband is Gordon Atkinson of Kansas City. Sally has finally found a way to get me to Omaha by asking Susan Jameson and me to be bridesmaids. A good time is sure to be had by all. After the wedding, Sally and Gordon will continue west to California where Sally will enter Stanford Business School in the fall.

Keep me updated and have a great summer.

Dear Class. It is May. No one has written or called for months and I've been speculating a great deal. There were cards and a letter now and then during the winter. A couple of lunch dates. Once, an invitation to a party. By the time you read about yourselves here it will be fall and none of your summer plans will have been unrealized because you didn't make any. This, my introduction, is finished.

The Coast sent me a stimulating news-brief about its people. Glynn O'Donnell avoided Hollywood for video. She apparently has access to a word processor from her desk. She says it's a small staff, so, undoubtedly, it's a small office, too. John Miottel visits often, after soccer practice with Annie Mudge who, I am told, "has always been an intense scholar." People you thought you knew.

Also on the Coast and communicating: Rainie Crowley, Sarah Elliott, Elizabeth Lovejoy, Rachel Cartmell and Emily King. Forever we've been anxious to discover what Virginia Kallgren would fuse her talents to: the CIA is the lucky institution.

The Coast says it has "calmed down a lot," as opposed to the harried days of the "illicit kegger" and the East wants to know the name of the substance that produces such an effect.

The graduate school scene interests some, however, the class of 1979 hasn't been wasting its time with a lot of phony idealistic illusions. We know what we want. For many that means law or business or architecture or MPhil. At Yale: Jim Swenson and Steve Fritzinger (may be hitched). At Princeton: Janet Milkman and Greg Cleveland (Robin Rosenberg works for the place). At Harvard: Carroll Bogert. At Fordham: Dexter Wadsworth (gettin' hitched). At Brown: Kerry Herman. At Georgetown: Jim Pawlowski and Ed Hill. At Columbia: Jamie Marks. Other schools deserve mention in a longer column.

Most of us are delighted by the prospect of commerce. Delighted? No, impassioned, you might say. Sarah Moore is "loving advertising" so much that she is "happy." Tori Abbott too. They say that Forty Conklin is rather the "ferocious stockbroker," and I believe it. Emotions come into play whenever work is discussed. Scott and Laura Drescher "have quite a partnership going," work-wise, that is. They "help out the company by working Dallas and Austin simultaneously." Also, they bought a home.

William Schultz, Assistant Brand Manager at P & G, spent two months in Los Angeles selling liquid Tide and was "very happy." Who knows the joys of cleanliness? Charlie Wiseman, married and with child, works for A T & T and sounds tip-top. Would that Tim Regan could find work. The theatre won't pay. Steve Collins, in Chicago, looks for real estate to purchase. Perhaps Hunt Stehli knows of a lot or two. Hunt, are you still there? Mark Mulvaney works in that mirror-facaded building on Rte. 128 outside Boston, and, simply "loves the job." Christopher Peacock, who saw Kimberly Maywald, says "modest rent" and works "in the Q.C. department of a rubber seal company." Scott Garabedian and John Francis played cards one evening together, they write, and won/lost a bundle. And for those who weren't altogether sure, Richard Flaherty tells me that he is "still renting and selling office equipment."

Many of you purport to travel, but have virtually no proof. Dan Wheeler says he's a sculptor in Tokyo, but I never saw the postmark. Jeremy Pirtle talks about the Galapagos Islands and treks through Europe, but appears to be on the staff at Proctor Academy. Lucinda Pascale had a ticket to South Africa but the ship had difficulty at Lake Michigan customs. Tory Read was off to Bali this spring. It may have been a spiritual arrangement. Bill Miles says he'll move to Los Angeles. Amy Morton moved, but didn't leave Chicago. I'm trying to give the facts. Rick Moseley and Ellen Soloway say something about Leningrad, but Rick was at a party in New Jersey last Saturday and at others tonight.

The government/journalism network reigns in New York. Most everyone paid for cocktails for Mondale last fall and many will support Ed Koch this season. Perhaps we're not such an educated bunch. Chez Thompson and Tom Rubin rallied for justice with Nick Lobenthal across the Hudson River together. They might as easily have been having dinner. Both David Daskal and John Kennedy have made bold strides in their negotiations to buy the National Enquirer and the New York Post, respectively. We caught Jon Talcott '80 and Fred Wasson by surprise at the Dublin house recently. Fred may still be there; the fight for justice and democracy is a long haul.

The finest news (it's hard to say which inspires more) comes from Nick Philip and Geri Pope. One of them had a son and one, a reckoning: "my experience at Andover has left me with mixed personal emotions that are only beginning to be sorted out. However, I have always praised its excellent education, academic and personal. To this strength, I give my offering." The kid is named Jack.

Reunion Notes: The Fifth Reunion Wag — movement to and fro, up and down — for some, in quick jerky motions; for most in splendid chatter. A tremendous success, thanks to all who returned! Everyone looked spectacular and our spirit was extraordinary!

Beginning at the gracious McKee's, we were spoiled in the flamboyant company of such early returners as Murrey Nelson, Kathy Dooley, Avatar, Beckett Royce, Nathalie Valette, Jenny Kimball, Laura Feigenbaum, John Stenson and Jay Glynn. I had prowled over from the Andover Inn with the lovely Sally Baldwin, our new Co-Head Class Agent, the engaging Natalie Geary, bright-eyed Steff Bemis and Cassie "Let's Get Together" Doykos, our fine Reunion Chairwoman whose preparations for this event stand well-recognized. While grabbing a few brews out of the wheelbarrow, I was captured by the sight of such lookers as Peter Carley, Eddie Garden, Jim Higgins, Scott Murphy, Peter Gravallese, Billy McDonough and #21 Vinny Eruzione. I knew the carousal was to begin! With spirits flowing I noticed John Higbie who fortunately was wearing a name tag as I didn't recognize the "lean machine." However, I couldn't miss the grinning H.L. Silets, nor the classic Guy Letourneau who was proudly flaunting a well-earned medal of some sort. Luke Cole looked terrific, particularly next to the blue ribbon winner, Stephanie Bemis. Bob Hooper was there, delightful as ever, along with the ever charming Arthur Blasberg. Larry Siff was looking sharp as were Hal Sizer, John Provverbs and Claire Gilliatt.

After a few, the reunioners trooped over to Flagstaff Court where Bev and Hard Hat served us up chicken and still more faces appeared — streamlined Marianna Gracey was all bubbles as were the fun-loving Beth Moore, Kathleen LeMaitre, Aimee Thorpe, Beth Pelc, Diane Perlowski and Kathy Collins. Russ DuPuy looked quite tweedy and Seth Buckley was a joy! Had a marvelous chat with Abigail Jones and Paige Evans while easily noticing a polished Peter Cole and Julie Hey King with her new husband.

After the feast, '80 re-assembled down in Paul Revere, well-stocked with lager, to chat about the past five years and watch the Lakers play the Celtics. The gang included the well-groomed Jamie Curtis, John Dee, Bob Feinberg, Mike Lee, John Hamilton, John Furse, Averill Powers and George Canty. John Talcott and Burke Dempsey were in top shape as well as the elegant Nick Somers. Couldn't miss the impressive sight of Nick Mazzocco along with Peter Davies and Dan Hajjar. Several unforgettably handsome young men turned heads, which included Dave Castagnetti, Jim Harrington, Paul Tortorella, Toby Daley and Lou Kantaros.

Later, a great many fled to the keg at Bob Stammers' house and the subsequent carnival at Jim Higgins' abode. There I saw a lively crew: Fred Bever, Mimi Keon, Doug Gollin and Scott Shumway. The impressive Bennett Yort and Jay McDermott arrived as did the sparkling vibrance of Holly Helliwell and Suzanne Sherrill. Time naturally slipped into Saturday where we arose to more vigorous returners: Beth Findlay, Harry Chong, Rob Anderson, Erick Janis, Ralph Hollinshead, Sherry Aghoian and Henry Bartlett. Justin Cronin looked trim and one couldn't miss the likes of Richard Chapell and Tim Davenport. Teri Hensey was there with her adorable daughter Natasha and Chris Rokous returned looking as rosy-cheeked as ever. Jim Currid, sporting a handsome mustache, landed in his custom-made helicopter in time to trail the reunion parade in our designer T-shirts which unmasked our motto, "Back in the Hive in '85."

The good natured Mark Roberge organized a commanding softball game between the "Freaks" and the "Jocks," placing the pitching artistry of the thespian John Penner against the fearless dexterity of Mike Ain. The Jocks won 10-9 due to the expertise of Kevin Murphy, an accurate eye by referee T. McKinley and my clinching line drive — (ha!). Kim Lilly was in the crowds with her husband or future husband, and Ilse de Veer was cheering. By game's end, a cold shower was well in order before our refreshing banquet in the wrestling room. There I spotted Allyn Burrows,

The Class of '80 was back in force.

Kathleen Connor who is our other new Co-Head Class Agent, Charles Boddy, Carol Devine, Jazz Robb, Sue Getgood, Audrey Laganas and Casey Canter, all looking particularly well. Between chicken wings, I recognized Kari McCabe, Josie Iselin, Anne LeGall, Martha Johnson, Chris Dupre and Duncan MacFarlane enjoying themselves.

Not to be forgotten was the curious arrival of Donny Bliss along with the celebrated return of Mike Shorr, Jane Sullivan, Chris Witt and Jane Shattuck. Briefly, I thought I saw Tina Turner, but steadying my eye I was overtaken by the sight of the enchanting Sarah Ehrlich. Heather Richards appeared well as did Gene Nakajima, and I know I saw Paul Mehlman walk by. After dinner the gathering was swept to the dance in the hockey rink with the class of '75 where I thereupon met Bill Adams, was fox-trotted by Bill Conroy, was greeted by Chris Thomajan and embraced by Brian Fitzgerald. Can't forget the attractive Sally Caverly and Mark Moore who invited us all to their wedding. From the rink many a sidestepper gallavanted over to upper left to finish up the night.

Sunday was glorious as was the savory brunch at the Doykos' house. Thank you Doykos clan! Here, Jack Kerivan joined us all as did Barb Duvoisin, Akiko Ishizuka and Marcos Caro. A notable ending to an exceptional reunion!

John Talcott's creative direction will lead us all back in 1990 as our Reunion Chairman and I, as the new Class Secretary, will be generating Bulletin scandals from now on. I'll pass this time, despite the urge not to. All those who couldn't return for Reunion, we really missed you and I would like to share a most notable quote by the beloved Jim Currid who captured the essence of the Reunion Weekend perfectly in saying, "sometimes . . . you've just got to wag your tail."

For most of us, college is now a memory, just like Andover. In the coming year, a veritable smorgasbord of activities, jobs and challenges await us — not to mention our Fifth Reunion.

New England Clam Chowder: On 15 December 1984, in Woodstock, Vermont,

Anne Hartwell was married to A. Robert Hirschfeld (who also graduated from Dartmouth). Anne, as captain of the Dartmouth women's crew team, led the Big Green to Ivy League Championships in 1983 and '84. She and her husband will live in Norwich, VT. Tony Bienstock will graduate from Harvard in 1986 as an American History major. A self-described follower of the arts, Tony recently sang in the chorus of Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado. Karen Woods and John Blasberg will enter the coffee-achiever corporate scene in Boston this fall, as they found employment at The Bank of Boston and Bain and Co., respectively. After graduating from Brown, Lee Anne Snedeker also plans to work in Beantown.

Western Omelettes: After receiving her B.A. in French from Brown, Sylvia Veh will conduct a job search in San Francisco, where she spent the summer after her junior year. In May of 1984, Catherine Hesser graduated from Berkeley with a B.A. in Spanish; she is now assistant manager of Kinko's store in Houston, Texas, although she is looking for a better paying job in California. John Wright wrote to clarify a problem he is having with his address — which is: Mary's River Ranch, Deeth, Nevada 89823.

Mooshoo Pork from China (two pancakes): Annie Yates, an East Asian Studies major from Princeton, will be spending '85-86 in Hong Kong, working for the public relations firm Hill & Knowlton. And Wendy Pulling told me that she is thinking about working at a refugee camp in Taiwan.

New York City Hot Dogs: Keith Sabin, who graduated from Oberlin in 1984, now lives in New York's Greenwich Village. He is writing a musical to be produced at the Apple Core Theater. Future investment banking tycoon Ellie Hirschhorn will join First Boston after finishing up at Yale. Joining Ellie on Wall Street are Jim Cleary (E.F. Hutton, corporate finance), Mark Bamford (Morgan Stanley), Don Mackenzie (Paine Webber), and John Burgess (Morgan Guaranty). Bill Kummel, after completing an internship at Time Inc., will re-enter Yale for his Senior year.

Commons "Mystery" Meat: Bill Lawrence was accepted by the Peace Corp to serve somewhere in Africa. Many of us are undecided about the future. Duke graduate Steve Frank summed up his own and many of our plans when he wrote: "who knows?" After spending '83-84 in Madrid, Spain, Elizabeth Law had one more semester at St. Lawrence University in order to graduate. After college Elizabeth wrote, "I have no idea." At the time these notes were penned, Cathy Coyle (Duke) and Meredith Morris (Smith) were still waiting to hear from graduate schools. Although I'm not sure how Katie Leede will spend her post Dartmouth days, she seems to have developed a penchant for the gridiron. She wrote the following: "I learned how to throw a spiral football, which I consider a real accomplishment."

Stolichnaya Vodka: After studying Russian for six years — two at Andover and four at Brown — Adam Namm is finally doing so in the USSR. Adam, however, expects to return to the U. S. after this summer abroad to work for a financial institution.

A Champagne Toast: The Second Ever Ullman Achievement Awards: To Jennifer Marron for winning a gold medal in women's lightweight crew at the 1984 World Games in Montreal (as the boat's stroke); to Mary Hulbert for winning the women's National Intercollegiate Squash Championship; and to Jim Cleary for completing his first marathon (NYC, fall '84) in under three hours. Congratulations to you all.

I don't know about you guys, but I'm full. Until we eat again. . .

Well, guys, I didn't have too much correspondence from you (I know, I know you're all out there doing things to save the world, but wouldn't you like to see your name in print?) so these notes are a bit limited. Anyway, let's just jump right in: Since the majority of news I received was about our out-of-the-country classmates I guess I'll start with them. Jennifer Moore attended Exeter College at Oxford this past winter semester and will be travelling about Europe this summer. Ross Solomon spent all of this year at school in Madrid and is having a great time; he'll return to Tufts in the fall. Chandri Navarro will be in Paris until the end of June; she's spent a great year there, and had an apartment right down the street from Yalda Tehranian who was also there for a year. Chandri saw Rufus Ward, Brian Henson (in England), Carlos Valls Martinez, Catherine Connor, and Susan Schulte. Paula Lee is on an exchange program at Cornell, and is spending her junior year in Florence, studying art history and science. Yes, the list goes on! Cathy Collins spent the fall semester in Nepal, and absolutely loved it. She's back at Wesleyan now, runs into Susan Toothaker occasionally, and also reports that Jenny Beirnes is "happy at Hobart." Hal Movius, after working in California this fall, wrote: "After two great years of soccer, rock 'n' roll, and various degrees of irresponsibility at Harvard, I am taking a year off to tour the world. Hawaii, Australia, Asia, and most of Europe offer a period of six months." Have a great time! He also wrote that Roger Taylor is in Texas, fixing motorcycles and playing in a funk band, and that Stefan Wennik "reports attainment of semi-Godliness" at Colby.

Well, that news brings us on to those of us still in the old U.S. of A. John Sagebie is working for the U.C. Davis Fire Dept. He lives full time in the fire station, and also goes to school. David Krishfield wrote that he left the Naval Academy in '83 and is presently the Assistant Manager of Technical Services for Dynamics Research Corp. in Wilmington, MA. He plans to return to college in a few years. Gabrielle McDonald is very busy at William and Mary and on two faculty committees this year. She's heard from Pam Weiler who spent the fall semester in England studying dance and theatre. She also wrote that Bree Ermentrout loves UVA and is recording secretary for their college Republican Club. Steve LaMarche is enjoying Connecticut College and played varsity hockey for them for the third year in a row.

My great thanks, yet apology, to Faith Hawkins who sent me a newsy letter that I know I still have but have momentarily misplaced! I promise to find it and enclose all your news in the next set of notes.

Well, I guess that's about it — these turned out to be longer than I expected! Please write in with any news, also please note my new address (my family moved down to Virginia in January . . . it's definitely a change from the East, but I'm enjoying it so far. I'll be spending the summer in Williamsburg, working at Laura Ashley and attending (the dreaded) summer school. I'd love to hear from everyone — have a terrific summer!

Dear Class of '83:

Well, one more year of academia down the drain. While most of us spent this past year slaving over organic chemistry, holography and semiotics, Cupid's arrows struck some of our lucky classmates. Chattering can be heard at Elaine's in New York and the Hong Kong in Cambridge about the pudding romance between Michael Mailer and Ritchey Banker '82. Chris Thompson and Mia Kelly are still seeing one another, and Vivian Bache is engaged! Meanwhile, Matt Gilligan and Quincey Tompkins are still doing their thing; the two hope to beesting Hawaii as a possible honeymoon spot this summer.

Speaking of Hawaii, Rob Baron writes in and says, "Aloha." Liz Schenck reports that she is still a ruffian, and Steve Blackwell is majoring in English at Conn. College. In other news, Jennifer Cray admits to jking her newfound anonymity at USC, where she writes for the Daily Trojan. Howard Miller is enjoying Cornell, and Toni Dante has been wondering why Tulane's basketball team can't cover the spread.

Last summer a veritable flood of '83ers nundated our nation's capitol. While working for an international education agency, I managed to cross paths with many of our classmates. I ran into Electa Sevier and Liz McHenry at the D.C. opening of Purple Rain. I spent a night out in Georgetown with Thomas Jones, Laura Roche and Jamie Hedlund. Thomas enjoyed his year in England; Laura had just finished up a summer of modeling for Calvin Klein; and Jamie has since taken a semester off from Georgetown. Before leaving, I was treated to a delicious dinner at Liese Cochran's (thank you, Mrs. Cochran), and I ran into Emory Van Cleve countless times at the social Safe-way on Wisconsin Ave., where roommates Mike Cahill '84, Nick Bienstock '84, and I turned in coupons for dollars of savings.

Thanksgiving eve this year was a mini-reunion of sorts. Scott Gwozdz and I met Greg Simon at Logan airport and then proceeded to rage all night. I can only assume that Greg and Scott had as much difficulty as I in putting down the turkey and yams after we split up Thursday morning. Greg, you should know, has become Mr. California. Aside from changed eating habits which call for large quantities of alfalfa and granola, he speaks of his groovin' home state with that totally tubular diction that no one would have expected from our own mushy Greg.

Also in California, Jon Mow is enjoying himself at Berkeley. John Beaumont left landlubbing dorm life for a while in favor of a rigorous semester at sea. Courses, I am told, include fishing, tanning and sightseeing. Geoff Tuller is back at Berkeley after taking a short leave and enjoying it very much.

Back East, Mia Kelly has transferred to Yale. As I understand it, a photo album is due out soon, and we can expect to see Mia and her Eli friends on its pages within a year. Rick Apgar is majoring in, you guessed it, physics, and continuing as a standout on Wesleyan's lacrosse team. Tod Oliva made a recent trip to Brown, as Conn. College's squash club squared off with Brown. After a strenuous duel, Tod and I met at the bar where his luck fared much better. In other intra-PA competition, Kathy Macoul beat out Bill Elias for an aerobics instructor position at Tufts.

In the continuing saga of Rockwell '80, Rob Sherman and I visited Michael Landrum '85 one Sunday night at PA. If all goes well, Michael will be a member of the class of '85 when the Bulletin hits the press.

Enjoy your summers, and send all news to Chris Thompson, who will be writing the next column. Special thanks to Andrea Feldman, who provided me with much-needed information and inspiration. Take care. Cheers. —Tommy

First on the agenda is to tell some bits and pieces of old news that was either received after my deadline or else was overflow from past columns.

Back around Thanksgiving, Jonathan Hubbard, Beth Serlin and Wendy Dick gathered at Wendy's apartment near Geneva, Switzerland. Jonathan was working in a London merchant bank where he had his own secretary. Beth was living in the south of France perfecting her French, and Wendy was working for the Associated Press at the U.N. in Geneva.

Joel Post spent the fall in Mexico working for an old professor in the Secretariat of Education. Jeff Woodhead spent the whole school year traversing the globe by way of places such as Thailand, St. Thomas, Jamaica and Bora Bora while working on a cruise ship. He reported that Doug Van Duynes is working with computers for Bank America in the San Francisco Bay area; Sam Kim has gotten a perm and is "the stud" at Columbia; and Dave Corkins is sending certain pictures drawn by his IBM computer to his friends.

Closer to home this fall was Kathy Mulvey, who was a member of the Atlantic coast Conference Champion and sixth ranked U.N.C. (Chapel Hill) field hockey team. I haven't heard whether she was able to make it through the whole season without an injury, though. Mark Gaffney played varsity football for Lake Forest College and Laurie Vance played hockey for Brown this year during the appropriate seasons.

Just after Thanksgiving, Mischa Frusztajer left for Japan and landed Lisa Pritchard a job for the summer. She will be teaching English in Tokyo. Annie Emmick spent ten days touring Russia this winter, on break from Oberlin. Perry Hewitt, who is majoring in Russian and has sophomore standing at Harvard, reports that she sees Diana Powers, Devin "Snake" Driscoll, Whitney Carrico and Lisa Moreland on occasion and also periodically runs into a Play-doh child.

Going back to the fall once more, Kendall Coor proudly held a one-man exhibition of his work at the Addison Gallery. Pauline Lim and Peter Vrooman were both in the chorus for a Harvard production of Oedipus Le Roi. Pauline saw Adam Simha in Harvard Square and says he looks great and is pretty happy at Wesleyan. I recently received an anonymous letter from "another side of campus" relating the following news: "Barbara Cutter was reported fearlessly participating in the Columbia sit-in protesting support of South African apartheid. Ashley Wilson was last seen contemplating a ride on the back of a Greek God's motorcycle in Ithaca, N.Y. David Little, Kristen Toscano, Carter Burden '85 and Suzanne Rubin '85 engaged in a rotten bean fight in Haymarket Square, Boston over A/E weekend and Beth Flynn spent the winter in Virginia painting houses." Sarah Keller is having a blast at Cal and sees Paige Canfield and Stalky Henderson fairly often. I've been to Stanford a couple of times and seen Jason Anderson, Mike and Tim Cahill, and even Andy LeSueur who was out for a visit.

Nancy Pageau ran into Sean Stone and Edward Anderson over spring break in a bar in S. Carolina at 1:30 a.m. Jonathan Loew beat this coincidence, however, he ran into Liz Gill in Kathmandu, Nepal. I ran into a few people myself over the past few months. Jim Smith, Chip Pollard and I crossed paths at a Grateful Dead concert in Portland, Maine, this spring. I also ran into Jack McKay and Kathryn Baxter at a train station in Boston on their way back to school after a weekend at PA for Kathryn and skiing in Maine for Jack. On my last weekend at home I also ran into Peter Ham, who had spent the past nine months in China, had a great time though he said it was difficult to adjust to such a different culture. Last, but certainly not least, Lisa Pomeroy is costarring in a movie starring Sissy Spacek called Marie. It will be in a theatre near you this fall.

So much for our first year away from PA. Hope you all enjoyed it. Please keep in touch, as many of you have; it's a tremendous help to me. Happy Summers!

The View from Grub Street

Bulfinch Hall

The Royal Blue on Red Square

We're back. Eighty-six PA faculty and spouses returned in late July from a three-week trip to the Soviet Union. The trip, and the three-week intensive language and cultural study before we left, was funded largely by the head of PepsiCo, Andover parent Donald Kendall, who, according to The New York Times, hoped to improve the high-school study of Russian and to increase understanding between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. As he told USA Today, "We need to build bridges of communication, . . . and the way to have an impact is to get the teachers." In particular, the School sought to lay the foundation of an exchange program similar to its program with the People's Republic of China.

How did we react to the Soviet Union? How did we feel when we left? Well, some of our group did sing "America the Beautiful" at dinner in Helsinki the night we left the Soviet Union. But for few of us was the singing of the song a transcendent moment. For some the song was simply an expression of being together and of being headed home; for some it was intended as something of a putdown for the Soviet Union. Singing the song irritated other people — because they thought it ill-timed nationalism, because they saw it as a politicalization of one's decent pleasure at being back to the familiar.

But all the PA pilgrims agree that the trip cannot be summed up in one song — or in one page of a magazine. Our experience in the Soviet Union was multifaceted and often an individual and personal experience, largely because our interests differed so greatly. We were French teachers and physicists, athletes and aesthetes, historians and homemakers, ecologists and economists, priests and parents. The result was the opportunity to view the Soviet Union from various perspectives. What Bruce Crawford, engineer and head of PA's Office of Physical Plant, showed me out of our bus window was different from what I saw on my own. To me the two metal boxes beside a phone pole in Armenia were merely blemishes on an otherwise picturesque landscape; to him they were each $50,000 transformers sitting unused, rusting. As we drove into Tbilisi, he taught me more: it's no wonder the Soviets have low quality concrete, for without cement trucks, they can only mix small portions of cement at a time on location. When I looked out of the bus, I saw Soviet street scenes; Bruce saw them too, but he also saw an absence of cement trucks.

Bruce's observations differed greatly from those of Beda Lorencio, faculty spouse and professional opera singer, or those of three faculty members who, in articles that follow, have shared some of their reactions to the U.S.S.R. Beda's most powerful image of the trip was the uncanny accuracy of pitch and harmony of Georgians who had had no musical training, as if musical skill was passed on genetically along with aptitude; music seemed to unite the proud Georgian culture.

For Elizabeth Krumpe, associate cluster dean and faculty spouse, the most moving experiences were finding the house in Moscow where she lived until she was seven, and going to a Russian Orthodox service. Her experience in the church was straight out of Proust: she knew that her nurse had frequently taken her to church, but when she saw the Eucharist, she remembered taking communion and recalled the bread's pleasant taste. For her husband, Carl, cluster dean and classicist, a highlight was a visit to a museum dedicated to Georgian composer Pal-iashvili. There the Krumpes saw memorabilia, including the Thomas Edison wax cylinder recording machine Paliashvili carried through the Caucasus recording local folk-songs to incorporate into his operas. Upon leaving, the Krumpes were showered with gifts, including the score to Paliashvili's opera Daissi.

Some memorable incidents were funny as well as poignant. Like most visitors to Moscow, we visited Lenin's Tomb. Stern soldiers maintained the strictest rules of decorum: no chewing gum, no talking, no chuckling, no hands in pockets. As David McKain approached the crypt, he unconsciously began to fiddle with the flap on the side-pocket of his sports coat, a gesture I associate with John Kennedy. When he felt someone lightly lifting his hand out of his pocket, he assumed it was his wife wanting to hold his hand. Without even looking, he took the hand in his, only to realize that it was attached to one of Russia's finest who wanted him to keep his hands out of his pockets. David may be the only American ever to try to hold hands with a Soviet soldier in Lenin's Tomb.

Even as we bring our own backgrounds to bear on a foreign experience, however, we sometimes fail to see ourselves more clearly for our trouble. English teacher Charlie Miller remembers a white South African tourist's reaction to the U.S.S.R.: "It makes you grateful we live in a democracy, doesn't it!" By traveling with such a diverse group, we saw the Soviet Union through numerous pairs of American eyes. By talking with Soviets on the street, we began to see their country — and our own — through their eyes. And fundamentally, that is what traveling is about — stepping outside yourself temporarily to learn about another world in as unmediated a way as possible, because only then can one understand the two worlds and the relation between them. In no country is that more difficult to do than in the Soviet Union, but that was one of our goals, and we were in part successful.

"Whoever is Called an Enemy":

Three Views of the Russian Worker

by David W. McKain

We have been back now for nearly a month and I am left with scattered images. We hopped from Moscow to Tbilisi to Erevan to Kiev to Leningrad, glancing at gold onion domes and party slogans on the billboards. "Five minutes please!" an Intourist guide shouted as we tumbled from our buses near a ruin in Kiev. "Five minutes please for pictures!"

The best of the pictures I have are not on film. They are glimpses stored in memory, suggestive but inconclusive. Here are three such fragments gathered from the first two days of the trip. I have grouped them under a common theme, that of work. After all, the U.S.S.R. is the first worker's state ever declared and work is the ideal of the athlete and the artist. In work we sacrifice ourselves to some larger task, giving ourselves a chance to think with our fingers. Emerson and Gandhi called it "The Doctrine of the Hands," and there are huge statues all over the Soviet Union in which the worker has been transformed by work into a superhuman force. Despite their dogged and programmatic plans to construct new dams and grow more wheat, the Soviets are a mystical people: What could be more mystical than the shared ideal of Communism? In theory, at least, the worker is at the center of Communism, and the worker is celebrated in their literature, in their museums, and in their parks.

On our first day in Moscow, Misha, our Intourist guide, took us to one such park, a plaza of intimate chapels and courtyards inside the Kremlin. Overhead the sky was troubled, an Andover sky in November. With a confident air, Misha showed us churches dating back to the Middle Ages. Aggressively off-hand in manner and dress, he looked more like a student revolutionary than an emissary. His hair was shaggy and he smoked strong cigarettes. Beneath the friendly and accommodating exterior one could see traces of disdain, the impishness of Puck, the brooding of an Iago. Sometimes he seemed to hold our group in contempt, for he smiled privately at some of our questions, but despite himself, I think he liked us.

Misha believed religion in the Soviet Union would die out soon, and he said so with a certain relish meant to challenge our Western convictions. But he also spoke of his churches with pride. The workers who labored to construct these magnificent arabesques were dedicated to an ideal; Misha admired them for that, whatever the ideal. We walked outside the area of the churches and passed by a tower eighty meters tall. Misha looked up without breaking stride, but beyond the tower he stopped and turned to face us. "Here," he solemnly said, "is the famous Kremlin bell. This ancient bell was cast by the finest Russian craftsmen. It took the workers many years. Unfortunately, when they finished they could not move it. The bell weighs over 200 metric tons. Shortly after the bell was moved it cracked. The bell has never been rung." Then Misha laughed, dropping his cigarette between his shoes, grinding the butt into the sidewalk.

I did not care about the bell. An old woman in a black coat and a long black dress was sweeping the gutter free of leaves and cigarette butts. She wore a black scarf around her head and her hands and face were weathered and strong. She was the first of many such women we would see in the Soviet Union. She moved slowly with a solemn dignity, as though her work had a spiritual significance known only to herself and to God. An imaginary circle seemed to separate her from the milling crowds and the traffic cop on the street. She moved with concentration and focus, taking pride in her sweeping. With a long stretch of her broom she reached across the curb to tease Misha's cigarette toward the gutter, gently whisking it up into her neat piles of leaves and butts.

Misha and the group moved on. Next we were standing beside an ornate cannon pointed harmlessly toward a tree. It was the most elaborately decorated weapon I had ever seen. Misha was obviously proud of the workmanship. "Made entirely of bronze, this cannon was made in the 16th century. It is the largest cannon in the world, so big it has never been fired for fear it would blow up." He did not smile as he had done in speaking of the unringed bell, for it was obvious he was thinking of today's weaponry.

I dropped back from the group to take a picture of the old woman sweeping, pretending to take a picture of the bell that had never been rung. I did not want the old woman to see me. She glanced my way as I pushed the shutter release, then quickly turned back to her sweeping, confident that I had taken a picture of the bell. I knew at that moment I did not get the shot I wanted. Instead of the dignity of the babushka sweeping, I had taken a picture of a deceived old woman holding a broom.

On the following day we went to Zagorsk, the Holy See of the Russian Orthodox Church one hour north of Moscow. I looked eagerly out of the window of the bus as the Moscow suburbs gave way to open land. A crow dropped from the branches of a white birch and landed in a field. Potatoes were growing in the fields and the wet brown earth looked rich. The road to Zagorsk. I thought of Father Zossima, the saintly and spiritual force in Dostoevsky's novel, The Brothers Karamozov. I had first read the book as a junior in college, cheering for the innocent Alyosha in his struggle with irony and cynicism, hoping that the youngest of the four Karamozov brothers would follow in Father Zossima's path to become a monk at Zagorsk. The road and the path were one. I told myself I was not looking for anything special out the window, but that was not entirely true. Pools of water in the fields shimmered in the morning light.

Near the restaurant where the bus parked, three old men sat smoking in the shade of a linden tree, their scythes leaning against the fieldstone wall. Philip Zaeder tipped his cap and clicked his heels, bowing slightly at the waist and smiling. "Good morning," he said to the workers in Russian — first to one, then to the second, and lastly to the third. I was glad it was Philip who first went forward to greet them. A passionate builder of stone walls, Philip also knows how to think with his fingers; he greeted the Russian workers easily, and in that moment of tipping his hat, I remembered that Philip had given me an article to read on Russian Christianity. I remain grateful. The author of the article, an American, relied heavily on conversations with Archbishop Pitirim, a leader in the Russian Orthodox Church and a teacher at Zagorsk. Quoting from the early Christians, Bishop Pitirim urged that we learn to search for the enemy in ourselves and not in others, and that we search for the good in "whoever is called an enemy."

A man with gold teeth laughed and stood up from his bench. He handed Philip his scythe and led him to the grass they had been cutting. Philip, over six feet tall, stooped over the shorter man's scythe, swinging the clumsy-looking tool rhythmically, holding the blade parallel with the ground. His pipe clenched in his teeth, Philip smiled as he moved along the narrow strip of lawn, never breaking stride. The old men laughed with delight. Half-way down the grassy path, Philip stopped and bowed again, handing back the scythe.

Before taking it, the old man bent down and grabbed a dandelion that Philip had missed, shaking the weed in his fist. The sun caught the gold head of the flower, his gold teeth, and the gold dome across the river. In typical peasant fashion, the old man was wearing a brown gabardine suit coat and, as it were, someone else's trousers. He held the scythe at an exaggerated angle, clumsily cocking his elbow and hip, stooping with wooden stiffness, imitating Philip. Everyone clapped and cheered, Philip loudest of all. Then the worker puffed out his chest and, back straight, swung the scythe with ease, trimming the young shoots closer to the ground than a power mower. We held our breath as he moved near the roses, shaving a strip of grass in one fell swoop; the stems of the blooming flowers wavered twice and stood erect. We cheered and applauded a second time. The contest was over; both men had won.

Readers of Anna Karenina will remember the original version of the scything scene in which the complex and troubled Levin competes with the peasants in cutting down the hay at Pokrovskoye, his estate outside of Moscow. The experience is a revelation for both Levin and for the reader. Salvation on earth comes through the simple dignity of work.

When praising a person's skill in the Soviet Union, whether doctor, teacher, or politician, the people say "he is like a carpenter with one axe." Misha explained that a really good carpenter can build an entire house, complete with decorations, using only an axe. In the museum at Zagorsk, several rooms are dedicated to the work of carpenters. There are cornices, dadoed windows, and entire gables. One gable was built by a carpenter who had died over a hundred years ago. The people looking at the exhibits are reminded that his name was Malimev. His joints are mortised and tenoned, his corners are rabbetted; he used no nails anywhere. His gable is carved with flowers, vines, and clusters of grapes — the kind of detail one might expect to find encircling the opening letter of a new chapter in an illuminated manuscript.

In bold red letters, sometimes the slogans on the billboards in the Soviet Union proclaim "Glory to the Workers." When I saw those signs, I tried to think of the gold-toothed peasant at Zagorsk, the babushka sweeping a Kremlin gutter, and the carpenter named Malimev.

Back home, when asked "What was the Soviet Union like?," I try to insist on the obvious. I say it is a place with dogs and children, men and women in parks, ironic young Communists and old men and women wearing baggy clothes. It is a place of families and people, a place as holy as Camp Arrowhead, Topeka, Tallahassee, Pittsburgh, Washington, or Andover. I try to remember the words of Archbishop Pitirim, the teacher at Zagorsk — to search for the enemy in myself, and to search for the good in "whoever is called an enemy."

TO RUSSIA WITH LOVE

by Hale Sturges II, with Peter Gilbert

Moscow welcomed us with a cavernous waiting room uncluttered by a single place to sit, but be-decked with posters for the upcoming Moscow Youth Festival proclaiming in Russian, "Moscow 1985 — anti-imperialist solidarity, friendship and peace." Red Square, synecdoche for the entire Soviet Union, welcomed us with its breathtaking vastness, wet cobblestones reflecting the Kremlin's red brick wall and towers, St. Basil's Cathedral planted like a jewel at the far end of the square. In the center of a city that often seemed a desert of gray concrete, Red Square was a glittering oasis of golden onion-domed churches and stately towers. Everything about the place proclaimed it a place of power.

In each of the five cities we visited during our three week stay we were part educator-ambassadors with official meetings, part sight-seers in tow behind Intourist, and part explorers, able to make our own way freely around cities, and to visit informally with Soviets we met by chance. Each of our roles added much to the experience as a whole. Of invaluable assistance in each role were our companions from the Citizen Exchange Council, a nonprofit organization based in New York that specializes in facilitating meetings between American groups and their Soviet counterparts.

In Moscow our visiting educator role took us to meetings with representatives from the State Committee for Science and Technology, the Ministry of Education, and the Library of Foreign Literatures. The most impressive of these meetings was the first, hosted by Dzhermen Gvishiani, the Deputy Chairman of the State Committee for Science and Technology. We sat around a huge mahogany conference table with mineral water and microphones strategically placed; a bust of Lenin dominated the room. The meeting was cordial and good humored with an appropriate level of ceremony. Mr. Gvishiani exhorted us to bring new international understanding to our students, citing language study and science as vehicles for that task. His command of English was excellent, his knowledge of the U.S. staggering; his answers to our questions were open and honest.

Before a bas-relief of Lenin, Associate Headmaster Peter McKee thanks the chairman (right) of a collective farm near Kiev.

Many of us were quite taken with our next city, Tbilisi, the capital of Soviet Georgia, for it seemed to be much that Moscow was not — provincial, sensuous, personable. The Georgians, gregarious, spirited and proud, relish their distance from Moscow. We remember exploring the countryside surrounding Tbilisi, and our visits to isolated but striking fifth-century churches. We recall the traditional Georgian singing, a beautiful blending of six male voices in what could be described as cathedral barbershop. And traditional folkdancing: the elaborately fast-footed twirling of costumed women with long braids and graceful hands was a counterpoint to the men's more athletic dancing. But best of all, we remember Georgia for the generosity and hospitality of its people. A long-time associate of the uncle of one of our colleagues treated all of us to tickets to the ballet. At the dinner which followed, he provided champagne, chocolate, and exquisite homemade pastry. There were multiple exchanges of eloquent and heartfelt toasts — to each other, friendship, peace. Piano, guitar, and singing rounded out the evening's gaiety. Finally we had a chance to sing some of the songs practiced back in Andover. The whole affair was a moving testament to the potential rewards from citizen to citizen exchanges.

People to people communication with a Georgian accent had a second meaningful appearance at a Pioneer camp near Tbilisi. Two lines of white-shirted, red-kerchiefed 8-15 year-olds applauded our arrival, not unlike the procession at a Phillips Academy graduation. The smiling youngsters escorted us to a parade ground, where platoons of communists-in-the-making marched past a reviewing stand. After the camp director's welcoming remarks and the headmaster's response, children ran over and tied red kerchiefs around our necks with a tenderness that formed lumps in our throats. There were games, dances, and songs, and, with all, laughter. We exchanged pins, souvenirs, pictures and addresses. Few of us left dry-eyed. The applause and the parade ground display could be orchestrated, but not the childrens' innate curiosity and spontaneous affection. I wondered whether American children would greet Russian strangers with such warmth.

Less than a hundred miles from Turkey and Iran is Erevan, the hot, dusty capital of Armenia. Here, as in Georgia, culture and language differ from Russia's. Armenians are a warm people, justifiably proud of their evident progress from a pre-revolutionary mud hut society to the current expansionist economy, but to our eyes newly erected buildings appeared on the verge of crumbling, and dormant construction sites abounded.

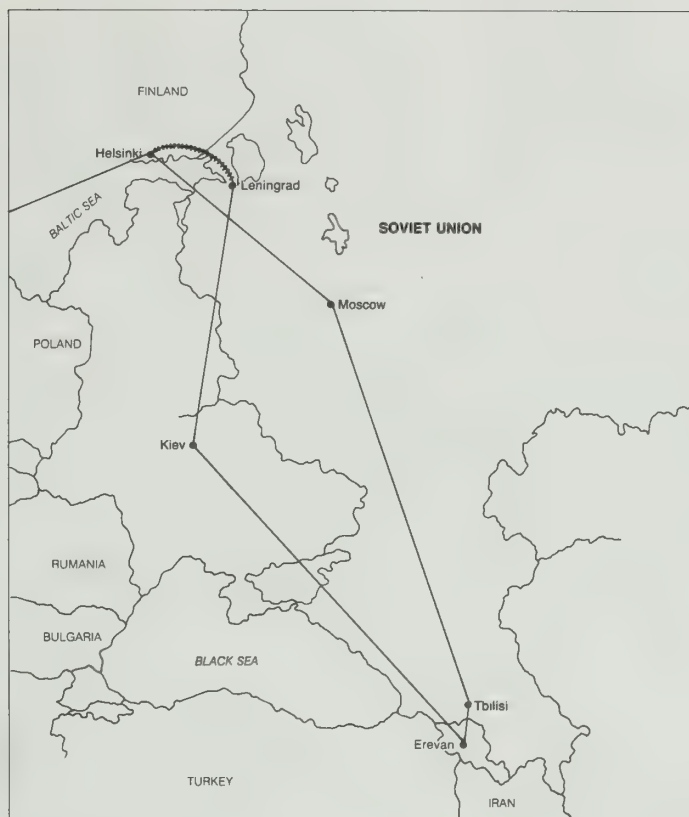

Armenia is rich with ancient tradition — Greek, Roman, Christian. Particularly interesting was a cave monastery in Gegard, thirty miles southeast of Erevan: in a cliff amidst a desolate countryside 13th century monks had adapted natural caves to form a Swiss cheese maze of chapels and cells. Crosses adorned rock walls in elaborately carved relief. Looking through the small window-opening from what was once a monk's cell, one could see only the cross atop the adjacent stone church — undoubtedly the focus of centuries of meditation and prayer.

Resident of a collective farm.

Our next stop was the Ukraine — fertile, lush, prosperous. To showcase that prosperity, Intourist arranged for us to visit a collective farm near Kiev. Certainly it was a model farm depicting the Communist ideal — a self-contained community of two thousand apparently nappy, productive workers. Not being agricultural experts, we were unable to judge just how impressive or inflated the farm's output was. The chairman of the farm and his delegates, showed us their meeting hall, an entertainment center, a recreation facility, a clothing store, a food store, a nursery school and a library. We had expected to see a farm and saw a village instead! The "typical" farmer's home we visited was modestly comfortable, immaculately clean and extraordinarily well appointed, though we did notice that the stove remained disconnected and a new oriental rug was still rolled up in the corner of the living room. Though hardly a random glimpse of Soviet agricultural life, our visit did make concrete our vague and philosophical notions of communal farming.

Kiev, capital of the Ukraine and first capital of Russia, was also the center of the Orthodox church. St. Sophia's Cathedral, built by King Yaroslav in 1057 in imitation of its Constantinople namesake, is truly spectacular, but it, like most churches in the Soviet Union, is now a museum. St. Vladimir's encountered during a Sunday walk through Kiev, is typical of the few working churches: with hundreds of votive candles hissing and crackling and incense thick in the air, five prelates in richly ornamented light blue robes performed a vesper mass. The faithful stood, for there are no pews in a Russian church. Significantly, ninety percent of those in attendance were babushki, who, in their kerchiefs, seem somehow to embody old Russia. Babushki were everywhere — kneeling, standing, bowing before smoke-stained paintings, kissing icons, chanting en masse. What will happen to religion when the elderly women die, no one knows.

The relative dearth of older men is a legacy of "the Great Patriotic War," during which twenty million Soviets died. More people died in Leningrad alone than the United States lost in the entire war. Everywhere are monuments, billboards, and banners, ever-present reminders of the war. An inspired statue marks a ravine at Babi Yar, where one hundred thousand people were executed by Nazi occupiers. To the monument come pilgrims, tourists, quietly weeping babushki — and newlyweds. Throughout the U.S.S.R. newlyweds "traditionally" pay their respects and leave flowers at war memorials or tombs of unknown soldiers, immediately after being married in the local "Wedding Palace." This ceremonial gesture somehow partially replaces the ritual lost without the Church. If Lenin is as God, then the state's martyred heroes are as saints and thus to be venerated.

Inspired by Peter the Great, Leningrad is truly a magnificent city. This canal-lined Venice of the North covers three islands with pastel-painted, white-pilastered buildings no more than five stories high. The whole city is a museum, and appropriately, the principal Leningrad museums are really palaces: the Winter Palace (the Hermitage) and Petrodvorets (Peterhof), nicknamed the "Russian Versailles," just outside the city. Soviets seem undisturbed by the irony of their treating these remnants of czarist Russia as their finest show pieces. Indeed they not only take justifiable pride in the workmanship that built these treasures (and rebuilt them after they were virtually demolished during "the Great Patriotic War"), but they seem implicitly to place the socialist state in line with the great Russian rulers.

More than cities, a trip abroad is about people. One learns about a foreign country not so much by looking at buildings and landscapes but by talking to people on their turf. Our three weeks of intensive language training at Andover before we left gave us enough knowledge and confidence to communicate, and our efforts at speaking their language made the Soviets even more willing to open themselves to us. Because some of the most significant contacts with the Soviets were individual experiences, they cannot be summarized easily, but we remember the Soviets — not one but many — who walked out of their lives and out of their way, a mile or more, to take us to the places we sought; the older gentleman who gave us a kopek or two when we were short of change for a 5¢ bus ride; the child who taught us vocabulary on a park bench. After his visit to the U.S. this spring, Russian poet Yevgeni Yevtushenko was quoted in Time: "The trouble with people who can push the button is that they can't see people's faces. As for me, I am going home with a whole sackful of American faces." It works in the opposite direction, too: if on our flights home, the 86 of us were charged for our sackful of Soviet faces, we would have paid a fortune for overweight.

Talking to Learn

by Britta Schein McNemar

I knew from four years of listening to students what a terrible fate awaited me if I were late to Victor Svec's Russian class. I would probably be chastised, questioned, and worst of all, I would have to speak. I tiptoed into Room 29, and it happened.

"Zdravstvy!", Victor grinned at me from across the room. I looked at the semi-circle of seats and tried to decide where to hide. I sat down, arranged my papers, and tried to avoid contact with the hand now outstretched in front of me. I looked up. "Zdravstvy, Britta." I shook my head and said, "No Victor — no way" and to myself I muttered: "I don't want to be here, I have no ear for languages, I am shy of speaking in front of others."

Again, "Zdravstvy, Britta." I pleaded with my eyes: "Go away, leave me alone." I looked around: All smiles, all waiting. "Class," intoned Victor, "Zdravstvy, Britta!

Dobroe utra." As they repeated, all eyes fell on me. I wrote down on my blank tablet "Strass-vee" and quietly repeated something that sounded to me like their words. "U-rah" shouted Victor, "U-rah" the class shouted back, and we had begun.

As the three weeks of intensive language study wore on, everyone else's sense of adventure, and eagerness for the trip became a nightmare for me. I frantically tried to learn that "H" in the Cyrillic alphabet was an N, that "C" was S, that "C.C.C.P." was U.S.S.R. Nothing looked or sounded as it should. As our July sixth departure loomed larger, the class moved from conjugations to real-life situations: asking directions, buying something in a store, explaining what Andover is and why we were in the Soviet Union. In that class of eager PA teachers, I decided I would never be alone in the Soviet Union. I would be mute; everyone else could do the talking!

Shortly before we left, we were each given some souvenir gift items — PA postcards, school pens, stickers with our trip logo, and several "ANDOVER 1985" lapel pins with crossed U.S. and U.S.S.R. flags. That night I had a dream: I met a person in the Soviet Union who said "Zdravstvye," and I replied by decorating him with all my stickers and patches, and filling his hands and pockets with pens and postcards. When I finished, I stepped back, admired my handiwork and proclaimed, "There, that's done!" and left my new "friend" looking like a kiosk. I didn't need an analyst to tell me I was scared to death to take this trip, and the prospect of talking with real Soviets was most frightening.

Suddenly we were there, in the Moscow airport — ready to go through passport control and customs. Our Citizen Exchange Council leader warned us, "Do nothing to draw attention to yourself. Do not speak Russian until you have cleared customs!" Everyone else in our group looked crest-fallen, but I beamed — this wasn't going to be so bad!

The first evening a handful of us left a reception at the home of the American ambassador, intending to take the metro back to our hotel. I hung back as the others asked directions. They seemed as eager to practice their Russian as they were to find out where we were headed. After inquiring of a number of people (including Peter Gilbert chatting with two Tanzanian soldiers — in Swahili!), we got on the correct train, which eventually disgorged us at the proper station. But where were we to go from there? Margaret Gibson asked the escalator attendant and that little old lady with a red arm band and a jaunty red cap stepped out of her booth, took Margaret by the hand, and waving encouragement to the rest of us, boarded the escalator. She walked us all the way to the street, pointed out the way we should go, and shook hands all around. Then in unison out came our stickers, pens, buttons, postcards. My dream was coming true!

We had not walked far when a man hurrying by us on the sidewalk suddenly stopped and said in accented English, "Do you need help?" We were that obvious! We replied in English and Russian that we wanted to go to Red Square and the Intourist Hotel. He introduced himself as John and offered to walk with us. John pointed out sights, struggling with his English as we struggled to understand and use some Russian. Cautiously, he began to ask about us. Where were we from? "Ah, Amerikanski" — and then the thumbs up sign and big smile we were to see so often when we told Soviets we were Americans. "Where in the U.S.A.?" "Boston?" "Oh, John Kennedy was from Boston." "I saw the funeral on television — by satellite." Soon questions came rapidly from both sides. John was a lifetime resident of Moscow, he worked in the electrical industry, he was married; his children were grown. We stopped briefly, and he suddenly looked worried and said, "No, please keep walking. It wouldn't be good to stand and talk." John took us to the Bolshoi, and told us about the architecture and the ballet, but when Don asked to take his photo with us in front of the theatre, he declined. "It wouldn't be good for me . . . at work."

We walked together late into the evening, John pointing out more buildings, statues, and parks, obviously disappointed when we didn't recognize names or events. He told us about the brilliant scientist who almost single-handedly founded the University of Moscow. "You don't know of Lomonosov?"

he asked in amazement. His face was a mixture of sadness and anger as he said softly, "There is so much about each other we do not know."

At the end of our stay in Moscow, we boarded the plane for Tbilisi, the capital of Georgia. I found myself seated next to a woman about my age. Our eyes met and I said "Zdravstvuy." She smiled, but shook her head. I offered her a piece of gum. Finally, I plunged in with my Russian: "My name is Britta." I repeated it. She smiled and said, "My name is Anna." Awkwardly I told her I was from America, that we were teachers. She replied that she lived in Tbilisi, that she worked for what I later learned was the Soviet equivalent of IBM. An Armenian, Anna could speak Georgian, Armenian and Russian. She lived with her parents and her ten-year-old son, who, she declared proudly, could speak all three languages and was learning English, too! I introduced her to Don and asked about her "moosh" (husband); "separated," she replied, pulling at her wedding ring. I showed her pictures of our daughters. For two hours we shared my three weeks of Russian and fragments of English she had picked up from her son — and my dictionary.

We landed, gathered up our things, and said "Goodbye" in Russian, Armenian and English. Then, suddenly, she hugged me. She and I walked together to the waiting airport bus, and as we Americans boarded, a policeman pulled her from the line and said, "Tourists only." When I turned to wave goodbye, she was gone.

Through a long chain of newly-made Georgian acquaintances, a number of our group were invited to a "disco." What greeted us was a quiet party of ten couples, dancing to sedate American music. One older man said he was a teacher of history at the local university, and Don and he talked about their common field. "You know," he said, leaning forward on the table, "I teach about America. I have taught many, many years. I know all about your history, your political system, your economic structure, your art, your poetry. I read all I can, but I have never seen you." And as he said that he put his hands to his eyes, making glasses just as Victor had done in class when he was explaining the difference between the Russian words that mean to see and to observe.

Later that evening, when the dancing had ended and we stood at the door saying our goodbyes and thanks, the teacher came up the street shouting to us: he had returned home for a bottle of home-made wine to celebrate "the Americans." We went back inside for another wonderful hour of conversation. We asked them about the anti-American posters we had seen in town. We debated the value of teaching languages, art, and history. A sculptor talked of his life as an artist. They spoke passionately about their love of Georgia. They asked us about Moscow — which none of them had ever seen. As we said goodbye to the teacher, I put my hands to my eyes as he had done earlier and said, "Thank you for helping me to see, too." It was really also a "thank you" to the escalator attendant, to John, to Anna, and to all the other Soviets whom we had met and who together had helped us to see.

ANDOVER AND THE SOVIET UNION

Experiment at Andover

by Norman Cousins

FOR SEVEN DAYS, WHILE the Cuban crisis was at its height, some two dozen prominent citizens from the United States and the Soviet Union met in a paneled trustees' room of a New England preparatory school. They were taking part in an experiment to determine whether it is possible for knowledgeable people from both countries to talk about the explosive issues between their nations without having their meeting go up in a shower of sparks.

Each news bulletin added to the tension and sharpened the anxieties. At the end of the week, the participants emerged from their long sessions clearly fatigued but just as clearly rewarded. For they had proved it was possible to have a candid exchange of views on fundamental issues, holding back nothing and rigorously examining everything. And they all agreed they wanted the dialogue to continue.

The fact that the meeting took place against a background of what seemed for a time to be an impending thermo-nuclear war was purely accidental. The date for the conference had been fixed many months ago and was, in fact, the outgrowth of two previous meetings, the first at Dartmouth College in October, 1960, and the second in the Crimea in May, 1961. Both these meetings had been successful, not in terms of agreements actually reached but in terms of the ability to clarify opposing positions, to submit to rules of order in debate, to subject facts to cross-examination, and to develop personal relationships that could be fruitful beyond the conference table.

Some of the participants, especially at Dartmouth and the Crimea, previously had substantial experience in the foreign services of their governments. They discovered that the process of coming together informally and unofficially made it possible for them to engage in the kind of full, intimate discussion that had only rarely been possible in their official stations. At the conclusion of the Dartmouth meeting, for example, George Kennan, then in private life, reflected that in a quarter-century of service in the Soviet Union he had not had as much access to the minds of Soviet citizens for whose intelligence he had high respect as he was then having in a New England college town in a few days.

BUT NEITHER THE DARTMOUTH nor the Crimea meetings took place under circumstances as somber and as unsettling as existed at the meeting in Andover a few days ago. Within a day after the Soviet participants arrived at International Airport in New York, the Cuban crisis was in the headlines. Three days later, just after the group assembled at Andover, the radio was crackling with news bulletins about an imminent statement of major importance by President Kennedy. The same night, the President went before the television cameras and the microphones to announce a blockade of all military shipping into Cuba. The delegates from both groups watched the announcement on a TV screen; the tension and the uncertainty in the room were palpable and acute. The fact that their two nations were apparently on a collision course now created an atmosphere of gravity for their experiment that none could have anticipated and all could dread.

Shortly after the President's announcement, the delegates went to their evening session in the trustees' room, which had been equipped with IBM simultaneous translating equipment. The Americans were mindful that their Russian guests, 5,000 miles from their homes and families, were probably wondering whether they ought to leave the United States while there was still time to do so. It is possible that the Soviet visitors wondered whether the Americans felt there was any use in proceeding. At any event, the co-chairman of the Soviet delegation began the meeting by asking tactfully whether the Americans wished to go on with the conference. The American co-chairman said there was only one way to find out. He asked for a show of hands of those who wished to continue. Without the slightest hesitation, every American hand went up. The Soviet participants responded in equal measure and the experiment was sustained.

DURING THE COURSE OF the week, the Cuban situation gave rise to the most detailed, direct exchange of views. There could be no doubt that all the elements of the problem, including many which had been crowded out of the headlines, were fully presented. Blunt questions were asked and just as bluntly answered. One of the items on the prepared agenda had to do with the role of the United Nations in dealing with tensions, and with the place of world law in the establishment of a durable peace. It was inevitable that the relevance of this topic to the Cuban crisis should have been stressed by some of the participants.

Other topics vigorously discussed included the problem of achieving general and complete disarmament under iron-clad safeguards; the responsibility of the

A talented young actress, our daughter is an old hand at bravura entrances. Indeed she entered the world the night that the United States and the Soviet Union stood "eyeball to eyeball" over the installation of nuclear missiles in Cuba.

Less than twenty-four hours before her birth, Bart Hayes's sister, Ruth "Poo" Hayes, asked me whether I would (1) act as host to the U.S.-U.S.S.R. conference that evening for dinner at the Andover Inn and (2) see to it that following dinner, the Russian delegates were sent off to the homes of John Kemper and Alan Blackmer, where they were to be "entertained" as the School's guests. Poo was aware that I had at one time studied Chinese, which somehow resolved the language problem; besides, I was told, one of the Soviets spoke "excellent English."

I was hesitant to leave Ann in her last expectant hours, but she assured me that I was of no use hanging about the house, and that I should go ahead with the assignment. A quick trip to the Inn to get my bearings brought me to the reservation desk, where a smiling but puzzled clerk was greeting a short, rather rotund woman, carrying not a cane but a staff some seven feet in length. As I walked up, the clerk asked the staff-bearer, "Are you together?" Without hesitation or really looking, she replied: "Yes, he's my lover." Thus was I introduced to the Dartmouth Conference and Margaret Mead.

That evening, dutifully clad in three-piece suit and PA colors, I arrived at the Inn at the appointed hour to find the East Room set for cocktails, and starkly empty. The bartender poured me a drink and asked me to join him at the TV set in the corner. We waited — and waited. No del-large nations in undertaking a co-operative program for assisting countries in need of economic development; the problem of maintaining peaceable relations while maintaining diverse political systems; and ways in which the access of each country to the other could be kept open in economic, scientific, and cultural relations.

On some days the sessions ran from early morning until late at night. Each topic produced a substantial supply of information, not all of it familiar to most of the participants. And, as might be expected, few statements went unchallenged.

Where facts were incontrovertible, positions gained in proportion. Suggestions were made for constructive improvement, especially in the area of cultural relations, and a number of them had no difficulty in gaining a concurrence.

Perhaps the most interesting development of the experiment was that, paradoxically, the delegates drew closer together on the personal level even as the issues that separated them grew more intense. The international crisis deepened and the debates at the conference table were correspondingly sharper, but the personal rapport mounted from day to day. Whether this was because the participants were becoming increasingly aware subconsciously of their underlying membership in a human commonwealth, or whether, as they came to know one another, they yielded to the magnetic pull of human gravity, it is difficult to say. One thing however, is certain: By the end of the week there was no awkwardness or strain in raising any question, however severe, or in venturing a response, however pointed. It was possible to be forthright without being caustic, impassioned without being abusive, severe without being cutting. You could disagree and still retain your respect for the person you were disagreeing with. Just in the process of working and living together, those at the conference had been able to transcend what until then had been their purely national identities and were recognizing the implicit existence of a human agenda for their deliberations.

MOREOVER, THERE SEEMED to be a sense among the participants that they were sharing in a privileged experience at a critical time. Andover was probably the only place in the world where so many Americans and Russians, albeit unofficially, were talking things out together on virtually a day-and-night basis. This increased and enhanced their sense of somber responsibility. It made many of them recognize, too, that they were there not just for the purpose of proclaiming but for the purpose of legitimate self-examination.

In all these respects, the experiment was a success. The Ford Foundation, whose support made these conferences possible, deserves the fullest commendation. The People-to-People Program, so fully supported by the U.S. Government, has had no more striking example than Andover of the validity of its underlying thesis. For if the human experiment represented by the meeting at Andover can succeed under the circumstances and pressures that obtained at that time of crisis, then almost nothing can be considered implausible or impossible in the field of unofficial contacts.

As at Dartmouth and the Crimea, some of the most memorable incidents took place away from the conference table. During one of the infrequent recess periods, the Soviet delegation went off to see some of the sites and memorials of the American Revolution. As they approached the monument at Bunker Hill, but before the inscription at the base of the monument was visible, the oldest member of the Soviet group took off his hat and began to move his lips. Those very close to him heard him recite the famous lines from Emerson:

"By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze
unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood
And fired the shot heard

Will there be another conference? It is too early to say. But at a time when the air is filled with talk about official summit meetings, it may be useful to remember that citizens are at the base. Their discourse can be relevant, helpful, even significant. For nothing in the world — spaceships not excluded — can be more exciting or constructive than a worthwhile human encounter.

The third Dartmouth Conference was held at Andover 21–27 October 1962; (other Dartmouth Conferences have followed). Mr. Cousins was editor of the Saturday Review from 1940-71 and 1973-77. He was co-chairman of the Dartmouth Conference. He is now an adjunct professor at the School of Medicine at U.C.L.A. egates. They were, I later learned, in the trustees' room attempting to draw up a joint communique to their respective governments. Finally, my companion called me to the window. From there we could see a group of Soviet men and women in a football huddle talking on the Inn's front lawn. As the huddle routine was to be replayed again, it became clear that was S.O.P. to assure that their deliberations were not bugged.

The huddle broke. Accompanied by the straggling Americans, the Soviet delegation slowly, tensely, made its way into the East Room. The American delegation was headed by Norman Cousins, Editor, Saturday Review, and included Philip E. Mosely, Director of Studies, Council on Foreign Relations; John B. Oakes, Editor, editorial page, The New York Times; Robert B. Meyner, Governor of New Jersey; Arthur Larson, Director, World Rule of Law Center, Duke University; Thomas B. Coughran, Executive Vice President of Bank of America; Shepard Stone, Director of International Affairs Program, Ford Foundation; Paul M. Doty, member of President's Science Advisory Committee, and Louis B. Sohn, Bemis Professor of International Law, Harvard University. The Soviet delegation headed by Academician E. K. Fedorov, Chief Scientific Secretary, U.S.S.R. Academy Sciences, included General Nikolai Talensky, military theoretician; Y. A. Zhukov, leading Soviet journalist; Boris Nikolaevich Polevoi, writer, deputy, Supreme Soviet, R.F.S.F.R.; and A. G. Masevich, astronomer and satellite expert.

Open bar, or no, the evening did not begin on a jolly note. The delegates gathered around the TV, and we watched CBS's photos of U.S. destroyers forcing Soviet transports to alter course. A great penetrating voice: "Dat is against international law." With the news over and the TV off, tensions eased a bit; there was even the beginning of normal cocktail conversation when it was time for dinner.

The Inn's dining room was its prim, proper, stuffy self, save for a vodka glass at every setting and a fifth of Schmirnoff at every other. An awkward game of musical chairs managed to split up the delegates so that each American sat with a Russian or two; mine were the man who spoke "excellent English" (he did) and described himself as being "in the Soviet diplomatic service" and a ballerina cum rocket reentry specialist who had clearly cleaned out Bloomingdale's on her way to Andover and now wore every item she had bought.

Vodka notwithstanding, tension and language made for an awkward first course. I did mention to my diplomatic companion the impending arrival of our child, which proved something of an ice breaker. He rose, informed his colleagues both in Russian and English, and, suddenly, we were all on our feet toasting the expected Rebecca. As to my fatherly concerns, a Russian delegate came to my chair, threw an arm around me, and — in Russian — told me that he would take care of everything. Translated, Dr. Vladmir Kovanov, who had put two heads on a dog, would like nothing better than to deliver the child in the name of Soviet-U.S. friendship.

This outburst led to another dinner highlight. One American, was conspicuous for his baldness. Surrounded by Soviet delegates with great, waving mops of hair, he was being teased for lack of same. On catching the drift, the distinguished international lawyer shot back through an interpreter, "What is your secret?" "Vodka!" came the immediate reply; and with that, the Soviet delegates rubbed a bit of vodka in their hair. As a gesture of goodwill the American proceeded to do the same. The ghost of Alfred E. Stearns must have taken to its bed.

After dinner I had the tricky task of dividing the Soviets into two groups and sending them off to the evening's entertainment. My diplomat was, to say the least, reserved about the prospect. However, after a short caucus in their now accustoming huddle, on the front lawn of the Inn, my diplomat stepped back into the Inn and announced crisply, "We are prepared!"

My diplomat and I led (while discussing democracy, of all things) the way up Main Street to Phelps House. Through the headmaster's door we heard a rather ragged, piano rendition of "Swanee." Half the group, headed by Major General Talensky of the Soviet Army General Staff, gingerly made their way up Colonel Kemper's front steps; the second group continued to Moses Stuart House, there to be greeted by Jo and Alan Blackmer.

Between telephone calls ("Nothing is happening. Go back to your party.") I shuttled between the galas. As forced as the occasions were, there were on that tense evening moments of lightness, even of gaiety; based upon noise level and guests' reluctance to leave, I'd even say they were significant successes.

Upon leaving Phelps House, the Soviet surgeon who had earlier offered his services, asked me, I surmised, if there was news about the expected child. I hope that is what he'd asked, for I displayed my entire Russian vocabulary and sadly, impatiently replied: "Nyet . . . nyet." He shook my hand, gave me a great bear hug, and disappeared into the night.

Becket made her entrance at Methuen's Bon Secours Hospital some eight hours later, 25 October 1962. With the world poised at the brink of Armageddon, some of us at Andover, with our Soviet guests, allowed ourselves to believe that war would be averted.

Negotiations and Avoiding Accidental Nuclear War: A Profile of William L. Ury '70

by Edwin G. Quattlebaum III '60

The Reagan-Gorbachev summit this November is a worthy test for any existing science of negotiations, and William L. Ury '70 is on the cutting edge of this science. He is particularly involved in the role negotiation might play in what many hawks, doves, and owls alike consider the most important goal of our time — avoiding nuclear war. As the head of Harvard Law School's Nuclear Negotiation Project, Ury is deeply involved in developing the social science technology to improve Soviet-American relations. Ury is best known for co-authoring Getting to Yes: Negotiating Agreement Without Giving In (Houghton-Mifflin, 1981), which has sold almost a million copies, in fifteen languages. It outlines negotiation techniques universal enough to address Geneva stalemates and kids' bedtimes at home. His most recent book, Beyond the Hotline: How We Can Prevent the Crisis that Might Bring on a Nuclear War has been featured on ABC's Nightline and excerpted in The Washington Post. Both books assert that the main step in moving from stubborn "positional bargaining" to "principled negotiation" is for each side to invent fresh options that satisfy both sides' underlying interests. The one fresh option beyond the 1963 hotline is to build a new joint crisis control center in Moscow and Washington.

Getting to Yes and Beyond the Hotline offer clear, concise, plausible, politically feasible steps to avoid a cataclysmic clash between the two superpowers, even one begun by another power. These steps are so full of common sense that a typical reaction to them is, "Why, these things must already exist." They do not. But this is not a book review. It is a story of how work by Ury interlocks with an idea of Andover parent Don Kendall.

After being schooled in Switzerland among multilingual students, Ury came to Andover, where he says he received better teaching than anywhere else, including Yale and graduate school at Harvard. Coincidentally, Ury roomed in Taylor Hall, one door away from classmate Elliott Fisher, whose father, William L. Ury '70, Director of Harvard's Nuclear Negotiation Project.

Roger Fisher, now teaches negotiation at Harvard Law School, where he is Williston Professor of Law and Director of the Harvard Negotiation Project. Years later, Ury collaborated on two mediation books with the elder Fisher: the scholarly International Mediation: A Working Guide for the International Peace Academy in 1978, sold a respectable 5,000 copies. The second was Getting to Yes.

After Andover, Ury went to Yale, where his interest in linguistics led him toward an academic career as a cultural anthropologist. His training took him, among other places, to East Africa, where he saw vivid examples of bilingual negotiation. Two examples: A woman walked into a country store owned by her brother. Sister and brother greeted each other and chatted familiarly for a few moments in their local dialect. But when the conversation switched to business, the brother switched to Swahili, signaling a shift in relationship to customer and shopkeeper. Similarly, a quarrel between a bus driver and a passenger switched from Swahili to English when the passenger tried to pull rank and the driver asserted his position of authority in the bus. Incidents like these reinforced Ury's scientific search for a body of negotiation theory transcending common sense. And, he thought, it might be most fruitful in multilingual circumstances.

Then, a major thing happened to Bill Ury. He was at Harvard, enroute to an M.A. and Ph.D. in social anthropology, which he expected to lead to a life of esoteric scholarship. But in 1976 a casual remark in a lecture by Professor Thomas C. Schelling convinced Ury that there was about a 50% chance that a nuclear weapon will go off in anger somewhere in the world by the year 2000. Ury continued to ponder the 50% point long after the lecture was over, even though Schelling had almost made the remark in passing. Maybe he could help develop a practicable theory of negotiation that would reduce that 50% figure.

This road to Damascus for Bill Ury led to a sudden, all-absorbing career in negotiation and celebrity stature. First, he wrote an essay on mediation which caught the eye of Roger Fisher. Fisher and he went on to develop what has now become famous as the "One Text Procedure" in mediation, which helped achieve the historic breakthrough at Camp David. By 1978 Ury was organizing and moderating workshops for diplomats and academics designed to invent procedures to reduce international conflicts. By 1980 he was arbitrating disputes in the coal mines of Appalachia, coauthoring Getting to Yes, and helping establish the Harvard Negotiation Project — a research, teaching, and consulting center intended to improve the negotiation and mediation processes. He consulted on the Iran Conflict Study, designed to invent proposals for improving chances of resolving that hostage crisis. From 1982 to 1984, he served on the faculty of the Harvard Business School, and in addition, assumed three other major posts, which he now holds: Director of the Law School's Nuclear Negotiation Project, Associate Director of Harvard Law School's "Program on Negotiation," and Research Fellow at the Kennedy School of Government, where he coordinates a U.S.-Soviet academic exchange on crisis prevention and crisis control. He has given lectures to the Pentagon, the State Department, the National Defense University, and the START negotiators in Geneva. Recently, he provided two Boston TV channels with what he called "curbstone" commentary on the June 1985 Beirut Airport skyjacking crisis.

All this means that, at least on one level, Bill Ury, the scholar of abstract negotiation situations, has been overwhelmed by Bill Ury, the widely respected hands-on practitioner — in every conceivable aspect of negotiation, but especially regarding U.S.-Soviet relations with an eye toward reducing the nuclear danger.

Therefore, it is significant that a Bill Ury gets interested in Kendall's financing of an excursion of 86 Andover faculty members to the Soviet Union. Kendall's idea, which was reported on CBS News and in The New York Times, seems a kind of creative brainstorming that appeals to Ury, like The Christian Science Monitor's recent "Peace 2010" contest inviting readers to write an essay from the point of view of someone in the year 2010, telling how a lasting peace had been established among the nations of the world. Ury confided that his next book, which he is now writing, is in effect his best answer to The Christian Science Monitor question.

He has visited the U.S.S.R. three times himself as part of a series of study programs jointly undertaken by the Soviet Union's Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada and the Avoiding Nuclear War Project at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. Ury and A.N.W. colleagues meet regularly with their counterparts — Soviet scholars and officials specializing in negotiation and crisis prevention. But Cold War thinking moves in a slow, frigid way, and interchange such as Kendall's Andover group is sorely needed to warm things up. Still, Ury persists, there are good reasons for optimism: several existing U.S.-Soviet agreements, improvements in the hotline, and the fact that the Soviets were the first to use it, which shows that they take it seriously as a crisis control device. There have also been several U.S.-Soviet Accidents and Incidents Agreements since 1971. Perhaps most encouraging, says Ury, recent meetings with very high-level Soviet officials indicate that they are receptive to the central idea of Beyond the Hotline — the joint crisis control centers.

Ury's background in cultural anthropology, negotiating, and the U.S.S.R. makes for interesting insights about cultural barriers between our two nations that obstruct negotiation. He and I dined in Harvard Square to discuss some of these. For example, as he told The Boston Globe, Americans put a positive value on what's new, so we're always coming up with new proposals . . . It drives the Soviets crazy, because the Soviet attitude is that if it works, don't fix it . . .

So the Americans will present a proposal, then the Soviets will go back and study it for a year, and when they finally come back to the table ready to discuss it, the Americans say, "Oh, forget that. We have a new proposal."

As he and I dined that night, he looked up from his menu: "Choices! You'll find in the U.S.S.R. that menus are pro forma. Soviets hate choices. Don't burden them with endless options, either for dinner or for resolving conflicts."

Toward the end of our dinner, I asked Ury what Kendall's Andover-U.S.S.R. visitors should do to make the most of our opportunity to promote a climate conducive to negotiation. "Show them American opinion polls," he said. "Russians love them." He gave me a September 1984 survey indicating that 28% of the American people think nuclear war will be caused by accident, 25% think "Nth Country Escalation," 21% "Soviet Surprise Attack," 17% "U.S.-Soviet Escalation." This emphasis on "Accident," Ury asserts, suggests that we can "redefine the problem to be one of mutual interest, not confrontational positions or distrust as in Geneva. And we can sidestep the Soviet distaste for new ideas by reminding them that a crisis management center is merely a extension of existing agreements."

What about after the Andover-U.S.S.R. trip, I asked? Ury's answer was memorable: "The genius of Don Kendall's idea is in its ripple effect. It's Andover. The ripples will go far."

"Keep Don Kendall's ripples radiating," he adds. "Take advantage of what is special about Andover — people who can make a difference," like Kendall and Vice President Bush (one of his most important jobs is "crisis management;") and other countless concerned alumni. After all, a point Professor Schelling made almost in passing ten years ago, had a dramatic impact on Ury, and the ripples have been large indeed. Perhaps Kendall's sending 86 Andover faculty to the Soviet Union will — through the Headmaster's Symposium or some small remark by a teacher, or a school ambience that includes consideration of "things Soviet" — influence a PA student who will in time make ripples of his or her own.

The Coeducation Study: A Portrait of a School

by Kathleen M. Dalton and Marion Finbury

PA's Ten Year Coeducation Committee has spent two years exploring coeducation and gender at PA, and the results is an interdisciplinary study, A Portrait of a School: Coeducation at Andover, one of the most comprehensive scholarly studies of gender in secondary education. The committee has thoroughly evaluated various facets of the School and evaluated extensive questionnaires sent to all students in 1983 and to all faculty in 1984. We have asked a myriad of important questions: Do current admissions policies favor one sex or another? Has the School encouraged course selection, a classroom atmosphere, and a balanced curriculum that offer boys and girls a wide-ranging education as a chance to grow in self-confidence? Does the School encourage or discourage the differences between boys and girls? What kind of values does Andover encourage in its students? How have faculty hiring and staffing changed in light of coeducation?

The weight of evidence is, happily, that coeducation is working well at Andover. The School's enthusiasm about the opportunity to study coeducation so thoroughly suggests the healthy coeducational atmosphere at PA. Faculty and students, both male and female, overwhelmingly report that they are satisfied with life at Phillips Academy. In the classroom and on the playing fields boys and girls are learning and growing in a richly varied educational environment. Don Gordon, the last headmaster of Abbot Academy, was right in predicting "that with [the life of Abbot] lodged firmly within [Phillips'] corpus, [Phillips] will be incapable of remaining the same."

Of course, coeducation has brought significant changes. There were important first steps: converting bathrooms and dorms, and with the addition of the Abbot Wing to the gym, creating an athletic complex that "included a minimum of separate-but-equal, and a maximum of shared unity." A remodeled athletic program now includes noncompetitive options like dance and yoga, to give students more choice. At the same time both male and female coaches encourage the athletic aspirations of those girls and boys who thrive on competitive sports. Associate Dean of Residence Priscilla Bonney-Smith has promoted the discussion of important gender issues: sexuality and close relationships, eating disorders, and rape prevention. The School also developed dynamic theatre, music, and dance programs during the Sizer years, the same time PA was adjusting to coeducation. The counseling service was expanded, and the disciplinary and the parietal systems were changed as well.

Both sexes have responded well to the exciting academic and extracurricular opportunities at Andover. Overall, boys and girls earn virtually identical grades, and are equally successful in college admissions. Boys and girls are elected to the Cum Laude Honor Society at the same rate. Male and female students — who as late as the early sixties had been forbidden to have unchaperoned conversations of longer than two minutes when they met on the street — today take it for granted that a friendship with the opposite sex can be a part of daily life.

The faculty has also changed as a result of coeducation, and PA remains a wonderful teaching environment. Before coeducation began PA had only three women faculty members. Today there are 72 women on the faculty. 28% of the full-time classroom teachers are women; 38% of the total faculty (which includes part-time house counselors, librarians, administrators, and many others) are women; 77% of the part-time faculty are women. More women serve as department chairs and as deans in 1985 than any time since coeducation began. The School still remains committed to hiring more women faculty. The option of working part-time better enables male and female faculty to combine family life with careers; a day care center housed in part of Draper Hall makes that more possible.

Ironically, 62% of the faculty believes that girls' dorms are more demanding and time-consuming for house counselors to run than boys' dorms, but survey data shows that male and female house counselors spent roughly the same amount of time on their dorms — between ten and twenty hours per week. Female faculty reported a higher level of satisfaction with the School than male faculty do, but women teachers are less likely to stay at PA than men. Young female faculty are three times more likely to leave PA than young men, perhaps because single women may tend to see dorm supervision and the workload as problems for their personal lives. The triple-threat workload — teaching, coaching, and house counseling — may be less appealing to women.

As successful as it is, coeducation still presents challenges for the future. Our research showed that a student's gender may still affect his or her experience at PA. For example, students often choose courses on the basis of what they believe to be sex-appropriate subject matter. Fewer girls study advanced math, and girls are much less likely than boys to go beyond the School's one year science requirement. Boys still outscore girls on the math portion of the SAT, and win a disproportionate number of departmental awards, not only in math and science. Boys are less likely than girls to view foreign language, art, or English as their strongest subjects, while girls are less likely than boys to view history, math, or science as their strongest subjects. Girls are more likely than boys to find themselves outnumbered by the opposite sex in class, and girls reported on our survey that they sometimes talk less in these predominately male classes. In addition, despite the fact that four out of six cluster presidents this year are girls, female students are much less likely than their male peers to hold leadership positions in the community. Since coeducation began in 1973 student body presidents and cluster presidents have been predominantly male, and extracurricular organizations such as The Phillpian are more often run by boys.

One of the most significant findings of the Coed Study is that female students are less confident than male students. Despite equivalent abilities and achievement, girls rate their success lower than boys in terms of athletics, academics, leadership, and intelligence. According to educational psychologists and sociologists, lower female self-confidence is not unique to Andover, but a few conditions in our educational environment may exacerbate the problem. Perhaps the unequal ratio in the student body (58% male/42% female), being outnumbered in class and activities, and a comparative shortage of female role models may tend to undermine female self-confidence.

How gender-blind are teacher-student interactions? We reviewed a random sample of 1400 evaluative descriptions of students (instructor reports, house counselor letters, college counselor letters, and coaches comments) for the senior classes of 1974 and 1985, assuming that if "gender-biased" perceptions were recorded on evaluations, they would also occur in classroom interactions. The vast majority of the evaluations of students applied a gender-blind standard of judgment to both sexes; we found only two blatantly sexist items — one house counselor letter referred in a demeaning way to females as possessions and another alluded inappropriately to a young boy's masculinity. The only gender differences in evaluating students showed up in the areas of competitiveness and appearance; in the evaluation for the class of '85 competitiveness or aggressiveness were noted as valued traits twice as often for males as for females. The habit of evaluating females on the basis of their appearance more often than males has actually increased over the years; in the class of '74 sample, comments about girls' appearance were four times as numerous as comments about boys' appearance; in the class of '85 sample, they were eight times more common. Interestingly enough, however, a study of disciplinary cases shows no sex discrimination: although boys break more rules than girls, they receive a proportionate percentage of the probations, restrictions, and work duty hours.

However, despite the remaining problems, we can say confidently — as the vast majority of the faculty did — that coeducation works well at Andover. The School environment provides an excellent education and great joy to students of each sex. For faculty, too, Andover remains a fine community in which to teach and live. We urge anyone interested in Andover or coeducation to read the report in its entirety, where we have considered these and other issues, research data, and explanations for some of the results more completely.

Kathy Dalton holds a Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University. She has been teaching at Phillips Academy since 1980. Marion Finbury is the Associate Director of College Counseling, and has been a member of the Abbot and Phillips faculty since 1969.

Campus News

After Hurricane Gloria. Taylor Ongaro '88 and Keith Thomajan '87 go skateboard sailing with a sheet for a sail.

AB ORIGINE

The superstitious would say it was because classes began this September on Friday the thirteenth. Ominously they would also observe that the Shakespeare play being produced this term is The Tempest. But these nay-sayers would be overreacting, for, gratefully, Hurricane Gloria weakened enough that Andover only lost two trees, a few branches, a lot of twigs and thirty-six hours of power. Unfortunately, however, an exciting Andover Leaders' Weekend had to be scrubbed.

In fact, the new year began with extraordinary spirit. Blue Key heads Eleanor Tydings '86 and Alec Guetel '86 led what they called "an insanely zealous group of seniors" in welcoming and orienting 456 new students. At the beginning of the year's Student Leadership Conference, school president Malcolm Galvin '86 and other student leaders focused their discussion on two goals: helping all PA students to feel good about themselves and to find some kind of success at PA, and increasing students' awareness of the world outside the school.

When the dust settled in September, we had 1236 students enrolled in the regular session, and for the second consecutive year Andover offered admission to applicants without regard to their financial need. 38.4% of the students this year are receiving some form of financial aid: a grant, a student loan, or a parent loan. The male to female ratio is 57:43. The Academy has 117 black or Hispanic students, a handsome climb from the 51 only five years ago.

Awards

Latin and Greek students excelled in two national competitions this spring. A total of 57,000 students took the 1985 National Latin Exam, including 107 from PA. Fifty-two prizes went to Andover students: four gold medals, 17 silver medals, 12 magna cum laude, and 17 cum laude awards.

The 1985 National Greek Exam included 639 from 55 schools across the country. Eight of PA's ten competitors brought home prizes, including the only two purple ribbons given in the country, which went to David Eckman '86 and Jeffery Kip '85 for their perfect performances on the examination of Homer's Odyssey.

The Andover Bulletin has received a Gold Medal award from CASE, the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education. The Bul-

Public school teacher and space shuttle passenger Christa McAuliffe has nothing on PA's Sally Slade Warner, the first carillonneur in space. Here Sally rides OPP's cherry picker aloft to examine the bell atop Bulfinch Hall to determine whether the bell was cast by Paul Revere. The Paul Revere Day Books reveal that in 1821 the trustees of Phillips Academy purchased a 119½ lb. bell from Revere for $53. Alas, the Bulfinch bell was cast not by Revere but by C.T. Robnson [sic] of Boston in 1888.

letin's was one of five awarded gold medals in the Independent Schools Periodicals category. The issues entered were produced by former editor Thomas J. Regan '51, Instructor in English, and designed by Ann M. Parks, Director of Publications. This summer Ms. Parks attended a three-week Kent Summer Workshop in graphic design in Switzerland.

A 415-pound pumpkin grown by biology instructor Tom Cone took first place in the Topsfield Fair, the oldest fair in the country. The pumpkin measured 9¼ feet in circumference and 29" high; Josh Miner's 401-pound pumpkin took third place.

Success is sometimes its own award, but it is worth noting that in the fiscal year 1984-85 Andover's Annual Giving exceeded $2 million for the first time ever. This isn't the Academy Awards, so we will not list here the 8791 generous people who made this "award" possible. We are, however, sincerely grateful to them all.

Sports

by Matthew Shine '86
and Michael Morris, Jr. '86

This summer PA rowers and golfers met with extraordinary success. Rowers Travis Metz '87, Jon Bernstein '86, and Bob Creasy '86 spent the summer training and racing as members of the U.S. Junior National Rowing Team. After competing in a number of regattas in the U.S., they raced in the World Championships in Brandenburg, East Germany. Metz coxed the "four-with coxswain" boat that took a silver medal. (East Germany took the gold). Bernstein's and Creasy's "eight" won a bronze medal, behind the Soviet Union and East Germany. It was the first time that the U.S. "fours" has ever won a medal, and the first time the United States has ever won two medals in the same year.

Golfer John Karcher '86 won the Connecticut-New York Regional P.G.A. Junior Championship match, and Jim Israel '86 placed fourth. Fran Sullivan '85 won the regional match for the rest of New England. Karcher and Sullivan then headed, expenses paid, to Palm Beach, and the P.G.A. Junior National Championship (for 18-year-olds and younger). Karcher placed fourth.

As of early October, Andover athletic teams have played well and shown promise for fine seasons. Girls' soccer has won their first four games, outscoring opponents a combined 18-2. Their only setback came against the Alumnae, who beat them 5-3. The front four — Mary Slaney '86, co-captain Ellen LeMaitre '86, Hilary Jones '87, and Jessica DeVivo '86 — have played extremely well together, and the defense, anchored by co-captain Jenny Wadsworth '86 and goaltender Kelly Smith '86, have limited opponents to few shots and only two goals.

Boys' soccer has been called the best Andover team in years. Led by co-captain Malcolm Galvin '86, the team has beaten Groton, Holderness, and Tabor, each by a score of 5-0; they topped a tough Alumni squad 4-3. The team's only loss came in a hard-fought game with Boston College JV, when BC scored twice in the final ten minutes to win 5-4.

Field hockey has started out on the right foot, winning its first two games. After a shaky beginning in a scrimmage with St. Marks, the girls beat an exceptional Groton team for the first time in three years. The following week, the team played a strong Governor Dummer team, winning 2-0.

The defending New England Champion cross country teams have both performed extremely well. The boys lost narrowly to perennial powerhouse Naval Academy Prep, 27-30. There was some solace in the fact that it was the closest meet with N.A.P. in years. The girls' team outran Concord, B.B.&N., and Thayer in their first meet. Captain Caitlin Kelley '86 says the team "has the potential to be a really great one," and led by number one runner Gretchen Geggis '87, they hope to retain their title of New England Champions.

Volleyball's record in early October stands at 1-2, having defeated Lynnfield, but having fallen to tough competitors Andover High and Chelmsford.

While showing promise, the football team has lost its first two contests, against Taft and Tufts. The game against Taft was decided in the first three possessions, with Taft scoring first and Andover answering in suit, but Taft drove down the field and scored once again. In a very physical game against Tufts, the team played an excellent first half, and led 16-8 at the beginning of the second. However, it was only a matter of time before Tufts' size advantage took its toll, and Tufts won 28-16.

Trustee Gerard Piel '33 Retires

The Trustees of Phillips Academy salute Gerard Piel '33 on his retirement as a Charter Trustee of the Board of this Academy, a position he has held since 1969. His distinction in life and his thoughtful approach to the deliberations of the Board, particularly in the academic field, have served us well.

Gerry reached his current position of eminence through intelligent hard work. After Phillips Academy, he attended Harvard, graduating magna cum laude in 1937. He has twice been elected to Harvard's Board of Overseers.

As President and Publisher of Scientific American for 37 years, he has seen that publication attain a stature of international distinction. He has served as President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

His ability has served him well as a Trustee at Andover. He chaired the Headmaster Search Committee that secured Ted Sizer, and served on the Search Committee that found our current headmaster, Don McNemar. He will also be remembered for his significant contribution to the negotiation of the merger of Abbot Academy and Phillips Academy.

His humor and dedication will be sorely missed, but we hope he will continue to attend Board meetings and offer more of the same as a Trustee Emeritus. We look forward to seeing Eleanor and Gerry — his wonderful bow ties and ready smile — on Andover hill, where they will be always welcome and indeed much appreciated.

Students who were at Andover in January of 1977 will remember Dr. Herbert Scoville's Stearns Lecture on the problems governments encounter trying to control nuclear weapons. By this time, Dr. Scoville had used his scientific background to create a public awareness of the importance of arms control.

After 27 years in government service, he helped found the Arms Control Association to disseminate information about nuclear weapons, strategies for controlling them and the consequences of failing to do so.

Dr. Scoville graduated from Yale University in 1937 and did graduate work at Cambridge University in England and received his Ph.D. from the University of Rochester in 1942.

He was assistant director of science and technology for the CIA from 1963 to 1969. He also worked for the Department of Defense, the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Defense Research Committee. He served as a board member on the Council for a Livable World and on the board of the Union of Concerned Scientists.

Phillips Academy awarded Dr. Scoville the Claude M. Fuess Award in 1977; he won the University of Rochester's Hutchinson Medal in 1981, and the Rockefeller Public Service Award in 1981.

He leaves his wife, Ann (Curtiss) Scoville of McLean, Va., and four children, Anthony Church, PA '58; Thomas Welch, Nicholas Zabriskie, PA '62; Molly (Scoville) Fitzmaurice, and six grandchildren.

Frederick P. Smith, Burlington, VT; 29 June 1985

Frederick Plimton Smith died in the town in which he was born, Burlington, Vermont, after a brief illness. "He died at home with his wife and his children," said his son, Lt. Gov. Peter Smith.

At Andover he was on the varsity tennis and varsity swimming teams. At Princeton he was captain of the ski team and earned high honors in political science. After graduating from Princeton in 1937 he entered Harvard Law School, graduating in 1940, the same year he was admitted to the Vermont Bar. He served as a lieutenant in the U. S. Navy during World War II. After the war, Mr. Smith practiced law in Burlington, and in 1959 he became president of the Burlington Savings Bank, succeeding his father and his grandfather in that position. Now known as the Bank of Vermont, Mr. Smith served as president, chief executive officer, and in 1968 was named chairman of the board of that institution.

Active in Republican politics in many capacities throughout his life, Mr. Smith was elected to the state Legislature in 1946 at the age of 31. He lost a bid for the Republican nomination for Vermont's congressional seat in 1948, but two years later was elected state chairman of the party. He was elected a state senator from Chittenden County in 1972, but stepped down two years later feeling he could not devote the time needed to serve as a lawmaker as well as fulfill his numerous family, civic, educational, community, and professional commitments.

He was president of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks; a member of the National Federal Savings and Loan Advisory Council; chairman of the board of trustees of Champlain College; and was on the board of trustees of the University of Vermont and Bennington College. He was a director of the Mt. Mansfield Co.; the National Life Insurance Co. of Vermont; the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co., and the Union Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Vermont.

An active outdoorsman and environmentalist, Mr. Smith was deeply concerned with planning for proper development in the state of Vermont, and in this regard, he was instrumental in bringing about Vermont's Act 250 and associated development planning efforts.

Alexander Yancy 1906-1985

The November 1978 edition of the Bulletin featured a profile titled: "Alex Yancy: Morse Hall's unretireable legend." Mr. Yancy, who lived at 9 Central St., Andover, had worked at the Academy since 1929 mainly as a dormitory custodian, and later as custodian of Morse Hall. When it was time for him to retire in 1978, a petition was signed by every member of the math faculty, urging that some way be found to retain him, saying in the petition . . . "Not a day passes without student and teacher alike being steadied by his example of dignity, diligence, and loyalty." Mr. Yancy did stay on in his job, on a part time basis, and finally retired this past July, having endeared himself to a new generation of students and faculty. We are sad to report he died on 12 September at the age of 79.

He leaves one sister, Grace Yancy of San Diego, California; and many fond memories in the minds of all who knew and respected him.

In accordance with my policy of writing not about 1910 as it is but as it used to be, in this issue I will say a few words about Sunday at Andover in 1910.

Andover has traditionally been a religious community so most of us felt an obligation to carry on "Christian Endeavor." On Sunday mornings a few of us would journey to Lawrence and there sing hymns to the prisoners! As I look back upon those days, I wonder whether what we did in forcing the prisoners to listen to us constituted cruel and unusual punishment!

We had to attend compulsory, daily chapel which I have always thought was a very good thing because, aside from its religious nature, it brought the whole school together once a day and gave us a sense of community.

I am very sorry to have to report the death of two other classmates, Len Gard and John R. Abbot both in July. Len was the most loyal and enthusiastic member of our class and never failed to attend every reunion. At the time of his death he was in the Episcopal Home in Rochester, NY, but "made his home" with his son William in Rochester, NY. He is survived by two sons, William and Leonard M., Jr; four grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. We send our deepest sympathy to his sons and their families.

John was a retired architect who designed and remodeled numerous homes and schools throughout the state of Massachusetts. Among the buildings he worked on were on the campuses of Abbot, Andover and Milton Academies. He was a trustee of Abbot Academy. His ancestors came to Andover in 1643 and he was the ninth generation in an unbroken line to live on his family's land in Andover. He leaves a son, David Abbot of Rockport, Mass.; three grandsons and two great-grandsons. The class extends its sympathy to his survivors.

Your scribe has not heard directly from any of our classmates during the summer, but did gather from the grapevine that Pete Jones had surgery and came through in fine shape.

Putting on my Class Agent hat, this is to express heartfelt appreciation for the contributions made to the 1984-85 Alumni Fund. Much to my surprise, our class did better than in our 60th reunion year.

The Alumni Office has learned of the death of Russell L. Houghton of 161 West 16th Street, New York, NY. He attended Amherst College from 1919 to 1922, but he graduated from M.I.T. with a degree in architecture. He listed his occupation as freelance draftsman and modelmaker. He was active for many years in the Country Dance and Song Society and a member of a model railroad club in Queens, NY. As far as we can determine he is survived by his nieces and a number of cousins. Our sympathy is extended to them.

A recent note from Al Wilson reports that they had a five-day visit on Martha's Vineyard from Ben Spock prior to the 7 June dinner in New York which was hosted by the '56 Olympic Crew to honor the '24 Olympic Crew. Al Lindley's widow, Grace, attended, and, I am told, added a great deal to a grand occasion.

At our Yale 60th Reunion in June, I pleasantly recall seeing the following Andover classmates: Darling, Gage, Leach, Lincoln, Walworth, Wilson. If I missed any others, I am sorry.

We had a surprise visit this summer from Ted Booth and his wife, Alice. They were visiting an old Cornell friend of Ted's in Chatham, and brought him over here to Orleans for a visit and a beverage with us. Nice.

A card just received from Don Stevenson reports that he and his wife, Lois, have lived in the South since 1945, and are now in a retirement community in the beautiful western mountains of North Carolina, and are so glad to be there.

As we all are now octogenarians, we have a plethora of sad news to report: Garfield Drew, who lived in Chestnut Hill, Mass., died in May after a long illness. He had been publisher of Drew Odd Lot Studies, which benefited small investors. "June" Merrill, who died quite early in the year, had been an attorney with the prestigious firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, in New York. For fifteen years he was also the President of the Board of Trustees of Amherst College. In New York, he served on the boards of many educational and charitable institutions.

Bob McClure, also died early this year in Syracuse, NY, after a long illness. He had been secretary of Precision Castings there. During that time, and after retirement, he served on the boards of the Syracuse Boys' Club, Visiting Nurses Assoc. and Manlius School. Norm McGee died this spring in Sedona, Ariz. of a heart ailment. He had been in the radio business in New York, with WQXR for a total of 31 years, retiring in 1968 from a vice presidency. We were just notified of Malcolm Anthony's death which took place at the end of 1983. We have no further information. The class extends its sincere sympathy to the survivors of the deceased members of our class. All the sad news for now. I feel a real personal loss, as many of these men were personal friends of mine both at Andover and at Yale.

Circle the dates of 13-15 June, on your 1986 calendar for our 65th Reunion, and do plan to return, if possible.

Sally Bodwell Nelson had her usual busy winter in Fort Myers, Florida, with Audubon groups and volunteer work three days a week in the local hospital. In May she came up to her summer home in Weld, Maine. She is willing to drive anywhere for the mini-reunion I have mentioned to you before, so I hope to see her before long. I will give you a report in the notes I will send to the Bulletin in January.

Mary (Bug) Polk Overstreet's daughter Lynn Chatfield sent word that Bug is recovering from a broken hip! A pacemaker was also installed last December, so her medical problems are still great. However, Lynn says her memories of Abbot are still clear and she has held onto her sense of humor. We thank her for writing but wish the news was more cheerful. Wishes for a good recovery to you, Bug, from us all!

Anne Whinery reports that her life changes very little and she has only a minimum of aging problems; she has enjoyed visits from her kin folk this summer. She and Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews had planned to meet again in Fredricksburg, but no date has been set, perhaps because Bubbles is having trouble with her vision.

Helen Knight Wilkinson is vacationing at the Colony Hotel in Kennebunkport, Me. again this year and I was delighted to have a phone call from her. She is hale and hearty, enjoyed travels to Mexico and Panama this winter as well as spending time in Florida. We talked of the mini-reunion and settled on 19 September for the date. Hope to see 6-8 of the class, especially the girls who come North for the summer — Betty Ohnemus Hicks and Sally Bodwell Nelson. Barb Goss called in June about it.

Ruth Dewey York enjoys the senior activities in Marblehead, Mass., lunches, shopping, trips, etc. Her son is living in Reno and likes it there. Ruth is one '22er I can always count on hearing from.

Gertrude Franklin Callahan writes from her summer cottage in Rye, N.H., and she also is interested in a mini-reunion. Since she will be there thru Sept. I hope she can be with us. If you would like to have one in your area remember I have up-to-date addresses. One classmate I have "lost" is Rachel Boutwell White of Andover, Conn. My request-for-news card was returned to me recently. Could any of you send me news of her?

It is a pleasure to hear from those of '22 who answer my requests and I thank you sincerely. Since my move to Maine in '82 I have seen a lot of my four families in this area and visit those in other states. Am apt to spend time reading when I should be cleaning house; I enjoy handicrafts, especially since I am quite lame with arthritis. However, I still drive and get to Mass. several times a year, twice this year for granddaughters' weddings. It shocks me when I count up the descendants Bill and I have garnered through the years. Three more "greats" by next February, with a total of fifteen!

Please keep me posted re: address changes, etc. Love and warm greetings to each of you. . . Olivia

I can usually tell when I receive news from Laura Williamson, Abbot 24's great scribe, that the deadline for the next Bulletin is near. I'm sure she has the jitters like me. Laura wrote from Shelter Island, N.Y. where 20 of her relatives tennised, swam and boated.

I have spent much time reading over and discarding 20 years of correspondence of deceased classmates (one-and-a-half barrels). Some I kept, that were, as Barny, Frank Treat's widow and our class poetess would say, "full of life's real meanings, of love, laughter, fun and even sorrow." One from Scott Rigg's son, was a wonderful tribute to his dad — our only General.

Van Johnstone writes every other week from West Palm Beach. Keeps asking for news of PA and sports. I'm sending him a subscription to the Phillipian to keep him informed. I'm also sending the latest joke from Bill Jones. Bill's friends at the Naval Home in Biloxi, MS sure must supply him. Keep them coming, Bill! Tony Leach was in Matinicus, Maine checking his summer home, mowing the lawn and looking for new birds — he's an ornithologist at heart. He mentioned seeing Ralph Blank at a local show in Summit, N.J., and offered his condolences [on his wife's death]. "Grace was always a bright spot at our reunions" was his comment. We concur. Ralph had returned from a month in England, to relax, no doubt, after his daughter and family kept him busy — a country fair, auction on the green, two summer theatre productions and trying to keep up with his "dynamo" grandson. Fred Beck reports he had an excellent year. He heard from Sam Connor, and Frank Hamlin, Yale '28, came over for lunch one day. He was glad to hear news of Nancy Danforth. "The eye doctors are really doing miracles," says Doc Fred. His birthday card to me said "old age is all in your mind . . . your legs, your arms, your back . . ."

Joe Smith tried to emulate Doug Flutie, the B.C. quarterback, when he fell and cracked his collarbone. He and Ruth were visiting their daughter in Melbourne, Fla. at the time. Joe always recommends several books they have read. When does a class secretary have time to read, Joe? . . . Long letter from Berry Grant in Charlottesville, N.C. Berry, a former Pepsi Cola dealer says he predicted way back that Coke would go back to the old formula. I'm sure Berry thinks Pepsi is it, however. . . . We were glad to receive Bill Woodward's new address: 100 Netherland Lane, Box 327 Kingsport, Tenn. 37660. He and Katie are happy in their new retirement home. They play golf occasionally. "Let us know if you come this way — a guest room is available." . . . The Woodward's sound like Fred Van Peski, and Mutt Jennings who called after he read the Bulletin about Fred and his organ recital to say he sat next to Bill James and Jim Mead at Vespers. Jim's name happens to be James Jennings Mead, Jr. Mutt is still busy doing consulting work and is a director on several boards. In his spare time he will plan his 60th reunion at Dartmouth as Chairman.

Bob Clark and Esther had planned another trip to London, Paris, Basel, Lucerne, and Lugano plus several Italian cities but they are leery of all the hijackings. . . . Gige Mumby was in the East this summer visiting his two daughters and had a long talk session with Ed Fischer, our Yale Chemistry Prof. Ed mentioned it at the Yale picnic that we attended. . . . Ed Thompson also in Calif. says his annual check-up was perfect. He golfs three days a week besides being a gourmet cook and purchasing agent for wife, Liz. Dick Morris would be glad to hear that Ed's grandson, "Woody," who captained two teams (like our Mumby and Vaughan) at Deerfield will enter Colgate this fall. . . . The Hobbs-Larsen 80th birthday celebration finally took place two years late. I'm sure "Billie" and "Chips" engineered the luncheon at a restaurant up in N.H. so that singing waitresses brought in the cake with one candle. We both made a wish and blew. No mention was made of who had the most wind at 82. . . . Bob Redpath called and hoped we could make the Yale-Princeton game and visit them. We will be on our trek to Arizona by then. Bob and Nancy were on their way to Blue Hill, Maine and later planned to see their daughter in Rome. . . . Talked to Bob Wood and Sissy in Decatur, Ill. They had to cancel their Alaskan trip as they sold their home and had to empty it for the new owners. We don't envy them. After 50 years our home is loaded to the gunnels. The Woods celebrated their 49th in Green Valley on 26 Sept.

Bev Thompson has a cousin going to Andover this fall and may give us a call. I sent Bev the latest letter from Mary Wells, Ed's wife. Ed is in a nursing home in Santa Rosa, Ca. Bev visited them out there. . . . Roland Walker had a family reunion at his son's, who works as a geologist at the Lamont Lab at Columbia University and his daughter Helen who lives in Cambridge, Mass. was there also. . . . We tried to call Red Sanborn and Fonty while visiting the new bride and groom in our family in Kittery, Maine, but no luck. Wanted to report that Joe Smith saw a Dusky Seaside Sparrow (very rare) in Florida. Red is the Roger Tory Peterson of 1924. . . . Dick Knight has marked the date on his calendar and we hope the Jack Barsses can join us for lunch at the Inn. Jack writes us often and his letters are gems of subtlety and humor. As an honorary member of '24, we are honored.

Bill Wadhams down in Sarasota was in the East with his granddaughter who wanted to see the home of her great-great-great-grandfather Wadhams who lived in Wadhams, N.Y., population 200. Bill is preservation minded and finally got the commission board to restore an old R.R. station (an historic landmark) which had been abandoned and run down. . . . While in Woodstock, Conn. visiting Bill Hammersley's widow, we stopped to visit the cemetery where Bill and also John McClellan are buried. Leigh plans to move again to Wallingford, Conn. to be near her two sons and their families.

It was quite a shock to read about the death of Ed Munroe in the morning paper and the morning mail brought a letter from Maddie. Maddie and Ed were like family to us and we stopped each year to visit with them on our way to Arizona. On behalf of the class of 1924 Bunny and your secretary send heartfelt condolences to Maddie and family. Their loss is great as is ours.

Ruth Larter Eveleth invited us to her home in Concord, Mass. for a Mini Reunion, Monday 7 October. She's beaming over two trips this summer with her Nashua, N.H. friends. One was to Quebec, the other to the Canadian Rockies. Her first white water rafting trip was a thrill. This fall she's Amtrak-ing to visit Genevra Rumford near Chadd's Ford, Pa. We invite you, dear reader, if you are able to join us, for another Mini Reunion at the Pillar House on Rte. 128 in Newton, Mass. in the spring. Look for the date and time in your spring Bulletin. A warm welcome, luscious food and beautiful surroundings await you. You might even catch a glimpse of PA '24's Class Secretary, George Larsen, owner, and his wife, Bunny. Kay Hart Mitchell is recovering happily from an operation after which she visited "my niece Sue, her house full of millions of friends and children who kept me busy and highly entertained."

Sybil Bottomley Tallman maintains her eye operation was "fine." She visited a charming home in Mattapoisett in July where she looked out her living room windows to see the ocean on three sides. Ruth Kelly Perry and Elwyn hosted your Secy. on two visits to their Chatham home where, I savored Ruth's delectable luncheon outside her quaint kitchen, and looked down at Elwyn's 'vista garden' designed with a rich palette of flower hues. He and Ruth invite 1924 to visit them anytime.

Laura Scudder Williamson writes that the high point of her summer with her daughter and grandchildren, Elleta, Boris, and Lorna Katon, was visiting Newport twice for the Maxi races of the 80' + sailboats. . . . "Our Kialoa came in third in a race of four boats. . . . Many of us 'India' Scudders reunite in three homes at the Scudder Compound at Shelter Island. A highlight this year was my sister Frances' visit along with husband and five of their family. We swam, sailed, ate and sipped with Scudders galore, and had a very, very, happy time."

Jane Allen Kilby drove to Newport with Laura from her charming home in Kingston, R.I. where they were delayed by the fall of a huge branch that just missed the corner of Jane's house. Four men turned the branch into sawdust with a magic truck allowing AA '24s "mini chauffeur" to proceed to meet son, sailor Stuart Williamson of the Kialoa.

Congratulations to 1924 for its fine report on Annual Giving. PA percent of participation, 51%; AA percent of participation, 64%; all classes average participation, 42%. Hearty thanks to callers for the phonathon as well as to generous givers!

We were saddened to hear the news of Ruth Hawley Damon's death in April of this year. She was a graduate of Smith College in 1928 and she lived with her husband, Roger, on Beacon Street in Boston. Unfortunately, we know of no further details. The sympathy of the class is extended to her husband and other members of her family.

Polly Bullard Holden and husband John are resting from his six performances as Vulcan God of Fire in Offenbach's light opera Orpheus in the Underworld and simultaneous weekend birthday reunion honoring John, Polly's brother Sam, and sundry daughters, a son-in-law and a grandson all celebrating birthdays. Trombone, bassoon and two flutes plus piano played by Carters and Bullards delighted 22 Sunday luncheoners with spirited festival music and a Bullard family history and poem topped off a joyous occasion.

In late July Polly was invited by girlhood friend Mary Sinclair '23 of Castle Rock, Colorado, to a beautiful dinner party to celebrate Mary's 80th birthday. Denver's splendid Phipps Center terrace rang for hours with countless tributes including an original song, poems and loving reminiscences woven together by her son Bill. This Vermonter can assure all that afterward the moon lighted guests and family back to homes and ranches in a pink cloud of praise and thanksgiving.

Sadly, I must report the death of three classmates: We lost Del Paine shortly before the Reunion, after a long illness. Del had had a distinguished career with Time, Inc., eventually becoming Publisher of Fortune. Later he was active in land development. Our heartfelt sympathy to his wife Anne and the family.

Thanks to Joe Hague I learned of the death of W. Park Armstrong, Jr. on 2 June 1985. Park went on to Princeton. In WW II he was a Major in Army Intelligence and later became special assistant to the Secretary of State for intelligence. He stayed in that capacity until 1957 when he went into foreign service under John Foster Dulles. He served in Spain and Canada, becoming U. S. Consul General in Toronto. Our condolences to his wife, Catherine and family.

Robert T. Rylee died sometime in 1982 in Galloway, Tenn. Bob published three novels, Deep Dark River, St. George of Weldon and The Ring and the Cross. He graduated from Amherst College in 1929. Unfortunately, we know of no other details. He leaves his wife, Cecille to whom we extend our sympathy.

Word from Cale Layton via Fletch Nyce: "Have retired completely and keep a small apartment in Wilmington and a house on my son's place on Chesapeake Bay for long weekends fishing in the summer and shooting in the fall. Then in winter we have a small apartment in Delray Beach, Fla. That's about it. . . . I still enjoy reading the Class Notes."

Val Fine reports a trip through the Panama Canal to California early this year, 55th reunion at Yale with a goodly number of PA '26ers, and "a golf game exhibiting decadence better suited to the last days of the Roman Empire than to my disposition. Looking forward to our 60th next June."

George Veeder, who lost his wife in 1982 and who has been retired for several years, writes that he is kept busy and happy watching his seven grandchildren grow up. He also enjoys gardening and travel and hopes to attend our reunion in '86.

Dan Oppenheimer is still working hard as a senior partner of D & A Oppenheimer, private bankers, and as trustee of H. Kemper of Galveston and as a director of the Board of Governors of several other enterprises. Hope you can join us next June, Dan.

Jack Steketee's grandson, Andrew Steketee, was graduated from PA this year. On the way home, he, his mother and dad and a classmate fished in the Poconos catching 14" to 18" brown trout. More recently, in Labrador near Goose Bay, the Steketee family caught 536 brook trout 16" to 22".

Howard Huntress is enjoying life visiting his four children and their families who are scattered from Maine to Washington. He finds, however, that it takes longer and longer to do less and less. He does yard work, reluctantly; crossword puzzles, reads and attempts a little writing. Expects to be at our 60th. He sends regards to all his classmates.

Tom Hollilster died on 30 June 1985 in Leonia, N.J., after many bouts with surgery for the past several years. He was graduated from Yale. He served in the Navy during World War II and continued in the Naval Reserve until 1971. He was also past president of the Naval Reserve Officers Association. Tom was a bank examiner for the State of New Jersey before his retirement in 1971. He is survived by his wife, Frances, who writes, "We would have been married 37 years in October. He was very interested in people, pets, gardening and travel, which he did throughout the U.S." Our deep sympathy to Mrs. Hollister. Her loss will be felt by all of us who knew Tom, a fine gentleman in the truest sense of the word.

We also received word of the passing of "Min" Seiberling on 26 June 1985, from his daughter, Martha Newman. Our deep sympathy to Mrs. Newman and other members of the Seiberling family. We have lost another classmate as well: Treadwell A. Robertson, Jr. passed away on 14 December 1982 according to the Alumni Office of the University of Iowa. He graduated from there in 1935, and was listed as Dr. Robertson of Iowa City, Iowa. Unfortunately there is no further information.

Contrary to previous reports, we cannot all be accommodated at the Andover Inn next June, so if you wish to stay there, make your reservation soon.

From Elizabeth Butler Allen we hear that she is active in a variety of projects in her church and in her community. She has four children and eight grandchildren and still found time to teach for many years in elementary school, having earned a Masters in Education degree at Boston University.

Alice Abrahamson Gurney writes: "Reading The Beans of Egypt, Maine last winter brought back our Miss Bean's face and other faculty faces looking at us in Chapel in 1926. I wish they were still with us as we mourn the passing of Samantha Smith and renew our efforts to promote the type of actions that she would have chosen in international relations. And the best news of ourselves is that our three children, their spouses, and two grandchildren all have this view too."

Good news for all of us in the class of '26 is that our loyal classmate, Fonty Flagg Sanborn has, after much arm twisting on my part, agreed to take on the chore of chairing the 60th Reunion. A million thanks to you, Fonty. Now it's up to the rest of us to cooperate with all our might!

If so, hope to attend 60th at Andover. Visited daughter Gretchen, Wilmington, Del. She beat my pants at golf — is a regular 85 shooter. Both her kids are well. Visited son Derek in Metamora, Mich. Each summer in Leland we gather our four children, spouses, and 8 grandchildren. I believe we run a sports hotel with tennis, golf, swimming, sailing, wind surfing — interspersed with several naps! All are well."

Brief note from Bill Wood tells us: "Recently joined Stryker, Tams & Dill at their newly opened Princeton office as 'Counsel.' So I continue to practice law. Family are all still sound of mind and limb."

Bob Crowell is writing a history of Newfane, VT, where he now lives. A lovely picturesque New England village, it was the center of farming, railroads, land development and strong religion. The research comes from historical records but, says Bob, "The most interesting and eye-opening material comes from the memories of a 103-year-old lady."

We hear from Clarke Smith as follows: "The retirement process is proceeding with only moderate success; but as long as I stay healthy, I cannot complain."

Horatio G. Vester, who spent some time with our class at Andover in the mid-1920s but was not with us at graduation, was in recent years designated in the Andover Alumni records as "lost," the last known prior address being in London, England. In July of this year while your Secretary was attending the annual meeting of the American Bar Association, his son, also Horatio Vester, who resides in London, furnished the information that his father is presently residing at the American Colony Hotel, East Jerusalem, Israel, the address being in the Arabic section of Jerusalem.

Les Smith reports "Still practicing gynecology in Hartford with special interest in infertility. Arlene, my bride of eight years, acting as nurse-secretary. Avocation: hunt-

News from Bennett Fisher: "In October we cruised the coast of Turkey on the Greek ship Argonaut with shore trips to the classical ruins."

Charlie Cahn went to a more distant and colder part of the world — "We spent September in Siberia, the Gobi Desert and the interior of China at Datong & Xian. We are among the few damned fools who paid to go to Siberia."

Note from Peggy, Phil Dater's widow: "An insurance man he was, getting his CLU at age 65; a concerned citizen, too, but an apple grower he was not . . . He raised Jersey cattle and was once described as 'one of the best cow men in western Massachusetts.'"

Regretfully, we report the deaths of two classmates. Carroll G. Quinn died on 14 June 1985 after a lengthy illness. His family address is Saratoga 150 - Casa No. 1, Lomas Hipodromo, Mexico 10, D.F. Dr. C. Brook Worth passed away on 18 December 1984. No further details are available. . . . and I quote: "Another milestone has been passed: the Class of '28 is the first class to give, over the years, in excess of $500,000 to the Alumni Fund." (Andover Bulletin Summer, 1985, page 3.) This does not, of course, include magnificent largess to numerous "special" campaigns; and it seems worthy of '28 chauvinist notation that a sizable portion of this significant sum was amassed when Life Savers and Wrigley's Spearmint sold for a nickel and Ty Cobb welcomed a 5-figure stipend. This commendable state of affairs is attributable to a variety of factors, including establishment of the 1928 Memorial Endowment Fund, the bird-dogged-ed extractionary efforts of Class Agt. Al Rowland, and the loyal generosity (generous loyalty) of a rare group of Philipians. All clustered under this distinguished umbrella are entitled to take a low bow. In a brief return to Al Rowland, he was encountered in Andover-in-June, where he confirmed earlier telephonic advices re. dabbling in the fortunes of a coterie of no-doubt, Derby-bound Bangtails, monikered "Top Issue," "Available Power" and "Hawaiian Tea." Should the Rowland Equine Jackpot unlimber itself at Churchill Downs through the efforts of any of these regal beasts, we might (?) anticipate massive swelling of '28 Benevolence (cf. supra). Al, Bob Walker, and Rog Murray are now serving on the recently formed Andover Development Board (described in the Summer Bulletin), and Bob, on the heels of his Addison Gallery Campaign triumph, is assisting Al as an Alum-Fund co-agent. . . . Also Andover-seen, Miles Pendleton reported enjoyable British pilgrimage with Kay, continues "retirement" devoirs from Serenity Lane home office. . . . From distant Hendersonville, but still 'neath (No.) Carolina Blue Celestial Parasol, Bud Bacon is entitled to sport (but probably doesn't) bumper sticker "If God is not a Tar Heel Why is the Sky Carolina Blue?" Rumors that this questionable item was composed by N.C.'s Senior Senator Helms remain unconfirmed. Bud says "Nothing new to report," beyond '73 retirement from Lawrenceville faculty, honorary membership in the Lawrentian Class of '49, children and grands doing well, best wishes to the "remaining leaves on the tree."

From even more distant Puerto Rico Hu Barton writes of continuing enjoyment of "idyllic physical surroundings," economic development consulting work "mostly outside the islands in recent years, but now mostly at home." As an added, gracious Philipian Phillip, Hu concludes, "Call us at 809-767-7694. Classmates are offered special bargains on rum drinks and tourist information." . . . a more generous advisory cannot be imagined. . . . Dick Carroll, back in New Haven, says he and Esther are "indeed happy and apparently in good health" after 2-month biennial visit to daughter Nana and family in Australia. . . . In similarly roseate, if brief message from Durango, Colo., Paul Richards avers that "Time Marches On and we get older by the year and poorer by the week: It is a great life, and I hope to see 2000 A.D. come in." If we and Willard Scott hang in there, Paul, maybe we can get Old Boy recognition on the Today Show. . . . From the Dept. of Locational Switchery: 1) Dave Dudley and Arvilla from Columbus, MS, to New Orleans Westbank (4338 Maple Leaf Dr., New Orleans, LA 70114), an address conducive to wonderment on the part of a benighted Dixieland buff if this is where "Maple Leaf Rag" got its start, which, in turn recalled Bachman Carl Pfatteicher's Philipian exhortation of those who "wallow in the mire of jazz," and his amiable toleration of some of us "Riveters" wallowers. 2) Bill Guyer from N.Y.C. to Altadena, CA 91011 (c/o Mary Guyer Berg, 1401 Crest Drive). On eve of Westward Hoery, Bill reported phone call from Dan Nugent to wish him a happy life in the Golden (?) West. . . . For the benefit of the few classmates not amid the Lemming-Like Parade to New Haven in Sept., 1928, there follows a soupcon of unabashed filchery from a recent Tom Mendenhall column in the Yale Alumni Magazine: "Roger Vaughan and Fred Wolff continue in a Montclair old men's club (Wolff is now fighting off three new jobs). In a similar organization on the Vineyard, Henry Hotchkiss and Tom Mendenhall meet regularly twice a month. We are among the younger members and the waiting list bulges with the newly retired." Dr. M. being a Gentlemen, a Scholar, and a man of Profound Compassion and Understanding, it is hoped, and expected, that he will not bring suit for this brief raid on his secretarial larder.

Curt Heath reports three months of summer residence on Nantucket, and refers nostalgically to reunion encounters with PA and Princeton classmates Jim Reed and Frank Schroeder. (The tragic auto accident that claimed the lives of Jim and Judy Reed early in 1984 was mentioned in previous '28 Notes). . . . Attendees at those memorable reunions will surely recall the charming and helpful participation of Deborah, daughter of the late, pixieish Mancel Clark and wife Ellen, whom he characteristically dubbed "Ellie-bugs, the Lily Maid of Askalot." In appearances with them and in 1978 with step-mother Natalie, Debbie was truly an unofficial '28 mascot. We were particularly glad to see her again in a springtime visit on the occasion of her being in our area for her 20th reunion at Chatham Hall, whither she drove from her Upper N.Y. domicile, not surprisingly named "Stony-broke Farm" by her dear, departed Dad. As might be expected, the reminiscences were fond and mirthful.

As always, it is distressing to end this column with a recording of further diminution of the '28 ranks. From the alumni Office have come reports of the deaths of Durkes Clark in December, 1982, and of Ed Coyle and Charles Shea in May 1985. And a touching note from his widow, Roberta, told of Al Bond's death on 7 June, after being "quite ill for many months." The deep sympathy of what Bud Bacon so aptly termed "the remaining leaves on the tree" goes to those nearest and dearest to these classmates.

Abbot '28, thank you for the answers to my postals. Hope more arrive.

Emily Sloper Shailer and husband Russ "keep busy mowing and trimming as evening dew from the Connecticut River keeps the greens growing rapidly." Those of us in drier areas would like to share that evening dew.

Sue Ripley Ward claims "all goes well with Ted and me, but I gave up music several years ago. I don't even have an instrument or music to play. I have never enjoyed hearing music so much as since I quit playing. My writing has kept me very absorbed and enjoying what I do more than I ever enjoyed playing music."

From Mary Piper Sears: "I'm still in the same house — play golf in the summer and bowl in the winter. My flower gardens are doing well but I'm having a running battle with a woodchuck in my vegetable garden and he seems to be winning. Both children and my four grandchildren live in the next town which makes it great for me. I still think about Gee-Gee — she had more than her share of trouble. Have a great summer."

Winnie Dudley Burnham says, "The status quo except for two great-grandchildren. However did that happen?"

The most exciting news was from Louise Hyde Reilly: "Last summer ('84) I attended the D-Day 40-anniversary ceremonies with the 32nd General Hospital. We landed at Omaha Beach 40 years ago. Went to England, France, Belgium, Germany, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands on the trip. This spring went on Pacific Princess to the Mexican Dubien. Use my real estate money for trips." She has a good system.

Betty Jackson Kennedy is by now legally blind. Her husband, Alan, died of a heart attack in 1984. She is in an apartment which she manages quite well and enjoys good friends. Bunny Bliss Billings' husband died on 30 January — "not good news but all I have." Betty Ryan Hill writes, "Sad to report that my husband of 51 years died suddenly on 8 June 1985. He left me and three fine children and nine grandchildren and a host of friends. I am staying on in our big house until next spring at least. The children all live nearby so I am not entirely alone, but very lonesome in the evenings." The class extends its sympathy to you both on your loss.

I am recovered from the upsets of last year and enjoying my retirement home apartment and the other old Hanover friends who live here at the Greens. It is so much better than living alone. Before I retired from the health field I helped in building and setting up the health programs for what is now the Claremont, New Hampshire Vocational-Technical College. When I first visited Claremont, the Director, his secretary and I met in a room in an old farmhouse. Equipment then consisted of two desks, three chairs, typewriter and stationery. Since then two sections of the school have been built and the school has since been accredited by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, Inc. Thus it was a happy surprise to have the college recently designate me as "Professor Emeritus."

During May a card arrived from Fred Brattie: "It is with a heavy heart that I must tell you Betty Hawley Beattie passed away almost a year ago — 22 May 1984. It was totally unexpected. We would have been married 50 years last September." I have sent the condolences of the Class.

Time truly flies. Do keep in touch. It is good to hear from you. Best wishes to one and all. Laddie

Most of our class news was reported in your previous Andover Bulletin, but here are a few more items. Jack McLanahan, our most faithful reporter and his wife, Connie, have moved to 3689 Berea Road, Richmond, KY 40475, where he continues his fine work in Appalachia. His sons, PA '59 and '65, are a surgeon and physician respectively, "following in their father's footsteps in public service." "Heinie" Leonard is now in Hawaii planning a fabulous "heavenly Hawaiian hideaway," as he puts it, on the Kona Coast. His heart's still in Vienna where he now owns an apartment in the Ring and Statsoper. He has a son in Berlin and one back here in Palm Springs. It's one world indeed, Heinie!

With sorrow we report the loss of Johnny Broaca who pitched for the New York Yankees in the days of Ruth, Gehrig and DiMaggio; Art Jackson who headed the English Department at Hill School and was head track coach there; and Don Smith who had been living in Scottsdale, Arizona. The class extends its sympathy to the families of these deceased Classmates.

Without your help there's little news to report. Keep those cards and letters coming.

Charlie Strauss reports the arrival of the second granddaughter July '84 in Brunswick, Maine.

Tom Lawrence says he has become a non-retiring retiree. His management consulting business which Tom started in 1950 is being well run by his younger associates. However, Tom still takes part in a number of seminars, sales meetings and speaking engagements. To make some of us envious, Tom adds that his golf game has held up fairly well and that he has been able to shoot his age at least once in each of the last three years.

It was great to see the large number of Andover classmates at the 50th Reunion of the Yale Class of 1935 in New Haven. Inky Brightwell was chairman. Keep in mind that PA '31 celebrates its 55th at Andover in June 1986.

Summer is just about over, unfortunately. Hope that you have had some good times, visits and travels so that we will have news from more of you for our next Bulletin.

Several have written about trips taken more or less recently. Marcia Rudd Keil had a trip to Ireland and I'll quote her directly since we all remember her unique style. "I met more people than I ever met before who could tell funny stories. I laughed my way from Dublin to Cork. I didn't see a leprechaun as only the Irish can see them, but I did sit on the end of the rainbow. There are many rainbows as it rains and shines at the same time."

Faith Chipman Parker had a wonderful reunion with Carol Grosvenor Myers in Washington, D.C. Their visit to the new National Geographic Society Building was very special. As daughter, sister and niece of Society presidents, Carol gave an insider's view of both old and new buildings. Faith found her as enthusiastic and entertaining as ever. Faith also had a lovely two-day visit with Lizette Micoleau Tillinghast and her husband. They divided the time between Liz's summer home at Little Compton, R. I. and their charming city house near Brown University in Providence. Liz is painting when she has time between travels. Faith stays on the move and at the last report was about to leave for a family reunion in Colorado and then up to Seattle for a month with their progeny.

Lizette also wrote about Faith's visit and how she enjoyed it. Lizette and Charles were about to leave for Europe taking one of their granddaughters with them. In September '84 they went to China with a Brown University group and were delighted to be able to go since they missed other opportunities. As a real bonus they are going again a year later visiting places that were missed on the previous trip.

Nanine Wheeler Allender has a new address: 404 Kelly St., Sun Prairie, WI 53590. Ruth Cann Baker and her husband are also making a move. She writes that her arthritis does not improve so she feels that they will soon need help. They will move close to one daughter and closer to another daughter. Her new address is: Friendship Village of South Hills, 1290 Boyce Road, Apt. C107, Upper St. Claire, PA 15241.

We are happy to learn that Miriam Bass is better after a year of poor health. Does anyone have an address for Eleanor Foreman Barber? My card was returned. We hate to lose touch with anyone.

We are saddened to hear that Cora Budgett Bourgeois lost her husband suddenly on June 8th. They were planning a trip to the South Pacific Islands. She feels fortunate that her son and his family and three grandchildren live across the road. She hopes to get back to Andover in 1986. The class sends our deep sympathy, Cora.

The class also extends sympathy to the family of Harriett Gregory Asmussen who died in the spring of 1985. Her daughter wrote the Alumni Office, "Thank you for keeping my mother on your mailing list all these years. Your publications meant a great deal to her."

Mea culpa, mea culpa for the second time. I'd like to blame it on the calendar — always mixing up the dates — but this time the lack of news is the result of my failure to get the deadline date on the calendar at all, so the reminder cards never went out.

I do have news from Louise Hollis Black, forwarded from the Alumni Office. She visited Andover in '84 — in May — when Kay Dutton Leedy '30 drove her up from Cambridge and together they toured the campus. Louise found the Addison Gallery especially attractive. In October that year she took a cruise around South America, with side trips.

July and August this year made up my Cambodian summer — through tutoring, not traveling. The resettlement committee in Newport, N.H. now has three families, with a total of 23 people, ranging from 64 years old to 8 months. We have had group tutoring sessions for three hours two mornings a week, and then individual tutoring another morning. In between, since none of them can drive, we have made many trips to various government offices, to the beaches and to the grocery stores. Although time- and gas-consuming, it has been a wonderful summer — if only for the fact that we have been able to do something to ease the burden of homelessness for these lovely people.

While Dorothy Rockwell Clark was up here for her annual return to the scenes of her youth in the New London area, we almost managed a meeting with Helen Allen Anderson, but not quite. We did get to the China show in Boston, which I had seen last winter in Atlanta. The highlight of this trip was that I discovered that the artist who does double-sided embroidery was born and still lives in the city where I grew up.

My next deadline is 9 January 1986, and I hope you all will remember that you don't have to wait for a card from me before you write — just send me a note whenever anything happens, and I'll save it until it's time to write again.

Don't be surprised if our next column begins "Old Mother Hubbard. . . ." We do share her feelings as we open our file this morning for class notes material. Or maybe we will just try a whole new approach. Instead of news of classmates, a series of timely and useful articles, such as "The Care and Feeding of Crab Grass"; or "The Grilled Cheese Sandwich in the Northeast

U.S.: A Survey." Any ideas? Let us have your thoughts on the subject. And while you are at it, also let us know what is going on with you.

In the meantime we solemnly doff our green eyeshade — indeed, stand at attention and hold it over our heart — to two stalwarts who heeded our cry for news. (Were they the only two who read it?) A most welcome, and timely, letter from Bill Boyd. Several years ago he wrote to tell us of his retirement as Vice President of Pittsburgh National Bank to found his own firm, William Boyd, Jr. & Co. After five and one-half years, Bill reports, his business continues to grow steadily. Situated at One Oliver Plaza, Pittsburgh, the firm deals with the management and funding of non-profit organizations including universities, hospitals, etc. (Maybe you could do something for the Pittsburgh Pirates, Bill?) "Tremendously interesting," Bill says, but adds a bit ruefully, "I find myself working a little harder than I had anticipated." It's great to hear again, Bill. We look forward to more, maybe at PA in '88?

And a note from Paul Offill down on the plantation in South Carolina says that life down there is still agreeing with them. He did lay aside his mint julep, broad-brimmed straw hat and shoestring tie for trips to Israel and Italy this spring with Elinor, and expects to visit England and Scotland this fall. Paul is still doing consulting work for Young Life, also.

Come to think of it, it's about time for us to bring our own record up to date. We joined the ranks of the retired early in the spring. The days are full — either with the projects we have long been wanting to work on but were unable to find time for; or with projects which, to our dismay, we can no longer avoid in the name of business. Some plans for travel in about a year. In the meantime have signed up at a nearby college for some American history which we should have taken from, er, "Archie" Freeman. Also, we are on the trail of some volunteer work which could prove very rewarding. Of that, more anon. In general, the McWilliams household, including menagerie, continues to thrive.

We regret once more to close with news of the loss two distinguished classmates. Dr. Herbert Scoville, Jr. at Georgetown University Hospital, on 30 July 1985, and Frederick P. Smith, in Burlington, Vt. on 29 June, 1985. Both had distinguished careers and have been written up at the beginning of the Notes. Herb is survived by his wife, Ann, who lives at 6400 Georgetown Pike, McLean, VA 22101; four children and six grandchildren. And Fred is survived by his wife, Marjorie, 195 So. Willard St., Burlington, Vt.; their five children and nine grandchildren. We extend the sympathy of the Class of 1933 to them.

My pleas for more news went unanswered. Now my threats will take shape in the form of double post cards, so please, when you receive one, kindly respond with news of yourselves.

Lois Chapman Tarby will be chairing our next reunion in 1988. Might you have any comments on this, Lois?

Our only news here is that the cruise on the Mediterranean with an extended stay in Athens was changed at the time of the problems there in July. Instead we are going to Lisbon for a week departing 19 August. We will then fly to London for two weeks. It sounds relaxing and a time for doing and seeing interesting things.

Bill Torrey writes about his namesake's retirement. Like me, he finds that retirement is only another term for increased work load. Eventually the Torrey family will live in Maine, but not right away. Bill says he saw Joe McMahon recently. Joe is far from being retired, but it worries me that he's already so active. What will happen if he should retire?

Soapy Chamberlin and Ann write from the Arctic Circle on the Summer Solstice. They are fulfilling their childhood fantasy of wanting to be mailmen, sailing on a Norwegian mail boat that averages ten stops a day. Too, too cool.

Monty Munroe never stops traveling. In addition to his recent report, we have reliable information that he's also been seen in Corfu, Devon, Cornwall, seen with pirates in Penzance and with a Bourbon in Versailles and Fontainebleau. Monty says he's sick of the whole business (ad nauseum) but somehow just can't stop.

Bill Brown and I engaged in a six-mile rowing contest in August, along with fifteen other nuts, including Bill Trafton, Ginnie Trafton, and my wife, Betsy. Six miles of rowing offers a considerable opportunity for reflection, mostly on the theme of Why am I Doing This? But everyone had fun afterward. Bill would surely have won the event if he hadn't been a recent victim of the president's operation (in June) and a strained back suffered only the day before in a sailing race. We are looking forward to a re-match at the Head of the Charles Regatta on 20 October.

The letters your Secretary has received from those who attended our 50th Reunion have been ecstatic. I am going to quote from a few.

Len Vines writes, "My Andover experience has been important to me all my life. I look back upon it many times. The 50th brought it up to date and I enjoyed every minute of it." Lach Reed has dropped me this note: "Couldn't have been a better weekend. That kind of turnout and financial result just doesn't happen. It does indeed take a mite of management. My only regret about the weekend is that there never seemed to be enough time to speak to every one the way one wanted to. All of a sudden it was over. But the memories do linger on." Don Timbie penned a nice, long letter from which I shall quote in part. "The Committee did an absolutely amazing job in arranging for our 50th. A number of people said that if they realized the reunions were such fun, they would have attended them before. Our 50th was a re-affirmation of all the ideals which we were encouraged to hold while we studied and played under the guidance of a wonderful faculty that reflected the character and personality of Al Stearns."

Don Henry writes briefly, "Congratulations on a most pleasant Andover Reunion. It was well planned and everyone enjoyed it thoroughly." Pete Soutter wrote as follows before he went to England in July. "Overdue but heartfelt thanks for providing such a splendid reunion! You can't imagine how exciting it is to be a part of the largest gift ever given to Andover by a Reunion Class. It was also great fun to see so many great guys come back, most of whom must feel, as I do, that Andover is and was a great place."

Remember the fine song "Spring Will Come Again" which Barney Hurlbutt wrote for our Reunion? Barney dropped me this note. "Last night was a high point I shall never forget. You cannot imagine how I felt as more and more voices began to sing the words of our new Reunion song. It was a moment of magic during which we became more than classmates — a moment which will sustain me through the hot summer days and cold winter nights of Kansas."

Truly, Classmates, it was a wonderful Reunion. I thank you and my steering committee for making it so outstanding. We did miss our prominent class officers, namely, Newt Burdick, who was '35 President for so many years, and Bob Sears, who was our perennial vice-president.

All saw Joe Donnelly at the Reunion. However, he has recently sent in this little up-date on himself. "Retired from Federal Government after 35 years service. Am now Public Defender at Wrentham, Mass. District Court and enjoying it very much."

Dick Lederer, the official historian of Scarsdale, N.Y., was honored April 21 as the Scarsdale Chamber of Commerce's citizen of the year at its Annual Chamber dinner dance at the New Rochelle Beach and Tennis Club. It was Lederer's dedication to an unprecedented degree to this unpaid job which Geno Altieri, a member of the Chamber's selection committee, cited as a principal reason for choosing Lederer to receive this award. Congratulations, Dick, and we thank you for what you do for our class.

Now, classmates, I need material for our next column. The 58 of us who were back for our 50th did a lot of catching up, but perhaps more could be done. I would like to hear from you, but also I would appreciate up-dates and life histories from those who could not attend the 50th. Please, may I hear from you?

Skip Murphy Garrison has said it for all of us: "Elaine Eaton Perine should be lauded and applauded for her years as Class Secretary and the newsy report on the Reunion." Thank you, Elaine for a job so well done!

Skip, a year-round Cape Codder, loves living by her pond. Children are close by; husband Herb is happy in his retirement.

"We're so lucky." Other contented Cape Codders are Mickey Barlow Hinshaw with "eight grandchildren to brag about" and Claire Oppenheim Marum, who has a new grandson (mother: Deborah Marum Pressman '69). The Marums had a marvelous April in Italy touring all the little towns they hadn't known before. Stop by, if you're in Brewster, Claire bids us.

Traveller (UK and Maine this summer) Doss Anderson Clark also has a new grandson, Anderson Taylor Clark, born 8-4-85. Other travellers: Anne Humphreys Hammond, now living in Carmel, Calif. to be near her "westerner" children, is going to southern France via the polar route — non-stop L.A. to Paris. C'est formidable, n'est-ce pas? Helen McDonald, who sends good wishes to us all, is off to Scandinavia for the first time. Marjory Brodie Sloan went sunning in Mexico last winter. Her son was married the weekend of reunion or she would have been with us in Andover. Katie Burns Elmer and husband Bill plan a "catch-up" trip to Europe this fall now that son Ned is launched on a career in orthopedic surgery and the med school bills are paid at last.

Shirley Powers Haseltine and Ellen Rivinius Hill write of pleasures closer to home: visits from grandchildren, excursions, the joys of a New England summer.

Greetings to all from Virginia Hollands Preu. She and husband Fred divide their time between Marco Island, Fla., which they love, and the "old homestead" in Sag Harbor, NY with their two grown kids nearby.

A touch of nostalgia in Anne Hurlburt Bradley's note: "I missed not being able to travel between Abbot halls, but we were kept so busy [at Reunion] that the pain lessened." Anne hopes to be doing commercials and some theater work this fall.

Mini-reunions: Anne Bradley, Skip Garrison and Mickey Hinshaw at Anne Place Henderson's ('34) in Chatham: "a happy, happy meeting." Annie Cutler and Joel Brecheen at Katie and Bill Elmer's in N.H.: "tons-full-of-fun." Annie and Joel at my house in Annapolis: both of the above.

We have a gracious and saddening note from Shirley Smith King's husband, Harold, saying that Shirley has Alzheimer's disease. Shirley is at home in Wayzata, MN; Harold is Senior Minister Emeritus of the Community Church (UCC). They have two daughters, a son, and three grandchildren. They would be "most happy to welcome any Abbot alumnae who happens to be in [the area]."

On 2 May 1983 we lost Doris More Boelker. Our heartfelt sympathies go to her husband, George, of 786 Piney Crest Rd., Millsboro, DE 19966.

Finally, my thanks to all of you, some twenty, who responded to my plea for news; it was wonderfully heartening for a new secretary. Now if I may just hear from the rest of you. . .

Your notes were so often full of 50th Reunion — the delights of being there, the regrets of not. All of you who were not were greatly missed.

We are going to have a great 50th Reunion next June. Here are reasons why: Classmates make a reunion successful. Classmates eager to make the reunion great make it the greatest. As of last June 37 of you said you planned to return and 25, while your plans were uncertain, would certainly try. The 37 are: Bishop, Boas, Bolton, Coursen, Chafee, Chapin (Mel), Confer, Field, Finch, Groblewski, Hammond, Hart, Heard, Hewitt, Kirkpatrick, Knapp, McLaughry, MacCracken, MacIntyre, Masters, Mendel (Howard), Merrick, Mullen, Nourse, Oler, Reed, Rubin, Sears, Sharretts, Simonds, Smith, Stewart, Trafton, Wilson, Wood, Wyman; and the 25 are: Agoos, Banash, Barton, Blanchard, Brightwell, Burr, Chapin (Bart), Childs, Cory, Day, DeWolfe, Dolbeare, Hawkes, Hayes, Jones, Jordan, Lange, Redman, Roome, Schulte, Stiles, Taradash, Van Horne, Watson, Wiley. 36 of you (not necessarily additional names) have volunteered to form a regional reunion committee. Yes, all, east and west of the Hudson, are represented. This reunion committee by states is: California, Lou Wiley; Connecticut, Dex Chafee, Jim Grant, Bill Watson; Colorado, Bob Wilson; District of Columbia, Denny Coursen, Wes Oler; Florida, Bob Hector, Bill MacIntyre, Chet Nourse; Illinois; Ted Ballard, Dick Merrick, Jack Snyder, Hank Wood; Maine, Bill Trafton; Massachusetts, George Burr, Linc Clark, Hugh Harwood, Dave Rubin, Dick Wyman; Missouri, Dick Barton; New Hampshire, Julian Agoos, John Cone; New York, Ed Masback, Dave Schulte, David Wilde; North Carolina, Burns Borough; Ohio, Ned Brightwell; Oregon, Cleve Cory; Pennsylvania, Jack Swartz; Texas, Ed Ford, John Sears; Utah, Monty Fitzpatrick; Vermont, Spike Knapp, Bill Shallow; Washington, Sam Binnian.

A "Big Hitters" steering committee will be on the Hill to welcome you, made up of Reed, Bishop, Bolton, Chapin, Kalat, Stott, Hart, Heard.

Paul Kalat, our Attendance Chairman, never one to pull a verbal punch puts it this way, "You lucky '36ers — you are both fortunate and lucky to be able to read this. Lucky because next year will be your 50th Andover Reunion. Fortunate, since you are in a position to come back to the Hill for three glorious, nostalgic days — Friday, Saturday and Sunday, 13-15 June 1986. Mark that down right now on your calendars. Make the commitment now. Your committee, school and especially old Classmates want to see you to share life experiences, health, spouse, children, and anything else the passing years have brought . . . no matter what . . . just come. This should be a great day for our class. We are the best, let's prove it. The class of '35 had a 44% attendance award, let's win it with 50%, at least, in '86. Your various committees are guaranteeing not only a super program but great weather, and fun is in store for all of you. See you there!"

Careful readers uncover hidden nuggets about the wondrous class of '36 in unexpected places. While reading an article entitled, "Computerland's Suddenly Poorer Boss" in the 15 April issue of Fortune at the Westerly, RI public library one rainy July afternoon, I discovered that father and son White Knights are none other than P. Loring Reed, Jr. and Philip L. Reed III '62. For complete financial details on the defrocking of the "Boss" see Fortune. I gather while they were arguing about micro chips, they were dealing in megabucks. Don't tread on our graduates.

Danny Coursen, after winning his Yale Reunion golf tournament, fell out of the upper bunk of a double decker dormitory bed and broke his leg. While his leg was shattered, his sense of humor is very much intact and he advises all our age to stay out of bunk beds. Fortunately, Denny's personal physician, Wes Oler, was nearby — Denny will never leave home without him. Here's to Denny's continued and complete recovery.

On the sad side are deaths to report. Alan Brown of Victorville, Calif. Allan was a retired Lieut. Col. in the Air Force and from Continental Telephone in 1981. His widow, Betty, resides at 4156 Oakwood Ct., Lompoc, CA 93436. John A. Ingersoll, Jr. of 85 Hunter Drive, West Hartford, CT 06107 where his widow, Polly, may be addressed. The source of these two notices is returned reunion questionnaires. On 12 July Henry McCormick Gross, Jr. died in London, England. He is survived by his wife Catherine of 100 Eaton Square, London SW1W 9AQ. Hank had moved there in the early 70's when he retired. He was my roommate senior year on the top floor of Bancroft. Only George Seabury and myself remain from that group. Hank left Yale after sophomore year and graduated from the University of North Carolina. He was a Commander USNR in WW II and then lived in Remsenberg, N.Y. while working in New York City. I ran into him once just before the war at Larue but never again. Hank was listed as planning to attend our 45th reunion, but did not appear. The class offers its sympathy to the widows and families of these deceased members of our class.

Remember, June 13-15. Put it on your calendars now and enjoy spring's sweetness on the Hill.

Sam Biern was one of the three Andover participants at the Princeton Class of 1941 Reunion on Hilton Head last March. Sam has a busy solo practice of internal medicine in Huntington, West Virginia, "which I love and am not about to quit." It was refreshing to hear a medico speak of his job with so much enthusiasm when so many of his contemporaries, disillusioned with today's trends in medicine, are taking early retirement. The Bierns try to get away to their condo at Sea Pines Plantation on Hilton Head when possible (not often enough!).

We were sorry to hear from Jack Dryden that he lost his dear wife, Helen, 17 days before Christmas in 1982; he writes "old friends are the best — bless us all of '37, non sibi." Amen!

And this note from Tom Church: "Still live in Bethlehem and divide time between family (6 children and 8 grandchildren) and Bach Choir of Bethlehem (president and business manager). Summer at Pocono Lake Preserve with all family vacationing here extensively except archaeologist son in Peru. Son Tom and son-in-law Mark Moore are PA grads and daughter Martha, Abbot."

Our entrepreneurial prize goes to Ty Dynes who writes: "I bought a small ranch at an auction. It's near Salida, Colo. and on the Arkansas River. I irrigate pasture for other people's cattle. I levy a small toll for boats landing on my side or for fishing — half price for PA Alumni. Free beer for 1937!"

Bill Bowne has taken the time to write a long letter for which I am most grateful. Unfortunately space will permit only the high points laced with some sound advice: "I have been Grand Historian of Grand Council of Cryptic Masons of N.Y. for three years now and am being reappointed for 1985-86. Don't ever retire! You will have more to do (without pay) than while you were working. The only good thing is it will keep you from withering away to the grave in a matter of months."

For those of you who have been waiting with bated breath for the final episode of the drama on the shores of the Merrimack (see summer edition), here it is: The proposed Hazardous Waste Treatment Plant to be sited very close to the Merrimack River "went down the River and sank out of sight" according to our man on the scene, Seth Heywood, "So all Bud and Michelob lovers can rest easy."

Briefs from our professorial ranks: Julius Rockwell: "We were able to get into and man Alaska's largest cave last summer. I am teaching Environmental Ethics at Alaska Pacific University this spring, later will be teaching Elderhostle." Wally Chessman: "Can't begin to keep up with Tom Lenagh. Retired from regular teaching at Denison in 1981-82, following completion of sesquicentennial history of the college. Eleanor and I love to go to Rome in the winter for two or three months; back here in Granville we have kept busy studying Italian as well as doing much reading and some writing. This fall, I'll be teaching a history course (America 1877-1917) at the University of South Carolina in Columbia."

Joe Coughlin: "I retired one year ago from a pastorate in Chichester, N.H. and now live in Barnstead, N.H. I teach extension courses for Gordon-Connell Theological Seminary in English and Spanish in Boston. I also teach Bible and Greek learned first from Zeus Benner '34! I am also in the process of starting a new interdenominational youth leadership education service. Living happily on Social Security!"

Bert Davis: "I've just begun a semi-retirement from Florida State University's English Department, so will be teaching here after only in the spring semesters. I'm continuing as a field editor for studies of 18th Century figures in Twayne's English Authors Series, and am in the midst of writing a biography of Thomas Percy, a member of the Johnson circle. Family count: three children and five grandchildren. Ruth and I are looking forward to attending the fiftieth reunion."

In the words of ex-editor Tom Regan: "The Class Notes are the most important part of the Andover Bulletin!" You who took the time to write were magnificent. Bless you!

Millie Collens Laurens has moved from Texas to Coushatta, Louisiana in the northwest part of the state. She is living with her daughter Kay Bell, her husband, Dr. Grey Bell, and their two sons Jack, 12, and Stevie, 9. She spends her time helping her daughter manage the household while crocheting up a storm with a little knitting thrown in. From time to time she hops on a plane for Vermont to visit her son Tuck and his wife Judy, or to Waco, Texas to see daughter Minnie and her family (1 granddaughter Amy, 8); or to Colorado to visit daughter Jane and her Will.

Ruthie Hill Haberland's husband, Roy, retired last August and they moved to Port Saint Lucie, Florida. They love the life of leisure and have met some great people. Their fourth grandchild, a girl, is due in October in Dallas, offspring of son Dana and his wife, Valerie. Ruthie and Roy traveled North this summer to visit their other two sons and stopped off in Maine, Gloucester, Mass.; Cape Cod and New Jersey. After visiting the Northeast, they left for a trip to Scandinavia — Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Ruthie would love to see and hear from Abbot Classmates in the Port Saint Lucie and Palm Beach area.

For the past five years the School has been recommending that Class Fund Agents delegate some of their workload to assistants. Barbara Randolph Bowman has agreed to help me, so some of you may be receiving notes from Bar instead of me next time around. Bar and her husband, Gus, have retired and are now living in Seabrook, Texas, where they are very comfortable with a pool and a lovely breeze. Bar has taken up bridge as a new hobby. This past summer she went to Chicago to attend a reunion at Oak Park High, a school she attended before coming to Abbot. Her second son, Roy, and his family have recently moved from Houston to Austin, Texas.

Last summer I went to Spain again, this time to the Costa del Sol, Seville, Cordoba and Granada. I also visited Gibraltar and Morocco. After the trip was over, I was busy with visitors from Germany and New Orleans.

Keep the news coming!

First a couple of brief notes that arrived in the spring, were too late to get in the summer edition. George Partridge retired (from Sears, Roebuck) and enjoying a life of leisure and travel. He was expecting a visit from Willets. The Abelsons had been on a trip to Portugal, Spain and Morocco, managing "to return with our pocketbooks and wallets." (Couscous and cobras, Nat?) Two notes from Johnny Marsh who recently visited New Mexico to see a doctor son and family, and expressing the widespread dismay at the loss of Ace Pike. Andy Palmer reported on a visit to New Zealand, a place which captivated the Palmers to the point of looking for a house until they discovered a 66% income tax rate. (Barbara and I were headed there in October until the wife of the couple we were going with became ill and now we are headed for Switzerland and southern France.)

Wally Dunlap says he's on his fourth retirement year and doing a good job of spoiling three grandchildren. Dr. Dave Fran- cisco has discontinued orthopedic surgery and is teaching the same at Univ. of Kansas Medical School, as well as continuing his work with crippled children at K.U. He also teaches at the Kansas City V.A. Hospital. Is this change the result of the malpractice insurance problem so much in the news, Dave? George Gordon (as well as Partridge and Francisco) has been one I've heard little from; he questioned if I remembered him (which I do: I had a middle table in the senior dining room; he had a corner one.) George is retiring from construction management and plans to travel. His three kids are scattered. He lives in Glenbrook, CT and summers in Northwood, NH.

Fred Kent continues to flail the whip over the 50th Reunion "committee" and has me to the point of the final draft of a 50-year Pot Pourri questionnaire. We meet again 15 September. I've already had a healthy response to my inquiries about this and have to single out Damon Carter as a real fund of suggestions and material from Princeton. Connie Pike is helping with connection to Ace's former printing firm. And speaking of widows, I've had such nice letters from Tiz Garnett, whom I'm trying to persuade to come across the pond in 1988.

Damon's life in retirement in Warner, NH, sounds idyllic, raising fruit and Christmas trees; travel to Europe; summer on Cape Cod; winter in the Caribbean; and a welcome for '38ers in his area.

Greetings to everybody. As usual August finds me at the Vineyard enjoying a wonderful New England summer!

Thanks to those who took time to respond to our cards (Midge and Jean Cross helped to get them out while they were here). I guess we can't expect to get more than 5 responses out of 42 cards sent out! However, with the 50th coming up before too long, I would hope that we will hear from more of you out there. Plans are already afoot for our Reunion and Andover '38 is really getting up a head of steam and we should try to help also. A questionnaire is being drawn up which will be sent to everybody. Some of the members of our 50th committee have already received a copy to look over and are being asked to make suggestions for any final revisions.

Connie Abbott Schwab wrote a note to the Alumni Office which was forwarded. She is enjoying her retirement; her "pace-maker keeps ticking along." She visited her son in New Orleans and daughter in Mississippi last fall and is very happy in her new townhouse. Would love to see any Abbot girls passing through Schenectady, NY.

A nice note from Sally Sutor Parsons from St. Petersburg giving her new address as 201A Pompano Drive, St. Petersburg, FL 33705. The new house is on the waterfront and being sailors they don't like being far from the sea! Two of her children are still in Hingham, Mass. and one in Florida. She keeps busy though supposedly retired. Races with the ladies pram (a small boat group) is president of the Womens' Club, and still finds time to cruise on their bigger boat. She is hoping to get back for the 50th but the Tabor Academy reunion is on the same weekend so there may be a slight conflict!

Ginny Thayer Boothby writes from California that she had a great two months last fall visiting England with Jean Cross Maier. They had a small apartment and became part of the London scene for a while. She said they "felt like natives rather than tourists." Her son John added a baby to his family in January, Erica Judson joins Sean who is 5.

Midge Coll Fields and Jean Cross Maier made their annual hegira to the Vineyard in early July, and we had our usual fun visit going to the beach, eating lobster rolls, attending a summer theatre show, eating fudge, and generally waxing fatter than ever!

Doll Hudson Biedenbarn wrote that it had been ages since she has seen any Abbot classmates, but had heard from Sally Peck who has convinced her she should attend the 50th! She says she'll try. Has a new grandson adopted by her youngest son, Murray, and his wife after ten years of marriage. Her oldest granddaughter, Elizabeth and her husband have been accepted into Tulane Law School and will move to New Orleans shortly. Her oldest grandson, Keith, 22, swears he will make it out of college next spring, "a real party boy, it seems." Next granddaughter, Doll, going to LSU and Becky at NLU. No one headed North yet. She and her whole crew (10) were planning a return fishing trip to Alaska in August. If she makes it for the 50th, she will come in the motor home and include a trip to Canada and Maine.

A note from Barbara Littauer Picket said she has four children, all girls, and four grandchildren, two girls and two boys. Her husband is a Latin and English teacher at Miss Hall's School in Pittsfield. She has just retired in June from teaching early childhood development, kindergarten, nursery school, art, and linguistic tutorial work. She wants to know where Ruth Pond Junker and Phylis Saunders Simpson are.

I am planning to build an addition to the house here and move up permanently. Two houses are more than I care to handle these days. However, I will spend the winter months elsewhere!

Well, that's about it for now. If you have any news you would like to share with others from '38, please drop me a line before the 15th of December, as that is the next deadline! Don't forget to start making plans for our big 50th.

The mail produced only two brief items. Mel Liverance is delighted to announce the birth of his second grandchild, Danielle Marie Liverance, daughter of son Stephen and his wife, Cindy. Mel is retired but gives no details as to his activities. The second item is a cryptic note from Dick Whittington. Dick is developing a new method for doing something in China, but two key words in the description of just what that something is elude me and I dare not guess at their meaning. Perhaps Dick will elucidate.

Annie and I spent a happy Fourth of July weekend with Pete Anderson at the home owned by Pete and his lovely sister-in-law, Doris, in Hyannisport. Pete, after many months of gruelling therapy, is at long last regaining the use of the leg that was badly smashed when a negligent driver rammed into his car at the Albany toll plaza. He is in fine spirits, as is Barney Rafferty, who, with his wife, Cherry, was also a guest of the Andersons. Annie and I had to leave first thing Monday morning which meant, alas, that we missed Jim Kittredge who arrived that afternoon. Nor did we see Bill Pugh, who has a summer home in Hyannisport. Bill is reported to have his golf and tennis skills at peak form. We are now back in New Haven for a few days following the marriage on 31 August of our youngest daughter, Annie, Jr., to Edgar Stewart of Boston. We held the reception under threatening skies on the back hill of our farm in Wardsboro, Vermont. John Blum was the only Andover classmate in attendance. John, who is reducing his teaching responsibilities at Yale, plans to spend the fall term at the Blums' place in Andover, Vermont, writing, chopping wood, and busying himself in other useful pursuits. We leave New Haven 6 September and will drive leisurely across the country, seeing the sights and ending up in San Diego, where I will teach at the University of San Diego Law School during October and November. I hope to see some of you along the way.

A few months ago I received a lovely note from Don Currier's widow, Fran. She writes that the following quotation from Edna St. Vincent Millay sums up her feelings about Don:

Quietly they go,
the intelligent, the witty, the brave.
I know.
But I do not approve.
And I am not resigned.

Two weeks before we were to leave for France (bareboating a barge with friends on Canal du Midi) I was reminded of the deadline for the next Bulletin column. I stopped everything and mailed out 45 postcards. When we returned there were 12 replies with news. Thank you all! Then we spent the weekend in Bill's office on the mainland while hurricane Elena made up its mind whether to come ashore on Siesta Key. Our house and boat came through without a scratch, so back to the typewriter and on with the news.

Marjory Hill Bayley has moved to Canton, N.Y. from the New York City area to be near her grandchildren. She writes that living in the "North Country" is beautiful and refreshing. Marjorie MacMullen Brewer lives in Shrewsbury, Mass. but often visits her son and his wife in Margate, FL near Ft. Lauderdale. She has watched him run in the Orange Bowl Marathon and compete in the triathlon on the Ft. Lauderdale strip. Her youngest son was recently married and is living in Denver where she hopes to visit this fall. Ros Graves writes from Winter Springs, FL that Margit Hintz Lorenze '40 and her husband stopped by last spring en route North. Ros is planning a trip to Athens, Israel, Jordan, and Egypt this fall.

Kay Harris Hill resides in Elmira, NY

where she writes and paints. Her book of short stories The Drum Concerto is now used in courses in several eastern college. Kay says she is now a blonde (and utterly lovely!) Ginny Rice Kneller has moved from Ft. Lauderdale, FL to Vero Beach although she still spends half of the year in East Orleans, Mass. on the Cape where she enjoys her four-year-old granddaughter, Rebecca. Kiki Skinner McCanna writes from White River Junction, VT that she had a good visit from Niki Fisher Cadman and keeps in touch with Kay Hill. Her library job at Dartmouth brings her in contact with many Abbot grads now in college there. Mary Woodman O'Hagan in Grahams-town, South Africa has had a busy year raising her 13-year-old granddaughter, teaching first aid, growing plants for sale, and singing in her cathedral choir. With the birth of another grandchild she now has a total of nine living in the U.S., Canada, and South Africa. While in the U.S. a year ago she visited Kay Hill after attending the 45th Reunion of our class. Barbara Leland Pearson loves being a senior citizen with three grandchildren. She spends her summers at Drakes Island, Wells, Maine.

Pat Perry Reiss is director of volunteer services in a Sheboygan, Wis. hospital. Last spring she and her husband took a six-weeks trip to Japan, China, and Hong Kong. This fall they are off to Bermuda for her husband's 70th birthday. They attended a family reunion of 500 members earlier this fall. Audrey Rugg Shanaberg of Longboat Key, Fla. summers in Granville, Ohio. She recently returned from Montreal where her son underwent successful brain surgery. She says she is a doting grandmother of four. Connie Smith Templeton of Huntington Beach, Calif. visited Nantucket and the Cape last summer. En route she and her husband stopped to see Nancy England Worthen and her family in Winchester, Mass. Connie plans to be in Sarasota this winter so we will get together. Delle Sawyer Wood reports her family of six married children and seven grandchildren held a reunion last summer. After 25 years of practice in internal medicine her husband is now Director of the Univ. of Maine Health Center. She is Director of Special Aquatics and Therapy Programs at the Bangor, Maine YMCA.

With our big 50th Reunion coming up in 1989 we should have a new Class Secretary (or at least an assistant secretary) who lives nearer Andover. Are there any volunteers? Please help and thanks again for your response to our mailing. Keep the news coming!

My apologies, and those of the Bulletin office as well, for the absence of Reunion Notes in the summer issue; we hope the following will make up for that oversight:

Reunion Notes 1985: The weekend of June 7th through 9th was a memorable one for the 33 PA '40 men and the twenty-six wives who turned up. The weather was kind to us, the campus was as beautiful as ever and the school did a great job in making us all comfortable and at home. Special thanks must go to Tom Rowen and his wife, Lili, who were co-chairmen of our Reunion.

Friday evening we gathered for cocktails in the garden of Stowe House with the class of 1945. Our gracious hosts John (Dean of Faculty) and Wendy Richards made us feel most welcome. That was followed by a buffet barbecue on the lawn outside of the Commons where a very good meal was served. The evening was spent doing various things such as attending a ceremony for Josh Miner (who has retired after thirty-three years on the faculty) or seeing an exhibition at the Addison Gallery and having an excellent bull session at Class Headquarters in Bancroft Hall.

Saturday, a day of partial sunshine and clouds, began after breakfast with a Memorial Service for A. Graham Baldwin, School Chaplain in our day. A beautiful memorial room, located beneath the Cochran Chapel, was dedicated to him. That ceremony was followed by the parade of classes to the gym where the Annual Meeting of Alumni was held. Thanks to the wonderful response from so many of our classmates who had never previously contributed to the Alumni Fund or had not given in recent years, we raised our giving percentage to 52% of our donor group and gave $53,025.03 to the school.

Headmaster Donald McNemar gave an interesting talk describing the school as it is today. All agreed there is still no place like it and vowed to return in five years bringing many of our wonderful classmates who could not be with us this time.

Saturday afternoon was spent in renewing acquaintances, sporting activities, the occasional nap, and attending some of the excellent lectures that were given around the campus. That evening the best party/class dinner was, you guessed it, 1940's. Tom and Lili Rowen had lined up a fantastic band in which former English professor and hockey coach Heart Day Leavitt played the saxophone. His band was unbelievably good and numerous people from other Reunion classes came around to join the fun. We hope the band will still be there in 1990.

Sunday was a day of relaxation and farewells. One important piece of business that was transacted Saturday afternoon at the class meeting was the election of class officers for the next five years. Stuart Outerbridge had indicated a desire to be relieved of the duties he has performed so well as Class Secretary, so Pres Bush was elected to replace him. Peter Mayok continues as Class Agent and Gene Schnell agreed to serve as Co-Agent concentrating specifically on raising our 50th Reunion gift. A committee consisting of Jim McCaffrey, Gordon Upton and Jack Cuthbertson was created to plan our 50th in 1990.

Those attending the Reunion were Dr. Bill Arnold, Linton P. "Shaggy" Bell, Pres Bush, Jim Caulkins, Ed Chapin and Marjorie, Bill Coles and Peggy, Jack Cuthbertson, and Marjorie, Mal Donahue, Alby Everts and Lucy, Sherwood Finley and Betty, Rollo Fisher, Blake Flint and Dolores, Fuzzy Furse, Karl Gorner and Carmen (who came all the way from Germany for the Reunion), Mac Griffin and Hope. Also, Bill Hart and Katherine, Bill Hayler and Terry, Ham James, John Kubie and girlfriend Elsa Sieff, Charlie Larkin, Tom Lewis and June, Jack Malo, Bill Macomber and Phyllis, Hugh Masters and Jeannie, Jim McCaffrey and Gigi, Horace Mosser and Natalie, Brad Murphy and Margaret, Dick Ogrian and Dorothy, Dick Rhodes, Charlie Richardson and Becky, Tom Rowen and Lili, Gene Schnell and Ina, Dick Schueler and Gay, George Semler and Mary, Gil Twombly and Kitty, Len Tucker and Debbie, Gid Upton and Rusty, and Ted Walen. Attending from Abbot were Doris Sawyer Gordon, and her husband, and Mary Howard Nutting and her husband, Ed.

Our distinguished classmate Bob Anderson Ambassador to the Dominican Republic, called Monday morning to say how sorry he was that he and Eleanor had not been able to make the Reunion. They are awaiting the selection of his replacement so that they may return to the United States. The climate in Santo Domingo is pretty tough on Eleanor's arthritis. It will be good to have them nearby again. I saw Harvey Moore and Libby at the President's dinner in Washington, 16 May. They looked great and are getting ready for the summer in Kennebunkport. Walter Curley had to attend the Annual Meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Ireland, which was the one meeting a year that he could not miss, and so had to miss the Reunion. Dave Gile, back in A-1 form again, sincerely regretted that he could not be present. Steve "Maurie" Gould was in New York with American Express in charge of their credit card operations.

Dr. J. Drennan Lowell, just completed thirty years of teaching orthopedic surgery to students, residents, and graduates at the Harvard Medical School. According to Jeep, nothing beats academic medicine and teaching bright, challenging students. Classmates transiting Boston can reach him at 617-732-5360 weekdays. T. Mclean (Mac) Griffin recently visited his daughter Ann and her husband John (both doctors) who are working on parasitic diseases in Egypt and Kenya. They took a thrilling safari in the Masi Mara reserve and also visited Mombasa, Nairobi and Cario — a mind-boggling experience. Son Richard, PA '71, is an architect in Cambridge. The Griffins have two grandchildren. Brad Murphy spoke with our honorary classmate Bill Westgate who expressed genuine regret at being unable to attend the Reunion. The Westgates celebrated their golden anniversary last year. Phil Allen and Fritz Allis attended.

While in Chicago in July, I ran into Jim Magin's sister who told me that Jim and Mitzi are living in Chicago at One Magnificent Mile. They are building a house in Naples, Fla. which will be ready in a year. We were distressed to learn that Clem McCarthy who lived at 48 Bartlett Street, Chelmsford, Mass., died 4 May 1985. He is survived by his widow Elizabeth, daughter Alicia, and son Andrew. Clem had a distinguished career as a lawyer and was a director of several important civic organizations. The class extends its deepest sympathy to his family.

Steve Gould headed for Vermont for a vacation where he expects to see his sister Adair (Joe Gan's widow) and her family. Gene Schnell, our new Class Agent, is already hard at work — no grass grower he. Charlie deLimur, Mabe Childs and Walt Curley, showed up in Rye and Greenwich for the Annual United States Seniors Golf Association Tournament in early June. All three were in great form.

Dave Gile retired 30 June as Senior Vice President of Marine Midland Trust Co. and will take up his new position as Vice President of the Council for Aid to Education in New York. His territory will be the southeastern and far western states. He and Patsy spent three weeks in England singing with the Greenwich Choral Society. It pays to be a good tenor!

Please send me news of yourselves and other classmates you see. We're not getting younger so let's keep our bonds to each other and Andover close.

Many thanks to Doris Sawyer Gordon for Reunion News. It was super to have lots of news from our class. I have started a lottery for future news. I have sent cards to fifteen classmates soliciting information, so each of you will receive a card at some time. Please play my game, but remember that any time you want to share something with our class, whether it is your turn or not, if you write me I will send it in.

Mary Howard Nutting will be the 50th reunion chairman. It's not too early to think about making plans to attend. Is that when we dig up our buried treasurers?

Rachel Whitney Davis wrote that she has suffered the loss of her father and her husband within the past two years. Our sympathy is extended to her. She has three children, all married, and five grandchildren. She remains active in her two stores, one in Wolfeboro, N.H., the other in Danvers, MA. (I believe they are children's shops). Her daughter and husband manage the Danvers store. One son, Rev. Dr. W. Marshall Davis, Jr. pastors the Federated Church in Sandwich, N.H. The younger son is head of food service at Huggins Hospital in Wolfeboro.

Evelyn Gottschalk Zivy lives in Basel Switzerland. She has four grown children and 7 grandchildren. She is half Swiss and half American. Maybe she will come to our 50th Reunion.

Nadene Nichols Sexton stops by to see Evelyn when she goes to Pakistan to visit her daughter.

Harvest has started in Arkansas. We expect a big crop. Our pecan crop will be ready in November. Now that we are mechanized it is a very interesting operation. Remember, I check my mail every day hoping to hear from YOU!

First things first. We should all congratulate Joe Vaamonde for the outstanding job he has done as Class Agent. He has renewed much interest in our class, and we can anticipate a successful 45th reunion in June. Joe and Mary and two of their three children live in Norwalk, Conn. Mary is an expert in sewing and is well known in the area. Joe works as a consultant to the Crane Paper Co. in Dalton, Mass., and he travels often through Latin America for Crane.

Otis Erisman, an attorney in Philadelphia, sent in a full report on his family and his 40th reunion at Harvard. Otis and Eleanor have been married for 37 years. Her father, uncle, and brother attended PA. Their youngest, Steve, builds houses in Nantucket and has two children. Susan is in her second year of residency in internal medicine at the University of Wisconsin, and Caroline is in her third year at N.Y.U.

aw School.

Otis made special mention about Archie yon. Archie was editor of the 40th Anniversary Report for the Harvard class of 1945, and Otis stressed the fact that Archie racked down most of the members of the class by letter or telephone. Otis also saw ohn Pierce, Jack Fisher, Orrin Wood, and 'hil Mazel at the reunion, all of whom "... looked hale and hearty and are younger than their years. . . ."

I can make the same claim for Harvey Kelsey whom I saw at the Princeton reunion. Harvey looks almost the same as when he was the best school boy sprinter in America (remember his amazing propulsion down the track?). Harvey is retiring from the large New York insurance firm, ohnson and Higgins, where he is president. He was negotiating with the admissions office of Columbia University about matriculation as an undergraduate student in geology. The Columbia officials are nonplussed about having a 62-year-old Princeton graduate wishing to begin all over again in a new field. The Kelseys developed their interest in geology by years of hiking, trekking, and climbing.

Judge Claude Davis of the 7th Judicial Circuit District covering five counties around Springfield, Illinois, has one of the most remarkable stories about how he came to Andover. The story is worth a special article in the Bulletin. Claude's enthusiasm for Phillips Academy is unbound. I will save other news about him for the article.

Joining Claude at the Princeton reunion were a number of our classmates. I hope that I did not miss someone. Rock King performed nightly in his delightful fashion drawing the usual large crowds. Jay and Elizabeth Rose live in Latrobe, Pa. where he is with Equitable Financial Services. Jay spent 30 years in industrial relations in the Pittsburgh area. They have three grandchildren. Bob Waters and Sue live in Absecon, N.J. near Atlantic City. They own and operate a Home Handyman Center in Pleasantville. The Waters also have three grandchildren.

Two of our classmates are portrait painters. George Dexter lives in Guilford, Conn. and practices architecture in New Haven. George drew a wonderful tiger for all of the Princetonians at the reunion. Murray Olyphant is the other painter. Murray is retired and lives in St. Paul, Minn. David Carter, the prominent art museum director now retired in New Haven, was also in attendance. I would like to hear from those of you who attended reunions in other colleges.

The 45th reunion is a great time to come back to Andover Hill (June 13-15). Most of us have our health in good order. We are brimming with nostalgia. The Academy organizes an interesting program. Joe Vaamonde and I spent several hours during a member-guest tournament this summer talking about plans for the reunion, and we would like to have a panel of 1941 people speak at one of the special sessions. Reserve 13-15 June 1986. The costs are minimal and the pleasure high.

The Alumni Office has recently been notified of the death of Robert W. Evans of 1004 Continental Drive, Harleysville, Pa. on 17 March 1981. He had been previously listed on the Academy's records as "Lost," so unfortunately, we have no details of his life. He is survived by his wife, June S. Evans, and the class extends its sympathy to her.

My back is to the wall, as usual, with Bulletin deadline facing me as I prepare to leave for two weeks in Florida. I plan to spend a couple of days with Addie Waterhouse McKay in St. Augustine. Her daughter, Anne, presented her with a 2nd grandson in January of '84. Another grandson, David McKay, is now 3 years old.

News from Joan List Van Ness that her husband, Steve, retired in June of '84. They plan to stay in New York for the present and "enjoy all the good things New York has to offer." Margery Martin Martin is now living in Briarcliffe Manor, N.Y. and gloating over her first grandchild, R. K. Martin III. Join the idiot group, Marnie!

Mimi Calder Dunn and Jim were out this way recently assisting their daughter after the birth of her third child and first daughter. We were fortunate to have Jim and Mimi join us for dinner and the evening, shortly before they returned home. Mimi doesn't seem to change a bit and we were able to pick up where we left off a hundred years ago as roommates at Abbot. A wonderfully warm Christmas letter for Peggy Little Dice, called "The Dice Dispatch," relates their family news. John and Peggy plan to move from Ann Arbor, Michigan to Brunswick, Maine upon his retirement which was scheduled for January '84. Their three daughters and one son are busy and involved in all directions from physical fitness, antique auto restoration, graphics to the law. A busy, vital family indeed. It is so good to have some news to pass along for a change. Please keep it coming in for me to share with others.

I did see Addie in Florida and we had two glorious days together "doing around" and catching up.

It truly saddens me to report the deaths of Jane Parrot Hanus, Jane Davey Corwin and Miriam Scammon Ladd who all died in 1983. Our belated but sincere sympathy go out to their families.

A big item on the agenda now is our forthcoming 45 reunion in June of '86 (June 13-15). Knowing how time flies, it's not too early to think of making plans now to return to Andover for the big event.

My love and best wishes to all. I hope life is treating you well and that I may hear from you with news of you and yours.

the one who achieved this honor. The reviewer feels Halberstam has a "gem" of a book covering the odd sport of rowing and the unusually motivated young men who pursue its challenge. Quoting from the review, "Sculler John Biglow recalls the advice of an old Yale oarsman and Olympic gold medal winner: 'John, always remember, there's more to life than rowing — but not much.'" John is currently in Hanover, N.H. attending Dartmouth Medical School.

Your scribe and wife, Carolyn, had a wonderful family reunion this past June in Colorado. The first event was the graduation of youngest son, Rob, from The Colorado College in Colorado Springs. He continues in Colorado job hunting at this writing. Next we moved to Lakewood, Colorado (outside Denver) to visit oldest son, Ken, (a geophysicist) and his wife, Regina, and their two-year-old daughter, Marissa, our first and only grandchild. Joining us for part of the two-week sojourn was middle son, Tom, Jr. He has just begun his final year of studies at University of Connecticut Law School in West Hartford. This summer he clerked for one of the leading law firms here in Manchester, N.H. Rafting on the Arkansas River was one highlight of our Colorado vacation.

A note from the PA Alumni office informs us that in memory of Saul Horowitz, Jr., his wife, Tykle, and his four children, Bee Bee, Mark, James '76, and Sarah '81, have endowed a scholarship that will support three young people attending Phillips Academy. Preference will be given to children from families serving in the United States Armed Services or to young people who hope to attend one of the service academies, as did Saul who graduated from West Point in 1946. Saul died on June 24, 1975. What a fine, thoughtful action by Saul's family, and what a great way to perpetuate his memory and help the School and its students. Our grateful thanks go out to Tykel and her children for the generous support of Phillips Academy.

We have received notice that our classmate Lyon Phelps died on 10 October 1983. Phelps was born 17 October 1923 in China. After attending schools there and PA he graduated in 1951 from Harvard College. Peace Corps service occupied his time between PA and Harvard. He was a playwright and poet. Phelps founded the Poets Theatre, Cambridge, MA in 1950 where he served as playwright, director, actor and president. He has a most extensive biographical entry in Who's Who in the Theatre, listing the many plays he authored and his other dramatic achievements. At the time of his death he was living in California. There are no surviving family members that we know of. If any classmate has knowledge of Phelps and his career we would be pleased to share it through this column. We mourn his passing.

Please keep me busy answering your letters giving me news for this column. If you are in Boston-Manchester area please phone me at (603) 624-3621 and perhaps we can have a personal visit. Have a good fall and winter.

Labor Day weekend has come and gone and we note the shift in our mental and emotional gears from summer into fall. Since the mailbox has been regrettably light, so will these notes.

The 16 August 1985 edition of The Wall Street Journal carried a review by Eugene Carlson on the op-ed page of David Halberstam's The Amateur (Wm. Morrow, publisher). This book deals with the quest of four young American oarsmen to be chosen the single sculler on the U. S. Olympic team in 1984. As readers of this column will recall Loosh and Nancy Biglow's son John was cramps in your writing arms.

I received a nice note from Bardie Smith, the Dean of Carlton College in Northfield, Minnesota. During 1983/84 Bardie Directed a Japanese language and culture program in Kyoto, Japan affiliated with Doshiba University and also has recently published "Essays on Gupta Culture" which he edited and contributed to. As I'm sure you all know Gupta society flourished during the fourth and sixth centuries in India.

From Mason Phelps in Pasadena, Calif., comes a well written appeal for funds for Andover. Mason is now on the Andover Development Board and recently visited the campus coming away with the feeling common to most who have been back over the last few years that this is a unique school worthy of all the support we can muster. Mason didn't mention it in his letter but his son Mason, Jr., is one of the hot equestrians in the USA and his parties in Newport to raise funds for the Olympic Equestrian teams have been publicized in Time and the New York Times. Now for a trip down nostalgia alley. While driving to the New London, Conn. airport recently, your Secretary saw a sign on a Little League field, "Calvin Burrows Memorial Field." Naturally this required a look at the 1943 Pot Pourri and the discovery that Cal had been born in Poquonock Bridge, Conn. (now a part of Groton). A trip to the Town Hall resulted in a visit with the Town Clerk who informed me that Cal had been her son's idol and that her son had been named for Cal as had been two other boys in town. She also gave me the address of Cal's older brother who welcomed me and invited me to visit Cal's grave, which turned out to be located in the Burrows' family graveyard, maintained by Warren and located nearby.

This is a remarkable, small graveyard in the New England tradition, with a stone wall and simple head stones. The Burrows family is one of the oldest in the area with family going back to the early 1700s, and includes those who died in the American Revolution, Civil War and World Wars I and II. The burial ground is fit tribute to one of our most respected classmates.

The Little League field was dedicated to Cal, who lost his life in a tank on Utah Beach on D Day 1944, with these words from the First Selectman: "It is a name that will be perpetuated here not in the field of battle but in the field of sport."

I was proud that Cal was one of our classmates.

Some news from you folks out there would be appreciated. This should be your column, not mine.

You are being spared an account of my life and times, thanks to Sedgie Barss Schneider. A very welcome letter from her relates a fifth anniversary of the Schneiders retirement from Andover and move to Mount Vernon, N.H. where Bill is a devoted, wood-working volunteer at the Middle School and deeply involved in 4-H work. All the while, Sedgie manages the shipping department at the World in Stiches. In truth, she is the shipping department! Their two children, Beth and John, were both married two years ago, and in October, Bill and Sedgie will join the ranks of grandparents. Welcome!

It occurs to me that I might be of service to classmates interested in contacting others in our class. A postcard (letter would be even better) to me with a bit of news of yourself and request for an address would be an excellent system. If more of you were in touch with each other, my results would be more interesting for all of you. How about it?

Of secretaries: A welcome card from Dick Hutton, he having the somewhat larger task of the Harvard '49 newsletter; alive and well in Quincy, MA, and on the lookout for passing PA classmates. And a letter from Woody Dulaney, whose advertising and PR firm in Louisville is heading for the eight figure mark in billings. Woody is one ahead of us in grandchildren with three. Of his four other children, one is acting in off-Broadway theater, and two are still in school, a dubious distinction we share.

A great wrap-up from Dwight Rockwell on classmates he's seen: One is Pete Roome, whose trail we also crossed at an August wedding in the wilds of New Hampshire. For another, Joe Reisler, retired from that Good Gulf outfit, but working, probably as hard, on consulting tasks across the U.S. For yet another, John Weidlein, also retired, from PPG, living in a lovely Pittsburgh home, and how occupying his time, we hope, to learn. For another yet, Charlie Sagar on his annual pilgrimage from teaching school and running a condo operation in St. Thomas. What a way to go.

Rockwell himself? Rockwell and Newell '43, also PR and Advt., doing very well on what Rock calls rich men's toys, e.g.: Grand Banks Trawlers, two thousand clam Austrian bikes, Steyr-Mannlichers, which, as Clive Cussler illustrates, will knock anything down from a safe distance.

Thank you, Secretaries. We stick together, or we get stuck separately. Bull and Strong: Are you listening?

Guess who won second prize? Jerry O'Brien has been summoned back by State for a second tour in Moscow, starting this November and lasting through '86. Reagan is pouring it on in embassy remodeling and security, and you'll agree it couldn't be spent on a better six-plus foot, two hundred-plus pound cause. From the conceptions of August, you may recall that the Moscow embassy needed a new powder room anyhow.

Pete Baker called just after the last deadline with some good news and some very bad. The good: Bill Boyd has been published by St. Marten's Press, a novel, The Gentle Infantryman. We hope to find it in Savannah's bookstores before the Bush-Cuomo debates.

The very bad: A letter from his son William B. Neal tells us of the loss of Tex Neale to cancer last April. There was no more respected member of our class. I feel foolish in having no further information, but know you feel the loss and join me in extending our sympathy to his family.

Greetings from Las Vegas and Alma Mas-trangelo Strabala. "Life in the West continues to be a big adventure for me. . . three children all situated in California and Nevada . . . still manage two or three good trips a year (Africa recently) and am really into photography . . . tennis every day and lots of skiing . . . great life." Alma also toured New England and visited the Abbot campus last summer.

A note from B. J. Bertucio Martuscello says "love my busy life but it wouldn't appeal to anyone else! My kids are stable, I love my work and have had no calamities." B. J. is a top administrator in nursing at a hospital near Garden City, NY. She also reported that an engagement with Ellie Cahill Georgopulo was called off because Ellie broke her leg in England last spring.

Julie Travares Alvarez has sold her home in Jamaica after 22 years and moved to Manhattan! Her husband is still practicing medicine and Julia is very much involved in creating a UNICEF type of organization, within the UN system, to deal with problems caused by the ever increasing number of elderly people. A great challenge. Her secret for staying young is staying active so she feels as young as her Abbot days.

Margi Atwood reports her first grandchild born in July in NYC. She is still working on grant money as assistant to the Archivist at a local art museum (Bloomfield, Conn.) and her retired husband is following in her footsteps as docent. Travel plans include two trips to the UK, one by the QE II next spring. (The Meads went by the QE II last spring and agree it's the only way to cross.)

Cubby Lyons Hickcox writes that her three big-time consumers are board member, visiting homemakers, president of local Wellesley Club, and church school teacher and newsletter editor. "All three are a joy . . ." She lives in Weston, CT.

Ricky Stambaugh has been managing two careers: real estate sales and restaurant owner. She and her husband, Armstrong, have just opened a second restaurant. It's called J. J. Grimsby and is on the Lynn Fields Parkway near Route 93 in Stoneham, Mass. All New Englanders please take note. Her parents are still living in Hawaii.

My grandson Malcolm Mead took a post-graduate year at Andover and leaves for Rollins College in Florida next week. No more wood carrying. Our son, daughter and her husband live in the Boston area and this makes for many happy times.

We close on a sad note. Eric Neurath, son of Virginia Heidenkamp Neurath wrote that Ginny died last October of cancer just before completing her Masters in theology from Boston College. Also, Warren Johnson wrote that his wife, Jackie Calvin, died in July '85. The sympathy of the class is extended to the survivors of the deceased members of our class.

This is Labor Day, but there is no rest for the wicked nor for the procrastinators among class note authors!

On August 5th I was pleasantly surprised to find Gardner Stern, Jr. was the subject of a front page article in the Wall St. Journal. His smiling visage featuring a somewhat longer forehead than I remember, highlighted the write-up of his most unusual business: he is a caterer to strikebreakers! Where's John Daly and "What's My Line?"? I wrote to Junior forthwith and received a prompt and interesting reply. Yes, he does cater to strikebreakers and it is more dangerous than the old caviar and clams casino circuit, but he also handles forest fire crews, movie companies on location, train derailments, and any place else that high quality, mobile catering is needed.

His two daughters, Deborah and Rita, and Gardner III all went to Yale as did his two sons-in-law. He has four grandchildren and another one on the way. One son-in-law, David Milch, was recently written up in the WSJ also, when he went from a Professorship at Yale to become the story editor and co-producer of Hill Street Blues. But wait, there's more! Junior's youngest daughter, Taylor, was born 6 September, 1984! No wonder he downplays the risks of catering to strikebreakers.

I don't know if we've got a trend going or not, but I'm going to be much more careful in the future. Warren Ziegler writes from Denver that his wife, Mandy Cooper Ziegler, presented him with a son, Zacharia Axel Ziegler, on 2 September, 1983. "He's a great joy to match my first son, David, born to my first wife, Jacqueline, in 1954. I'm already considering entering Zach in PA 2000."

Congratulations to the new fathers and best wishes to the newest member of the '45 family. Anyone out there want to play Can You Top This?

I received nice letters from Jack and Helen Barss and Helen Leete expressing their pleasure in our reunion weekend. It was great having them with us.

We're in the process of organizing for our 50th reunion gift to the school. This is a major effort and is pretty much the last major thing a class can do for the old school. This effort will be entirely separate from annual Alumni Fund giving. We can use all of the support we can get from each of you, so if you'd like to get involved, please drop me a line. As soon as we get organized we'll send out a general mailing to each of you to let you know the game plan.

The Alumni Fund is about to get underway with our new "Dream Team" of John Blake, Pete Hetzler, Ken Sutherland, Hal McInnes and Brot Bishop heading up '45s effort. With your help, I'm sure they'll do a record job.

Since reunion I've had the pleasure of seeing Lee Bergstorm and Jack Horner and I've talked to John Lampe, Dick Welch and Bill Saltonstall, but I'm going to abstain from any report because I'm anxious to see some new names in this column. I really would like to hear from you even if you're not appearing in the WSJ or starting new families! How about it?

Oh, frabjous day, kaloo, kalay — my postcard plea was answered!

Janet Redman Hill, master of postcard precis, writes that Birmingham, Alabama, has been home for 30 years. Her spouse has, for eight years, been the President of the University of Alabama. Her daughters are in decisive stages; one married last November; one marrying this November; the youngest making her debut and going to the University of the South (Swanee) for her senior year. Nope, that's not all: there's a son, a forest ranger in Georgia. Still more! She's traveling, Janet says, entertaining and leading a hectic life but . . . "never a dull moment."

And, here's another undaunted by restricted space: Barbara Ball Bacon. She lives in Flint, Michigan but not always; she's pioneering in a new log cabin in Winter Park, Colorado. It's a second home, closer to two of her three married children. And there are three grandchildren, with two more on the way. "I'm having fun nursemaiding" she writes. Barbara's been active for many years with the cerebral palsied, and has one more year as chairman of the state of Michigan Cerebral Palsy Association. Christmas cards keep up her friendship with Mary Taylor Sherpick and Kitty Mulford Lyon; Kitty is an easily visitable "just-off-the-New-York-Thruway" for Barbara's drives East.

And this just in under the wire: Barbara Beecher Carl sends greetings, and news of particular interest to you Wellesley/Abbot girls. She's back East this September to attend Wellesley's Alumnae Council, representing her Santa Barbara Wellesley Club. And she thanks Hilary Paterson Cleveland for "the best news of our class I have seen yet" ('85 summer Bulletin). Tough act to follow — moan.

When you turn your Bulletin pages to '45 Abbot and there's nothing there, do you feel neglected? disowned? unloved? Remember, only YOU can make it happen. Accept the challenge: see how much YOU can get on a postcard! (or letter). My address is above.

Our search has ended, and the ending is a happy one. Dick Phelps and Rick Hudner have agreed to co-chair our reunion next June. Any inquiries on the glorious 40th should be directed to Phelps, 7 Merrill Street, Hingham, Mass. 02043. You will be receiving a load of mail on the event. Make a note of it and plan now to make it on back.

O. J. Anderson, teaching economics in Vero Beach, was at the inaugural meeting of the Andover Development Board at PA in May where he saw Dick and reports Phelps is in great shape. Creed and O.J. will be back for the 40th. My New Haven spy writes that O.J. also saw Phelps at their 35th at Yale, along with Bell, Begien, Kerrigan, Kurtz, Macomber, Mellor, Morse, Moses, Rogers and West. Did I forget anyone? Jim Morse married Judith Stout (My Goodness, My Guinness) in December '84. The result: a family of nine children and three grandchildren.

Otis Chandler was awarded the annual RIT Award (Rochester Institute of Technology) as the outstanding figure in Journalism and Publishing for 1984. From One Market Plaza, SE, word from Whit Budge that he would like to be at PA next June. Bill Creelman, Chairman of the American Waterways Operators, Inc. and Pres of the National Marine Service, Inc., St. Louis, plays golf to a 12 hcp, has two grandsons in Wayland, Mass. (PA candidates) and will be back for the reunion.

Mary and Ed Jordan send out a very informative memo every year or so, highlighting the Jordan activities, from Washington to Bass River. Ed works for HUD in D.C., when he isn't heavily involved in his U. S. Power Squadron activity, as is Mary (both in Squadron educational positions). Harold "Speed" Levitan writes from Montreal where he is a psychiatrist doing studies in the role of dreams in both mental and physical illness. Cora and Ron Tarbox split the year between San Diego (Dec.-May) and Westport Island, Me. (Jun.-Nov.) where they have just restored the circa 1780 family homestead. Maybe we can get Dave Thaw back from Germany for the 40th, Ron?

Idalita and Gus Tavares were in NYC early in the summer seeing new grandchild. Sheila and I spent a wonderful evening with them at dinner at a superb Italian restaurant, Giannis.

In July, we spent a weekend with Kate and Martin in Weekapaug, R.I. at their summer retreat looking out to Block Island. It was sublime, with beaching, tennis, and sailing in Bege's new boat on Paug Pond. Superb.

Memorial Day 1985 will always be memorable to the Lynch Mob, for that's the day the Ripper got his first ace ever, on a 135 yard par 3, with an 8 iron. It was "shotgun" on the last hole of a best ball, Scotch Four-some. Needing a bird to win, Jack "wished" that baby all the way, just to be close. One bounce and a slow roll later, she disappeared in the can. There were 52 people on the course at the time, which meant, as tradition dictates, that Jack would have a large bar tab at the 19th. Instead, he opted for a party to celebrate the event. 125 showed up. A costly hit. The Shot Heard 'round Sharon.

Judy and John Friday live in a converted barn/artist's studio (where they have done a lot of work themselves) two miles north of Hamburg Cove in Lyme, Ct. The east side of the Connecticut River is still very rural and very, very beautiful, and it's definitely away from the madding crowds.

In late Sept. we were to "sit-in" for Phelps and Hudner (in Europe on tour) at the All Volunteer Weekend at PA (now renamed Andover Leaders Weekend), where were to take notes for the reunion to pass on to our Committee chairs, but the weekend was cancelled due to hurricane Gloria. 40th shaping up. Try to be there and send me some more notes. P.S. Just heard from Scranton, Pa. (how often does that happen in a lifetime?) from Wayne Williams the mortgage broker. First word in 15 years. Wayne will join us come June of '86. Merry Christmas to you all and a healthy, wealthy New Year.

Reunion time, coming up! Next 13-15 June will be our 40th! What a special time for us to gather and reminisce about our lives to-

A grand, long letter from Janet Malott Elliot tells of their new home with a lovely location high on a knoll surrounded by woods near the James River. (Mrs. Jared Elliot, 6400 Westchester Circle, Richmond, VA 23225). Jan and Jerry have a son in Boston, a son in Fla., a son in Rochester and a daughter in Ky. Sally Allen Waugh is hoping to attend reunion. She and Sam travel everywhere. Lately they've been to China, Greece, Turkey, Siberia and the North Cape. Three children are married, two single. Sally plans to help with #2 grandson in Huntsville, Ala. It's so nice to hear that Kitty Johnson Robbins, who was widowed in 1970, was married to William Cruger in 1983. Kitty has four children ages 24 to 31 and step-sons 24 and 26. Kitty has twin grandchildren, Harry and Joanna, born in June '84. Kitty is a docent at the Peabody Museum in Salem, Mass.

Polly Thomas Peck has a new address: 3508 Lakeside Drive, Rockwell, TX 75087. Polly plans to attend reunion this time. She and Howard have a new house on a big lake east of Dallas. The Peck boys are all grown and Polly says, "All in Dallas, so wonderful for us. They are our best friends. Love my daughter-in-law." To top off all this good news, the Pecks have a new grandson. Life is beautiful! Ann Hardy has transferred from "New York Society" to "Connecticut Society." She does genealogical work privately which "gets more and more difficult as libraries are more and more loathe to Xerox materials." Gail Sullivan Fleming writes that Margo Meyer Richter '47 was seated next to her by chance at the N.C. Museum of Art. Gail was hoping to see Marjorie Sommer Tucker in the N.C. mountains. Let's hear from more of you. I've traveled this year, spending lots of months on Maui, but some time in Fla., and a great trip to a wedding in Paris where I tried, to no avail, to find Pete Hogan. Any clues? Get your super savers now for next June, I've got mine! Love to you all — Luty

Ed Selig's thoughts about being a 1956 Rhodes Scholar are amply quoted in a mid-August edition of Parade magazine in which Ed appears in a photo with the three-dozen, crew-cut scholars enroute to Oxford 30 years ago. Fellow Rhodes Scholar, Willie Morris, in his article titled "Were We the Best?" reports, "'Oxford is a bastion of civilization in an era of technocrats, philistines, and Teflon personalities,'" says Ed Selig, an environmental lawyer and writer in Boston. "... Selig got a call a few years ago from a lady at the Library of Congress asking if the same Edward I. Selig who had written a book on the 17th century love poet Thomas Carew also could have authored a later one on economic incentives for pollution control. 'I assured her of the underlying continuity,' Selig says, 'since both books were essentially concerned with nocturnal emissions. ... Most of us know how fortunate it was that we got selected for the [Rhodes Scholarship] honor while others of equal or greater merit were passed over,' notes Selig. 'The pride I feel in being in this company comes not from anything I am or have done but from the astonishing dedication and accomplishments of other Rhodes Scholars whom I know, have met, or hear about. Most have contributed in quiet, selfless ways to the betterment of mankind. If we do not live the ideal in one way or another, then the credential isn't worth the paper it gets duly noted on.'"

Falling in love with Cynthia Lamontagne is very easy, not because she's Ray Lamontagne's daughter, but because she's last year's N.Y. area Face of the '80s winner. The New York Post ran pictures of her for two days this June. What the Post did not know at the time was that her father, Ray, would be asked to go to Africa on a United Nations mission to investigate conditions in several countries suffering from severe starvation.

Also in the papers, the face of the '80s for the Class of 1953, J. Deering Watson, who, it says in the Baltimore Daily Record, has established a successful business career on the premise that moderate income wage earners are entitled to the same rights of home ownership as those in the middle and upper income brackets. "I negotiate all the financing packages and I sell all the houses myself. I try to keep as many third parties out of it as I can," says J.D. "This year we'll do more than 100 units."

Not quite in the '80s, but almost in the '70s, Don Shapiro, Bob Sullivan, John Scranton, Joe Mesics, Skip Kimball, Tony Lopez, Gordon McKenzie, and John Ponier, class agents for 1953 managed to reach a 65% level of participation in a non-reunion year.

'85-'86 new students at PA will include: Don Shapiro's son Edward; Carl Hoffman's son John; Bob Sullivan's daughter Sara; and Carson Parks's daughter Catherine. Hank Earle's son Clifford decided to attend another school. Other '53 offspring attending PA are Paul Hull's son Bobby '86, Pete Chermayeff's son Nicholas '88 and Jim Kase's son Nathan '87.

In the late '80s, 1988 to be precise, the following classmates will be attending their 35th reunion: Ken Sharp, Joel Sharp, Fran Weber, Skip Purcell, Al Korschun, and Ed Ansin. Well, anyway, Joe Mesics who saw them on a recent school trip through Florida invited them all. Also expected back is Bob Verville, in the real estate business on the southeast Florida Gold Coast.

With a lot more 100s than 80s on his report card, Loomis-Chafee headmaster, John Ratte, (whom you may remember roomed with John Poppy) has promised that he, too, will be back for his 35th at PA.

Zeus Stephens who would have settled for an 80, but who now refuses to go below 98.6 as a hospital administrator, brought his son Stevie for Summer Session this year. . . 86-ing the Marine Corps in favor of retirement, career officer Jeff Root is now living in Vermont. . . . Eight skied and had a grand old time with Skip Kimball and Linda at Steamboat Springs in February, including Joe Mesics (who was good enough to supply most of the information for this column) and Sandi. . . . And finally, as the face of the 80s (1880s), I like to think that by the time this is printed, I will have survived the wedding of my daughter Kathy to Martin Chaffin. As of now, two weeks before the happy event, this seems highly unlikely.

As you read this column, the year end holidays should be upon us, and I do hope you will each send me greetings at my new address! This will necessarily be a short column, as my last was too long, and news this time has been almost non-existent. Please make a note of my new address, and send me your year-end news to be shared by your classmates.

Ann Zuill Williams sent an announcement of her daughter's marriage to Derek John Preston which took place in West Clandon, England, on 20 July 1985. She had had a visit with Julie Gaines Phalen and Cliff in Bermuda in June. Julie writes that all is well in her household. Her daughter Jackie getting her M.L.S. from Simmons in August; Ellen her B.S. from Syracuse last May, and Sandy beginning her sophomore year at U. of Mass. in Amherst majoring in Elementary Education.

I speak quite often with Carol Hardin Kimball who has some property here in Wisconsin available for summer rental. Anyone interested in visiting lovely Door County? I now have friends from here who are getting to know Carol by renting from her, and it's great fun to see the past catch up with the future.

I leave in a week from the time of this writing, to take our son Daniel to PA to start his first year there as an Upper. I have all kinds of mixed emotions, as his departure will leave us with an empty nest. However, we shall be busy with lots of remodeling projects on our new house, located in a country setting with more land than house, which should help keep us from missing him too much.

My best wishes for a healthy and happy 1986 to all of you, and please keep me advised of all your activities and important events.

August. The lazy, hazy days of summer. It is difficult to gather thoughts for a fall Bulletin but your great response to the July cards makes it an easier re-entry into the general routine of every day living!

Especially loved hearing from Mary Woolverton. Mary works at Fitzsimmons Army Medical Center for the Dept. of Pediatrics a member of the Developmental Evaluation Clinic handling child abuse and pediatric social work problems. Mary remains involved in horseback riding for children with cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy, and retardation at her farm. Several years ago we saw Mary working with the disabled on a television program featuring her work with horses. Mary raises Morgan horses and is a member of the board of the American Morgan Horse Association while chairing the Youth Steering Committee. We also congratulate Mary upon receiving the Resident of the Year Award for Greenwood Village in Colorado where she lives. Grier Moen Smith Catledge continues her Therapeutic Learning Center as well as Home Health Care for geriatric patients. In her free moments she "dabbles" in musical theatrics. Lee Carroll Berckman and her husband, Bruce, took their two daughters (16 and 19) to Egypt on a fabulous Nile cruise from Cairo to Aswan. Anyone planning a major trip (i.e. China, India, Africa, etc.) contact Lee as she is on the advisory board for Abercrombie & Kent whose speciality is tailor made trips! Alle, a senior at Westover is college looking; Leesa has a year away from Trinity College in Conn. to pursue modeling in Paris. As Sandy Liberty Wilcox wrote ". . . to be young again!" Sandy's son Michael, a ski enthusiast, spends his winters at Killington, Vt., spring in the West, and is working this summer, along with his sister Susan, on Martha's Vineyard. Susan is at Bard College and received an Outstanding Student award this past year. Sandy has an exciting and interesting career as an assistant to a real estate developer in Charlestown, Mass. doing major developing of condos, commercial space, etc.

Marti Belknap Brennen and husband, Bill, completed work on their new home in the Rockies (view at 8400 feet!). Marti continues her Stress Management and Creativity Classes as well as her Peace Ed. classes for children.

Doris Niemand Ruedin has moved to Statesville, N.C., and was busy with two graduations: Jim from C.W. Post, and Nancy from Friends Academy. Nancy will attend Dickinson this fall. Nemo saw Nancy Donnelly Bliss before they moved. Nancy writes that son Daniel graduated from Bates and will teach 5th grade at Valley School in Ligonier, Pa. this Sept. Hope Nancy comes to visit us here in Pgh. Married daughter Sarah lives in Boston. Nancy and Howard begin their 25th year at Country Day. Celebrating another happy 25th anniversary are Peggy Moore Roll and husband, Jack. Peggy works as Permissions Editor for D.C. Heath & Co. in Lexington, Mass. Their daughter Sarah received an MBA from Carnegie Mellon and is working in Washington, D.C.

Lots of visiting going on this summer. Sue Larter Lingeman's card from Nantucket arrived saying she was expecting Leslie Burgiel Moore from London. Sue has a daughter entering Connecticut College this fall, and another a senior at Smith.

Our daughter Betsy moves to Boston by 1 October so I am anxious to "reunion" with my old (pardon the pun) Ft. Lauderdale pal. Panna deCholnoky O'Connor wrote from France she was waiting for a visit from the two children (19 and 20) of Cornelia St. John Lewis who are over for a summer course at Montpellier University. Panna says anybody else on such a program would be welcome too. Back in in ol' U.S.A. in No. 1 city, Pittsburgh, Pa. in the Sheraton on the "Mon" river, Vicky Schwab Arnoff, Eric Sauereisen and I had a brief but crammed, talk-filled visit . . . quote from V.S.A.: "Next time we'll plan a longer visit."

I was very impressed with Phg., especially the PPG bldg. which is sensational!" Vicky and I accidentally discovered our daughters, Leslie Aronoff and "B" Sauereisen, had been working together on fashion shows for Benetton, and did not realize any connection! (Grand Petite Monde) — Vicky and Stan became grandparents of a beautiful boy, Zachary, born on Stans' birthday. This calls for a double celebration for son Jay and his wife, Karen.

All that space will allow, so keep your news coming. You don't have to wait for my cards! We're on a roll . . .

Not much news this round: the reunion news prevented me from reporting last issue that Walt McLeod informs us he was promoted to Captain in the Navy Reserve Judge Advocate General's Corps and then was selected to be the Staff Judge Advocate for North and South Carolina and a portion of Georgia. As such he is program manager for approximately 70 lawyers in five units. Walt recently resigned as trustee of the South Carolina State Museum to take the reins as mayor of Little Mountain, South Carolina.

On our cross country trip to the 30th, we had the pleasure of visiting with several classmates who were not able to get back to the campus. Mike Bell was preparing for his sabbatical from the University of Colorado where he is also the emcee of a program of recorded jazz on the local FM station in Boulder. Through January, Mike may be found at the Universite Paul Valery in Montpellier, France. Jack Tracy, a veteran reunioner, warned me by telephone that he was going to miss the 30th; he was fighting a case of strep throat. Down the road a piece I found Kent Rickenbaugh at his Cadillac agency in Denver looking happy and well exercised.

Homeward bound, we enjoyed a few minutes with Mike Posey who has built a reputation as one of the foremost portrait photographers in the South. His studio is in a landmark mansion on upper Canal Street in New Orleans. Mike is presently pondering the local political scene.

I have just discovered that the space allotted for class notes is de minimis, so please excuse an obvious lack of style. Reunion was great fun for all five of us — we just missed the other 68 of you! After it, Kathy Lloyd drove home with me for a great visit. She is a computer whiz, and can be reached at their 3-PC home in Cambridge. In July, Eleanor Easton Flaxen, Diane Sorola O'Dwyer, Frank and I had a magnificent lunch together at Eleanor's home in London, England. Eleanor is a teacher, and Diane has renovated a now-beautiful flat on Hamstead Heath. Away in August, I sadly missed a call from Pam Carpenter Navarro, here for a conference. She has recently moved from the Bahamas to Chapel Hill, N.C. A note from Lee Sawyer Hope from Durham, N.H., reports a piano-playing husband ("really good innovative jazz"), two high-school-age children and a c 1720 house, with "housewifery" and writing as occupations. Write to me, all!

Congratulations to Betsy Parker Powell, who has been elected to the Board of Trustees of Babson College, where she earned her MBA in 1976. Betsy also serves as a Charter Trustee of Andover and is treasurer of Diamond Machining Technology, Inc., a company she and her husband, Dave, founded some years ago. I recently enjoyed catching up with Judy Warren Pitman, who reports that she is busy (and happy) encouraging people to give up smoking. Judy is currently Smoking Education Chairman for the American Cancer Society, running smoking cessation courses throughout the state of Massachusetts. Judy's son Ross, 21, is at the University of Massachusetts. Neal, 17, attends North Attleboro High School and spent the summer at the Berkshire School of Music. She also has an eleven-year-old daughter, Annie. By now you will all have received notice of our thirtieth (could it be?) reunion, 13-15 June 1986. It would be wonderful to see you all there. It's a beautiful time of year on the Andover campus, so do plan to come and bring your families.

The Alumni Office notified me in the late spring, of the death of Carol Reed Shealor, but unfortunately it was past the deadline for the spring Bulletin, so I want to take this opportunity to speak about Carol's life and her very tragic death.

Carol and her husband, M. Donald Shealor, were killed in a plane crash in Shelter Cove, California on 28 April 1985. Carol had lived 14 years in Davis prior to moving to Sacramento in the summer of '84. She was a native of North Conway, N.H.

Carol was married when she was 19, had two boys and was busy with her life and her children as well as helping her husband get his doctorate. Later on, when she developed tennis elbow, and could no longer play, she decided to go to college. She received a B.A. in Psychology in 1979 from the University of California/Davis, graduating Summa Cum Laude; she received an M.S. in sociology in 1981. She was a consultant for the Guaranteed Student Loan Division of the California Student Aid Commission.

She leaves her sons, Dean Karnopp, Jr., 23, and Stefan Karnopp, 20, both of Davis; her parents, Carroll and Katherine Reed (AA '34) of North Conway; two sisters, Damon Reed of Rocks Village, Mass. and Stephanie Markham of Bonn, West Germany. The class extends its deepest sympathy to her husband, children and to her mother and father for this tragic loss.

This last summer I received a post card from Dick Guthrie who has been stationed in Paris for the last few years. At this time Dick has been transferred to Berlin, where he is on the Allied Staff of the Army. However, Dick did take time to celebrate his 45th with his son by running in the Paris marathon, and he looks forward to having his children spend some time in the U.S. at boarding school. . . . speaking of changing addresses, Rick Steinkamp is now living in Boston, having moved from San Francisco where he was with Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich for the past 22 years. Rick is now the National Sales Manager for Houghton Mifflin Co. Rick mentioned that his son is teaching at Osaka University in Japan, and their youngest is now a sophomore in high school. As I recall also, the Steinkamps are grandparents and have been for several years. . . . It seems the Valdejuys have invaded the New England area, according to Chico. Arturo, Jr., who graduated from PA in '83 is attending Trinity in Hartford, Luis is a sophomore at Boston University, while Carlos is an Upper at PA. Chico finished his note with "Help," which I can well believe having a sophomore at Stanford and the oldest attending his senior year in Hong Kong. . . . Gil Wright writes from Sudbury, Mass. that he has joined the law firm of Powers and Hall in Boston, having spent a number of years as general counsel for Denison Mfg. Co. Gil adds that he, Nancy, the two kids, two cats, and one dog are all doing well. Among the rich and famous, we have another author among us: Dr. Bill Kammerer dropped a line to tell us of his new book, The Role of the Internist on Surgical, Obstetric and Psychiatric Services. Bill did say, however, that he co-authored the book with Dr. Richard Grass, and it was published by Williams & Williams in Baltimore. . . . John Hansman tells us of his ongoing saga of the political intricacies and intrigue of establishing a non-profit corporation to support local television programming on the cable system in Montgomery County, Maryland. Trying to make sure that the cable television system, which is now under construction, provides the public services it should, combined with the political overtones, must be one continuous headache.

Bill Hegeman sent a three-liner: he is working at Compton Advertising Company; he is also teaching at the New School; and he is directing at the Circle Repertory Theatre. Sounds like a 26-hour day, Bill. . . . Dave Catron, who is the editor of the University of Texas Press in Austin, said that he and wife, Anita, are looking forward to an Andover visit in Houston this fall, when the travelling road show comes through. By the way, that is a fun event for us down here, and I hope each of you has an opportunity to attend one to get caught up on what the school is doing. Anyway, Dave tells me that he has a new address: 10413 Doerning Lane, Austin, Texas 78750.

Nappy MacNaughton wrote that he has gone into merchant banking, and I understand that he did a terrific job, putting together the appreciation dinner for Josh Miner's retirement.

Yours truly remains in a cash crunch from college tuition; if most of the rest of you are not in that position, please let me know, since I am an extremely good unsecured risk. Remember that Tom Fox and his fundraising boys will be contacting us soon, so help out as we always do. Regards. — Gee.

A brief message from Anne Bowden Morris noted that she is working and studying in the area of museum education at the University Art Museum in Long Beach California. She and her husband, Bob, are celebrating 25 years together in September.

Nancy Davison Miller sounded as though she is feeling very good about herself and her life. She has been involved in a variety of occupations ranging from flower shop to retail sales to an office job and has recently joined forces with a partner and ventured into her own business called House Recyclers. She found she enjoyed fixing up her own "English cottage" so much she wanted to make a career of it. She is having fun and making a profit! What more could one ask for? She also traveled to Denmark in June to visit her sister Judy (AA'62) who has been living there for 14 years. Nancy's daughter Cathy is a freelance illustrator in New York and son Clay is a pre-architecture student at Columbia. The tone of her card suggested she is planning to return to Abbot for our 30th in '87 and is expecting to see lots of our classmates there.

Continuing along the entrepreneurial path, Bitsy Leech Jacquette writes that she has her own consulting company, The Delta Group, Inc., which designs, implements and evaluates teacher training programs for school districts, universities and state educational agencies. Her firm also publishes testing and remedial materials for teacher-competency exams. It sounds as though work has kept her from traveling as much as she would like but she and her husband, Lee, have managed to go to Greece and Italy and are planning another trip to France and Russia.

I had a marvelous note from Helen (Gus) Guthrie Miller who claims that everyone knows what she has been up to since she was at our 25th reunion. However, for those of us who didn't make it back for that momentous occasion, here's an update on Gus. She works at her husband's radio stations and at their [background] music business. They spend a good deal of time at their ranch, Twin Lakes, where they have been contending with an abundance of grizzly bears this year. Because they are on the list of endangered species, it is illegal to kill them. The stockmen are, naturally, unhappy that they cannot protect their livestock. Gus adds, "I can assure anybody worried about the poor grizzly that the animal is thriving in my part of the country." She and her husband, Shag, are going to New York in September to attend a CBS Radio Affiliates meeting and then on to Houston and Montana. Daughter Eden is "16, absolutely gorgeous, and is driving me nuts." She also has four step-children, three step-in-laws and four step-grandchildren. Gus extends an open invitation for visitors. She describes their weather out there as "nine months of winter and three months of company." She also says she eagerly awaits the Bulletin to find out what all our classmates are doing. You see, here is confirmation that your words are read and enjoyed by others, so keep them flowing.

And from the midwest: we have raced through another summer with unbelievable speed. Son Peter spent most of it in camp or on the road to and from the East coast, not once, but twice. The first trip was to visit an old college friend of mine in the Poconos and get together with my family for a reunion at my brother's in Germantown, N.Y. My sister Julie Gains Phalen '53 came for a couple for a couple of days without her tribe.

I began a new job as Community Relations Coordinator for our 600 bed county hospital. Quite a switch from our tiny 60-staff mental health center to an operation with more than 2600 employees. The hospital is known as the last resort for all the down and out of Indianapolis. My mission — to turn a Hill Street Blues image into one befitting Columbia Presbyterian or Mayo. No small challenge. But if we are to keep up with all the good things happening in this city it must be done. In case you haven't been paying attention to all the press about Indianapolis, this is fast becoming quite "the place." No more "Naptown" or "India-no-place." The city is really thriving. But don't take my word for it. Come check it out for yourselves on your way to see Gus in Montana. I'll even throw in a bed and some meals. I'm in the phone book.

This summer I tried a different method of gathering news. Instead of postcards, I visited or telephoned. My family and I did indeed stay with Jackie Locke Neaville in Seattle. A train derailment in Glacier Park shortened our stay but we talked twice as fast to catch up. I'll always remember salmon with horseradish glaze by the Neavilles' pool. Ingrid, I tried to call you from a pizza parlor in Anacortes, but in such a gorgeous part of the world why would you be sitting indoors?

My next news foray was by phone to Gaithersburg, MD. Just as I expected, Rosemary Ozoonian Arkoian said she had always meant to write! Her children are Alexandra, 7, and John, 12. Her husband, Mo, works with computers, budget and finance with the Drug Enforcement Agency, part of the Justice Dept. Rosemary used her Russian major at Ft. Meade until she had children. Her volunteer work has been with her church in D.C., with the Board of Managers of the Montgomery County YWCA, and with schools. She received an award from the state of Maryland for over 400 hours of school service. Since she was just back from a vacation in Florida and I was on my way West, we agreed to meet for lunch in the fall.

Another classmate who will join us for lunch is Mary Ann Savage Habib. I reached her at her temporary assignment with Overseas Management at the Library of Congress. She finds this office very interesting. Her son, Robert, has been the traveller this summer, but they will both head "down east" in December. I'd love to see her mom again.

I did take my mother to visit Jane Christie Smith's mother in N.H. last weekend. Do others of you keep up friendships with classmates' families? Although I didn't see Jane, she sent a letter urging me to attend the Volunteers Weekend. Tim Smith had a fascinating summer tutoring an Andover prospect in Portugal and sightseeing all over Europe. Andy and Matt Smith hosted a French student in New Haven.

I had hoped to look up Shirley Slater Crosman on my trip to Boston. She and John are now living in Wayland, Mass. I had a nice chat with Nat. Shirley will be teaching this fall, but you'll have to wait for details.

I'm still hoping to catch up with Vickie Kohler. Who else travels to Cambridge from Wisconsin via Cape Hatteras and Canada, then hops back in the camper to take in a wedding in Denver, returning through the southwest and Wisconsin? That's when she isn't in Aspen or the Caribbean or Vermont or the Vineyard. . . . Sigh.

Joan Foedisch Adibi is working at Omni Evaluation Services, real estate consulting firm, having finished a Masters in Public Management at Carnegie-Mellon in '84. Her eldest daughter is transferring to Swarthmore this fall. The family still spends vacations in Chappaquiddick. Joan, it may seem like you just wrote, but it was two years ago. Time does get by us. Please sit down, all of you, and send me a note today. I'd like some different names in the next column.

One of the many pleasures connected with having an Andover spouse from the Class of 1950 is that we get to reunite two years in a row out of every five and I can catch up with Abbot '60. I have passed along the news of the people with whom I talked to Lexa Crane, the new Class Secretary of Abbot '60, who has just moved to Marblehead from Texas to become Librarian at the Tower School which had been headquartered by Gil Leaf '59 for the past five years.

Winkie Ward Keith and Allan have been off camping in Panama where they climbed Cerro Pine Mountain in the National Park to catch the same view of the Pacific that Balboa first had. Over 400 different beautiful birds were spotted as well as the usual complement of monkeys and wild pigs. Back at home, Lucy continues at St. Lawrence after a term in Austria. Leslie is at Kent Place School and Coral is in 5th Grade.

My Kate is at Harvard now and Lolly Bell Hetherington reports that Alex has started Kenyon. I hope some of our class children meet each other and find out what they have in common. Let me know. Kate and my son Charlie have enjoyed Jane Christie Smith's ('58) boys Tim and Andy so much.

Post 25th Reunion reactions and general news from and about the Class are consistent (and probably predictable) with our group's first 25 years out: quiet.

Interestingly, a form of private reunion-away-from-the-Big One took place in Oregon the second weekend in June. Rick Seifert, Ed Clark (once known as "Bucky") and Dale Forster and families gathered that weekend at Dale's family's Oregon vacation cabin tucked away in the semi-arid Deschutes River country east of the Cascade Mountains. In Rick's words, "... fortified by family, Scrabble, Trivial Pursuit, fly-fishing and keen retentive minds, we conjured up ancient Andover images: Mr. Leete's exhortations to lunch line stragglers, pads of butter stuck to the Commons' ceilings, Heathy Malone's primal allure, Billy Kingston's miraculous long-range set shots and Chunky Kessler in general. As always, we fondly wondered about Quattlebaum." (There's something about the imagery cultivated in a generation of Rockford, Illinois, males.)

Ed Clark is a Portland, Oregon, radiologist who, in Rick's words, has recently taken up windsurfing but who shows none of the mid-life physical deteriorations evident in Dale and Rick. Dale is a fanatical bridge player, stamp collector and fly-fisherman; "does something in Eugene, Oregon, with real estate which seems both legal and profitable." Rick describes himself as a more or less unbiased newspaper reporter in Olympia, Washington, where "my job is deciphering state government for readers of the Tacoma News-Tribune."

Ed, describing the same weekend and the various levels of ambivalence of the participants toward the Reunion at Andover, mentions that the 1980 Pulitzer Prize, which went to the Longview, Washington paper for reporting on the Mt. St. Helen's eruption, was in large measure Rick Seifert's work: "In his first year on that paper he wrote six or seven of the ten stories submitted for the Prize. Hence the Class is doubly blessed."

Bob Le Roy, a recent Reunion participant as well as teacher and athletic director at The Dunn School in Los Olivos, Calif., married Jo Nan Fleury in early August. ... The notes last issue lists Harvey E. Mole III as a corporate mogul and Asian Expert, when actually, we find out, via Stu Richardson he's currently a Tibetan monk. ... Dorsey Gardner is director of the Crane Co., of plumbing fixture fame. ... In the legal-beagle world (remember our Class is nearly 45% lawyers), the 15 April issue of the National Law Journal features "Profiles in Power," a subjectively drawn list of the 100 most powerful and influential lawyers in America, and includes Duncan Kennedy, Harvard Law School professor, described as "a passionate spokesman for the radical Critical Legal Studies movement within legal academia, sometimes dubbed 'the New Left played out in the law'". ... Left off the list and therefore arguably less powerful, but certainly more publicized, William Bradford Reynolds, an exponent of the New Right played out in the law, made the nation's headlines in the early summer as the Reagan administration's unsuccessful nominee for associate attorney general of the U.S. Brad continues in his current position as assistant attorney general in charge of the Civil Rights Division of the Dept. of Justice.

Absolute "must" reading for every Class member is the July issue of M, a slick, monthly male fashion magazine, which featured a multi-page article, including full color photo(s), on Ward Woods, "The Sporty Banker." With the publication of this article at the same time as the Reunion, no wonder Woody made only a cameo appearance.

A frequently repeated request at the Reunion was to feature in these Notes, where possible, more personal news relative to individual families, births, deaths, happiness, satisfactions, and the generally subjective side of our lives, rather than just the promotions, awards and measurable achievements which seem so typical in smugly written comments of this kind. The attempt will be made, in full agreement and total sincerity. Please start the ball rolling, in whatever tentative fashion you can, with the understanding that your news and views will receive full sensitivity. Keep in touch.

I am absolutely delighted with the enthusiastic return of news from those I contacted. Thanks for making this column possible.

With the start of my new job, I am aware of the cyclical nature of my life. Every five to seven years, I undergo a major upheaval of some sort or other — move, child, divorce, school, job, etc. Apparently, others are also under this influence. The following news tidbits reflect this phenomenon.

Susie Lothrop Koster is buying an 1826 family home in West Boxford and moving from Florida. Her eldest daughter, Tanja, has just begun her sophomore year at Mount St. Mary's; her second daughter, Robin, begins her Upper year at Andover. Her other two, Erika and Bridget, are entering the 7th and 5th grades. Cyndy Smith Bailes, a Tupperware manager, moved coast to coast twice in 4-½ months last year and can now be found in Augusta, Georgia. Her eldest, Darcie, who attends Old Dominion, is engaged to be married. Cyndy has had several family deaths recently, but sounds cheerful and is sorry she missed reunion. Another Cindy, Cindy Bump Neusbaum is a receptionist for a software company. She is living in Walnut Creek, Calif. with her son Douglas, 17, and her daughter Jenny, 15. Lissa Dexter Potsubay is enjoying her family move to Clearwater, Fla. from Holyoke, Mass. Terry Hydemann Seward stayed on the Vineyard, but moved from one town to another. Her two sons, Willy and Mark, 18 and 16, are independent young people. Terry is a ten-year employee of the U.S. Post Office and enjoys her herb garden and cooking. She claims to have settled into middle age well. Speaking of ... Beth Van Winkle Boynton says middle age is fun and exciting. She and her husband have just celebrated their 24th anniversary. She works as a legal advocate at a shelter for battered women in Waterbury, Ct. Five years ago she began an organization of the performing arts that runs programs in the schools. One son will graduate from Bard as an acting major, a daughter attends Tufts, and her 7-year-old son, Alden, is a pianist extraordinaire. Her husband, Oren, is based in Litchfield, their home, and need not commute anymore.

Corky Auxier Perez began her own organization that collects food for the local humane society. Daughter, Bretton, 18, was class salutatorian and begins pre-med studies. Son Jason, 15, is building character as a bus boy in the summer. I'm particularly proud to announce that Lindsay Knowlton received her M.F.A. in poetry in 1982, was recipient of a Mass. Artists Foundation 1983 fellowship, and winner of the 1984 Washington Poetry Prize from the Word Works, Inc.

Congratulations also to Allison (Sonny) Jennings McCance for her Yankee magazine published cookbook The Clockwatchers Cookbook. Maggie Elsemore Sipple passed this tidbit along. My Andover info lists Sonny as a professional athlete ... no wonder the clock is watched. Maggie teaches 9th and 10th grade English at Salisbury in CT. Ginny Pratt Agar, from Rowayton, Conn. can cram more news onto a postcard than anyone I know! She was uneasy about coming to Reunion without a "buddy" and Joan Hagerman Nichols, with whom Ginny keeps in touch, wasn't able to come, but hopes to make the 30th. "I teach in addition to family," she says. Her family consists of husband, Mike, VP in charge of ambulatory service at a major NYC hospital; two boys, Carter, 13, who attends the King School in Stamford, and Trevor, 11. Her daughter Elizabeth is 5. Sally Barngrove McQuilkin sent two photos of the 25th that Sally Foote Hubby's husband had taken. Kathy Stevens and I are as prominent in these photos as the one published last Bulletin. Thanks to Sally for the photo of the class on the steps with Miss Ritchie. Sally met Sarah Jasper Cook's sister Mary at a D.C. conference for Development Officers. Mary says that Sarah is living near Andover. Please contact me, Sarah.

Question: Am I the only member of our class to remember that we buried a time capsule on the Abbot grounds to be opened at our 25th? Thanks to all who sent in news.

It's early September, the summer is not yet quite over, the air is still warm, but by the time you read this, the first snow will have flown here in Denver, the mountains will be coated in white, and the holiday season will be approaching. These are some people you might want to think about and wish well over the holidays: Andy Cohen continues to live the life of a pioneer in Jerusalem, playing his trumpet, captaining the Hebrew University squash team and keeping up with his wife and two children. Andy's wife, Sabrina, was instrumental in bringing the first visit of the U.S. Surgeon General to Israel as part of an anti-smoking campaign. Bill Drayton was a 1984 winner of a MacArthur Prize of $200,000 to follow "his own creative bent." Since it's true that one gets back what one puts out, it is not surprising that Bill received a MacArthur. His work in the EPA was only the beginning of a distinguished career involving public service. Bill has been actively working on re-arranging our society and its politics and is someone who continues to make a difference by his actions. Congratulations, Bill.

Another contributor to the world in which we live is John Marks. As a founder and director of "Search for Common Ground," John's interests in improving relations with the Soviet Union parallel my own and it is rewarding to watch John do work for his cause. Cy Hornsby reports himself feeling his age as he struggles with a 13-lawyer practice. . . . Gibson Lanpher remains in Zimbabwe as Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy. . . . Keith Lauder is Chief of Orthodontics at Remstein AFB, Germany. . . . Fred Gass reports himself on paternity leave from Miami University while he enjoys his son David, now a year old. . . . Jack Stroud is CEO of InterFirst Bank in Clifton, Texas. . . . Landon Carter has started a new consulting firm known as Dynamic Financial Presentations in San Francisco. He rides a mountain bike to stay in shape and his wife, Beky, is now a showing sculptor. Jim Knowles move over!

Bob Trivers, Professor of Biology at the University of Calif., Santa Cruz, is the author of a new book entitled Social Evolution. Bob has been described as a "Pivotal figure in the development of modern evolutionary biology. . . ." Joe Jefferds reports from St. Albans, West Virginia, that he continues as an alumni rep, but complains that none of his candidates has gotten into PA. Bill Pugh '63 handles Charleston, and, together, Joe and Bill would like to see some admissions from their area. Don Davis reports that he is up to his ears in teenagers. Don, a successful interior designer in Waco, Texas, is looking forward to our 25th Reunion next 13-15 June and I will be looking forward to seeing him.

I had great visits with two classmates, Dan Perin and Tom Evslin. Dan is a banker in Phoenix and travels to Denver frequently to see his in-laws, while Tom continues creating innovations in the computer world through his company, Solutions, Inc., in Montpelier, Vermont.

Hearing from you all by mail is always fun, but seeing classmates, I must say, is a lot more fun. As usual, I'm holding back a couple of letters, but you will hear from Bill Fay, Brad Donahue, Steve Hobson and Peter Fuller in the next column. I'm a little embarrassed because Pete wrote me so long ago and has yet to find his way into the column. Well, now, Pete, you'll be in twice in a row. CHEERS.

Scratch Ed Moore from the "lost" list. He's living in Honolulu and heads the English Department at Punahou, where he's taught since 1970. He also coaches girls' varsity softball and was voted Coach of the Year in 1984 by one of the two Honolulu dailies. Ed was remarried in 1980 to Delia Cross, and they now have a daughter, Lora, 2, and a 13-year-old son, Terry, both living with them. Ed's daughter Maile, 10, lives near Philadelphia with her mother. Ed and Delia spend the summers in Westport, N.Y. where he runs the hiking program for Camp Dudley. They usually touch base with Jim and Marcie Mettler, who are close by on Lake George.

Mo Zuckerman, who is in the second year of his four-year term as an Alumni Trustee, has moved his family to Los Angeles to head up investment banking in the West for Morgan Stanley. Larry Ehrhart was recently named chief financial officer and executive vice president of the Signature Group. Word comes from Phillips Exeter that Bruce Pruitt, who has been on the history faculty there since 1973, has been named the school's Bicentennial Instructor for the 1985-90 term. In selecting Bruce for this exceptional honor Principal Stephen Kurtz was quoted as saying that he is a "teacher whose excellence of performance in all phases of boarding school life has won the highest respect of both colleagues and students."

In family news, another alumni publication reports that Jack Badman recently married Katherine Ballentine of Andover, N.J. . . . Tom Gilbert has a Tommy, Jr., who was born 13 July 1984. Hot on his heels was Jim Rabb's first child, Daniel Alexander, who arrived on 11 August. This past February Kay and I had our second child (my fourth), Michael. Meanwhile, somewhere in New York City Jerry Bramwell and his wife are expecting their third child. . . . Chris Nelson hasn't had any children recently but says that Tony, 5, and Margo, 3, keep him young — and tired. Bill Mann's son Bill III entered Andover this fall as a lower where he will pursue academic excellence while Bill pursues the money to pay his tuition. Finally, Russ Donaldson issues this challenge. His second child and first daughter, Elizabeth Marguerite, was born 3 October 1984. He claims this as a record for "lateness in a child from a first marriage to a contemporary." Before we concede anything here (though I, for one, am not inclined to bet against him), can anyone top that? Remember, even if you can't right this minute, maybe in nine or ten months? Well, you'll have to decide whether you want to go for the class record on this:

Todd Lueders was recently elected President of the Yale Club of Monterey and Secretary of the Society of Northern California Grantmakers. When otherwise not so occupied, he serves as Executive Director of the Community Foundation for Monterey County. Ty Shen "still works as VP-Research Director for Cabot Advertising in Boston. Non-working hours filled with helping my wife, Linda, rear our rambunctious trio (Christopher, 8, Victoria, 6, and Sarah, 4)." Camping and fishing complete an otherwise almost full life, except he did write "Go Celts, beat LA." Oh, well. . . .

Richard Clapp thinks "things are pretty calm here in Jamaica Plain." He is studying for a Ph.D. in epidemiology while working full time. I am not sure what you think excitement is? At last report, Vic Petzy was one of the finalists for the position of Assistant Principal of the North Andover High School. And the winner is . . . ? Since 1982, Vic supervised an in-school suspension program and other student services in the Wilmington (Mass.) Public Schools. Robert Fidelman lost a long battle with cancer on 25 April 1985. Our deepest sympathies to his wife, Trixie, and his family.

My summer has been a blur of exciting events. After spending two weeks in Israel where my daughter Roberta celebrated her bas mitzvah, I served as a Visiting Scholar-in-Residence at the University of Sheffield, England. Then a week-long training program in Maine and now back to fall classes. And so it goes.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING. . . keep in touch.

How time flies! It's been 2½ years since our 20th reunion and my turn to take over for Morley Marshall Knoll (and the excellent job she's done!) as class secretary. Speaking of Morley, she came through Washington in early July en route to the ABA convention in London where Jim was a scheduled speaker. They managed to do some hiking in England and then returned to Portland for a summer filled with some work, relaxation, and time at the beach. While in the DC area Morley caught up with Helen Watson Collison in Wilmington, Delaware. Helen and family are fine and she continues to enjoy her work at Digital Equipment. Morley reported that she'd heard from Jan Gleason Perry who continues to live on her horse farm on Bainbridge Island and who recently received her Seaman's Papers from the Coast Guard. Jan hopes to work as a deck hand on the ferry system serving the San Juan islands in Washington state. Morley's trip east prevented her from seeing Meg Power who was at a Department of Energy conference in Portland in July. A call to Meg's house found her out but confirmed she is now the mother of Ben who joins four-year-old Emily as a part of the Eisenber-Power household.

I'm in touch with Sue Burton who spent two weeks in Chatham, Massachusetts followed by a week on the Outer Banks of North Carolina this summer. Sue is back at work at the National Geographic and currently working on redecorating the Edward Durrell Stone building. A letter to Sue from Ann Harris reports that Ann is now living four blocks from the Palisades Park overlooking the Santa Monica beach and the Pacific Ocean. Ann is involved in two improvisation classes which she finds exciting and stimulating. Ann reported that Danica Miller Eskind exhibited at the San Francisco Crafts Fair last spring. Ann was unable to attend but hoped that Muriel Destaffany Karr and Danica were able to connect.

Bettina Proske Walker wrote that she, Robert and son Detrick visited relatives in Germany this summer. They left Detrick with a nanny in Germany while they enjoyed a short but much appreciated holiday in Portugal before all three returned home to Tuscon, Arizona.

While in Massachusetts this summer I caught up with Carrie Holcombe Damp who is looking wonderful and who had inspiringly organized her house and hallway-nook office in preparation for her seventh year of teaching fourth grade at Milton Academy.

That's all the news I have for now. Please keep in touch and have a wonderful fall.

With our 20th reunion behind us, plans are under way for our 25th. As you read this you may have already received a post-mortem of the 20th, with impressions and thoughts of the attendees. Some class "officer" changes of note: Terry Kahn and Paul Henry have graciously volunteered to head up the 25th Reunion effort and Franz Schneider will become familiar to you all as the new Class Agent. I, your faithful scribe, will continue my role as secretary.

Terry and Rose Kahn had their third child, Curtis Paul (PA Class of 2002?) in July. Terry is one of the mainstays of Boston Magazine (his last title was Senior Editor I think). Drew Spears wrote (thank you!) to say that he is working on his MBA at Lehigh. Dan Turbeville, who has been in the temporary tattoo business, will shortly be off to Japan to learn acupuncture (he'll be a very good man to know when your back gives out!). Dave Herrelko (Lt. Col, USAF) is a Senior Research Fellow at National Defense University in Washington, DC. Dave sends postcards frequently from all around the world (most recently from Melbourne). Sam Alberstadt and wife Eleanor visited us in New York last spring. Sam had just finished taking the law boards. Ernie Hemingway's cover was broken by his father who revealed that Ernie was now an executive VP at Shape, Inc., in Biddeford ME. The eldest of his three daughters is an upper at PA. Mike Hudner has been a principal in an international shipping firm, Berguall & Hudner, involved in all aspects of international shipping ventures.

Hope you have a pleasant fall.

It was great to get some replies to the cards I sent out. If you didn't get one don't feel left out. I'm trying to contact a third of the class for each Bulletin issue.

Beth Humstone Gignoux writes that she'll be living in Rome for six months as a recipient of a Rome Prize Fellowship from the American Academy in Rome. Husband Reg and son Christopher will be joining her. Congratulations, Beth! Blake Hazzard Allen wrote from Rumney, NH where she, husband John, and Whitney, 14, Charles, 10, and Merritt, 7, spend summers. John teaches at Annapolis and Blake does research and writing in the field of women's history.

One person already planning to attend our 20th reunion is Margy Ryder Kornblum. Margy and husband Rick were married last February. Margy is a human resources manager and a certified Kepner-Tregog instructor. She says, "I'm trying to be a supermom to Jackie, 19, Robbie, 16, and Christopher, 9, . . . and find time occasionally to work in the garden for stress relief."

Ayer Chamberlain is head of the Child Life Program at a Richmond, Virginia hospital. Her husband David has been transferred to an office several hours away so they're a weekend commuter couple for the time being. Ayer's activities include ". . . work on various professionally related boards, fighting southern droughts to keep my gardens blooming and attempts to master the art of Middle Eastern dance."

Lorinda Burling Gannon has graduated from the Harvard Graduate School of Education. She does counseling from her home, works part-time for a carpenter/contractor and is trying to learn polarity therapy. She comments, "It's a nice change from running the community mental health and social service program I was involved in. I have more time to be creative."

From the other side of the world, Sumatra to be exact, comes news of Valerie de-Peyster. She's on a cruise ship which has over twice the number of passengers as the population of Sandgate, VT., where she lives. Her style is exactly as I remember it.

"By the time I get back I'll know a lot more about Indonesia and Malaysia than I ever thought I would, and I'll promptly display some perfectly awful sketches with not so much as a moment's notice to anyone who is the least bit curious as to how the trip went." Barbara Hazard is in her second year of medical school in Berlin, but plans to transfer to a school in Switzerland. She already has a Ph.D. in Chinese studies, sociology and political science. Barbara has taught at universities in Berlin and London. She plans to go to China after she finishes medical school so she can combine western and Chinese medicine.

Betty Barker Conkling and husband Mike have a new baby, Daniel, to keep their daughter Jennifer company. She still works part-time as a cook. "If you can believe it, some people think that's what I always wanted to be!" She and Mike may get East one of these years — hopefully at reunion time.

Greetings. Borrowing a page from the "Blueprint for Better Government in Beirut," I have assumed command of this column — the only commission, as I recall, that I ever unrequitedly lusted after at PA (well, there was football captain, but they said I'd have to tackle somebody first). I accepted this mandate for three reasons: the pay is steady, the magazine classy, and someday I might seek higher office, like the Presidency of the United States. Don't laugh. Consider, to cite but one improbable example, George Bush.

Like most working journalists, I have almost no real news to pass along, except possibly about myself. The Alumni Office did send me a 112-page computer print-out covering our alleged whereabouts and professional activities. From this I gleaned that of approximately 280 class members, 37 are lawyers, 20 are medical men, and 10 have fallen into banking. Given that drift, I expected another 40 of you to be morticians by now, but I find instead that we've spawned a fair number of teachers, architects, engineers, book editors, corporate executives and (these must have been the guys who took the phrase "the great end and real business of living" to heart) consultants. Other entries bear closer investigation. For instance, Carlos de Sola, who's listed with the Ministry of Education, Culture, Youth & Sports in El Salvador (wouldn't you like to spend a week in that office?). Or Joe O'Hern, who is (or was) working out of the Majority Leader's office of the Iowa State House, Iowa being one of those states where obscure politicians go to get famous. There are others I want to know about, and all of you should write me. Or dictate something over your modem.

One chap I do know something about is Anthony Alofsin, my old roommate and partner in serious crime. Anthony is finishing up a Ph.D. in art history at Columbia and was the first Scholar in Residence at Taliesen West, one of two Frank Lloyd Wright repositories. He will be teaching a Wright seminar at Columbia this spring and has been asked to author the definitive history of the Harvard Graduate School of Design, from which he also holds a degree. He lives in New York, New Mexico, Vienna, Venice, and my spare bedroom, depending on the wind direction. I will say nothing for now about his personal life. There are, however, standard filing procedures under the Freedom of Information Act.

Anthony reports several evenings on various towns with another of his ex-roomies, Wheelock Whitney. Lock is a private art dealer in Manhattan, having returned state-side from London's Courtauld Institute of Art. I assume he owns a few fancy canvases himself. Another Londoner, Mark Hausberg, who peddles Eurodollars or some damn thing for Morgan Guarantee, was recently seen by the vacationing Bob Cohan and family. Bob, once an Asst. Attorney General in Mass., is living in Newton and starting a law partnership specializing in litigation and corporate work. Our class can obviously sue with the best of 'em.

As for me, I'm a full-time feature writer for INC. magazine ("The Magazine for Growing Companies"), a fairly full-time free-lancer (Travel & Leisure, TV Guide, etc.), a part-time Maine farmer, and, as of this fall, a round-the-clock houseparent. My son James, 14, may not be the oldest PA '67 child (didn't Steve Kellogg beat me?), but he must be the first one to reach high school and find one of his old man's classmates there: Sandy Stott, now in residence at Concord Academy as teacher and coach. I don't know who this hits harder, Sandy or me, but I like to think that Jaime's in great hands and should soon be beating me in tennis. Lord, though, how the years slip by.

My next deadline is early January. Go ahead, stuff my mailbox.

As a result of a wonderfully long and newsy letter from Judy Hannegan Sherman, she is the featured alumna this time. And what interesting news she provides! She, her husband, Marcus, and their three young children (Kelly, 7, Annie, 4, and Nicholas, 2) returned last summer from Bangkok, Thailand, where they had lived for about five years. Judy humorously described some of the cultural differences as well as the changes (e.g. Cindy Lauper) that shocked her and her family upon their return. But they seem to have adapted, and Marcus' new career is surely keeping their life exciting. He is now a licensed boat captain, and the Shermans have bought a 200-year-old captain's house and "settled" in Hyannis Port. I put settled in quotes, since the Shermans will be wintering in Key West. That's where the ketch Marcus skipper will be spending the winter. Can't get away from the wanderlust, can you!

Judy, thanks for your letter, and I hope others of you out there will follow suit.

I've gotten feedback from a number of you over the years about how nice it is to be able to keep up with the comings and goings of fellow alumnae. I must add that I love being the Class Secretary. . . but I can't write anything without your input. So let me hear from you.

This summer my girlfriend was lucky enough to escape the sweltering heat of Washington and work for a law firm in Rochester, N.Y. When I visited her during the Corn Hill festival, a crafts fair that goes on for blocks, who should be standing on the corner in a familiar pose — a hand on his hip — but Scott Forsyth? He hasn't changed a bit, except he's taller and needs to shave these days. He's a lawyer with his family's firm in Rochester and is married to a member of Team Xerox.

Also on the legal front, Skip Jensen has become a partner in Cummings & Lockwood, a Connecticut law firm. Ken Krier also is a partner in the firm. Ken Blake says he has just released his first solo album. He's got two boys, Braden, 4, and Elliot, 16 mos. Ken writes, "The older I get, the corner, and I'm always drawing on experiences with Andover people that have taught me that integrity and survival are not incompatible." Chris Moore also has two boys, 7 and 8, has built a house in Hebron, Conn., and is working for Aetna in life actuarial. Ted Kohler says he is enjoying academic surgery, life in the Northwest and most important, six-month-old Andrew Kohler.

Finally, in what was a disappointing small batch of mail, Russ Hall produced a bit of motherlode. He says that he sees Brandt Andersson and Patti regularly. Ward Flad is administering emergency medicine while Frank Currie is practicing law, Russ says. He adds that he and Debbie are helping two computer start-up companies in Silicon Valley.

One note: someone at PA was responsible for adding some quotation marks to my last epistle, which ended up being misleading. It was not Dan Koch, but rather yours truly who visited South Africa in March. I disclaim all blame for what has happened since my visit.

Greetings. Summer is over and the back-to-school sounds are everywhere: pencils sharpening, lunchboxes snapping, children's voices subdued from mild shock.

Amazing. I bet no matter how old we get to be, September will always be back to school month.

Well, I went to the post office every day and there was not a word from any of you. Not one card, not one note — nothing. RIEN! What am I to think? Obviously you are all so busy that you don't have the time to sit down and write. I understand. Up until this summer, I had forgotten that there was another way to communicate involving your fingers, other than dialing the phone: writing. But it does require a silent space, a commodity hard to find in a busy pace. Or . . . have you all lost interest in a time that seemed so long ago? When even in all of our confusion, we felt we had all the answers, which were clearly multiple choice and in black and white. Whatever the reason, I can't give news if I don't have any: no peas in the pot, no soup.

Karen Seaward received her Ph.D. in Materials Science and Engineering from Stanford University in June 1984. She is now working for Hewlett-Packard in R&D, while cross-country skiing and cycling (hard trick, Karen!). Sounds amazing — how I wish I had gotten past Earth Science.

Nancy Roberts (nee Applehead) is awaiting the birth of infant #1 in 100° Los Angeles heat. This child will surely be a wonder: a true Californian, shake and bake.

What else? Any of you New York bunnies want to rendezvous for an after drink work this fall? (I know it's backwards!) So if you feel like it, come to:

Gotham
12th St. between 5th and University
January 16, 1986
between 5:30-6:30 p.m.

Put it on your calendar. If no one comes, I'll just finish my drink and walk the three blocks home and you'll never know what you missed. See you soon . . . and write. — Cher

P.S. Barbara Ainslie, Ricky Harvey, Judy Calfee, Jan Robinson where are you? News flash! Paula Atwood off to Ireland to see the sights. Good trip — hope its a lovely caravan.

It seems a bit premature on this pleasant September evening to realize that these pages will arrive around holiday time (remember those great 21-day PA vacations? Can we sign up for one?). In any case, I hope this edition of news from your fellow travellers finds you in strong physical, emotional and spiritual health.

Here is the news from Lake Snow-Begone.

Remember Art? Not Art Oller, banker, or Art Tuttle, agriculturist, but art. Mark Stevens does. I believe Mark's still an art critic for Newsweek, and his first novel, Summer in the City, was published not long ago by Random House. Jeremy "Edmund Wilson" Bluhm read it with great pleasure. "Many ideas," says Jeremy.

Chuck McDermott has not forgotten art either. He's been doing songs for movies, and performing hither and yon with John Stewart, once of the Kingston Trio. Of his life as a musician, Chuck said (in the Boston Globe), "It's somewhat like being in the army. You have to go where the battle is." Chuck lives in L.A.

Elliott "Lew" Stewart is also still at the strings. He's a fiddler heading an up-and-coming country band in SF, while also administering seminars for the California CPA Foundation. Another fiddler, southern-style, is Jeff Claus, whose group has a new album out on Rounder Records. Check out "Chokers and Flies." Jeff is by now also the proud owner of a Cornell doctorate in anthropology.

Stay with it, brothers. As one who has occasionally suffered the entrancements of the aesthetic impulse, I can only recall Shakespeare's remark: "No one said it was going to be easy."

Fred Drake, who is probably still as tall as Nate Cartmell, has been named the Chairman of the History Dept. at the Colorado Springs School. He's invited all of us to look him up in C. Springs. Summer '87 is my next cross-country jaunt, Fred, so look out. Another historian is in the crowd. Sam Brainerd, late of the U.S. Army, is headed for a doctorate in history and archaeology at the University of Maryland. Are you still a runner, Sam?

Peter Kunen is back in Marlboro, MA after years as a public defender in Hazard, KY. He's married, and has joined the law firm of Kunen and Hart. Another lawyer is Salt Lake City native Tom Kroesche. Tom is out in southern Cal., where it's warm all year long. That climate seems to agree with a number of people, including Pete Olney who is getting his MPA at UCLA, and who was married over the summer. Pete had our buddy Tom Francis, Exeter '69, as his best man. Peter is a forgiving guy. Tom played in Exeter's line way back when Pete was All-Prep, and in the days when some of our members spent autumn afternoons wearing helmets and shin pads.

If all goes according to plan, I will by now have moved from beautiful downtown Dorchester to beautiful downtown Cambridge, and will have become a neighbor of Wayne Barron and Megan Brook (AA '70), both of whom I've been seeing from time to time. Often this involves swimming out to the middle of Boston Harbor, since that's where they and their sailboat can be found much of the time between spring and fall.

The international travel award this time goes to Bob Furse, who last year travelled to mainland China. Says Bob, "Better to enjoy Chinese food ahead of time. Human interest element the most rewarding, although sights and sounds fascinating."

So there it is — all the news we've got this time around. Have a great holiday, and keep singing, all you boulevardiers.

I know, I know. I missed submitting the Class Notes for the last Bulletin. It would be easy to say that no one wrote anything. But, truth is that my family and I were in the throes of moving, and Class Notes were not on my mind at the time.

After eleven cozy years in Baltimore, we moved to the genteel south in July. My husband, Bill, is the new Assistant Headmaster and Director of Upper School at Christ Church Episcopal School in Greenville,

S.C. It has been quite an adjustment in letting go of the old and facing the new and untried. Somehow I can't quite get used to being called a "Yankee." I do hate being labeled.

One day, feeling somewhat lonely and wanting to hear a familiar adult voice, and realizing that class notes were due, the time seemed ripe to phone former classmates. Armed with tremendous curiosity, the class list and my telephone in hand, I called.

Lightning struck. The first call was to Sandy Waugh Winans. Sandy is anxiously awaiting the birth of her second child on 14 September. Her plans are to take a leave from teaching for about a year, then go back to work. Maybe.

I always enjoy that precise moment when a surprise turns from shock into recognition, as it did when I called Peggy Howes. In her laid-back way, Peggy told me of her recent marriage to her love of many years. Piglet was the director of a community education program for nine years which included tutoring those who had not finished high school. Now, however, Peggy's pursuing a master's in education, which she will finish this fall.

Peggy mentioned that Wendy Ewald, who is a professional photographer, has published a book of her work. Peggy has seen some of Wendy's work featured in a spring issue of Psychology Today.

The final call went to Helene Jenkins Tolbert. Contrary to rumors, Helene only has three children (two adolescents and a baby) and she loves every minute of it. Helene hasn't sung much since her days at Abbot, remembering that singing with The Group was a wonderful and satisfying experience. She feels that she does her best singing now in the privacy of her bathroom. Any of you with children can appreciate that.

Other news: Betsy/Melanie Gifford's picture was featured on the cover of the Baltimore Sun's Sunday magazine in relation to an article on art conservation. Jessie Luenberger Butler's visage in the audience of a Phil Donahue show was noticed by a couple of people. Carlton and Betsy Hoover Sexton hosted their annual "Orioles' Weekend." Members of their party were mutual friends which also included my family (this time we came as tourists and not as residents). Betsy has just recently become the membership chairperson of the Maryland League of Women Voters.

Margie Lord (100 Rutgers Ave., Swarthmore, PA 19081) sends word that she would love to hear from Debbie Elliott.

Well, I don't know what spurred me to call Sandy, Peggy and Helene in particular. But, after sixteen years, the conversation flowed so easily. Thank you, ladies. You were great therapy for me, as I felt myself languishing in a new place without friends . . . yet. Oooo. I can't wait until the next notes are due so that I can call again!

Final news of the reunion. Chip Boynton managed to close the books with a $500 surplus! The monies will be placed in a war chest for our 20th.

I am grateful that Rob Christie had enthusiastically agreed to serve as a deputy Class Secretary. Anyone else who would like to contribute to the Class Notes should please write me. Rob's address is 1030 West Melwood, Houston, Texas 77009, and his work follows. . .

Gary Tourtellotte wrote that he is a marine biologist with an environmental and engineering consulting firm. He has just earned the five-year residence award from Tampa. . . Doug Adler's wife Prudence, wrote that she is an analyst for the Office of Technology Assessment, and he practices marine law and they have two children, Tyler, 3, Jonathan $\frac{3}{4}$ yr., . . . David Short reported that the woodworking business was very, very good to him, and that Katherine was $2\frac{1}{2}$ and beautiful. . . John Korba and his wife, Jill, are raising son Nicholas while stationed in London with the drilling equipment division of Armco, Inc. (It was at a rig christening keg in Houston that Korba and I discovered he had marketed the drilling rig, and I had built it as Supervisor of Fabrication at Armco.) Look John up if you're in London.

Rob Robinson and Kiki told of two sons, Jamie and Christopher. Rob has turned in his Mexican hat for a pair of Hoosier suspenders, changing turf at National Bank of Detroit from the International to the Midwest sector. David Cohen became the Big Daddy of Alison Esther Cohen, born 19 November '84. His note beamed with fatherly pride.

In 1980 I saw Grant Heidrich in snapshots of someone's Egyptian vacation. . . My sources in the Massachusetts State House recently dined with John Pynchon, who has moved to Boston. . . Steve Pieters' parents were at the Reunion and reported that he has been gravely ill, and lives in L. A. I sent a card and received a nice note in return. I'm sure he would like to hear from classmates. . . Jeff Marshall's brother Peter '65 was at the Royce's cocktail party in June, and reported Jeff alive and well in Manhattan. News of Andy Wexler and Geri came by way of my Dartmouth class newsletter: we learned that daughter Rebecca's delivery was precipitated by a Saturday night in the 10-year reunion tent in Hanover. He reported moving to Los Angeles for the pink tofu, and incidentally to do a fellowship in plastic and reconstructive surgery at UCLA.

Stephanie Dantos and I had pizza at Antonio's Flying Dough Palace in Houston several weeks ago. She was in town visiting friends and was temporarily crippled by a night on the town with John Knapp '69 and others. A call to George McLellan a moment ago confirmed that he was still mending broken hearts in Houston and running Harbour Financial Group, where he wheels and deals in limited partnership syndications.

That's the news. I'm starting a newsletter, and anyone who wants to help or contribute should send items to me at the above address. Let's all keep in touch. — Rob.

Reunion planning requires a lot of special effort by a lot of special people. Foremost among them: our new class agents. Chairman Rob Hearne will combine his efforts on Andover's behalf with investment banking in New York, and raising two children in Princeton, N.J. . . . Tim Black, musician and performer, and Dr. Doug Buxton will be co-chairmen. Please heed their siren calls.

Jim Abrams writes from New Mexico that he is no longer teaching English in Albuquerque, having accepted a position as Language Arts Specialist for the state department of education. Jim Bakker has also relocated — he now runs the Cambridge Antique Shop, with "special discounts to classmates." Jeb Bush is a real estate broker and developer in Miami. He and his wife, Columba, have three children, George, 9; Nuelle, 8; and Jeb, Jr., 16 mos. He's in the public eye as chairman of the Dade County Republican Party.

Louis Harding suffers from 14½ year blahs, but will presumably soldier on until Reunions! George Loring, Music Director for the Dance Department at St. Pauls, also travels throughout New England playing piano concerts and accompanying Manchester's Choral Society.

John Smith is working on a Ph.D. in Math Education at Syracuse: small wonder he's looking forward to next June! Paul Sternberg finished up his residency at Johns Hopkins, and has joined the faculty at Emory University as Assistant Professor of Ophthalmology.

There is still a crying need for people to help with reunion planning and fund raising. Assistance with reunions can mean suggestions for activities, all the way up to chairing the committee. If you have interest, please call me at home, 617-631-2984, or at work, 617-922-5937. The 10th reunion dinner was lobster, but this time around it might be fast food, without additional volunteer planning support.

Greetings all! We are delighted to be able to update the class news a bit this time. Should you have more recent news of anyone, please write us. Nancy Phillips Peoples and I are sharing the writing of the Class Notes, and this issue it is my turn. Nancy and her husband, Keith, have recently moved to Windermere, FL 32786 (9806 Mohr's Cove Lane). On to the news:

Sue Dampier King and Tom have two children, Kathy, 1, and Christy, 3½. Sue graduated from Cal State Hayward with a Master's in Biochemistry this summer. She hopes to teach part-time at a junior college. Tom started a mortgage credit reporting business which is doing well. They see Linda Hynson, who has been living in L.A. for the past seven years and works as a sign language interpreter on a free lance basis. She bought a house about a year ago. Ruth Raser Timbrell and Cary live in San Francisco with Margaret, 6; Clayton, 4; and James, 2. Ruth has just been accepted into a 4-year commitment to be a docent at the DeYoung Museum. She and Cary recently took a trip to Paris, Nice and London, so you can assume that she hasn't changed a whole lot! Lucy Pope Worgaftik and Mark had their first child, a girl named Alex, in August. They are living outside of Boston, and both continue to teach and perform in concerts regularly. Mark is a percussionist. Carol Kennedy McCarthy and her husband live outside of Boston also and recently had their third child, Beven. The other two, Maeve and Owen, are nearing school age. Her husband is a third year law student at BC and Carol is on leave from a high tech firm where she does graphics.

Shelby Salmon Hodgkins and Charles have three children, Charles, Whitney and Cameron. Abby Johnson Cowperthwaite and David were East in May for a vacation and saw Lucy Pope Worgaftik, Dory Streett Mention and Beatrice McConnie Stroh-meyer. They ran into Claudia Comins in Washington. Claudia runs the direct mail fund raising effort for the Democratic National Committee. Abby is supervising manager for the Community Development Block Grant program for the state of Nevada. She is president of the League of Women Voters in Carson City and continues to be involved in citizen action opposing licensing a high-level radioactive waste dump in Nevada. David works for EPA in Nevada, where they just bought a house. Linda Hynson was their "best woman," as she puts it. Dory Streett Mention and David have a one-year-old boy, Andrew, and are about to move out of Spruce Head, Maine since David just started work at L.L. Bean and Dory is working as a college counselor part-time at the Hyde School. Beatrice McConnie Stroh-meyer (23 Alden Road, Watertown, MA 02172) and her husband have two children, Andres, 2, and Fernando, 4. Bea administers a school in the South End which teaches English to Hispanic children. Her husband is a private consultant to Not-for-Profit organizations. Didi Salling La Rochelle and Robert have two children Eric, 8; and Andrew. Didi continues to manage the campaign office for Jim Shannon '69 on a full-time basis.

Susan Pitts Dykstra and her husband, Jim, are living in Washington, DC. Sue works as a securities analyst in Baltimore at Alex Brown & Sons. She covers defense stocks after working for seven years in the Senate on defense issues. Jim is a professional staff member for the Senate Intelligence and Armed Services Committees. They have a new baby, Case William. Lynn Comley Tinker is living outside LA with her two sons, Casey, 6, and Kelly, 3. She is working towards her Master's degree in Educational Psychology and counsels at the Continuing High School. Lynn continues to write poetry and is working on a relationship with her birth parents. Jane Harlan is an art therapist with the homeless people of New York City's Bowery area. She has a year-old daughter and sends greetings to Jenny Martin Fallon. Jenny lives in Belmont . . . that's all I know of her. Jane Cynthia Johnson Pense is married to Philip and they have two children, PJ, 4, and Theron, 4 mos. She worked in the government until the December after PJ was born. Philip is an ex-cattle rancher and a current construction worker. They live on a cattle ranch 25 miles from the nearest town. Her comment: "It's quiet."

Because of the space limitations, I must end my column here, although I have quite a bit more news to report, so please do look for it here in the spring edition of the Bulletin. It's fun to be doing this again, and we are really grateful for your help. Keep writing, and we will include your news or contact the people you want to hear from. — Sandy.

Half-finished unpacking, he sat down in his new apartment to type another batch of notes. He was in a transitional state, his clothes still in suitcases, his bed — in lieu of a couch — in the front room, and the TV on the floor. The woman he cared about was two hours away, living in another city, working for Legal Services, that appendix of the Reagan Administration. But he had unpacked his books, and arranged them carefully in the glassed-in book shelves which had been the reason he'd taken the apartment in the first place. He kept telling himself he'd add one or two of his own to that collection, but at thirty-two or so years old, it was hard to be sure about anything anymore.

Only three notices this month. Jim McVeety, who as a teen-ager was wide-eyed and sly, all doped-up and sober as a judge, a wild and untrained intellect who introduced me to the joys of Suffragette City, writes from a sojourn in Czechoslovakia of Kafka's Castle and the Good Soldier Schweik. The woman who loves him speaks Russian; Jim can get by in German. In Praha they wander, American aphasics, through a country that has been erased by the twentieth century.

And Mace Yampolsky, that round force of nature, from Las Vegas, Nevada. I remember Mace primarily as an army coat who was homesick for the row houses of Revere, a city that still smells simultaneously of the sea and old concrete. Mace has bought a house on a street in the middle of the desert named Rhinelander Drive. He travels to Los Angeles and to Dallas, taking depositions in the wake of a hotel fire. In Los Angeles, he found Sheridan Liu at home and Jocko MacNelly at a motel swimming pool.

And finally, Steve Ross, who, it appears, died almost four years ago in a motorcycle accident in Portland, Ore. Word arrived via a form from the Alumni Office, on which someone had scrawled a query as to why no prior report. Another casualty of the bureaucratic shuffle, I suppose: a last small indignity. I remember Steve, of all places, in Benner house where, as a lower, he had good runs of luck on several of the machines. Like Mace, he wore an army coat, but was more sporty about it. In public he was pretty sure of himself, a kid who was smoother than a teenager has a right to be. He was brittle, though; at sixteen, he seemed concerned with the surface of things, as if he had not yet really encountered his interior life. There is no graduating picture of Steve in our yearbook. He departed early from Andover and from this life. Our condolences —unconsciously late — to Steve's family, to everyone who knew and loved him. [Ed. note: AO had only learned of Steve Ross's death at the beginning of June via a call to Reed College.]

Fifteenth reunion in less than two years. The Old Guard beckons: a small group of old men, underneath a single banner for convenience sake; the rest of us, in process now, eventually erased. But to Steve, as to Dave Ware, Pat O'Conner, Al Kazickas, Jim Bratton, Ned Yost, Pete Anderson: if we are only intermittently moved by your passings in the course of our own unfinished lives, maybe that's enough. Like our younger selves, we can at least carry you in our memories, and bring you — from time to time — to flickering life with our words. We'll hope that people do the same for us. With something akin to love.

It was Friday afternoon and I was at the local bakery. The door swung open and in walked the Taylors of Briarcliff Manor.

It seems that as a result of mention in my last column the Taylors were deluged (only a slight exaggeration) with calls. A query to Rocky (PA '72) if he knew "news" of others led to receipt of a long missive which began: "Finally, we disenfranchised and ignored have an alumni voice. The news is that AA, not PA is the news from 1972."

Well Rocky, you always had a voice in Walter's column; it's just the tone is sweeter from New York. (Walter, if you ever need a substitute, here's your man.) Unfortunately, the constraints of class column writing won't permit me to share all the comments and quips from Lord Taylor. But the facts as presented are — Rocky and wife, Sandy, got together in Manhattan with investment banker Mark Lawrence (PA '72), wife, Laurie, and baby Emily Catherine (now about six months old). A later rendezvous with attorneys Bijan Amini (PA '72) and his wife, Marcie, led to the determination the Bijan was in dire need of help. He was threatening to become an asst. federal prosecutor specializing in nabbing tax evaders.

Also present at that dinner were Steve Hoch (PA '72) and wife, Janie, visiting from Switzerland where Steve is an expatriate banker. They have two girls. Steve said they had just returned from sailing the coast of Turkey and were enroute to Martha's Vineyard to investigate maritime conditions for the bank. Rocky swears this knack for finding worthwhile projects was developed during Andover's February Week when Steve studied The Techniques of Ski Instruction.

Javier Baz (PA '72), his wife, Chantall, and their two children live in Greenwich, Ct.

And, finally, Rocky concludes his report with, "I am happy to report the arrival of first child William Randolph. You girls really have a great time during that interlude you call labor."

If anyone should know about labor it's our blue-ribbon class mother Lynn Graham Goldberg of Washington, D.C.. Already the mother of one girl, Lynn gave birth to twin boys (Mark and Daniel) last April. Last I knew she was taking a leave of absence from Wharton Econometrics where she manages the Federal Marketing Program. Holly Cleveland Lezcaro is the mother of two girls, Meg and Ana (ages two and three), and is pursuing an Ed.M. in Early Childhood Education. She started teaching pre-school in the Boston area this summer. Banker Kris Brainerd Innes of Sharon, Mass., should have borne baby number two by now giving 2½-year-old Maggie someone to play with. Husband/teacher Dan was looking forward to the summer off with the new bambino.

Even I am joining the ranks of those with second children. Our first, Anna (a.k.a. The Boss) started kindergarten and an ice hockey league this September, while baby

#2 is expected next spring.

Last but not least on the baby front, Joy Beane Briant's family has grown by one yellow lab. A one-and-a-half-year old pup named Bailey needed a home. And attorneys Briant had just the spot their newly built mansion overlooking Indian Brook Reservoir in Ossining, NY. Since Charlie and Joy's work schedule keeps them at a hectic pace, it's good someone will be able to enjoy their new home.

Liz Hall has given up working in a small animal clinic in Manhattan for a move to Japan where husband Derek Jaskulski was transferred by Bankers Trust. She will look for veterinarian work there. She should also look for Joanie Lichtman Corkin, who I'm told is on an Army base with her husband. Lila Wills Bronson, who now lives in San Gabriel, CA with new husband David, "an enterprising businessman dealing with plumbing and heating," is directing state and federal program implementation within some California schools. She writes grant proposals and supervises the instructional aids and curriculum. She took courses at UCLA this summer preparing to teach writing this year to students in the first through sixth grades. Sarah Pendleton has married and is teaching in the Maine Outward Bound Program. Jill Lerer is a third grade bilingual teacher in Lowell, Mass. Connie deSilva works at MIT Video Courses in Cambridge, plays her synthesizer, and lives in Somerville, Mass. after a few years as a northern state disc jockey and a far West rock band musician. Missy Baird attended Lila's wedding, which was held in Miami; was on a two week study tour of the People's Republic of China; visited Megan Schutte and Jim Mayock (PA '72) and wife Lydia in San Francisco. Her sister, Dr. Elizabeth Baird '75, was married last spring to Dr. William Randall Lay III. Missy has moved into the ranks of administration and is now Director of Consultation, Education and Training for Family Services in Tampa, Florida. She would like to hear from Sandy Reynolds Wasco of Calif. and Tad Sullivan (PA '72). She can be reached at 1151 Thayer St., Safety Harbor, FL 33572.

Attorney Leigh Brecheen of Los Angeles wrote that her mother, Ann Cutler Brecheen '35 attended her 50th reunion at Abbot last spring. Before we know it . . .

I write this column hastily, just before leaving to pick up Jim Hackett in Providence and then to Pleasant Valley to watch the pros spank the little white pea. Thought I might learn something, and not sure at all what Hackett will learn besides the location of the beer tent.

Not one solitary Alum took us up on our open house invitation this summer, which leads me to believe that either no member of the '73 class drinks and plays golf, or no one is reading the notes. We really are gracious hosts. Honestly.

One classmate, Ron Lacey, did indicate by letter that he would enjoy allowing me to teach him the "finer points of hooking and slicing" (I know them all) if ever he could get from Bartlesville, Oklahoma to Cape Cod. Ron spends time there as export manager for a high-tech electronics subsidiary of Phillips Petroleum. He reports that he is not on the fast track, but life is "pretty damn good" nevertheless. He has been isolated from Andover Alums for some time (I don't know why, there must be millions of them in Bartlesville), but did run into Gregg Hammer in Chicago, circa 1980. That experience affected him profoundly, I'll bet. Gregg was graduating from Northwestern Med. School in pediatrics at that time. So it's safe to assume he's now protecting the health and safety of the next Midwestern yuppie generation. Ron is, at this very moment, in London looking up Phil Kemp, and visiting his brother Ken Lacey '71 who is at Arthur Anderson. Thanks for the fine letter, Ron. I wish more of you mugs would follow suit. This job is no damn good, I tell 'ya.

One guy who stays in touch is Brooks Bloomfield, who, you may remember, was supposed to land on my doorstep this past summer, according to a daiquiri-influenced, cryptic phone message. . . . Well, you'll all be surprised to learn that he didn't make it. He reports by post card from Park City, Utah, that he never made it to the Cape because "Pease, Watson and Matt Barry were no longer in Arkansas, Florida or Atlanta." That's why he didn't call back. And he is now waiting to hear about a teaching job in Park City. That's some kind of explanation, Brooks! What are you teaching, logic I?

Bits of poorly Xeroxed hen scratchings reached my home this summer: Crafford Harris is still in graduate school in biochem at UCSF; also Alan Louie there on a research fellowship in psychiatry (call Brooks Bloomfield for a case study, Al). Craw visited Ned Jackson at Princeton; he's also a Ph.D. chemistry. Craw starts post-doctorate fellowship in developmental genetics at Berkeley next summer. Might he be cloning J. Fitz? Michael Beschloss, call Crafford at 415-666-3240 (O) or 415-566-6455 (H). Phil Bauman and wife just returned from Nepal, India; Burma and Thailand and settled back into the apple for more orthopedic surgery and married life.

George Mackor married wife Jill M. in Sept. '83 in Hinesville, GA; produced offspring Katie Michelle in Nov. '84; opened family dentistry in Manlius, NY; and lives in Rayetteville, NY. Wants to know how to find Andre Bacalao. That's all the folks I've heard from. Five of you louts! No phone call, no nothing!

I just had dinner two nights in a row with Matt MacIver '72, one in Chatham, one at a great little art deco joint in Boston called Cornucopia on West Street. Check it out. Matt just left the Lincoln Institute in Cambridge to devote time to a historic rehab project in Perth Amboy, NJ. Great tax shelter, if anyone has some cabby to drop.

Hackett and I are talking about a large bash for Eastern U.S. Alums, sometime during the winter. It would help out a lot if you bums could let me know your desires to attend, and then Hack will know how much Riunite to buy. Call at night, 617-778-0397.

Betsy (Roscoe '75) has changed careers, and is now Art Director for Cape Cod Life magazine. It is available on news stands from coast to coast, and will inform you all of just what an idyllic life we're supposed to be leading here. It's all lies, I tell you. But then, you can always tell that a politician is lying, if his lips are moving.

Now, come on, boys! Don't be embarrassed about penmanship. I insist on geting mail with exotic postmarks, like Barsville, OK.

The news is very brief from the class of '73. Don't hesitate to write or call, girls! This column hungers for, and cannot exist without, any and all details of your fascinating lives! Please stay in touch!

I did hear from several of our class that had been previously silent. Patience Horton Betke is alive, well and living in Aspen, Colorado where she and her husband, John, own the Hawkeye Galleries. They have two galleries that specialize in fine 19th Century prints and maps. Business is booming and Patience loves her life there. She is also helping to raise John's eight-year-old son Rubin, who she hopes is "An-lover bound" when he hits ninth grade. If you're in the area, give her a call: 303-925-248.

Colleen Flynn recently joined the Mid-and-Ross Corp. in Cleveland where she is in attorney in their legal department and heading their securities law department. She is excited about her new job, is single and having a ton of fun! Her new address: 7604 Winslow Road, Shaker Heights, OH 44120. Susan Urie Donahue also switched jobs. She's now the director of marketing for the Embassy Suites Hotel in Boston which just opened this fall. Christine Ho was out of touch due to years of extensive work on her Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology. She finished her dissertation in September. Hooray! She is happily married, living in Seattle with husband and dogs. Deborah Woodsome gave up her five year teaching job to stay at home and raise her son. In the meantime, she completed a graduate degree in special education and is preparing for baby number two, due in March. Marge Snelling More had her first child, Meredith, on 13 December 1984 (brought by the stork and Santa Claus!)

Anne Spader, though not a "mom," is up to her elbows in children! After a year of kindergarten, she now teaches first grade at the Buckley School in NYC. Loves the job but is desperately searching for a decent apartment. Edith Wilson Pope was very upset that she had to miss her former roommate Vicki Wood's wedding last May due to business in Malaysia. Edie was recently promoted to Project Manager in Research and Development for Hewlett Packard. She reports that Lawson Fisher (PA '73)'s wife, Christine, is expecting a baby this spring. Margaret Hillhouse, still an avid outdoors-woman, lives in Montana where she works as a hydrologic technician for the Forest Service. Last year she not only bicycled through Europe, but also spent two months in Mexico studying migratory birds. My hat's off to you, Margaret. My idea of camping is sleeping with the window open!

I'm still playing Sunny Adamson on Search For Tomorrow but on 13 April, I started a new "role." I married Chris Goutman (he directs Another World) after a lengthy (6+ years) courtship. The actual ceremony took place in Pennsylvania, so the weekend after, we threw a party in NYC for our friends. Ted Wood (PA '73) came up from Washington, D.C., where he was working as a photo editor and on his Master's degree. The ever handsome Mr.

Wood was a huge hit with all of my single friends! Will Schutte (PA '73), on the other hand, was so devastated by my nuptials that he left town! Seriously, folks. . . he moved back to the West Coast after receiving a terrific promotion with McGaven Guild Radio. NYC misses you, Will! Noreen Markley and friend Maynard flew in from Michigan. Noreen spent the summer of '85 fixing up her new house, traveling in Europe and obtaining a new job. She is the Assistant Comptroller at a small company, and is president of the Great Lakes Andover/Abbot Alumni Association.

Although Josie Martin couldn't make the festivities, I saw her in March of '85 when she was passing through town. She has given up the political scene in D.C. to start her own business. A sweet wedding card from Chad Nehrt (PA '73) brought news that although he's still with Philip Morris, he's been posted to Switzerland. He'll send his address (all visitors welcome) when he has one.

That's all for now! Have a happy holiday season and a wild and wonderful winter.

The last issue of these notes neglected to mention a key item about PA post-punk rockers, the Del Fuegos. The fact is two of the musicians are Trigger Cook's cousins. Trigger is currently performing with his band, The Electric Caves. Recitals are known as Cave-Ins. He also has a new daughter, Jenny. It seems a great many of our classmates have ended up in the entertainment business. I ran into Peter Kapetan the other day dining al fresco in the upper west side of Manhattan (he was eating a hot dog). He tells me he is currently singing and dancing in a "forties review." Davy Fishelson is working on a script for a new film he hopes to produce. He anticipates an autumn premiere. A West Coast source spotted Mason Wilkinson in Seattle. He lives in LA and is rock star Bonnie Raitt's Production Manager. Mason has seen Dave Zelon tooling around the city of freeways. Dana Delany is there working on film projects. Back in New York, Rick Oller is rumored to be a musician but is definitely married and living in lower Manhattan. Wendy Matthews has been very active, playing lead roles in off-off Broadway productions of Chekov and others. Karyn Sikora is an actress in New York as well. Jon Freidenberg has matriculated in the Master's program for theater at Carnegie Mellon.

Terry Dorman, between trips to LA, London and NYC on business, found time to catch Bruce Springsteen in Newark. Meanwhile, Keith Kloza married Mary Lyons in Andover. Mat Mangan, Chris Gannon, Tom Mitchell, and Mike Corcoran managed to make the ceremony. Dave Wray didn't, being distracted by a golf tournament and a new baby daughter, born on the fourth of July. Robert Preston has a new daughter also. He is a fine arts printmaker living in Massachusetts. Harriet Richards Sullivan is an illustrator at New York's School of Visual Art. Jackson Hee has had three nieces to PA (gosh, they wouldn't even let my little brother in). He writes "after 7 long years with the U.S. Government . . . I am working for Eaton Corporation A/L Division in Deer Park, Long Island." He is designing electronic systems for B-1B bombers. Kent Vogel may get a chance to try out Jackson's handiwork — he's a pilot with the Air force.

In the realm of the professionals, Tom Barber is a doctor in Middletown, Conn. . . Bob Bagnall a lawyer in Washington, D.C. . . Randy Carroll an accountant in LA. . . Charlie Foxwell is a group manager for Bank of Boston's Government Trading Desk. He lives with his wife, Mary, in Medford. . . Jorge Sanchez is controller for Cosmo Communications in Miami. Tay & Tay attorney, Mark Tay lives in Haverhill and Eduardo Gonzalez is with Drexel in Puerto Rico. Ann Blumberg has left Merrill Lynch for a small international consulting firm in Greenwich.

After completing her Ph.D. in professional psychology, Sara Wedeman is Director of Consumer Research with First Pennsylvania Bank in Phila. She is planning on marrying Michael Feagans shortly. Sara reports that Becky Park is at Princeton working on a Masters in Russian. Last summer, Becky led two tours of the Soviet Union for a travel agency. Karen Tulis is the assistant to the chairman at UC Berkeley.

Ned and the Nummies Update: Harry Weiss is doing research on Landmark Preservation in Santa Fe, New Mexico. He was recently married to Roberta Cole. Andy Peterson is selling real estate in Peterboro, N.H. Contrary to this column, Ned Whittemore is no longer building guitars in Minneapolis but has a shop selling high performance bicycle parts there. Jon Meath has been extremely busy as a freelance television producer for the likes of IBM and Shearson/American Express. Jon spoke with Woody Tasch (PA faculty, circa 1974) at Janie Barnett's wedding (PA '75).

New York is rife with rumors of an upcoming social event so stay alert. Meanwhile, forward all facts, gossip, and innuendo to me at my new address above.

Correction: In last issue Lisa Landsman was incorrectly listed as Lisa Landsman Oliveri. It is Lisa Hockmeyer who is married to Mr. Oliveri.

I second Mari's view of the reunion: "It was a triumph for Anne Rollings and David Vipond. Ann and David wish to thank everyone who came to have fun. Special thanks go to Mary Jo-O'Reilly Smith who did more than her share as our liquor chairman, and thanks to Kappit Co. for our hats. Many thanks too to Cecily Harshman who led a seminar on coeducation at PA. And to everyone who lent a hand, and made our reunion so enjoyable, much luck and thanks for a terrific weekend." I can only cap her comments by toasting "absent friends."

Let me pass along some aging news, courtesy of the Alumni Office, that may as well have made several transcontinental journeys. I apologize if any of it is stale.

There is a healthy file of clippings about Peter Sellars recently "crowned head of the newly established American National Theatre at the Kennedy Center" in Washington, D.C. Those who remember Peter's marionettes at PA will not be surprised that this talented MacArthur prizewinner and Harvard alumnus has succeeded in delighting the press. The very latest, I hear, is that he will be appearing in a forthcoming Hollywood film.

Bill Whiteford complains of insufficient coverage in these pages. I and my co-secretaries, Mari Wellin King and Roger Strong, will endeavour to remedy past omissions. Please send the news again. Lisa Doyle breathlessly conveys her tale of five years in Beantown. Currently she is an Associate Product Manager for New Products at Gillette and owns a condo in Back Bay. Squash at the Harvard Club fills her free time. Sheri Putnam Conway and husband John are proud parents of a year-old daughter, Betsy. John started with Goldman Sachs in August. Elizabeth Atwater Connolly graduated from law school, moved to Minneapolis, bought a house and went to work for a large (100 lawyer) law firm. Also amongst the ranks of the wed is C. B. Fuller who only admits to living in New York City.

Donna Cameron-Hall (nee Cameron) writes: "I was married at Cochran Chapel at Christmas time 1984 to Martin Anthony Hall, a London native now practicing law at Ropes & Gray in Boston. Caren Ponty and her husband, Ira, Joannie Bozek and Peter Gilbert '72 were among the PA alumni in attendance. [This spring] I joined Tufts-New England Medical Center as Associate General Counsel." This was the year of weddings. Jessica Ziegler married Piers Anthony Cardew in New York last April. Connie Cummings missed the reunion. Her employer, Manufacturers Hanover, transferred her to Milan, Italy. Mike Gocowski, lawyer and bon vivant in Windham, N.H. has formed Atlantic Trade Group to import Spanish wines — another entrepreneur taking advantage of the overvalued dollar. Charles Miers Fine Arts Editor at George Braziller & Co. and winner of the reunion's mini-marathon (2.2 miles) won the 1985 Tony Godwin Award to encourage transatlantic publishing.

On to more recent reports: Mike Weill continues to enjoy his work as an engineer in the budget and supply/demand areas at Shell in New Orleans. He and his wife, Kim, share their new townhouse with their "four-legged child," a golden retriever getting house training. Free weekends are spent camping in Mississippi or sunning in Florida. Kurt Schwarz just arrived in hot, central Texas to assume his duties as Assistant Professor in the Politics department at the University of Texas (Arlington) outside Dallas. He will teach introductory courses and complete his dissertation for Princeton. Peter Mitchell takes time out from hockey coaching to sell billets for Big Steel in Milwaukee. His wife, Claire, works in public relations. Jack Berman lives on my coast but up in San Francisco. He works as a litigation associate. Gren Blackall attends the UCLA Business School. I saw his name among the roster of American Marketing Association officers when I took the CFA Level I exam in June.

I am very eager to hear from more classmates, especially those in the Los Angeles basin. Please call me at work: (213) 742-3556. I keep New York hours, 6:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Pacific time. In a year at Transamerica Investment Services, the investment manager for Transamerica's insurance subsidiaries, I started by managing the money market mutual fund, Cash Reserve, and vestment-like insurance products. Sounds dull.

The next relief pitcher in the Class Secretary rotation is Roger Strong. Write him at 220 E. 57th St., Apt. #14H, New York, NY 10022.

It really is true that when you skip one class notes deadline, suddenly the information begins to flow. And what timing: with Tenth Reunion plans well under way and the Event only a few months off, much is the news I have to bring concerning '76ers.

Debora Rosen writes from New York where she has been quite busy acting and keeping notes on '76ers in the big city. Deb trained and acted in London for three years before returning stateside, and has been acting and working as a producer's assistant. She writes that Bill Wrangos is also doing production work, and that Bill reported hearing of John Crichton's marriage and move to England. Deb also brought news of: Jenny McCray, now back at Yale's Drama School in their directing program; Chris Clemenson is now in L.A. and, according to Deb, "a huge movie star"; Ellen Greenfield is a producer; Lisa Barlo resident photographer for Channel 13 (PBS); Jim Horowitz "is living on the upper west side and is a writer, I think."

Craig Conrad happily announced the birth of Christine Higgins Conrad, whom Craig and wife Sue brought into our crazy world last June. John Chory wrote with tons of news: Joe Salvo is a doctoral candidate in molecular biology at Yale; Paul Gangi is, according to John, "into fast cars, plush condos, and dental floss," by that he means Paul is a dentist in the Merrimack Valley. Steve James is a salesman for a drug company in New Jersey; Jim Butler living quite a life in the D.C. area. John was a Captain in the Army, and working for a certain "company" before enrolling in Harvard's Law School this fall.

Thorn Smith wrote to announce that he is practicing law in Spartanburg, South Carolina (as did Whit Foster) and that he'll be hanging out the shingle in Baltimore, his home town. John Javitch will be finishing his M.D. at Johns Hopkins this year, about the time he celebrates his first anniversary: Jon was married to Miriam Welkovic this past June.

When Felix Murdoch stopped by during a business trip for Security Pacific, I pulled out the pen and readied my pad for the reams of news I was certain he'd have ready for this faithful scribe. Connie Ordway, he reports, is married and living in Palo Alto. Julie O'Donnell was married Labor Day 1984, and is now working in Chicago. Doug Lilly has been involved in the NYU MBA program and works for a "take-over artist" in the Apple. Bart Partington also participates in the NYU biz program, while working for an insurance company.

Felix reports that Adam Pool is working for the Industrial Bank of Japan, and that Mark Fraker, after Berkeley, moved into bankbiz with Bankers Trust, but bailed out to Chase Manhattan. Wendy Walker has been known to take a course at the New School, Felix tells, while Vicky Cartier designs... what? Jewelry in NYC. Dan Henger and Peggy Dolgenos are partners in some business adventure on Taiwan (the scribe can't wait to hear more of those antics), while Sue Chira, recently married to Michael Shapiro, is still writing for the New York Times, more recently in Japan. No one hears from Jason Fish laments this write along with Felix. And whatever happened to Mullen? Still on the farm?

Pam Eaton and I continue to slug it out here on old Andover Hill, and look anxiously forward to your return next spring for reunions. We've just spent an exotic summer touring the Soviet Union for three weeks and France and Switzerland for two and we're anxious to share reminiscence about those fabulous days. We're collecting ideas for the June weekend of celebration — perhaps a punk band I know could play for us — how about a dinner party in the Abbots dining room?

Labor Day has come and gone, but it's hotter and more humid here than in most places in July. Also in NYC enduring the heat is Meg Azzoni who is working as an architect in the firm of James Stuart Polshek & Partners. She loves her job which includes work on the Carnegie Hall renovation. Bill Yun has returned to New York. I bet he regrets it now — to work as a trader for First Boston. After graduating from Tuck in the spring, Bill took an amazing trip and his itinerary included Australia, New Zealand, and Tahiti.

Rick Moody lives and works across the river in New Jersey where he is married, playing hockey, and wishing he could find some lax players. Dean Nelson also lives and works in the Mid-atlantic region; he's sales manager for Proctor & Gamble and makes his home in Devon, Pa.

Corporate America hasn't yet found Al Magoun. He's still in Hartford where he was employed during one six month period as a "head waiter, track coach, runner, disc jockey, history teacher, and Trinity College film coordinator." Those of you who have never taught probably don't realize how closely related those varied pursuits are (Alex is looking for Jay Hoey, John Mehan, Tim Cain, Joe Zeoli, and Andy Brechia). David Davis has found an easier route to fame and fortune: he claims to have won a new car on "Wheel of Fortune." Kris Kinney also continues to travel an unusual career path: professional tennis. She loves her work, travels all over the world, and looks great.

Our sources on the West Coast are keeping us well informed. Chelsea Congdon is still in San Francisco where she works for an environmental consulting firm. She reports that Katy Loewald is getting married — fill us in! Both Chelsea and Wendy Sonabend Erikson see Hallidie Grant who re-settled in San Francisco after a stint commuting between that city and LA. Wendy also passed on the exciting news that Betsy and Andy McCarthy are expecting a baby in November. Wendy herself working for a "small organization that puts on running races in the Bay area." Like everyone else, she loves San Francisco.

Our reporter from Boston, Gay Macon

er, informs us that she is working for a construction company in that city. Until Sa McGovern graduated from Harvard in June, she and Gay were living together again. Lisa has moved to Philadelphia where she is clerking for a judge. John Evans, our Connecticut correspondent, had news of another lawyer in the making: Nery Vaillant is taking a year off from Yale to work in NYC. John also noted that an Lieberfeld ran an arts festival on the Cape this summer.

Like Emery, the majority of classmates writing in this time are in graduate school, including yours truly. John Springer is in his third year at U. Minn. Med. Sch. While in Andover, I saw Liz Laverack who is very excited about her medical career which she is about to begin at Dartmouth Med. Sch. Odd Anderson is beginning his second year of doctoral work in physics at Duke. He is about to embark on a Ph.D. in physics in Tom Morse. He graduated from Oberlin in '85 and will be attending the U. of Colo. at Boulder for his graduate work. Hopefully, Quad Wheeler was admitted to a grad program in geology without having to "appease the gods" with "a ritual burning of various classic texts" as he feared might be necessary. GINNY MAYNARD SWAIN's husband is a geologist too, but she is studying architecture at Rice in Houston where they live. Jean Kennedy is in business school at Tulane in New Orleans where she and her husband live.

And, as always, our wedding section. Elizabeth Johnson sent a note to the effect that she's engaged to Lee Bishop and plans to be married in a year. Chris Cole, who graduated from Harvard B. Sch. in June, tied the knot with Barbie Griffin on July 6. Congratulations and best wishes to all.

Keep the news coming; give me a call if you're in the Big Apple. Have a nice fall.

Here's the latest news flash for the Class of '78. Erika Hartmann writes she married Joe Couture in September of '84. She is living in Burlington, teaching emotionally disturbed children and working on her masters (M. Ed.) at UVM. Robert Blanks has finished teaching at Peddie and will be attending graduate school at Boston College. He was married this past June. K. Cecilia Williams is working as police officer in Vallejo, Calif., recently competed in the California Police Olympics in power lifting (won a silver medal) and plans to eventually attend law school. Judy Morton is teaching 5th and 6th grade language and reading at Greens Farms Academy and coaching high school lacrosse. Her first team was 7-1 in the last season. It sounds like she is really enjoying what she's doing. John Lyons has married Hannah Felton and is living and teaching prep school in Delaware.

John Starosta has recently moved to Costa Rica where he is working for Save the Children in their field office. Victoria Hull has been promoted to an associate at Goldman, Sachs and Co. in their London office. While we are on the topic of investment banking, I should mention that Ken MacKenzie is working for First Boston as an analyst in their mergers and acquisition group here in New York. Richard Gurley writes that he has received a BA from Hampshire College in Public Health for which he spent "a year conducting research on public health delivery and impact in rural Nepal." He is currently attending Tufts Medical School.

As for myself, I am still working for Salomon Bros. in NYC trading mortgage-backed securities and doing my best to survive. I'd love to hear from those of you who have time to write. If you happen to be in town, feel free to call (212)966-7590. That's all for now.

Unfortunately, this issue will not hit the stands until late fall and by then everyone will have written at length, but as it is, a lot of my information is quite dated. In late June I received information that Lisa Posey is "alive and well" in New York City working for Ralph Lauren Women's Wear. Ann Cummings graduated from Brown last December and was to embark on a two-month trip to Australia and New Zealand this past May. With a great deal of enthusiasm, Claire Hamilton sent greetings to all fellow Andoverians. She graduated from U.C. Berkeley last May and has been working as a paralegal at a corporate law firm in San Francisco, yet considering re-directing herself and entering either journalism or publishing. Elizabeth Daley finished her first year of law school at the University of Conn. and was off to London for the summer.

Recently, I received a post card from Guy Letourneau who earnestly reports on his newest endeavor as a design engineer for Volvo-White Autocar (Trucks) in Salt Lake City. Another westerner, Stef Bemis has been in touch from Sante Fe, New Mexico where she has been scoring high marks as an equestrienne and may qualify for the Senior National Championships in Woodside, Calif. On 18 September, Jim Currid finishes his training in helicopter sky-diving and other military maneuvers. From there he will be stationed in Ft. Hood, Texas, a strategic location because of its proximity to Big College Football.

Back East, Cassie Doykos starts another school year teaching at Greenwich Country Day. Sally Baldwin also gets underway for another school year at Bentley College in Boston as Assistant Director of Annual Giving. Also in Boston, "our woman of the '80s," Sarah Ehrlich has been demonstrating impressive PR at KK&M, Inc. Advertising.

In August I had dinner with Dianne Hurley at New York's Pete's Tavern. She is still "living" at Goldman Sachs, working in their real estate division.

Hope everyone had a fulfilling summer and has a happy Thanksgiving and a good time in between.

Mr. H. Schulyer Royce, history instructor and head of the Friday Forum, is anxious to learn the names of the students who served as members of the Friday Forum during the year 1979-80. If you were a member of the Forum during this time, please contact him. Thank you, Ed.

With pleasure I announce the appointment of Tony Bienstock as our 5th Reunion Chairman. Any who remember his graduation party in N.Y. know that he is well qualified for the job. Our reunion takes place on 13-15 June 1986. As John Burgess likes to say (still): "Be there. Aloha."

On campuses throughout the country, students protested their school's investments in South Africa. I assume the protesting will continue this fall. Whether directly or remotely, the racial problems in South Africa have touched us, disturbed us. Peter Anderson journeyed to South Africa and felt racial oppression first hand. Although Peter is white, he disguised himself as a black. He ventured to restaurants, to all-white country clubs and trains. One day, while disguised, he went to a restaurant in Cape Town and the "white guy behind the counter turned to a black and said, 'Here is one of your brothers, you serve him. I'm not.'"

While not all of us had such adventure last year, many of us met with success and graduated with distinctions of various kinds. At Franklin and Marshall's Awards day, Patrick McHugh, an American Studies major, won his department's award for academic excellence. He was also captain of the Diplomats' cross country team and a member of the string ensemble. Jim Kohn made Phi Beta Kappa, one of 8 students at Bowdoin to do so. Bruce Raphael earned a spot on the Dean's list at Colby college. Doug Price, a mid-fielder on the Middlebury lacrosse team, was named to the 1985 Snively Division all-star team. Doug co-captained the Panthers and emerged as one of the team's top scorers with 22 points on 15 goals and 7 assists. At Harvard Suzanne Tanner graduated magna cum laude; she also received the David McCord prize for extensive contributions to performing arts at Harvard. But wait, there's more: she was a member of the women's ice hockey team, the Collegium-Musicum and the Kirkland House music and drama society; she also won 2 other scholarships for academic excellence. Her secret? Vitamins. And no sleep. And fellow town mate (townie?) Buddy Terranova earned a B.S. at Carnegie Mellon U. He will be working for Raytheon Co. this year. As for myself, I'm working for the Gap (the clothing store) in their headquarters as a copywriter. I'm living in San Francisco. Stop by anytime; I'm in the phonebook.

Everyone should be gearing up for the reunion in June. Was it Tony Vine who suggested that we title the reunion "Revenge of the Nerds," or Bill Kummel who suggested "Glory Days?" I'll try to do a better job with the notes next time. Apologies. Bill.

Well, you guys, all I have to say is I should have sent out those postcards long ago! You all were great with returning them, and since I have so much news to relay I'll just get started. Jennifer Scheer loves Northwestern and Chicago, and worked at an ad agency there this summer. She'll be the assistant Rush chairman for her sorority this year. She also wrote that Tom Strong worked in New York this summer for the Associated Press, and that Linda Danovitch will spend next semester in London. Rob Roy is a drama major at Catholic Univ. He worked for the Senate this summer and was in a production of Grease. Yalda Tehranian has returned from Paris along with Chandri Navarro. They had a great time, and saw Amy Starensier over there. Barry Stout took a kayaking trip down the Colorado River this summer and did lots of travelling. Paul Wagner wrote that all's well at Colby, but he's having too much fun for someone who hates it — he spent the summer running a painting business on the Cape.

Adrienne Hynek is taking some time off at Brown to go to Montreal, and Cam MacWilliams will be studying in France this fall and in Italy next spring. Betsy Connell will be the Senior Class President at Duke this year, and sees lots of PA alums. Graham Anthony is at UVA and spent the summer working for the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington. He sent some news from UVA: Mike Terry is a mad golfer who's only ambition is to take "Vampires and the Slavs" before he graduates. Rob Hull was the chairman of UVA's Judiciary Committee last year, and Ted Lameyer is doing very well at the Architecture School (and I think will be spending his spring term this year in Venice, but the postcard was cut off, so I'm not sure!). Nathaniel McIntosh is majoring in computer science at Brown and worked in Boston this summer. He sees Mike Liou and John Crespi often; Mike is studying electrical engineering and worked with ATT Bell Labs this summer. John is majoring in East Asian Studies and spent the summer in Taiwan, studying Chinese and teaching English.

Sarah Moore was in London this summer working and studying at the University of London. She's majoring in English and anthropology at the Univ. of Rochester. She also did some travelling with Chris Ashley in Ireland. Randy Wood wrote he's having a great time at Yale and has played Varsity hockey for three years. He saw Burke Doar at Princeton this spring and reports that he has most definitely, no question about it, turned into a womanizer! Amy Baker wrote from Dartmouth that she had a serious car accident and had to wear a back brace for three months but all's well now. She's enjoying school and saw lots of PA people this summer, including Laura Bull '81. Planning to visit her this summer also were Chip Campbell, Dan Besse, and Nancy Katz. Hilary Huber took last year off and enrolled in an outdoor leadership program which culminated in her leading a seven-week wilderness trip for teenagers. She's happy to be returning to Amherst this fall, and hopes to resume soccer there.

Yes, Faith Hawkins, of course I found your last letter — two days after I mailed the last set of notes! Faith wrote that she spent the summer teaching at Hotchkiss Summer School, and will be co-captain of Varsity tennis at Smith this year; she's an economics/sociology major, and will also be playing varsity squash. She sent lots of news, starting with Gerri Brother, who's also an econ. major at Smith. John Kim took a year off from the Air Force Academy and worked in NYC. I thank you, Andy Ahn for your loooooong letter, but unfortunately, I cannot begin to fill in everything you wrote about, but let it suffice for me to tell everyone that Andy spent last year abroad, very busy, at Cambridge University, and did a lot of travelling on his time off. He's majoring in philosophy and biochemistry at Columbia. Craig Pearsall was initiated into Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society at Ohio Wesleyan Univ. Jane Simoni is enjoying Princeton and will be an RA this year. She's playing varsity tennis and saw Jeff Ruberti this summer. Jeff's studying engineering at Tulane.

Kate White did some acting and waitressing but is now in New Haven and going back to school part time. Chad Rosenberger ran into Pierre Valette in Paris this fall (he's studying in Berlin). Chad sees a lot of Paul Hochman, and they're both enjoying Dartmouth. Everyone wanted me to say "hi" to everyone also, so hello to all, and keep sending in news. . . you guys were great!

As those of you in the Boston area may have heard, the Del Fuegos with guitarist Warren Zanes are climbing the ladder of success. Warren and the rest of the band performed in Hanover last summer after being signed by Warner Brothers Records. They were eagerly awaiting the release of their new album which should be out by the time this is published, and if their performance is any indication, it is one not to be passed by. Though he kept losing his beer all afternoon, Warren says he enjoys life as a rock star even though he was chopped out of the Miller beer commercial they appeared in due to looking a bit young.

Sarah Rosenfield is planning to be the First Lady of New Hampshire. This dubious achievement will, supposedly, result from her continued romance with a Dartmouth senior, who, according to Sarah, will eventually govern the great state of granite. Meanwhile, aspiring to greatness of his own, Henry Dorn is a senior at the University of South Carolina and plans to attend medical school next year after taking the MCATs this fall.

Abroad — way abroad — Colette Devine is going to Sophia University in Tokyo and says visitors are always welcome. Also taking leave of the U.S. for awhile, Macky Alston is spending the year in England.

Dan Miller showed up in Washington for inaugural weekend last winter and, while drinking very fast to keep warm, like everyone else, reported that he was staying active in political organizations. At Williams, Thayer Tolles is rowing on the women's Varsity crew and is majoring in U.S. History and Art History. Howard Miller is moving to Florida; he and Phil Messina are both in a five year architecture program at Cornell. Howard worked for an architect on Cape Cod last summer, and, as summer in Hanover was drawing to a close, Alex Miller was hoping to get to Geneva for the fall term. John Harpole landed a job in New York for the fall, though at this writing he is still sleeping on park benches, having neglected such details as finding a place to live. Jason Bernhard headed to France last summer to work in a law firm. He is enjoying life at U. Penn where he is a brother in Psi Upsilon fraternity. Before joining his brother John '82 in France, Jason could be found escorting Julie Ongaro '84 through the Boston deb scene last spring, for which Todd Ongaro was also on hand.

Cyndi LaMontagne worked in New York last semester but has, I think, returned school this fall. Paul Chutich is back Bowdoin after spending a semester at Penn and the summer working as a bartender in Minnesota. Adam Wise worked for a construction company last summer and is now back enjoying frat life at DePaul. Tamar Gendler kept in touch by defacing post cards and sending them from various parts of Europe. She took intensive French for a month or two while over there but has now returned to her romance with a young New York lawyer. Also, news from Vassar says that Peter Thomes is doing well on the Varsity tennis team there.

Finally, please put a tracer on Hilla Blake whom I fear may have slipped off another institution of higher learning.

Well, thus are the tales of excitement of the '83s. As you can see, the news is a bit sparse so please keep in touch through phone call or post card. Take care and have a great winter.

Here we go again — round two for most of us. Hope you all are settled and happy at your respective colleges/universities. He goes the summer update.

Once again, the Cahill brothers pulled through with a brilliantly informative letter delivering the following tidbits of summer time fun about some of our classmates:

For starters Mike worked for a law firm in L.A. and commuted with an up-and-coming movie star. Tim also worked for a law firm, and both Cahills spent lots of time with fellow grads Jordan Smyth, Nick Bienstock, J.B. Murray and Sarah Keller. Jordan was working for the L.A. Sheriff's department (J.B. put it nicely, "a Beverly Hills Redneck"). J.B. began the summer in Washington, D.C. working as an intern for his Congressman. While there he ran into and spent some time with Rich Eisner, Hans Wyler, Aunny Abegglen, Serrah Butler and Scott Smith. He also ran into Joel Post on the street. Joel worked in D.C. a year and will begin Harvard in the fall.

After Washington, J.B. drove cross country to L.A. with Nick Bienstock. On the way they stopped at Bart Rickenbaugh home in Denver as well as in Park City, Utah, where they stayed with Yuki Ishizuka, Walt Alexander, Blake Catlin and Jim Giddings, all who were living in the apartment Blake lived in during his year off which he spent as a ski instructor.

Sarah Keller played hostess to many '83 grads in L.A. this summer and after ending work in August she tagged along with Lisa Pritchard and Wendy Dick in Yellowstone Park, Wyoming. Lisa worked in a gift shop there and Wendy was a volunteer ranger. One last classmate who was also in L.A. was John Caulkins — just passing through. He worked for Rolling Stone magazine last year and also spent time in Vail. Not in L.A. but in California (Berkeley) for the year and then extended to the summer also was Whitney Carrico. She kept active by backpacking, camping and touring the Napa Valley wine country (where she did a fair amount of wine tasting).

Now let's go across the sea to Europe

Ian McMillan '84

Not all PA graduates head straight for college. Some, like Ian McMillan, defer college admission for a year in favor of some hands-on experience. For the past year, Ian has been working with dolphins and other marine mammals at Sealand of Cape Cod.

After graduating from Andover, Ian became a summer intern in the Underwater Education Program based at, but wholly separate from Sealand. As a result of his outstanding work, which included original research about and observations of the white-sided dolphin, Ian was offered the position of Assistant Curator at Sealand. Cornell would have to wait a year.

Ian's work has not just been "playing with the dolphin." The extremes of winter and heavy manual labor have taken their toll: "My hands are now deeply etched with creases, heavily lined in all directions, rough and calloused, yet resilient. The hands-on experience at Sealand, while painful at times has proved immensely valuable." Ian participated in all aspects of aquarium management, from the daily sea lion and dolphin shows to the dramatic marine mammal rescue team. Ian has also collaborated with the New England Aquarium in their research on stranded marine animals.

This fall Ian entered Cornell, where he plans to study the biological or chemical sciences. His ultimate ambition? To become a veterinarian and specialize in marine mammal research.

This is where some of you should sit down. We're going to have a classmate-in-law soon. Maxwell Ryan, who spent all of last year in England, will be getting married within the year. He met his fiancée, Ruth Herbert, while at boarding school in England and they plan to stay there for a long while. I'm sure I can speak for the whole class when I say, good luck to you, Max, and I hope your marriage is happy. Two others from whom I received overseas news were John Henry Fullen and Sung Hee Kim. I will quote John Henry because I don't know what else to do: "Just tell 'em I refused the generous and quite thoughtful invitation from the Polish secret police, to celebrate world-wide revolution at gun point and the cultural blossomings of Marxist-more-or-less Leninist disreality, at the Youth Congress in Moscow this July." Wow. Sung Hee has moved from Korea to London and spent six weeks in France this summer. I've got her new address for those seeking it (as well as Maxwell's — just ask).

Here's some bits and pieces closer to home. Devin Driscoll spent the summer at Harvard taking a summer course. Jim Moore was in his Russian class and Beau Timken lived next door. Annie Emmick and Celia Pastoriza shared an apartment in Boston and worked in Fanueil Hall Market Place. Devin said he's seen Bill Seely in Cambridge and thinks he was living with Tom Bachman and Jim Reische. On the Cape were Anita Cataudella, Amy Price, Duncan Robinson, Scott Bothfeld, Stalky Henderson, Eric Thieringer, Paul O'Boyle, Rosemary Casey, Jenni Tessier and Kirk Orrell all at one time or another. I haven't got the space to write what they all did, so put your imaginations to good use.

A few last bits: Rachel Simpson spent the summer working for NYPIRG in NYC. William Woo spent it recovering from a torn ligament incurred from a rugby incident last spring. Paul Chesterton worked at a country club in Marblehead, MA. I forgot what the following had done last summer but I ran into Rob Kellan, Dave Duckerfield, Scott Crabtree, Joe Bardetti, Sean Flanagan, and Matt Bergeron in various locations. All were well. Anne Dudley worked in a law firm in her hometown. She had heard from Christine Kim who was just returning from a trip to Europe. Oh, Yeah, and Mike Bayer and Julie Crosson worked on a ranch in Wyoming as security guards at the stables.

Good luck to you all this year. Keep your letters coming. Love — Betsy.

Yup! Summer is long gone — already! It seems most of you had enjoyable ones starting with the week following graduation, even though some people worked! Topping the list of adventurous jobs, were Gregg Menaker, who worked at a gas station, and Bill Weinsheimer, also in the Chicago area, who entered the custodial field. Not to be overlooked is Nell Gharibian, who bagged groceries (when she couldn't give all her hours away) at Roche Brother's.

In the 9 to 5 job category, was Heather Trees who worked on the Chicago Stock Market; Dan Won also worked on the Stock Exchange, as a runner in Boston. Chris Flynn worked at a bank in NYC though he did escape to Lake Champlain every weekend. Joe Sokolov also worked in "The City" at a law firm. Bill Bates was also a member of the work force. Bill taught tennis at a country club on Long Island, but he did find time to visit Martha's Vineyard, as did Leah Donahue and Buffy Katz. All three stayed with Megan Carroll.

The last of the workers include Pete Kleinman, who was a camp counselor in Washington state, and Gregg Dick, who worked at the Monkey Bar in Fanueil Hall. And finally, at ol' PA were Sarah Heard and Pete MacDonald.

Many of those not working were traveling abroad. Reid Payne, though working in Chamonix, visited Paris with Michelle Kluck where they happened to bump into Sarah Wolfe and Denise Finn at a cafe. Phil Loughlin was in Switzerland when he bumped into Bill Parsons. They both climbed the Matterhorn.

Our ESU students both did a bit of traveling in our country — mainly. David Kerner stayed with Ben Schwall in Virginia and visited Julia Escardo '86 in Venezuela, before returning home. And Julie Shafran covered the entire country by visiting Charlie Chun, Elliot Smyth and me. Elliot stayed with Julie some weeks later on her trip to England. Megan Carroll was also in England and Ireland with her family.

Allyson Yasher spent the summer living with a family in Spain, as did Tim Smith, with a family in Portugal. Guy Cote also had an extensive visit abroad — in Turkey, on an exchange program. Tajlei Lewis spent her summer at Yale, where she took a play writing course. Ben Schwall also attended Yale where he took a Chinese course. Harry Keates spent a relaxing summer on Nantucket. Chip Schorr spent his summer in Aspen and various parts of the South. Jenny Greene worked at a Wynn Dixie, but she concentrated mainly on her diving. Jenny made it to Sr. Nationals in the U.S. and placed 22nd in the country!

Kate Flather wrote and told of some adventures she and Kara Buckley embarked upon over the summer. First, was their trip to Newport, to cheer on Julia Trotman in the Lasers Nationals. Buckley's navigation ran them into a bit of trouble, but they did reach Newport in time to see Julia qualify to race in the Women's Worlds in France in Sept. Congratulations! Kate recently dislocated her shoulder in yet another mishap with, you guessed it, Miss Buckley! on a hydroslide, but Kate felt she would be able to sail in a regatta at the end of the summer. Hope it went well.

Susan Cross spent her summer "playing" in D.C., where Jeff Kadis, Roger Townsend, and Chris Stanley visited her. Mike Schaus is not thrilled to be starting school again (you're not the only one), as he would rather be sailing to Australia. But at least he won't be alone because Charlie Edwards, Tim Banker and Graham Bergh should also be attending U of Michigan.

As for myself, I was a beach bum on Long Beach Island, N.J., when I wasn't working in a boutique. I took one week off to visit friends on the Cape and in Boston. Nell Gharibian and I drove to Andover for a day, where I saw Lisa Johnson and Beth Egan, before Beth left for the Cape to visit Grae Davis. Our visit with Beth actually caused her to miss her bus but Nell quickly remedied the situation by overtaking the bus and slowing it down until it stopped!

Well, I wish you all an amazing year. Please write, and I hope to see many of you at that "other" school for the annual game.

The View from Grub Street

Bulfinch Hall

Looking Once More at the Comet

The sign was taped on the door of George Washington Hall: "Last night to view Halley's Comet: Observatory, Evans Hall, 5:30-7:30 P.M." I picked up my mail from the faculty room and walked over to Evans, my muscles flexed in one sustained shiver against the cold. It was the coldest day of the year. Less than a week after Epiphany.

The door to the staircase leading to the observatory was propped open with a mauve rucksack full of school books. In the dark I climbed the flights of stairs to the roof, passing students on their way down. "Incredible. Totally awesome." They shook their heads in ironic amazement. "Cause-mic."

At the top of the stairs people stood in line for their turn to look through the 16" telescope. Two middle-aged women, Andover townspeople, joined the line behind me. But when they saw that they would have to climb hand over hand up an eight-foot ladder into the observatory dome itself, one asked her friend incredulously, "You climbing up there? I'll wait for you here." Old at heart, I thought. An opportunity missed.

The little waiting room was lit only by a red light bulb. It helped our eyes adjust to the darkness and stopped us from stumbling over each other. We could see our breath. All of us in turn wrote our names and the date in the observatory log book, a large volume on a table near the door. It is used to keep track of how many people visit the observatory. I flipped through some of the old pages. They showed that on most clear nights, about a dozen sky-watchers scrutinized the moon, stars and planets through a telescope. But every seventy-five years, millions look skyward for Halley's comet, drawn to the rare, the cyclical, the stellar.

Students descended the ladder at irregular intervals while others climbed up. The line moved quickly as we assumed our places in the cramped dome above.

The dome was open to the clear night sky, and the round room was almost as cold as outside. Astronomy instructor Jennifer Bond presided over the darkness. I recognized her voice. A boy explained to her his mixed success in putting up posters encouraging people to come view The Comet. I recognized his voice — a senior in my literature course, and I greeted him out of the darkness:

"We want results, John, not excuses."

John heard the smile in my voice, and greeted me warmly. We talked of what we had read for class that day — Edgar Allan Poe's story, "MS. Found in a Bottle" — the apocryphal diary of a man who casts the manuscript overboard just before his ship is swept to its destruction in a colossal vortex at the dark and icy South Pole.

When it was my turn, I climbed a tottery stepladder to reach the telescope's eye-piece. John steadied the ladder. I looked through the telescope, and there it was — a tiny piece of bluish lint on a foggy background. Jennifer told me to look for a dot as big as a spot on my fingernail. Afterwards, I looked, and I didn't have spots on my fingernails. At the base of each nail, beneath the cuticle, was a white crescent that people call the "moon," but no spots. Regardless, the comet was a far cry from the blazing star with a fiery tail that I had looked forward to for years. It was less inspiring than the artists' renditions I had seen on TV, drawings made as if one were aboard a spacecraft sent out to intercept and study the comet. It was certainly less dramatic than the Bayeux tapestry's depiction of it, made in 1066. Does the comet this time commemorate the invasion of some small country? Which, and by whom? I was, in short, underwhelmed. I tried to be excited by the thought that this was the real thing, and by the fact that I was witnessing such a rare event, but I remained unmoved. As I looked through the telescope, I tried to squeeze everything I could from the image; then I stood aside for John and the others in line. I wondered, with Robert Frost, "what to make of a diminished thing."

On the way down the stairs I bumped into Max, a round-faced junior I know from eating meals in Commons. Outgoing and fun, Max is a natural conversationalist. We chatted for a minute, and I asked him whether he had seen the comet yet. He had, and agreed that the sight itself was not extraordinary. I parroted what the astronomy teacher had just told me, that this visit by the comet affords us the least impressive view in two thousand years. Max clicked his mouth retainer quickly with his tongue, and said spritely, "I don't mind. The view'll be better when it returns next time. I'll have another look at it then."

And he probably will, too. He is fourteen now; he'll be eighty-nine in 2061, when Halley comes again. His comment was more a celebration of life — of vitality, of having lots ahead of him — than an expression of any real anticipation of looking at some comet decades down the road. Max knew that in seventy-five years he'd be looking through some other telescope for a better view. I also knew where I would be when Halley returns — Maple Hill Cemetery, in a small Vermont town, beside seven generations of my relatives. I heard Max flick his retainer off and then back on his teeth. I clenched my jaw until my crowned molar groaned, and shivered in the cold.

Andover Pro Musica: A Profile of William Thomas

by Christopher L. Shaw '78

The Spring '85 Bulletin introduced you to a fascinating but relatively unknown member of the faculty, Lolo Hobausz, the sorcerer-director of the Audio-Visual Center. In future editions we hope to introduce you to a number of extraordinarily talented younger faculty members because fewer of you alumni know them. In a relatively short time they have established themselves as gifted teachers. Meet William Thomas.

He bellowed his instructions to his musicians, surpassing in volume the eighty-odd voices, six violins, four cellos, several winds and the percussion section all stumbling through a rehearsal of St. John's Passion at mezzo forte. "Make it sound like chocolate," he intoned. But he wasn't hearing the smoothness he wanted, so, with a twist of his wrist, he cut us off. There was silence as he glowered at the soprano section with lips pursed and arms akimbo. Then he sang it for the sopranos to demonstrate what he wanted, his voice ricocheting off the columns in the Cochran Chapel. We started again, and slowly a smile spread across his face as he began to hear chocolate.

I met William Thomas in the fall of 1975. I had arrived at Andover in awe as a new tenth grader from a very small school north of New York City. William had been at Andover one year, and had just begun what is so far a ten-year tenure as chairman of the Music Department. I did not know then of the vast experience of that 24-year old man: Bachelor's of Music from Oberlin, a Master's of Fine Arts from Penn State, four summers as student and teacher at the Merrywood Music School in Lexington, Mass., two years as a cellist for the Akron Symphony Orchestra, study in Zurich with Pierre Fournier, and a stint at the University of Aberdeen in Scotland. What I saw was a large, rather imposing, but disarmingly friendly man, casually dressed, ready to audition me for the school chorus. Although I do not recall the specifics of the audition, it must have gone fairly well because I came to know William ("Mr. Thomas," then, of course) through Chorus, the Cantata Singers, and several mainstage musicals. We traveled to Canada with him in the spring of 1977 on one of the first Music Department tours. As one of the Chorus presidents my senior year, I came to know him even better. William Thomas became less of an enigma. He invited us often to his home, just off campus, a small, comfortable few rooms dominated by a baby grand.

William Thomas was many firsts for me. He was certainly the first real musician I had ever known, one of my first adult friends, and one of my first truly inspiring teachers. I never took a class from William, but he changed me, through his example and through his teaching. He taught an immature 14-year-old, accustomed only to New York pop radio, to love Bach, Mozart, Telemann and Dvořák. It was not an easy task, I am sure, especially with all the other issues distracting a teenager at Andover. What Mr. Thomas created was a niche in this sometimes confusing school for those of us willing to aspire to a high standard of performance. His relentless confidence in us was rather heady. We waited at the close of a performance not for the audience's applause, but for his gentle, sweaty smile and for his hand signal — hidden from the audience behind him — saying "OK."

When I went on to college, I searched in vain for similar qualities in other conductors and in Wesleyan's music department. I was unwilling to compromise, and unfortunately I slowly drifted away from extracurricular music. The musical talent I thought I had did not lead to further involvement. Returning to Andover several times from Wesleyan, I always sought William out first. I was unable to explain to William why I had not continued with music; his disappointment, although never explicit, was apparent.

I returned to Andover permanently in 1982 as Director of Planned Giving. It took me a year before I began to appreciate the enormous effect William Thomas has on his students. One of my first jobs was the planning and implementation of the weekend events surrounding the dedication of the new Music Center, a wholly renovated Graves Hall. William and I met several times to discuss budgets, ceremonies, parades, and concerts. As usual, he had planned a smorgasbord of musical performances designed to highlight the extraordinary qualities of both the new building and the students and faculty who would use it.

The Music Center represented a dream realized for William. His appreciation for all kinds of music is embodied in the facility, from the exposed beams and the movable sound panels in the Timken Concert Room to the concrete lining of the Michael Segal electronic music studio in the basement. In the splendor of this place and the plans for celebrating its opening, it became clear what William's personal mission at Phillips Academy had been, and continues to be. With all that this exciting school offers kids, and all that is asked of them — from American history to hockey — William Thomas wants music to be accepted. William simply asserts that music, and all it teaches students about self-discipline, teamwork, communication and development of intellectual talent, is worthy of inclusion along with French and football. The number of kids involved in music at Andover attests to his success. About 500 of the School's 1,200 students are involved in music in some way each term. As chairman of the department, William oversees the rehearsals and performances of many vocal and instrumental groups ranging from the 75-piece symphony orchestra to Fidelio, a small a capella group directed by Susan Lloyd. In addition, William developed Music 20, a graduation requirement that combines history, theory, and application. The department offers twenty-one courses in history/appreciation, theory and performance. The sheer number and variety of performances that take place at Andover every term is staggering; last year during the eight weeks of winter term, there were fifteen concerts by students, faculty, townspeople, alumni, and visiting artists on campus, not to mention informal performances in church, and around the campus by the smaller vocal and chamber music groups. They included a Mozart Birthday Weekend, a staged presentation of Haydn's Creation by students in the music and dance departments, and Bach's B Minor Mass with the combined choirs and orchestras of Andover and Exeter.

William Thomas, Chairman of the Music Department. His vision and sense of mission are catalysts for a tremendous amount of learning.

William Thomas is the first to assert that the growth of music at Andover, both in the classroom and in performance, is due to an excellent faculty and numerous dedicated students. His vision and sense of mission are, however, catalysts for a tremendous amount of learning.

The weekend of dedication did take place, by the way, under sunny April skies. It offered a brief pause to cherish an important facet of education at Andover.

I do not see William often enough now, and I resign myself to being an occasional member of his audience. On the day I stopped to pick him up at Graves Hall for lunch and a talk about this article, I found the department much as I remembered it. Although the building's space now reflects its purpose, the chaos remains. During my five-minute wait, William reprimanded a student for arriving late for rehearsal the previous evening, left two programs for upcoming concerts to be typed, complimented a teacher on a recent recital, and confirmed the details of the Cantata Choir's spring tour in Spain. In those five minutes William exhibited, through his actions and attitude, two of the most important qualities he has as a teacher: a love of music and an understanding of its power to communicate. These qualities are what William instills in his students. We made it sound like chocolate not because he wanted it but because he taught us how to want it ourselves.

Andover's Movable Campus

by Ruth Flick Quattlebaum

The Andover campus seems immutable. We feel that its buildings will remain long after we are gone. However, although most of the Academy buildings have indeed remained, they have not always stayed where graduating students left them. Behind the perceived stability lurks a transitory urge. At least fourteen buildings have migrated around the campus, including such familiar landmarks as Pearson Hall, Stowe House, Samaritan House, Pemberton Cottage, Churchill House, Tucker House, Blanchard House, and even the enormous Bancroft Hall. All have found permanent resting places far removed from their original sites.

Much of this migration began during the summer of 1928 after the successful conclusion of the Academy's sesquicentennial. But a few moves even predate that eventful summer. As early as 1880 Farrar House had been pulled by horses down Phillips Street to make room for Professor Churchill's new house at the corner of Phillips and Main. Professor Churchill's house was, in turn, moved in 1900 to its present location (Main and Salem) to provide a space for the Archaeology building. And in 1922 Pearson Hall was renovated and carefully removed to its present site from a location between Bartlet and Foxcroft Halls.

But it wasn't until Thomas Cochran, one of Andover's patron

To make room for the Cochran Chapel, Samaritan House was rolled to its present location on specially-laid railroad tracks. (Photo, 13 August 1929) saints, began work on his dream of the ideal campus — the nation's most beautiful secondary school campus — that the layout and structure of the PA grounds changed radically. Cochran teamed up with the esteemed New York architect Charles Platt, and together between 1925 and 1933 they fashioned a breathtakingly sumptuous space. Central to their plan was the creation of a "vista" stretching from Samuel Phillips Hall westward to the hills and the sunset. But the way was not clear. Tucker House, that gem of "New Jersey Renaissance," (Frederick S. Allis, Jr., Youth from Every Quarter, 377) blocked the view. So it was put on rollers and moved to its present location behind Taylor Hall. This removal began a show-stopping chain of events. Then Bancroft Hall was in the way! So a bevy of workmen underpinned the fragile brick building with numerous house jacks, each manned by a worker. At the sound of a foreman's whistle, each man gave the jack a quarter turn until the building was as high as they desired. So successful was this tricky operation that Bancroft arrived at its current location in the West Quad having been elevated 18 feet, rotated 180° (a feat in any era) and transported over uneven terrain — all without so much as a broken window! But now Pemberton Cottage impinged on the view too much for Cochran's taste, and so it too was moved 100 yards to the south, to its present site near the Is- ham Infirmary.

Excited by the possibilities created by the moving of buildings, Cochran continued his efforts to reshape the campus to make it aesthetically ideal. Cochran was deeply convinced that beautiful surroundings had an enormous influence on the intellectual, spiritual, and aesthetic development of youth. He knew, as Keats so convincingly articulated, that a thing of beauty is a joy forever. Over Headmaster Stearns's vociferous objections Samaritan House was transported across Main Street to make room for the new Chapel. Additionally, Stowe House was moved and replaced by the new Andover Inn. Blanchard House was relocated to its current site near Taylor Hall in order to open a space for the new Dining Commons, an operation that necessitated cutting and replacing all the telephone and trolley cables on Main Street. In fact, faculty joked during the Cochran era that you might wake up some morning and find that your living quarters had been moved! To complete the harmony Cochran had the fourth floors removed from both Foxcroft and Bancroft Halls.

Pearson Hall used to sport a clocktower and stand between Foxcroft and Bartlet Halls (above). In 1922 the tower was removed and Pearson was moved to its current location (below).

Obviously no ideal campus could be bisected by a well-traveled thoroughfare, so he built a highway around the campus to divert heavy traffic away from Main Street and his beloved campus. An agreement was reached that the state would build the road "if the Andover Trustees would purchase land and convey a hundred-foot right-of-way, approximately five miles in length, and pay the cost of construction of the mile of road Certainly, the project proved expensive. But Cochran never flinched." (Allis, 383).

Abbot Academy too had its visionaries and benefactors. Headmistress Philena McKeen had a dream and Warren Draper provided the seed money for the creation of Abbot Campus. In 1888 Academy Hall (later called Abbot Hall) was jacked onto great rollers and drawn by oxen from its original School Street site to its present location within the "Circle." Reports indicate that the process was accomplished so smoothly that a vase was found undamaged in its place after the move (Susan McIntosh Lloyd, A Singular School, 157). Smith Hall, which is no longer extant, was moved back from the "Circle" to make room for the large and romanesque Draper Hall. And Sunset Lodge (originally called South or German Hall) was moved from School to Abbot Street.

These early migrations have benefited succeeding generations in countless ways; indeed Cochran and others were so successful in creating an ideal campus that it poses problems for us now as we undertake to renovate and repair the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library. The library, built in 1926 when 650 students attended PA, is sorely lacking in stack and reading space, and is in woeful need of renovation. At their January meeting the trustees selected the architectural firm Shepley, Bulfinch, Richardson, and Abbott to design and oversee the library renovation and expansion. The firm views the project as a challenge because the campus is nothing short of "a work of art," which alas, creates a "constrained climate for addition." Building an addition that does not detract from the beauty and symmetry of the central campus will require imagination and the efficient use of space. It is safe to say, however, that they will not solve the site design problems by, say, moving Bartlet Hall across Main Street or putting the library where the Bell Tower is, and vice versa. For better or worse, PA's age of building transportation may be over, victim of fiscal more than physical constraints. You may, upon your return to the campus, find a few new buildings, but you can rest assured that you will find the old buildings where you left them.

Ruth Quattlebaum, a member of the faculty since 1977, is an instructor in Art, and the Academy Archivist. She holds her Master's in American history from Columbia University.

Black Like Me in South Africa:

an African education

Peter Anderson '81, who masqueraded as a black in South Africa, on a Johannesburg street.

Vincent B. J. Avery

First I took my shirt off, folded it, and put it with my knapsack in the toilet stall . . . I pulled out my makeup and laid it out on the shelf above the sink . . . For over an hour and a half I stood before the mirror applying layer after layer. The mascara worked perfectly around the corners of my eyes where the sponge couldn't reach; I was surprised how my moustache helped. Finally I took my wig out of my bag, and put it, my sunglasses, and my ballcap on and stared into the mirror, transfigured . . . I was a different person. I could abandon all the trappings of how a young, adult graduate of Andover had to act."

In the spring of 1985 Peter Anderson '81 shed his skin. Inspired by Black Like Me, John Griffin's account of his experiences disguised as a black in the American South, Anderson wanted to learn first hand what it means to be a black in South Africa. This was but the final step in a devolution of preppiedom that had seen him exchange his junior year at Middlebury for King's College London, and choose South Africa over the Greek islands for his spring break. After a week in Johannesburg talking with students and faculty at the University of Witwatersrand about South African politics and history, he checked out of the all-white YMCA, disguised himself in a washroom in the sociology building and checked into an "international" hotel, one that accepted foreign blacks. Few people knew of his plans. He had confided in two professors at Witwatersrand; they thought the project extreme and terribly dangerous but did not discourage him.

Leaving his bags, he found a restaurant where a young black waitress cheerfully served him soup and a sandwich. Shortly thereafter, a wave of customers arrived — all white. The restaurant had limited seating, and people sat next to strangers. At a table next to Anderson's two young men shared a chair. There were five empty seats at his table. "I finished my soup and looked up, noticing the waitresses eyeing my table and the waiting customers. Rather than cause a small confrontation, I wrapped my sandwich in a napkin, walked to the cash register and paid my bill . . . Looking back I wish I had had the courage to stay where I was. I didn't, and if I was in the same position today, I still don't think I would have. I haven't felt the frustration that must breed the courage to put yourself at risk and fight for what is right. I was scared; I envisioned an irate patron calling the police, so I left." The new learning had begun.

Later that day on the streets of Johannesburg he noticed that blacks no longer steered clear of him: "Standing at an intersection or waiting in line at the grocery store or for a bus, blacks often rubbed shoulders with me. The sensation was unique for me, both in South Africa and in America, where I am usually self-conscious standing close to black people and sense their desire to maintain a comfortable distance. The sensation gave me a great sense of belonging."

For the next three weeks Anderson traveled around the country, visiting Cape Town, Pretoria and Port Elizabeth as well as Johannesburg. About a third of the time he was disguised as a black man. When he was in disguise he used his birth certificate and King's College ID for identification; neither of them had his photograph. He also carried his Middlebury ID, his passport and a copy of Griffin's book in case he had to explain himself. The small confrontations with whites continued on park benches, in restaurants, in railway stations. "White people would look right through you, as if you weren't there. Unless they thought you were looking at their girl friends."

"Since my experiences at Andover I have often found that I learn most and grow most when I have put myself into situations that are . . . beyond my present capacities to handle. . . . But I will not put myself into such danger again. I have found the limit."

He talked with blacks, many of whom seemed to have given up hope. "It seems that they have wanted change for so long and so little has happened that some of them don't believe anything will happen. And they just get angrier and angrier."

Ironically, some of the most jarring experiences of Anderson's trip occurred when he was not in disguise. Traveling between Johannesburg and Cape Town he struck up conversation with five white South African soldiers, who were headed for an army camp in Bloemfontein. He found them likeable in many ways. "It was amazing. They were caring people who would have done anything for me. They were delighted to see and talk with an American. They told me how much they admired America. And yet they were the most unabashedly racist people I have ever met." The closer the relationship the more painful the experience: one elderly white man was particularly kind to him, taking him out to lunch, introducing him to interesting contacts, showing him the sights. Passing by a Cape Town suburb made white by the forced removal of the previous inhabitants, the old man commented, "It was necessary. The houses are nicer now." "I was seeing the other side of his personality," says Anderson. "The removal of hundreds of families meant nothing to him. It was a deeply disheartening experience. I felt corrupt."

The whole project came to an abrupt halt, however, in Port Elizabeth. In disguise, Anderson was waiting for a train; he went to pick up his baggage and couldn't find his claim check. He looked through his wallet and camera case and was starting to flip through the books he was carrying when he became aware of a black man in white overalls examining the contents of the camera case. "I'd rather you didn't look at those," he said. "They're mine." "I am a policeman," the other replied matter-of-factly, and laying out the passport in the counter, he asked, "Is this yours?" Anderson hurriedly explained his project. "Because he was black, I hoped that if I relayed the innocence of my efforts and showed him Griffin's book, he would ask me to wash and leave the situation at that. All at once I felt that I had lost control of the situation and was very alone."

Six hours of interrogation in the police station followed. "I was terrified. My assumption was that I would have little or no chance of extricating myself. My choices were limited. I would tell the truth and emphasize what little harm I had done." That is what he did. He described his project, what he had done since he had been in the country and, when they demanded it, he gave them the names of the South Africans who had known of his intentions. They searched all his belongings, taking his makeup and film and photocopying his journal before returning it to him. He was photographed with and without his disguise; he made a formal statement and signed a waiver saying that he had no grievance against the South African government and that he understood their actions in detaining him. By the end of the interrogation the police officers began to treat him as if they were amused, rather than angered by what he had done. They gave him a meal and had him spend a night in the home of one of the officers. The next day he was released and headed for Johannesburg.

There remained one more painful chore to do. He called on the university professors he had named in his statement to the police to apologize. One said, "If I was in your situation I would have done the same. They already bug my house and throw bricks through my windows. What else can they do?" The other was furious and upset. Anderson found this response more understandable. It was she who had warned him of the danger. This remains the most difficult of all his experiences to live with, says Anderson. There is no way to redress any damage he might have done.

Anderson is back at Middlebury now, preparing to graduate in June with a major in American history. He is committed to help effect change in South Africa; he has joined Amnesty International and has spoken of his experiences to groups on and off campus. Of the events of last spring he says, "I was very naive. I did not learn anything new about the situation there to share with others, but I was educated. I began to glimpse the pain that society is going through. Since my experiences at Andover I have often found that I learn most and grow most when I have put myself into situations that are beyond my control, beyond my present capacities to handle. I find that I grow an incredible amount that way. That is what occurred on this occasion too, but I have to confess that I will not put myself into such danger again. I have found the limit."

Did Andover have any influence that prompted this action of his? Not specifically, he says, but the whole atmosphere of a place that puts a provincial boy from Middlebury, Vermont, next to a boy from the projects of Chicago, hires a faculty that will not let you leave your values unexamined and encourages you to tackle tasks that seem way over your head — all of this had a general effect. "I have never forgotten Sizer's words to us at graduation: 'to respect the traditional and the familiar,' but to 'go on to seek the unfamiliar.'"

Vincent Avery, a member of the Andover faculty since 1976, is Chairman of the Department of Philosophy and Religious Studies.

Drought and Relief in Sub-Saharan Africa

Raymond A. Lamontagne '53 investigating drought conditions and relief efforts in Chad and Burkina Faso.

by Raymond A. Lamontagne '53

The Phillips and Abbot alumni/ae body is full of fascinating individuals, experts in a variety of fields. From time to time the editor will invite one to share his or her insights or opinions on a topic of wide-spread interest.

Last summer Raymond A. Lamontagne '53 took part in a United Nations mission to Chad and Burkina Faso (formerly Upper Volta) to investigate drought conditions and relief efforts. The editor asked Mr. Lamontagne to write about the problems facing sub-Saharan Africa today, as he sees them.

The pictures of starving children in Africa have left our television screens. They have been replaced by earthquake victims in Mexico, mud-slide victims in Columbia and victims of international terrorism. But the crisis in Africa endures and may have reached a dimension beyond anything we have ever known. Virtually an entire sub-continent is suffering from acute famine and environmental loss. It is quite possible that sub-Saharan Africa will slide into a state of permanent disaster. No other region of the world is experiencing a decline in per capita food production while population growth rates are increasing. According to World Bank estimates, some 60% of the people who live in Africa consume fewer calories per day than health officials deem necessary for normal life. The consequences of this deficiency are staggering. An estimated five million African children will die this year, and malnutrition and hunger will permanently cripple an additional five million.

Let us briefly review some of the underlying causes of this extraordinary crisis.

— The national boundaries of most of the affected areas of Africa were superficially imposed by political considerations external to the region. This has resulted in the creation of nations that lack cohesion and that may not be economically viable independent entities.

— These newly independent countries are still vulnerable and fragile as they struggle through a period of decolonization. They have suffered from inexperienced leadership, have been victimized by poor economic planning and have been plagued by internal corruption and external exploitation.

— The region's political instability also drains scarce resources. Libya's invasion and continued occupation of northern Chad, border skirmishes between Mali and Burkina Faso, and civil strife in Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan are all debilitating factors that contribute to the continuing and growing crisis.

— The region has been victimized by environmental terrorism, weather patterns of drought and downpour creating equally serious problems. The reasons for this weather pattern are unclear. Some experts blame deforestation, some claim it is cyclical, and others maintain that the drought is irreversible and will continue the process of the desertification of the entire mid-continent. Whatever the causes, the result is a disastrous environment with devastating effects on the ability of African people to provide for themselves.

— The countries most affected by the famine lack the necessary infrastructure for economic growth. The illiteracy rate is high. There is a dearth of trained personnel in all fields. There is a grossly inadequate system of transportation and communication, making commerce and education difficult at best.

These factors, among others, all contribute to the growing pessimism that Africa may never be able to deal successfully with her problems. Nevertheless, there are some hopeful signs. The crisis seems to have forced some fundamental changes in priorities by the African governments involved, as well as by developed nations and external organizations lending development assistance.

What are the Africans doing for themselves, and what might outsiders do to help? The prevailing atmosphere in the countries I visited was one of resistance to fate and of dogged commitment to their regions' rejuvenation. These people have endured great personal sacrifice and have proven their willingness to invest much of their meager incomes to educate their children or share with others who are even more needy in the hope of reversing the current downward trend.

New African leadership is emerging, and their policies seem to be treating the causes as well as the symptoms of their problems. Efforts are being made not just to feed the hungry but to teach them about nutrition. For the first time in modern African history radical land reform is underway and the small farmers who constitute the majority of Africa's population and produce the bulk of its food are receiving agricultural assistance. Technical solutions to African agricultural problems are being introduced with greater realism and with a better understanding of how to fit the technology into the traditional patterns of African life.

The health problems of the region that have drained so much of the people's vitality are being addressed through general education and comprehensive immunization programs. During a three-week period in 1984, a nation-wide operation in Burkina Faso was responsible for vaccinating millions of children against measles, yellow fever and cerebrospinal meningitis. It was one of the most successful programs of its kind ever undertaken and has served as a model of what can be done.

Villagers at feeding center in Chad.

Communication networks are being established that could help develop greater national unity. Roads and bridges are being built. We were in Chad for the opening of the first bridge to span the river between Chad and the Cameroons. The bridge is a vital link in transporting food and supplies from the nearest port to an area of need.

These are all encouraging developments, but it remains clear that sustained economic development will require massive assistance from many sources. First and foremost, we should understand that there are no quick fixes to Africa's problems. We must match the courage of the African people with patience and continued attention to their problems. We must understand and appreciate the relationship between an exploding population and desertification of formerly productive lands. We should remember that we have experienced our own "dust bowls" and our own periods of economic depression. We must understand that our ties to Africa are not only humanitarian but involve our economic interest and our political security as well.

Help is needed from all sources — governments, international organizations, private agencies and individuals. Together, these sources, along with African nations themselves, can meet the current emergency and provide the necessary tools for social and economic growth. But there will be waste. There will be corruption. There will be ingratitude. What we must focus on is the fact that there are also many effective programs. There is cooperation. There is hope. The key to Africa's future and possibly to our own may depend on the pictures of starving children with distended bellies, having left our television screens, never leaving our conscience.

Ray Lamontagne '53 is President of the Encore Company, an investment banking firm in White Plains, New York. He is an Andover parent and a member of the recently established Andover Development Board.

Books

The Andover Bulletin takes pleasure in announcing the publication of books by its graduates and its faculty. Because projected dates for publication often prove unreliable, we do not announce a book until we have a copy in hand. All books sent to us will be catalogued and shelved in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with the Alumni Collection.

Restitution: The Land Claims of the Mashpee, Passamaquoddy, and Penobscot Indians of New England

by Paul Brodeur '49
Northeastern University Press, 1985, 148 pp., $18.95

During the late nineteen-sixties and early seventies, three New England tribes — the Mashpee of Cape Cod, and the Passamaquoddy and the Penobscot of Maine — sought restitution for lands they had lost since the American Revolution. In Restitution Paul Brodeur, staff writer for The New Yorker, tells the complicated story of these legal suits, including the behind-the-scenes developments and political machinations. The author's twenty-three-year association with the Mashpee makes him an advocate of their cause. Although the Mashpees eventually lost their suit, the Maine Indians won an out-of-court settlement.

There is now a revival in faith-healing within the charismatic renewal movement of the Catholic Church. In this book the author, a Catholic priest and Vicar for Parish Life and Worship for the Diocese of Syracuse, New York, documents scripture, church tradition, and contemporary experience to demonstrate that the power to heal the sick was not restricted to Jesus or his disciples but is available to believers today. Rev. Champlin also explains how his own pastoral approach shifted to include healing ministry.

Portraits and Dreams, Photographs and Stories by Children of the Appalachians

Writers and Readers Publishing, Inc.,
1985, 123 pp., paper $9.95

In 1975 photographer Wendy Ewald moved to southeastern Kentucky to teach photography to elementary schoolchildren in the remote hollows of Appalachia. Under her careful tutelage, children between six and fourteen years-old were able to capture intimate portraits of family and community life that no outsider could have taken; the words accompanying this compilation of photographs are from conversations Ewald had with eight of her students. Child psychiatrist, Robert Coles, provides a short introduction. The photographs in this volume have been on exhibit throughout the United States.

HOUSE TRACY KIDDER

The Emergence of Whitehead's Metaphysics, 1925-1929

by Lewis S. Ford '51
State University of New York Press, Albany, 1984, 351 pp., cloth $39.50; paper $19.95

This book explores the philosophical underpinnings of one of the twentieth-century's most eminent philosophers. The author presents a detailed study of the metaphysical ideas in Science and the Modern World, Religion in the Making, and Process and Reality, and deduces an earlier metaphysics that is continuous with Whitehead's later philosophy of nature. The twists and turns of Whitehead's reflections serve as an example of philosophical creativity in the making.

House

by Tracy Kidder '63
Houghton Mifflin Co., 1985, 341 pp., $17.95

In his latest book Pulitzer-prize winning author Tracy Kidder explores a fundamental American dream — building and owning a new home. Kidder takes us through the process of building a home, from the earliest planning stages to the day the proud owners move in.

We come to know not only the owners, but the builders — Apple Corps, a motley crew of talented craftsmen — and the architect, whose award-winning design gives form to the owners' dreams. Kidder delves deep into these people's lives and explores the relations between them.

Colonial American English

by Richard M. Lederer, Jr. '35
Verbatim Books, 1985, 267 pp.

This glossary lists and defines over

3,000 obscure or obsolete words and phrases used in America between 1608 and 1783. The author has culled terms from documents of the day — patents, deeds, laws, newspapers, letters and diaries. He also provides useful etymologies, unusual facts and interesting sidelights uncovered in his research.

What I Know So Far

by Gordon Lish '52
Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1984, 162 pp., $14.95

The short stories in this collection explore coming to terms with childhood fantasies and parental ties as well as modern marriages, the literary process, and the perils of "urban circumstance." Gathered in one volume, they achieve an artful unison and have a cumulative effect even more impressive than when they were published originally.

Peru

by Gordon Lish '52
E. P. Dutton, 1986, 222 pp., $15.95

The title of Gordon Lish's new novel belies its setting. This is not a tale of exotica, but a haunting account of deep-seated childhood memories. The adult life of Lish's obsessive protagonist is marred by the one-upmanship experienced in the sandbox, where it seems one's identity and values are indelibly shaped. The element of surprise and tense narrative make this novel unique in confessional literature.

A Portrait of a School: Coeducation at Andover

by Kathleen M. Dalton
Phillips Academy, 1986, 213 pp., $10.00

PA's Ten Year Coeducation Committee has spent two years studying coeducation and gender at PA, and the result is an interdisciplinary study, A Portrait of a School: Coeducation at Andover. The study considers cultural forces at large that have shaped coeducation, recent coeducational trends, and data from PA student and faculty surveys, and it concludes that coeducation is working well at Andover. Kathy Dalton, instructor of history and the social sciences, has written one of the most comprehensive studies of gender in secondary education. (Please see "The Coeducation Study: A Portrait of a School," in the Fall 1985 issue of the Andover Bulletin.)

McKain is now completing his autobiography about his early life.

Celebrate the Changes

by Carolyn Butler Dow '61

Being in one's forties is fashionable, I've decided. It's the new prime-time. Today, it seems, age means style, vigor, wisdom.

Our role models no longer come from the sophomoric jet set of the celebrity world. Our respect and admiration have turned to men and women with more maturity and savoir faire, who instead of relinquishing the limelight to a younger generation because of a few wrinkles and gray hairs, have continued to expand their lives and give respectability to the middle years and beyond.

I'm actually proud to be in my forties. I have a sense of history about me now. It's been a rough road for a decade, though. I remember turning 30 — what a dependent landmark. I thought I was over the hill. I used to gape into the mirror and wince each time a new wrinkle appeared. I began trying to smile without using my eyes in order not to tax my obviously aged eye muscles. As my thirties hurtled on, however, I began to realize that the hill was still there to climb and that the fun was in the climbing.

And now I'm forty-two, and going strong. I feel fitter, wiser, more balanced than ever. In a few years I may even know what I want to do when I grow up. Getting older means getting better all the time.

And getting closer all the time is the Andover-Abbot reunion weekend in June. Some reuniting classes will have spent five — some sixty-five — years growing, expanding, discovering what works and what doesn't work, learning about others and learning about themselves.

June 13-15 will be an opportunity to share your experiences and to be with some pretty incredible individuals who were a large part of your past. You will feel a sense of continuity to your life. You will touch your past, not as a nostalgic interlude, but as a touchstone to reflect where you've been and where you are now. Those old buddies with whom you used to slip into the sealed privacy of your dorm room to dissect all those ponderous issues about term papers, the opposite sex, or the next smuggled cigarette, have been growing all those years since Abbot and Andover into thoughtful, diversified people, confronting the universal conflicts, crises, and questions with which we all grapple.

If you are feeling ambivalent about reuniting with all those curios from the past, let me assure you, you are not alone. I know that reunions stir up mixed emotions. I know you'll arrive feeling skeptical and nervous, wondering if your classmates will notice you're looking older, wondering if all the planning and traveling was worth it.

I also know that those feelings will evaporate. Last year after the Saturday morning alumni/ae meeting, an alumnus at his 50th reunion seized my hand and said, "I'm having the best time. This is the first time I've been back since I graduated. I can't believe I let it go this long. What a wonderful school we have."

It's still your school, alums. It's still part of your past. It's gone through incredible changes and growing pains, and it may not be wholly as you remembered it.

Nor will your classmates be exactly the way you remember them. I invite you to come back to Andover to celebrate these changes and the age you are today.

Cally Butler Dow '61, Co-Chairman of Class Secretaries and Reunions, is a regular correspondent and photographer for the Ellsworth American, a community newspaper in Ellsworth, Maine. She is also Director of Public Affairs at the College of the Atlantic in Bar Harbor, Maine.

RETIREMENTS

John C. McClement

Next fall Morse Hall will be a little more quiet. No longer will Jack McClement's stentorian commands be heard through the open windows of the third floor or through the walls of adjacent classrooms. The old cliché, he touched the lives of generations of students, 'though wonderfully true, takes on special meaning in his case. Not only did the students in his classroom have a special experience, but those in nearby rooms also often witnessed some entertaining audio, especially during the quiet of a test period. Through the walls on one such occasion was heard, "What, you can't hear me? Well, that's the first time in 34 years that has happened."

Jack did his secondary preparation at Westminster in Simsbury, Connecticut, and went on to Yale, graduating in 1943. Uncle Sam and WWII then claimed him, and most of the next three years was spent in Europe as first sergeant of an infantry company.

Following the service, he started teaching at Kiskiminetas Spring School in western Pennsylvania.

While teaching there, he earned a Master's degree from the University of Pittsburgh. In 1952 he joined Andover's mathematics department.

The Instructor in Mathematics on the Cecil F. P. Bancroft Foundation, Jack, has given outstanding service to the School in many ways. He is an enthusiastic and energetic teacher. Inattentive students are quickly impressed by his accuracy with erasers and small pieces of chalk, and an unprepared one sometimes receives a short lecture delivered with Jack standing on the student's desk. No matter how intolerant he is of inattention and poor effort, his students know that he is always available for extra help and that he sincerely cares about their progress.

Jack has been extremely active in the swimming program, serving in all capacities from varsity swim coach to meet official. He is a charter member and former officer of the New England Prep Schools Swimming Association. He is a familiar sight on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons in winter, pacing up and down the edge of the pool in white shirt, pants and sneakers stopwatches hanging from his neck, encouraging hardworking swimmers, and forming team strategies for the next event.

He has also contributed greatly to the crew program since its inception, coaching both boys and girls. His administrative abilities have been put to good use as an Assistant Director in the Summer Session and now as Director of Financial Aid, where he has been instrumental in the expansion of the loan program. He has served for many years on the Flagstaff Cluster discipline committee, where students and faculty have found him to be firm but fair, wise and generous.

The greatest challenge to his organizational ability came in the years when he was Scheduling Officer. When PA and Abbot merged the sudden increase of 300 students, coupled with the inauguration of the trimester calendar made the old system of placing students in classes both difficult and arbitrary. Jack instituted Arena Day. The new scheme not only got all the paper work done, but also gave most upper classmen a wide choice in their teachers, courses, and hours. Only this past year, after thirteen years, did Arena Day fall victim of the computer age in an effort to provide more adequate staffing and uniform class size.

For 17 years Jack was a house counselor in large and small dorms. When the Cluster system was started, Jack gave up his non-dorm school housing to provide a residence for a cluster dean, and purchased a house on the edge of campus. We're glad that Jack and Mary Elise, who once worked in the Dean's office for Gren Benedict, have no plans to give up their home on Morton Street and that they expect to divide their time in retirement between Andover and their summer home in Lincolnville, Maine.

Philip B. Weld

When Phil Weld joined the Andover faculty, Truman was in his second term, George Burns was approaching middle-age, and PA tuition was $1,400. The school population was seven-hundred-nineteen students and 84 faculty, all male. The science division had seven members and offered three major and four minor courses. Phil has been an important part of the major changes that have seen the school population grow to about twelve-hundred-nineteen students (43% girls), 221 faculty (now 39% female), and a science division of 17 people offering 39 courses.

Philip Brownlie Weld, Instructor in Chemistry and Physics on the George Peabody Foundation, received his Bachelor of Engineering degree from the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale in 1942 and his Master of Science degree from the University of Michigan in 1961. After teaching three years at the Middlesex School, he joined the Andover faculty in 1951. Phil was appointed to teach physics and elementary science. He taught both subjects well and soon added chemistry to his arsenal. Consequently, when science honors (a two-year college-level sequence of chemistry and physics for high-powered students of math and science) was added to the curriculum, Phil was one of its teachers. He has been a house counselor at Pemberton Cottage, Carter House, Eastham House and Day North. He has coached soccer and hockey. He has taught all levels of chemistry and physics, and for a full twenty years was chairman of the chemistry department. He has been academic advisor to many students and has recently served as head academic advisor to the West Quad North Cluster. He has helped Anne raise their two children, Cathy and Dan, and he has planned courses and edited chemistry texts.

To be a colleague of Phil Weld is a rewarding experience. He is a man of tremendous integrity and dedication. He understands teaching and learning, teachers and students, in a profound way. And he cares deeply about them. He seldom gives them the answer when they question him, but he is happy to give hints or tell them how to find the answer. He is a perfectionist himself, and he requires perfection from his students.

Phil is great problem solver, and the only time I have ever seen Phil stumped, even temporarily, was when a skunk took up residence in a window well at their home in Hidden Field. House guests were expected, and the skunk would be directly under their window. Phil got a board and made a ramp for the skunk. No luck. The next day and the day after, the skunk was still there and the guests arrival was imminent. Finally, Phil added a bit of enticement, in the form of cat food, along the ramp and into the woods. The next day, the skunk was gone.

Phil has been a summer inhabitant of the Adirondack mountains and lakes since childhood. For many years his family owned and ran a summer vacation resort on Lake Clear. Phil was general manager and handyman for the operation, and his engineering degree from Yale was indispensable when it came to fixing the plumbing or the home-grown electrical system. After Anne and he married, they continued to run the resort, but gave it up after a time to buy a landlocked summer home in nearby upper St. Regis. There, Phil sails, reads, plays bridge and every morning he swims. The air temperature can be below freezing and the water temperature approaching the same, but Phil has his morning swim.

Anne worked for years as a most effective laboratory technician for the chemistry department while Phil chaired it. Anne knew by name and helped generations of chemistry students in the laboratory. Together they have made a unique team. It's not every husband and wife combination that can work so effectively together. Anne has been a charter director of Handsprings, which puts on a huge crafts fair in the Cage each spring. She helped put together the Andover Cookbook, and finds time to run the annual Ski and Skate Exchange for the Town of Andover, an enormous undertaking.

Phil and Anne will be sorely missed in the science division, the School community, and the town. They are now deciding where to live among several locations in southern New Hampshire. We hope they pick the location they like that is closest to Andover, and that we will see them often.

Campus News

PA's fall and winter terms teemed with concerts, lectures, plays, readings, films and exhibitions. Even listing them is a task. Many of the events were presented in connection with this year's Headmaster's Symposium, "The Soviet Union: Beyond Stereotypes, Toward Understanding."

Speakers

Speakers included Admiral Stansfield Turner, former Director of the CIA, who spoke on "Secrecy and Democracy"; Dr. Benjamin Spock '21; Soviet specialist Dr. S. Frederick Starr, the president of Oberlin College; Craig Whitney '61, Managing Editor for The New York Times, who spoke on the question, "Will the Soviet Union Survive to the Year 2000?"; Vladimir Frumkin, Oberlin music professor and specialist in Russian folk guitar music; gerontologist and Soviet authority Walter McKain, formerly of the University of Connecticut; and Howard University Professor Frank M. Snowden, Jr., who spoke on "Blacks as Seen by Ancient Egyptian, Greek and Roman Artists."

One of the highlights of the winter term was a four-day visit of four representatives of the Soviet Union: Valeriy Chibisenkov, Secretary General of the US-Soviet Society; Valeriy Pivovarov, Comparative Education Specialist at the Academy of Pedagogical Sciences; Nikita Zag-ladin, International Relations Specialist at the Academy of Social Sciences; and Stanislav Pirogov, Professor of Economics, also at the Academy of Social Sciences. Our Soviet guests attended classes, visited at length with students and faculty, and toured Andover and sites of interest in the Boston area.

The Arts

A wide variety of music and theatre events contributed much to the School's vitality. The Music Department sponsored a number of student and faculty recitals, orchestral and ensemble concerts, and concerts and performances by visiting groups and artists. The Drama Lab and the George Washington main stage were well-used, hosting a number of plays including several student-directed productions. The fall's main play was an energetic production of Shakespeare's The Tempest, directed by Kevin Heelan, which examined with extraordinary power the play's dark and disturbing undertone that manifests itself particularly in Caliban.

A number of poets and writers read from their works on campus, including Amy Clampitt, Charles Pratt, Ray Young Bear, and Andrei Voznesensky, whom The New York Times called "the greatest living poet" of the Soviet Union. Fiction writer Rand Cooper read from his work, and Co-Writer-in-Residence David McKain read from his autobiography, which he is now completing. Renowned novelist Vasily Aksyonov lectured on Soviet writing in the 1960s.

The Addison Gallery

The Addison Gallery hosted a number of exciting exhibitions, including several student shows and exhibitions from the permanent collection. "Art for the Masses: Russian Revolutionary Art from the Merrill C. Berman Collection" traced styles contributing to the fusion of avant-garde art and politics in Russia following the 1917 revolution. Other exhibits included Richard Yee: Photographs of China and America; Elmer Rising: Drawings of New England; Walter Evans: Photographs of the Brooklyn Bridge; and an exhibition of paintings, prints, and drawings by Paul Laffoley entitled "Odyssey of a Late Pre-Raphaelite." Artist and professor Zhu Weimin, from the People's University in Beijing, spent a week at Andover in the fall, exhibiting his work at the Addison, lecturing in the Art Department, and meeting students. Four PA artist/teachers also exhibited some of their recent works, including books and collages by Mary McCarthy, stage designs by Elaine Spatz-Rabinowitz, photographs by Kelly Wise, and paintings and drawings by Christopher Cook.

Fuess Award

On 11 November PA faculty and students gathered to honor New York State Supreme Court Justice George Bundy Smith '55. Mr. Smith received the 1985 Claude Moore Fuess Award for Distinguished Contribution to Public Service, the 14th recipient of what has become the most prestigious honor the School can bestow on a person outside the immediate community. One of the first black judges in the nation, Smith embodies a commitment to public service and serves as a model for young Americans of all races. Mr. Smith was the subject of a feature article in the Fall '84 Andover Bulletin.

Representatives of the Soviet Union spent four days at Andover.

in "The Tempest" Sam Gomez '86 and Janet Clarkson '87 play lovers Ferdinand and Miranda. Greg Hays '87, as Prospero, keeps a close eye on them.

Trustees

At their January meeting the trustees set the 1986-87 tuition at $10,500 for boarding students and $8,000 for day students. With this increase of 8.25% Andover remains one of the least expensive New England prep schools. The financial aid budget was increased 16%, to $3.2 million.

The trustees also chose the Boston-based architectural firm Shepley, Bulfinch, Richardson, and Abbott to design and oversee the renovation and expansion of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, which was built in 1926 for a school of 650 students. We hope to begin construction by the spring of '87 and complete the entire project by the fall of '88.

Faculty

Ten faculty members received Kenan Grants to help finance individual scholarly and creative projects this summer. The recipients included three teachers from both the English and Music Departments, two from the History Department, and one each from the Theatre and Mathematics Departments.

Mimi Bravar will complete her doctoral dissertation on the nature of vibrato; no comprehensive work in the subject has been attempted since 1929. Margaret Gibson will use her funds to travel to several conferences and readings and to complete her newest manuscript of poems, Sleeping Out Under the Stars. English Instructor Peter Gilbert '72 will work on a biography of Englishman Michael Mason (1900-1983), explorer, spy, and country gentleman. Theatre Instructor Kevin Heelan will spend the summer completing the second part of a dramatic trilogy concerning life in the Maryland eastern shore towns of Ocean City, Berlin, and Cambridge. The first play of the trilogy, "Distant Fire," was one of five plays chosen from 6,000 to receive a CBS/Dramatist Guild Foundation Playwriting Competition Award. The Hartford Stage Company will produce the play this spring, and Heelan will use the $5,000 prize to continue work on the project.

Cluster Dean Victor Henningsen III '69 will finish his doctoral dissertation that surveys the development of federal education programs in Alaska after 1877. The work analyzes the way in which white reformers sought to employ education as the central means of assimilating minority groups during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Mathematics Instructor Douglas Kuhlmann will begin work on a textbook on discrete mathematics. Music Instructor Peter Lorenzo will apprentice himself to renowned Flamenco guitarist Anores Batista in Spain. English Instructor Thylas Moss will use the summer to write her novel Ashes

Like Bread. Edwin Quattlebaum '60, in collaboration with author Richard Rhodes, will write a book on the development of the atomic bomb during 1938-1945. Music Instructor Peter Warsaw will learn a new repertoire to use "as the nucleus of a program" to play for the Peabody-Mason Piano Competition in December.

While Kenan Grants support individuals' scholarly and creative projects, Abbot Academy Association Grants support institutional educational ventures at PA. The grants are made possible by an endowment established with Abbot Academy funds at the time of the Abbot-Phillips merger. Leslie Ballard, an instructor in the Chemistry Department, will use her grant to improve the ventilation system in the chemistry laboratories and to develop new demonstrations for classroom use. Father Richard Gross received two grants for the community service program — one to pay for bus transportation to the off-campus service programs, and the other for a scholarship fund for students taking part in an intensive service project this spring vacation. French Instructor Robert Moss received a grant to promote the Amateur Radio Club. Cathy Royal, English Instructor and Minority Advisor, received two grants — one to augment PA's extraordinary collection of American art by beginning a collection of Afro-American art and artifacts, particularly works related to PA or its graduates, a collection that will have important historical and educational meaning for the Phillips community at large. Royal's second grant is to take a group of students to Dakar, Senegal, for 10-14 days of travel, work and study this December. French Instructor Hale Sturges also received two grants — one to continue scholarship help for the summer exchange program with the Harbin School of Technology in China, and the second to send a faculty member to China; the last several years have seen five teachers from Harbin visit PA, but no PA teacher has yet traveled to Harbin. □

Sports

John Robinson '86 has Northfield Mount Hermon all tied up.

*by Matthew Shine '86
and Michael Morris, Jr. '86*

At mid-season, Andover teams are, for the most part, performing well. Alpine skiing has had the greatest success by far, compiling a 12-0 record in three meets to date. For the boys', captain Rico Kellogg '86 and Sam Britton '87 have consistently skied strongly, while Nikki Vadeboncoeur '88 has been as phenomenal for the girls' team as she was last year. She has been aided by Gillian Recesso '87 and Heidi Salin '87 in keeping the team's slate spotless.

Coach Jim Stephen's wrestling squad is at 6-2 and going strong, having recently beaten Masconomet, perennial powerhouse of the Cape Ann League. PA's team has been particularly strong in the higher weight classes. Jeff Kent '86 is undefeated in the heavyweight class, and captain Richard Gorham '86 has lost only once at the 167 lb. class level.

Both girls' basketball and girls' hockey teams are enjoying identical 5-2 records. Hockey has rallied well behind co-captains Eleanor Tydings '86 and Ginna Jones '86. Their strong leadership, combined with the scoring talent of Lucia Murphy '88 and Mary Slaney '86, should make the second half of the season as successful as the first. The girls' basketball team is just gaining its momentum. After a couple of early-season losses, the girls have recently been running up bushels of points while being stingy on the defense.

Boys' basketball and hockey teams' season have been disappointing thus far. At 3-7, the basketball team is looking forward to a mid-season turnaround. With Mike Gill '86 and John Wilson '86 hitting their strides at the forwards, and Captain Matt Pechinski '86 and Wayne Bethea '86 directing the offense, they should be able to make that turnaround. Boys' hockey stands at 4-9, and has been a puzzle all year. The Blue put forward three strong lines and two tough sets of defensemen behind them. Although their play has been inconsistent, their flashes of brilliance have been more frequent recently, especially from first line John Reill '87, Dave Franzosa '89 and Steve Cassella '86. The big 7-1 win over the tough Kimball Union squad may be the turning point.

Meanwhile the girls' biggest disappointment has been the squash team, now at 1-7. A glimmer of hope came with their win over Middlesex, a 7-0 whitewash. Boys' squash, though, has suffered only one setback in their seven matches albeit to Exeter. Top seed and captain Jim Kingsbury's '86 game has been extremely strong, combining both power and finesse to overwhelm opponents. Allen Hopkins '87 has also been playing consistently well at second seed. The team has a chance to redeem itself on 1 March, when it faces Exeter again.

In the swimming pool, Andover boasts a combined 6-4 record; the boys' team has a 4-1 record and the girls' record is 2-3. The boys' only loss came at the hands of Deerfield while the girls have had a tougher time of it. Both boys' and girls' track are running well, literally and figuratively. The boys' record is 4-0, and the girls' is 2-2. Finally, boys' gymnastics is performing better than its 1-3 record indicates, and the girl gymnasts have a 2-2 record. [

The girls' hockey team enjoys a 5-2 record.

Alumni Trip to China!

Announcing a rare opportunity to travel in and learn about China, available to only 20 Andover alumni and parents. As a result of the Academy's relationship with the Harbin Institute of Technology, 20 people will be able to travel in the People's Republic of China with representatives of the Harbin Institute. The organizers from Harbin have visited Andover and are well acquainted with the School. A Phillips Academy representative will accompany the group. All participants will enter China at Beijing, to begin the tour on Sunday, 12 October 1986. Departure will be through Hong Kong on Friday, 31 October 1986.

An exciting itinerary is planned, including Beijing, its Ming Tombs, the Great Wall and the Forbidden City; Harbin, home of well-known Harbin Institute of Technology; Xi'an, ancient capital of China, boasting innumerable historic sites, including the terra cotta warrior excavation, with thousands of life-size and personalized figures; Nanjing, a former capital; Shanghai, a city of bustling vibrance on the famous Bund waterfront; Suzhou, Venice of China; Hangzhou, a lovely city of old temples, beautiful lakes and gardens, and charming tree-lined streets; Guilin, renowned for its karst mountains, an inspiration to Chinese poets and painters for centuries; a day-trip down the Li and Jiang Rivers; and Guangzhou, or ("Canton"). From Guangzhou, you will leave China for Hong Kong, and either the trip home or additional traveling on your own. Dates and places may change slightly.

To reserve a place on the tour please send your check for $3,000 per person, payable to the Trustees of Phillips Academy, to cover the travel within China. It is possible that a major portion of this cost will be tax-deductible as a gift to Phillips Academy. The amount is not calculable at this time. Your travel from the U.S. to Beijing and your return from Hong Kong is not included in this price, and participants will make those travel arrangements themselves. Send your check to Joseph Mesics, Secretary of the Academy, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Job Opening

Associate Director of Capital Development

We seek someone to assist the Director of Capital Development in working with the newly established Andover Development Board. The position would include supporting the Development Board's one hundred volunteers, working on publications, stewardship, solicitation, and serving as a member of the development team in the Office of Academy Resources. We seek a person with writing and organizational skills, and the enthusiasm to work with alumni, alumnae and parents. For more information please contact the Secretary of the Academy, or send a resumé to the Dean of Faculty, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Addison Journal

This April the Addison Journal begins publication. In keeping with the Addison Gallery's own bifocal vision that looks inward to the school and outward to the art public at large, the journal will attend to both recent developments in teaching about art and art issues of general interest. Moreover, it will cover all the arts at Andover, in recognition of the Gallery's multiple roles as a concert hall and theater as well as a museum. The emphasis, however, will remain on the visual arts.

The Addison Journal is intended primarily as a journal of ideas. Gallery Director Christopher C. Cook notes, "Ideas about the arts pervade this school in the minds of students, teachers, and alumni. For some time I have wanted to establish a forum for their consideration and debate. A journal of ideas and constructs about the arts, addressed to the various constituencies of the Addison Gallery appeared to be one way to start such a dialogue." The inaugural volume features an historical essay on the architect Charles Platt and a conversation between Peter Halley '71 and Carroll ("Tip") Dunham '67, two artists actively at work in New York City. It also contains an essay by Andover art instructor Shirley Veenema on the use of the computer in the visual arts at PA. News about the Addison and the arts at Andover concludes the volume. The Addison Journal is published semi-annually, in the spring and fall. The Journal will be mailed to all Gallery members. If you would like to become a member, please write: The Addison Gallery of American Art, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810. The individual membership fee is $15.00.

Alumni Council Weekend

The Alumni Council, a group of eighty-four Andover and Abbot graduates who serve as a liaison between the School and alumni, will hold its annual meeting at Andover 1-3 May. This year's discussion topic is "Minority Life at Andover: Realities and Goals." Cynthia Eaton Bing '61, President of the Alumni Council, will preside over the weekend's program, which will include alumni, faculty and students in a variety of meetings, panels and discussions groups.

Grandparents' Weekend

PA will hold its second annual weekend exclusively for grandparents on 10-11 May. Grandparents will be treated to a variety of school activities, including accompanying their grandchildren to morning classes and afternoon athletic contests as well as a luncheon in the Commons and a late-afternoon reception for faculty and grandparents at the home of Headmaster Don and Britta McNemar. Last year's inaugural Grandparents' Weekend drew over two hundred grandparents to the campus.

Alumni Lacrosse Game

Due to the increased popularity of this game, and because the alumni have been thumping the varsity lately, we will hold an Alumni vs. Alumni contest this spring.

The game will be played at 11:30 a.m. on Saturday 24 May. A barbecue will ensue immediately after the game, and at 2:00 p.m. the varsity will take on Exeter for the 51st time.

All alumni are invited to attend. For more information please call

Letters to the editor:

Andover and the Soviet Union

■ I enjoyed your special issue on Andover and the Soviet Union. The play by Kevin Heelan and George Cooke gets especial applause from this frequent visitor to the U.S.S.R. My only complaint is about the photo captions:

First, the photograph on page five is not of a church in Zagorsk, but of the famous Annunciation [Blagoveshchenskii] Cathedral in the Moscow Kremlin, designed at the end of the fifteenth century for Grand Prince Ivan the Great. Second, the picture on page four, to judge by the particularly well-written text by Mr. McKain, is of a Russian, not a Georgian, scythe (not to mention its owner).

Too bad there are not more Donald Kendalls around! His is a noble goal. Let us hope that the PA-U.S.S.R. trip, the brilliant William Ury (as presented in the same issue), and Geneva '85 are all harbingers of a new spirit of mutual understanding in the world. If so, it will be none too soon, and PA will again have played a role in the fortunes of the modern world.

Athletic Director Paul Kalkstein at (617) 475-3400, ext. 191.

Reunions

Andover and Abbot classes ending in 1 and 6 will have their class reunions on 13-15 June. If you have not yet received your weekend reservation form and preliminary program schedule, you should receive them soon. If you are not planning to attend, please read Carolyn Butler Dow's remarks, "Celebrate the Changes" on p.17.

The annual meeting of the Andover-Abbot Alumni Association will be held during Reunion Weekend on Saturday, 14 June, at 11:00 a.m. in the Memorial Gymnasium.

If you have any questions about reunions, please contact Denis Tippo, Director of Alumni and Parent Affairs, (617) 475-3400, ext. 283.

Thank you again for the excellent issue.

■ I have just finished reading your Volume 79 Number 2 edition re the Soviet Union.

I could write a long essay on its merits and faults. You would not have patience to read all that.

So let me say that your team was so enamoured of the red that they forgot the blue.

The Balance Between Athletics and Academics

■ I recently received Andover's brochure soliciting donations to the 1985 Alumni fund. It included a report of the Director of Athletics, Paul Kalkstein '61, and I quote:

"Andover helped to make some off-the-field news in athletics as well. Last July Don McNemar convened the Headmasters and Athletic Directors from Andover, Choate, Deerfield, Exeter, Lawrenceville, and Mt. Hermon at Phelps House to consider a proposal about athletics."

The proposal stated in part, "We have great reservations about the question of balance between interscholastic athletics and other aspects of our educational programs, and particularly about the amount of time in the school week that is given over to certain of the varsity sports practices and games. We endorse the long and generally healthy rivalries that animate sport contests between our schools, but we are deeply troubled by the violence that is tolerated as normal in some sports."

I stated my views in a letter that was too long to be published; suffice it to say that I know what Pogo meant when he said, "I have met the enemy and it is us."

St. Louis/Cleveland

St. Louis was the first stop on the Alumni and Admissions Offices' ambitious 1985-86 travel schedule. The Headmaster; the Secretary of the Academy; Jeannie Dissette, the newly appointed Dean of Admissions, and colleague, Robert Hulburd, headed to St. Louis on 1 October. Eugene F. Williams '42 and William M. Van Cleve '46 hosted a delightful reception and dinner that evening at the St. Louis Club.

On 2 October the Andover troupe traveled to Cleveland to continue Admissions recruiting and to gather with alumni, parents and friends at The University Club. Betsy Fauver Stueber '73 helped arrange an Afternoon with Andover, where a number of prospective applicants and their parents enjoyed the videotape, "Focus: Andover Today." Arrangements for the reception and dinner that followed were kindly made by Edward D. Yost '47 and Joseph M. Prahl '60.

San Francisco

On 23 October 1985 Andover/West hosted a reception in honor of Jeannie Dissette, PA's new Dean of Admissions, Jack Richards and Elizabeth Moore '80. Jeannie gave an overview of the School's Admissions policy and told about her transition to Andover after working for many years in college admissions. Jack Richards brought us up-to-date on the School. Hobie Birmingham '62 presented Jack with a $1,000 check from Andover/West for a scholarship to benefit a student from Northern California. After the reception, Jeannie, Jack and Beth joined alumni and parents for an enjoyable dinner at the Brasserie Chambord.

Miami

On 6-7 November OAR and Admissions Office representatives traveled to Miami. A luncheon meeting with key alumni and parent volunteer leaders inaugurated our thirteenth Regional Association — the Andover/Abbot Association of Southern Florida. Past PA parent Betty Huck and Stephen A. Lynch '59 have been instrumental in founding the board of directors, writing a set of by-laws and planning future events. Mr. & Mrs. Paul C. Huck hosted a reception for prospective students and parents and a well-attended dinner party for alumni and parents.

Chicago

Academy representatives spent the week of 18 November 1985 in Chicago recruiting students from the Windy City area. Admissions Officer Bob Hulburd and English instructor Cathy Royal, the PA faculty member responsible for minority support, visited schools and talked to prospective students, parents and guidance counselors.

P. D. Block III '54 and Rod Goldstein '70 arranged a luncheon meeting for Andover Development Board members and guests, including President of the Board of Trustees Mel Chapin '36, the McNemars, Joe Mesics '53, Secretary of the Academy, and Pat Edmonds, Director of Capital Development.

Dean of Admissions Jeannie Dissette, and Bob Hulburd, conducted an "Evening with Andover" on 20 November, which was well-attended by prospective students and their parents. Katherine Abler Harvey '65 and John S. Bakalar '66 made all the arrangements for the reception and dinner that followed.

Under P. D. Block and Rod Goldstein's leadership the Association has already been of enormous assistance to the Academy, and the Chicago Regional Association is further organizing itself to help PA in Illinois; through the efforts of Warren Baker '66 the Association is now officially incorporated with Illinois' Secretary of the State.

Arizona

On 3-5 December the Andover entourage headed to Phoenix and Tucson. Carol and Bill Torrey '49 hosted a reception and dinner for about 20 parents and alumni ranging from the classes of '29 to '76. The "Focus: Andover Today" videotape, got rave reviews. Both Britta and Don McNemar spoke about present-day Andover, and Jeannie Dissette shared her thoughts about the Admissions Office.

The evening of 4 December saw 25 alumni and parents attend a lovely reception and dinner at Jack Greenway's '42 Arizona Inn in Tucson. There was an enthusiastic and warm response from alumni and parents to Don and Britta McNemar's talks and Jeannie Dissette's remarks.

That's right. A life income gift to Andover will do just that. You and/or your spouse or heirs will receive four quarterly income checks each year for life. You'll also receive an immediate charitable income tax deduction, eliminate or reduce potential capital gains tax if appreciated securities are used to fund the gift, and, best of all, you'll be making an important contribution to the Academy. Philadelphia

Through the efforts of a dinner committee headed by Jamie Wyper '66 and a group of sixteen loyal sponsors, the Mid-Atlantic Andover/Abbot Association hosted an evening at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia on 10 December for 72 alumni, grandparents, prospective Andover families and friends. The program, entitled "Andover, Science and the Stars," featured a short history of science instruction at Andover by science division head Peter McKee and talks on the eruption of Mt. St. Helen's and Halley's comet by chemistry and geology instructor Bob Burnham '76 and physics and astronomy instructor Jennifer Bond, respectively. The evening ended with a show on the comet in the Institute's planetarium.

Milwaukee

Under the leadership of Gary Ahrens '66, efforts are underway to establish the Andover/Abbot Regional Association of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee area. A planning meeting 6 January began to organize a board of directors, write by-laws and plan future activities.

Merrimack Valley

The Merrimack Valley Andover/Abbot Association opened its season with a congenial get together to meet the new Dean of Residence, Jonathan Stableford. We sponsored a reception at the Addison Gallery for the opening of the exhibit, "Art for the Masses: Russian Revolutionary Art from the Merrill C. Berman Collection." The exhibit was presented in conjunction with the Headmaster's Symposium, "U.S.S.R.: Beyond Stereotypes, Toward Understanding." The association plans to give its support to Black Arts Weekend in February. Besides the traditional welcome to newly admitted students at our May reception, we look forward to our 2nd Dinner-Dance at the Commons on 26 April. Not only is the event great fun, but it enables us to provide our PA day students with a substantial book scholarship fund.

—Suzy Joseph

New York

Religion and freedom of the spirit, American and Soviet citizens' perceptions of each other, and several aspects of the U.S.-Soviet relations were the subjects of the first all-day symposium sponsored by the Andover/Abbot Association of New York.

Nearly 200 New York area alumni and parents gathered at the Harvard Club to hear an afternoon of panels featuring nine Andover faculty members who had been on the Russian trip. The panels were moderated by three Andover alumni: Robert Semple, Jr. '54, Evan Thomas III '69 and Richard Lombard '49, all of whom have extensive experience with their panel's subject matter. After a Russian dinner, the group was treated to folk songs sung by Masha Reichert, a teaching fellow in Russian, and a slide tape of the faculty trip put together by Lisa Rosen, instructor in art. After Don McNemar told us about the effect of the faculty trip on life at PA, we heard Craig Whitney '61, former head of the Moscow Bureau for the New York Times, answer his own question "Will there be a Soviet Union in the year 2000?" The answer was an assured "yes," but Mr. Whitney had lots of positive suggestions on how to deal with that fact.

History, politics, religion, art, music — we had a plate so full and stimulating that our delicious dinner seemed to take second place. Truly a great day for Andover in New York.

DEATHS

Alice Curtiss Sweeney '14

Alice Sweeney often stood by the curved window of her office near the student entrance of Draper Hall. She would stand there and look at the "Circle," gain a long view, literally and figuratively, . . . and ponder. Her presence by the window reassured us, each as well as student.

Her office, with its open door, encouraged students to come in and talk about the present, and also to confer about the future. Alice's observations were perceptive; her ability to understand the situation at hand and her insight into the needs of students and those around her were uncanny. Her descriptions of students and her college recommendations were models of honesty, wisdom, humor, and vividness.

As a classroom teacher Alice Sweeney encouraged lively discussion, thereby engendering increased self-confidence. Her interest and curiosity about the world, its people and their relationships widened the horizons of her students. Her commitment to quality and high standards deepened their appreciation of excellence.

Alice had that rare ability to guide and not to dictate. The editorial staff of Courant, the literary magazine, profited from her advice. Her patience and guidance to her successor as Director of Studies were unstinting; she was always available to all at her home on School Street.

In The Circle the class of 1949 remembered her "tweed suits, subtle wit, and hidden artistic talents." The Class of 1951 cited her as follows: "Miss Sweeney has devoted her time and thought to our interests. She has guided us sympathetically and effectively ever since we entered Abbot and has wisely formulated our course of study each year, finally counseling us in regard to colleges with inexhaustible patience. Perhaps most of all we appreciate her as a stimulating, provocative teacher of British Literature." The Class of 1955 observed that Alice Sweeney was "the skillful navigator of our course at Abbot, a patient advisor and a gentlewoman."

Miss Sweeney was a 1914 Abbot Academy graduate and a Vassar College graduate of 1918. She served as a teacher of English at Abbot Academy from 1920-1923 and 1935-1956, Director of Studies from 1937 to 1956, Acting Co-Principal in 1947-48, and as a trustee from 1963 until 1969.

Miss Sweeney is survived by two nephews, Arthur Sweeney, Jr. of South Freeport, Maine, and John Patrick Sweeney of New York City; and two nieces, Joan Sweeney of Mesa, Arizona, and Martha Sweeney Read of Gladwyne, Pennsylvania. Contributions in Miss Sweeney's memory may be made in her name to the Abbot Academy Faculty Fund, Phillips Academy, Andover.

Caroline Stevens Rogers

Caroline Stevens Rogers, who died November 11th at the age of 92, served well Phillips Academy, Abbot Academy, and the Merrimack Valley where she lived most of her lifetime. Mrs. Rogers is remembered as the founder of the Merrimack Valley Textile Museum, a collection of memorabilia of the textile industry assembled in part by her father and other members of the Stevens family who managed the Stevens mills in North Andover.

She is also much remembered by the Academy community for her links to both Abbot and Phillips. Although she attended the Winsor School in Boston, her mother, Lucy Amelia Abbot, was a graduate of Abbot Academy, and she herself served Abbot as a trustee and trustee emerita for 18 years. Her brother, Abbot Stevens '07 was an Andover trustee, and her son Samuel Stevens Rogers graduated from Phillips in 1943. As an Abbot trustee, Mrs. Rogers had generously supported Abbot and the education of young women there, but she warmly endorsed the merger with Phillips Academy in 1973 and thereafter supported the merged school with increasing generosity. She established the Abbot Academy Teaching Foundation in her mother's name and was enthusiastic about the Abbot Academy Association at the new Academy as means of furthering the interest and concerns of Abbot. She also helped establish the Foundation for the Headmaster in the name of John P. Stevens, Jr. '15.

Caroline Rogers was an indomitable spirit and a leader of many efforts for her community. She was also a warm, smiling person to all whom she met. She was a life-long walker and conservationist. As president of the North Andover Historical Society she did much to preserve the character and buildings of North Andover's Old Center, which date back to the 1640s. Her North Andover roots were deep: her ancestors settled there in the mid-seventeenth century and helped to establish the meetinghouse where she attended church.

After graduation from Bryn Mawr, she served as a Red Cross Nurse's Aide in 1918 in Toul, France, and in 1921 she was the first woman to be flown across the English Channel. During World War II she became the first woman Commodore of an American yacht club, in Chatham, Massachusetts. In 1965 she received an honorary degree from Merrimack College for her many cultural and conservation projects. In 1976 she was honored by the area Girl Scouts as a "hidden heroine."

Following a stroke in her eighties she took tennis lessons, and until her final illness she kept up with the activities of her family, her church, and the many community organizations she helped to foster.

She leaves her husband, Dr. Horatio Rogers; her four children, fifteen grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren and the warmth and kindness with which she touched hundreds of friends and acquaintances of all ages.

Dr. Francis Gordon Soule, Jr.

Francis Gordon Soule, Jr., 71, for nine years the Medical Director at Phillips, died 2 January in Boston after a brief illness. He was the husband of Elizabeth Ragle Soule.

Born in Schenectady, New York, Dr. Soule graduated from Dartmouth College, received his M.D. from New York University, and completed post-graduate medical study at the University of Pennsylvania. He was a Fellow of the American College of Physicians and a member of the A.M.A. and the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Dr. Soule served as an officer in the Medical Corps of the United States Navy for 24 years, reaching the rank of Captain. From 1961 to 1965 he served as Chief of Clinical Services at the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland.

Following retirement from the Navy, Dr. Soule became Director of Medical Education at the Beverly Hospital. He later assumed the same position at the Lahey Clinic in Boston. He was PA's school physician from 1970-1979.

When he retired from PA, Dr. Soule moved to Sandwich, Massachusetts, where he became active in community affairs, serving as chairman of the Library Building and the School Building Committees and also as a member of the town finance committee. His friends and associates remember him as a "straightforward, witty, intelligent man" whose "integrity will long be remembered."

Dr. Soule was buried in Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors. In addition to his wife, Bette, Dr. Soule is survived by three sons, John G. Soule of Austin, Texas; Richard M. Soule '68 of Sturbridge, Massachusetts; and Robert R. Soule '72 of Alexandria, Virginia, and three grandchildren.

1913 William A. Sullivan, La Jolla, CA; 6 September 1985

William A. Sullivan, a Lawrence, Massachusetts native and retired Rear Admiral directed the salvage of the the USS Lafayette, the former French flagship Normandie seized by the US in New York Harbor at the outbreak of World War II. The liner had caught fire on the Hudson River in New York in February 1942. The liner was successfully raised but it was too badly damaged to be used again.

At the outset of the war, when he held the rank of Commodore, he organized harbor-clearing forces for operations in Port Lyautey, North Africa. As the West European ports became liberated, Adm. Sullivan's salvage operations were transferred to each port in turn as the enemy was driven out.

He commanded task forces at the Sicilian landing at Salerno, Naples, at Cherbourg in France and other ports. Still later, he moved his harbor-clearance operations to the Pacific and Manila.

His task forces operated at Omaha and Utah Beaches in the invasion of Normandy, and his units were awarded citations for their efforts at Omaha Beach and at the capture of Manila.

A deep sea diver, Adm. Sullivan received numerous decorations for his world-wide service in two world wars. Among them were the American Distinguished Service Medal, two Legions of Merit, and the American Defense Service Medal. Among his foreign decorations were the title of Honorary Commander of the Order of the British Empire, the French Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre, as well as the Italian Order of the Crown of Italy.

Adm. Sullivan retired in 1948 and operated a construction company in Tokyo for six years, returning to Beachwood, N.J., and later moving to La Jolla, Calif.

He leaves his wife, Elizabeth (Vytacil) of La Jolla; two brothers, Charles E. '26, Kevin J. and three sisters, Marie Sullivan, Genevieve Byrne, and Anita McGinness all from the Andover/Lawrence area.

1917 Donald F. Carpenter, Mendenhall, PA; 5 October 1985

After graduation from M.I.T. in 1922, with a B.S. degree in engineering, Mr. Carpenter began his career with the Du Pont Co. as an apprentice operator at the Arlington (N.J.) Works. He worked his way up and in 1941 he was named vice president of the Remington Arms Co. of Bridgeport, Conn; a Du Pont subsidiary.

He took a leave of absence from Remington in 1948 to accept an assignment as coordinator between the Pentagon and the Atomic Energy Commission. During that time he worked in the office of the Secretary of Defense, where he served as deputy of defense for atomic energy matters, and as chairman of the Military Liaison Committee to the Atomic Energy Commission.

In 1948, President Harry Truman appointed him chairman of the Munitions Board. When he left that post in 1949, he received the Exceptional Civilian Service Award from the Secretary of Defense. Mr. Carpenter then returned to the Du Pont Co. as assistant manager of the rayon department. He became the general manager of the film department in 1950, and held that position until his retirement in 1963. Under his direction the department broadened its product line to include nine films and opened a new market for films in packaging and other applications. He was responsible for the research, production and sales for all products handled by the cellophane division of the rayon department.

Mr. Carpenter was active in several organizations for many years and was a director and chairman of many boards, including M.I.T.; the Wilmington (DE) Music School; the Medical Center of Delaware; the Memorial Hospital; Wilkes College, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. He was an avid fisherman and outdoorsman and a member of the North Mountain and Aurora gun clubs as well as the Vineyard Haven and Edgartown yacht clubs.

Despite being bedridden with arthritis and being informed by his physician that he would not walk again, Mr. Carpenter and his wife, Louise, climbed through the Himalayan Mountains in the early 1950s.

He is survived by his wife, Louise Coolidge Carpenter; a daughter, Judith Herdeg; a sister and three grandchildren.

Roger Dennett, Sharon, MA; 28 September 1985

Mr. Dennett was elected in 1938 to the Massachusetts House of Representatives where he served on the Committees of Transportation, Counties, and Ways and Means. Mr. Dennett had headed his own firm, Dennett and Bigelow Co., a steel office equipment company.

Mr. Dennett was active for several years in the Junior Legion and Sharon Little League baseball, and he was a charter member and past president of the Sharon Rotary Club, which named him a Paul Harris Fellow and Mr. Rotary in 1975. He also was a member and chairman of the Republican Town Committee, and was a past president of the Norfolk County Republican Club and a past president of the Norfolk County Selectmen's Association, and was a member of many other clubs, and civic, community and fraternal organizations.

He leaves his wife, Marguerite; two daughters and four grandchildren.

1918 Emanuel J. Rosenberg, Los Angeles, CA; 31 August 1985

After graduating from Harvard and the Harvard Business School, Mr. Rosenberg, a New York City native, launched his radio career by producing the early soap opera Life Can Be Beautiful. Among the many other shows he produced were, Sam Spade; The Fat Man; The Clock; Famous Jury Trials; The Most Unforgettable Characters; Maisie; Charlie Wild, Detective; and Texaco Playhouse. After re-locating to Los Angeles, he produced, with Irving Becker, the successful television series, The People's Choice.

James E. Serven, Tucson, AZ; October, 1985
Mr. Serven, author and firearms expert, started his literary career in the 1930s as a free-lance writer and editor of several national magazines, with his editorial offices located in New York City. After viewing the scenic grandeur and enjoying the slow pace of life in the West on a vacation trip, James E. Serven's previous life in New York City lost its appeal. In 1935 he became the owner and operator of an Arizona ranch stocked with registered Hereford cattle. But he did not lay down his pen entirely. His interests in history, the West, and his fascination with firearms, produced the classic, and one of the best-selling gun books ever published, Colt Firearms. Mr. Serven went on to write more than 120 magazine articles on the history of weapons, and several other books including The Collecting of Guns and Americans and Their Guns. He won several "best article" awards, and was inducted into the Cowboy Hall of Fame in 1970.

Mr. Serven served on the Tucson Mayor's Committee on Gun Legislation and was a consultant for the Arizona Pioneers' Historical Society. He was also a fellow of the Company of Military Historians; vice president of the state Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; and a member of the Tucson Literary Club; and was past president of the Brown Club of Tucson.

Survivors include his wife, Frances, two sons, William D. Serven, of California, and Woolsey E. Serven, of Florida; seven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

1922 Ralph M. Crowley, M.D., New York, NY; 30 October 1984

Dr. Crowley received his bachelor's degree in 1926 with high honors and his M.A. in Psychology in 1928, Phi Beta Kappa, from the University of Wisconsin. He entered Northwestern University's Medical School from which he graduated third in his class with an M.D. degree in 1934.

He began his psychoanalytic training at the Chicago Psychoanalytic Institute; he then moved to Washington, where he graduated from the Washington-Baltimore Psychoanalytic Society and was a resident in psychiatry at the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital in Towson, Maryland. Moving to New York City in 1946, Dr. Crowley became a faculty member and psychoanalyst at the William Alanson White Institute, which was founded in 1943 by Henry Stack Sullivan, Erich Fromm and other pioneers in the field. Dr. Crowley was a longtime associate of Dr. Sullivan's and was regarded as a leading interpreter of the so-called Sullivanian theory as it applied to the clinical treatment of schizophrenia.

In January of 1980 the White Institute, with which Dr. Crowley had been actively associated since 1946, gave him a Distinguished Service Award for his contributions to the Institute and for his professional contributions to psychiatry and psychoanalysis. He was a Life Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association, Life Member of the American International Associations of Psychoanalysis and a Life Charter Fellow and past president of the American Academy of Psychoanalysis and a Fellow Emeritus of the White Institute. He also was a psychiatric consultant to Project Create, a rehabilitation agency supported by the community, state and federal governments for drug-free addicts.

The San Diego Union Leader of 9 Nov. 1985 editorialized business and cultural leader, William Thompson Stephens as "... That unusual person whose special and varied gifts made him a true Renaissance Man."

Mr. Stephens contributed significantly to San Diego's fledgling cultural life. He was behind the "maturation" of the San Diego Museum of Art, serving as its treasurer, board member, president, and indefatigable fund-raiser. He also aided the San Diego Symphony, where he was a board member and treasurer. He was a guiding force as well behind the San Diego Art Guild and the San Diego Art Institute.

Mr. Stephens was an artist. He studied at the Chicago Art Institute and in San Diego under artist Everette Gee Jackson, who described him as "extremely gifted." He exhibited regularly and his work is in the Great Hall of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in San Diego.

He is survived by his wife, Gwendolyn; a son William Thompson Stephens, Jr., and daughters Charlotte A. Vafis, and Catherine L. Carter all of Point Loma, Calif.; 12 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

1937 Henry Hornblower II, Boston, MA; 16 Oct. 1985 (See Class Notes)

Henry Hornblower II, was an archaeologist, cranberry grower and stockbroker, but he was best known for bringing 17th century Plymouth back to life with his recreated Pilgrim settlement, Plymouth Plantation. Mr. Hornblower was also instrumental in the conception, planning and realization of the replica Mayflower II, which sailed from England to Plymouth in 1957.

In 1949 Mr. Hornblower built the first replica Pilgrim home near Plymouth Rock, which was the town's only tourist attraction. That home eventually led to the "living museum" of Plymouth Plantation and the fulfillment of his boyhood dream. "I wanted to show how the Pilgrims survived and what they accomplished during the early years," he said recently. Mr. Hornblower introduced the most ingenious innovation, living "museum pieces" — men and women of Plymouth Plantation who live in the village just as if it were 1627. In 26 years Plymouth Plantation, the Mayflower II, the waterfront houses and a recreated Wampanoag Indian Village have together drawn more than 25 million visitors. David K. Case, director of Plymouth Plantation, has said of Harry, "Certainly the museum's continued vitality will be a lasting memorial to this gentleman of remarkable vision and commitment."

Mr. Hornblower was a member of the American Archaeological Society, the American Antiquarian Society, Massachusetts Archaeological, Historical, and Colonial Societies. He was also an overseer for the Massachusetts Boys Club, and a trustee of both the Pilgrim Society and the Massachusetts Bible Society.

Mr. Hornblower remained chairman of the plantation corporation until his death. He gave up farming cranberry bogs in the Plymouth area in the 1950s to join his family's firm, Hornblower & Weeks, as a stockbroker. He rose to the vice presidency before his retirement.

The Class of 1937 had a strong and diverse group of one-year classmates. Harry Hornblower was one of these, but one who did not come to Andover to help him into college. He already had been accepted at Harvard. He came because of his fascination with archaeology and his desire to study under Messrs. Byers and Johnson in PA's Archaeology Department. He knew Mr. Byers, having been with him on digs in the Penobscot Bay area in Maine. This interest led to his spending a semester away from Harvard at the University of California, Berkeley, where he participated in digs in the southwest and Mexico.

Harry Hornblower grew up in Boston and spent summers in Plymouth. One of my early memories of him was when we were members of the same dancing class. There I saw for the first time his wonderful twinkle, which was most contagious. In the last few years I was fortunate to see him often and share our interest in early Colonial history and 19th century American printmakers.

He is survived by his wife, writer Malabar (Schletter) Hornblower; a son, Henry Hornblower III of Dedham; three daughters, Augusta Hornblower and Harriet McLean of Groton, and Eleanor Sarren of Alaska; stepson Stephen, and stepdaughter Adrienne Brodeur of Beacon Hill; a brother, Ralph Hornblower of Greenwich, Conn.; a sister, Martha McCarthy of Stuart, Fla.; and six grandsons. He was also the husband of the late Dorothy (Shapard) Hornblower.

Marcia Norman will be remembered as a person who worked tirelessly for conservation and conveyed the beauty she found in nature through her professional work as an illustrator of wildflowers, wetlands plants and other botany.

Mrs. Norman was an original member of the Chatham Conservation Commission; she became an associate member in 1984 after 22 years of service. After she stepped down from her commissioner's seat, voters at town meeting honored her with a resolution, passed by unanimous acclamation, for her dedication and work. "She was very knowledgeable in her field of wetlands plants" said John Doane, the present chairman of the conservation commission. "She was the commission as far as I was concerned," said associate commission member Alice Hiscock.

Trained at the Museum School of Boston, Mrs. Norman was a botanical illustrator until her death. Her works were exhibited throughout the United States, Europe and Africa. She published a book, along with her husband, Edward, and her drawings illustrated hundreds of others.

She is survived by her husband, Edward Norman, of Chatham.

nature or by Soviet arms doesn't make much difference.)

The public attitude has changed considerably because of the educational impact of radio and television. In 1910 there were parts of the world that had no radio (and television was unheard of) and it was rumored the world over that the comet was certain death and destruction. It was a fact, though, that we students watched the comet while sitting on the roof tops, and consequently we were unprepared to recite the next day what we were supposed to have learned in our homework the night before whereupon the Professor reminded us that "comets may come and comets may go, but our work goes on forever!"

I don't know why I continue to write these notes, because I'm quite sure no one reads them. Full many a note is born to be unread and waste its substance on the printing house floor. I have a few, very few, surviving classmates, and I'm sure that most of them are in the same position that I am in, which is stage seven in Shakespeare's Seven Ages of Man . . . "Sans teeth, sans ears, sans sight, sans everything."

Anyway, I go on writing and I try to make it as brief as possible. Unless one of the remaining survivors decides to depart from this life, I have really nothing to write about except memories of Andover as it was in 1910. So, you will have to be contented with that.

Serving as Class Agent, as well as Class Secretary may impede getting news in, but it does give me the opportunity to address each one of you that I have on the Alumni Office list and try to raise money. Considering the ages that we have attained, I think we are doing pretty well in the percentage of donors to the Alumni Fund, and I hope we can keep it up for many years.

It seems every member of the class has "writer's cramp" except Brig. Gen. Leo McMahon. He not only wrote me immediately on receipt of my note of solicitation, but he enclosed a check, which I sent on immediately to Andover. Leo writes, "Thanks for your card. . . Last year on 31 July I became 92 years of age. I am happy to report I am feeling very good. Have not driven the car in several years, but Mrs. McMahon is an excellent driver."

I have just received a card from Bill King, who still lives in Needham, Mass. and I am going to quote it because it doesn't take much to express a real tie to Andover: "Still alive! Well, my wife is glad anyway. Good luck!"

I am still trying to find the name of a classmate of ours whose nickname at Andover was "Pistachio." I have a picture of him that was in the file of one of our classmates and he, too, wants to know the proper name for this guy. If any of you know it, please mail it to me and I will see that those who are interested get a copy of the photo.

Your "Agent/Secretary" and Mrs. Elsas are planning to spend a month in New Orleans, where Mrs. Elsas was born, and look forward to our usual relaxing time there.

I am sad to have to report the death of two classmates, Thomas N. St. Hill of Little River, California, and Corydon P. Purdy of Pensacola, FL. The letter from Tom's wife of 63 years, Jean, which came to the Alumni Office said in part, "After a long and eventful life, he died on September 10, 1985. He was always proud to have been an alumnus of Andover and he remembered fondly his time spent there . . . he was a wonderful man who left us rich memories."

Tom was the namesake and grandson of famed Thomas Nast, Civil War era political cartoonist and artist whose penetrating pen helped bring the downfall of New York's notorious Tammany Hall and forever established the visual concept of Santa Claus and Uncle Sam, and who created the Republican party's elephant and the Democratic donkey. Tom researched, compiled and authored two books about his famous grandfather: one, Thomas Nast's Christmas Drawings for the Human Race was published by Harper & Row in 1971, the other was Thomas Nast's Cartoons and Illustrations published by Dover Press in 1974.

He retired from the University of California at Berkeley in 1963 after 10 years as a lecturer in the School of Business. Previous to that he was an executive of Pacific Gasoline Co.; he was also president of Petroleum Rectifying Co. of Calif. In 1940 he joined Tea Garden Products Co. of San Francisco becoming president and general manager. He was also a subdivider and developer of Tahos Hills, Orinda, Calif., where the St. Hills lived for 26 years before establishing their home in Little River. After his retirement he was appointed to the U.S. State Department's Council for International Progress for Central and South America. He was a member of the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco and the Bergelius Society at Yale University as well as serving numerous community, business and civic associations. Besides his wife, he leaves three children, Jeanne Ley, Linda Peck, and Peter A. St. Hill; 11 grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. The class extends its sympathy to his family.

Corydon Purdy's death was reported to the Alumni Office by his son, Corydon P. T. Purdy. His note tells us that "He had lived in Franklin, NC, until about a month before his death when he moved to Pensacola." His wife passed away in 1977. Unfortunately, we do not have any more information. We extend our sympathy to his son.

If any other of you happen to still have one of those postcards I sent you, drop me a note so that the next Bulletin will have some news about other members of the class.

Rowlie Bannister reports that he still enjoys life and is active in his Venice, Florida community. Allen Griffin and his wife, Ruth, celebrated their 60th anniversary last 4 October. Unfortunately, they are not too well and are practically house-bound, and it is difficult for Allen to write. Sherry Logan wrote in October that he was just back from a couple of weeks in New York and Cambridge, plus a couple of days in Chocorua, NH, where he enjoyed the foliage. He also has pleasant memories of our 65th reunion.

"Doc" Richmond reports being still hale and hearty, with houses in Largo, Florida, and Gloucester, Mass. Whit Smith and Lydia are both O.K. and are wintering in Arizona, as usual. Mert Perry says "Ole rockin' chair has not got me yet just because I'm a mere 85." Expects fifth great-grandchild soon. His grandson at Palos Verdes High School, CA, is a 6' 4" quarterback and captain and is being recruited by Yale, Princeton, Harvard and Stanford (too bad he didn't go to PA). Mert also has some pity observations, and here are some of them: "Just out of idle curiosity I went through the house this morning examining pillows and mattresses, trying to find the exact wording on those tags which are usually attached that say something like, 'Do not remove under penalty of law.' I couldn't find one; in some scofflaw moment I must have removed them all." He goes on to describe other "warnings and threats" which make him real onery like "Do not write below this line"; "Sign on the dotted line"; etc. etc.

Now, regretfully, I must report the loss of two classmates. Leonard Bishop died on 13 December at his home in Remsenburg, NY. At PA he was active in athletics especially the varsity football and basketball squads. He graduated from Yale in 1923 and then went to Albany Law School in preparation for a career in law on Long Island, where he practised first in Riverhead and later at Westhampton Beach. He was active in Rotary, the Boy Scouts, the Westhampton Beach Fire Department, and Board of Education. He was a regular participant over the years at reunions, and, even though in failing health, was with us at our 65th. His wife, Edie, was with him at these gatherings, but died before the 65th.

Jim Serven died in Tucson, Arizona, 2 September 1985. He was at PA for the 1917-1918 year and then went to Brown, where he graduated in 1922. He started his career in New York City, but felt the call of the West in 1933 and lived the rest of his life in Arizona and California, mostly in the Tucson area. It was there that he became a top notch authority on the Southwest and particularly on the guns in the history of Arizona. He wrote over 100 magazine articles and many books, (the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library at PA has many of James Serven's books and articles donated by him) and received prestigious awards for works published in Arizona Highways. His wife, Frances, lives at 2459 N. Sonotia Place, Tucson, AZ 85712. Besides his wife, he is survived by two sons, seven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

A nice reply card from Ted Stevenson tells that he and his wife, Bunny, after living in Ashville, NC for the last 16 years, will be moving to Duarte, California. He writes that they are "pretty healthy", have five children and eight grandchildren. Nice to hear from Ted after all these years. Art Walworth, whom I saw briefly several times at our 60th Yale Reunion last June, writes me that this past October he attended a luncheon at the Yale Club in New York where he saw Charley Gage, Al Hardenberg and Ted Sheaffer. I learned that Al Wilson had a bad fall, broke his leg, and isn't expected to be mobile for some weeks.

Ted Booth, a true and long-time sportsman, writes how lucky he is, having a stream behind his house in Youngstown, NY, which flows into the Niagara River below the falls. Here he recently found a 8-10 pound salmon. Lou Lincoln, who had lived on Cape Cod for many years, died on 16 November. He had been undergoing cancer therapy for some time, but, since he had been feeling better, his death came as a shock; a good lot of us are going to miss him. He had accepted the job of our 65th Reunion Chairman and was just getting into the details when he passed away. Very sad. He leaves a son, Robert G., of Norfolk, VA; and a daughter, Jane Miller, of Washington, DC. The class extends its sympathy to his family.

We are fortunate, however, that Alex Preston, M.D., who lives in Cambridge, Mass., and still works in the area, has taken over for Lou; you will undoubtedly be hearing from him prior to our reunion on 13-15 June 1986. I certainly hope to see you there.

Edith Page Bennett is still kicking, has many projects and yes, is still even learning. I learned, from a phone call, that she does half-hour stretching exercises and walking each day, is interested in landscaping, her local library, and is studying Gaelic. Marion Kimball Bigelow says, . . . "All is well with our three girls and their families. Lucky to have them near by. Had a lovely summer at our Marshfield home. I still enjoy a daily swim. Best to all 1921ers."

Katherine Knight Fassett says that she is not improving with age, "though looking around at our contemporaries, I can't complain." A "slowed down heart" and some emphysema prevents her from returning to reunions. "I am able to keep up my little house (with part-time help) and take care of my cat. My mind seems to be functioning adequately and I see my children and families several times a year. Lydia Kunkel Howard is in the Rochester Friendly Nursing Home, 3156 East Ave., Rochester, NY 14618. She has six grandchildren, three great-grandchildren. She uses a wheelchair and is no longer able to paint, knit and do the craft work she so much enjoyed. A note was sent by her daughter-in-law.

Frances Keany Rickard attended part of her 60th Reunion at Vassar where she enjoyed seeing some special friends. Hoping that she can get to our 65th. Alma Underwood Udall writes from Florida: "Dick and I hope to come to my 65th Abbot reunion next 13-15 June. Dick is on the Dartmouth Council and Treasurer of his 1923 class. We have enjoyed our trips to Europe but are happy to relax in Florida during the winter months, and New London, NH, in the summertime.

Kay Gage, Sister Mary Anslem, is looking forward to a trip to Wales and England in May. She hasn't been there since 1932 and is anticipating three weeks driving, in a rented car, to places both old and new. She is living in the future, checking itineraries and all but packing her bag. Hope every minute is wonderful, Kay. Ruth Hill English enjoyed two weeks of the holiday season with her daughter Katie in Peterborough, NH, a very beautiful land of snow. A wonderful get-together of three generations . . . ornaments on a lovely tree, and great swags of laurel in the rambling old house. Her New England grandchildren, working in Boston and sharing an apartment on Beacon Hill, were on hand too. It must have been a perfect family reunion, Ruth! Good news from Marian Saunders Cheesborough's son George that a lens implant in her left eye last February was so successful that she forgets her glasses! Radiation last spring apparently completely cured a skin cancer in her right tear duct. Her November physical was fine and she celebrated her 82nd birthday on 15 February. Like many of us her memories of Abbot and Smith are sometimes clearer than what happened yesterday. We can all take heart from George's report, for several of us may be facing similar situations.

Five of the class had a mini-reunion on 19 Sept. at Rembrandt's, a restaurant in Andover. Ohnemus and her husband Clyde Hicks had been traveling through New England and met with Barb Goss and a friend of hers with whom she lives. Helen Knight Wilkinson, Gertrude Franklin Callahan, and I made what proved to be a very pleasant reunion. We'll begin planning earlier next time and hope to include more of you. If some of you in other areas want to try to hold a similar event, remember I can give you addresses. I tried to reach Jimmy Burr Sanders but her address has changed and Barbara Dadmun, her daughter, gave me the new address. Jimmy is in the Falmouth Nursing Home, 545 Main Street, Falmouth, MA 02540. She would like to hear from you, I'm sure.

I have a change of address, too, as you can see from the heading of these notes. On Dec. 9th I moved to No. Berwick, Maine, only a mile from my eldest daughter's home (in fact she teaches right across the street). I am also nearer my eldest son.

Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews was visiting her grandson and his wife who was due to deliver a baby any day. She writes she and her daughter Joan drove the young mother to the hospital and by the time they returned home the phone was ringing to say Stephen Schuyler Brooks had arrived! She had a fine holiday season with various members of her family. Bubbles' eyes are bothering her and she had to have a spur removed from her foot, but all came out well.

I would like to have a volunteer take over my job. It is not hard, just notices sent three times a year and compiling the news about 22ers for the Bulletin. In fact it is a very rewarding task! Many of you that I didn't know too well in our school days I feel very close to now. I'll do this issue, then hope to hand it over.

A very happy spring and summer to each and every one of you!

I am shocked as I contemplate that the class of PA '23 has had no class notes published in the Bulletin since eight months ago. I got my deadlines mixed up, so forgive please. I am addlepat. With apologies to all I let down, here is the news you should have had four months ago:

James G. Bruce

Ben Swartz writes: "Without attending my senior year at Andover, my family moved West and I entered U.C. Berkeley. I then transferred to U. of Oregon, Eugene, and acquired my B.A. and M.A. I returned to Berkeley for a year of graduate study and then I taught psychology and philosophy at Los Angeles City College. I was appointed Asst. Dean (Counseling), then Dean of Admissions. In 1955 I became President of East L.A. College, retired in 1967 and moved to Fallbrook, CA. I obtained a Ph.D. in 1960 from Whittier College. We travel a great deal — Europe, New Zealand, the Philippines, China, Japan, South America, and Mexico, but I haven't visited the East Coast of the U.S.A. for many years."

As far back as May of 1985 Marsh Posey attended the graduation, magna cum laude, from Yale, of his granddaughter, Fall Ferguson, PA '81. The year before that another granddaughter was graduated from Harvard. Marsh says he is rapidly getting an overview of the way colleges operate and which one is best from a grandfather's point of view. In Sept. 1985 Betty and Frank Newman ended a 6½-week trip "back East," visiting family and friends. They liked their first year in California in the community of 150 retired Presbyterian ministers and missionaries. They knew almost eighty of the residents before they came there. Harry Dorman and Ted Stevenson, PA '21, are there. Bill Heald informs that he and wife Anne were at their summer home in No. Michigan. Daughter Nancy and her two daughters live in Cincinnati. Son Bill and his wife live in New Jersey with two children. Bill Sr. is busy with a real estate office and his own affairs. He and Anne are in very good health. He misses the Andover Inn where he stayed often while visiting his property in Lawrence, Mass. which he has sold, so no more visits.

I was delighted to hear from Johnny Johnson with whom I roomed at Andover and Yale (a year in each place). John was widowed last April; we all extend our sympathy. He still works as an estimator for a mechanical contractor in Indianapolis. His late wife and he journeyed to Hawaii, Alaska, Canada, and Mexico, but he has not been to the Bahamas yet. He manages pretty well on his own and his health is fair, but he gets little exercise. His rowing machine is not the worse for wear. From Bob Cameron scribe of Yale '27, I learn that Maccauley Smith had a fine cruise on the Black Prince sailing from Edinburgh, viewing the fjords of Norway, over the top of Scotland, briefly to Iceland, the Hebrides to Glasgow. Mac's wife, Emilie, had a week's cruise on the Sea Cloud in March '85.

Don Harris called me late last year to ask for the address of Leo Daley. Don said he is being helped greatly in the control of emphysema by the efficiency of the Pulmonary and Clinical Medical Group in Oakland, CA. After 17 days in the hospital under care of the group he felt much improved. The latest word from him at Christmas indicates that he plans to come to Tucson in February '86. I will be sorry to miss him because wife Helen and I head for New Zealand; Sidney, Australia; and Hawaii on 4 Feb. Otto Alcaide wrote recently about his activities in volunteer work of which I have reported in previous notes. Otto is indefatigable in his service to church and the community; as a result he is asked to assume additional important tasks. I marvel at his seemingly inexhaustible energy.

Joe Mesics '53, Secretary of the Academy, has written to your Secretary to express sincere appreciation from Phillips Academy for the establishment of the Class of 1923 Permanent Endowment Fund, as well as to inform us of its importance to the Academy.

I learned last July that Richard B. Hodges died in Portland, Maine, on 16 April 1985. He is survived by two sons, Richard, Jr. '55 and John S.; and a daughter, Gray. And a note from Philip Lord, son of Richard Lord, states that Richard died 18 July 1984 in the Exeter Hospital in Exeter, N.H. He was buried in the West Parish Cemetery in Andover. I know I speak for the entire class in extending sympathy to the members of the families of our deceased classmates.

It gives me great pleasure, as your "double agent," to share the news you have sent me in the postals. Thank you all who responded. Sally Finch Hartwell has had a great year traveling to Alaska and Scotland with a museum group — both fascinating trips. She hopes to be off again this winter to Southern California. Libby Thompson Henry spent part of October in Boston with her twin sister, Minni Thompson Kimball, and they had a most pleasant drive about New England and Cape Cod, seeing their old stomping ground, Falmouth Heights, where they used to spend summers.

Dottie Upton Jesson wrote me a marvelous letter from California enclosing snapshots of her and her husband, Rolla. They look fine. After a long struggle, Dottie is now free of a cast she's been in for two years, because of crippling osteoporosis; she now wears a tight brace. Rolla is fine again, too, after open heart surgery and colon surgery. Both the Jessons swim and walk a lot to keep fit. Dottie, at 82, has been made an honorary member of the U.S. Power Squadron which was founded by her father, Roger Upton in 1912. Can't keep a good girl down! The Jessons hope to move back to Montana in the spring.

Peggy Scudder Marshall sounds fine. It was so good to hear from her.

Nip Page Neville sounds well and happy in New York; has recovered from cataract surgery and does needlepoint and enjoys her bridge lessons and games. Her youngest of six grandsons will graduate from PA in June. Great news! Charlotte Hudson White called me recently from Guilford, Maine to have a good catching-up chat. It was wonderful to hear her voice and to learn that she is recovering after an illness. Her daughter Mary Jo White Shahaway '47 is staying with Charlotte and her daughter Betsey White Cousins '56 who has been recently married.

As for my news, I had a fantastic celebration for my 80th birthday in July. My life-long friend, Polly Bullard Holden '24, came all the way from Vermont, and my brother Charlie Swartwood '35 came from Elmira, NY to help celebrate with family and friends. What a reunion that was! I have a new great-grandson, Nicholas Sinclair Bauer, whose grandmother is Mary Carroll ("Tootie") Sinclair Morris '48. I am fine and busy; still gardening and fishing and swimming, and proud to be 80! Sadly, we have lost two of our classmates Elizabeth Thomas Elliot (Mrs. James) died last spring. Miriam Sweeney McCardle died in July [see death listing in fall Bulletin]. Miriam used her musical talent to do so much for the schools of Andover. Also the Alumni Office has informed me of the death on 11 November of Barbara Cutter Anderson (Mrs. Russell), of Hightstown, NJ. Barbara leaves her husband, Russell and a son William. The class extends its deepest sympathy to the survivors of these class members — we share with their families, their grievous loss.

Two 1924 classmates were honored during 1985: Bob Hamilton was "roasted" for his fine work in the Coventry, CT community — especially at their museum. Bob Clark received the "Builders Award" in Ft. Collins, CO for his many involvements in community projects. Bob, according to the newspaper article, served on 14 different boards and 20 committees — heading up several. Congratulations are in order for both Bobs. We should roast Bob Hamilton for 27 years being our class agent. What a job he has done!

Dick Knight is happy in his new retirement home and Jack Basham wishes he had entered his earlier. Dick, however, can't seem to forget Green Valley, AZ, as he sent his friends Green Valley pecans for Christmas. Ralph Blank planned to go to the Y-P game but said the weather was impossible. He was sure Bob Redpath and Nancy wouldn't miss it. Bob wanted the Larsens to go and then visit them, but we had house guests at the time. Ralph mentioned the tribute to my Yale roommate, Dick Vaughan, in the Princeton magazine, and I received several copies from other classmates. A well-deserved tribute! I had several letters from Fonty and "Red" Sanborn. They celebrated their 50th on 1 July. Their home in Maine must have had a "No Vacancy" sign up this summer with 14 children and grandchildren sleeping there. They did much travelling — Adirondacks, Rangely and across Canada. George Bush, a neighbor of the Sanborns yelled "Hi" to Red as he went by in his boat.

Vic Earle's Christmas card repeated his wish to have us drop by on our way West. He already wrote out instructions telling us how to avoid N.Y. City. Vic and Esther live in Bridgehampton, N.Y. Another invitation came from Jack Ottaway hoping we could stop by in Buttonwood Bay, FL; he said it was just south of Key Largo. We did visit Jack and Roberta in Grosse Pointe years ago. Phil Lecompte had his 78th in Oct. and we called wife, Jean, to plan another surprise party at "his favorite restaurant." It was a complete surprise and embarrassment because they told him he had no reservation. And speaking of reservations, we have tried to get the Lecomptes to AZ as he is an authority on diabetes among the Indians. Phil was not moved, however, when we mentioned that they were asking for him to come to their reservation.

Van Johnstone writes regularly from West Palm Beach. He enjoys reading the Phillipian which I sent to him. Thanks, Nancy, for those Christmas greetings. Charlie Sawyer and Kitty were in N.E. for three weeks and were recovering as they found traveling in NH and Maine strenuous. One of Charlie's female students is Director of the Hood Museum — unusual as "male supremacy in that bastion is prevalent" says Charlie. Any student of Charlie's is, of course, well qualified. Marian and Gordon Brown say they have nothing important to report. Can you imagine that when they had three great-granddaughters in 1985 and a great-grandson in 1986? Gordon wanted to reserve a room for them at Andover's Abbot House where he lived in the 20s. Dinny Harriman, out in Huntsville, TX, reports he has cut out all his pills and feels fine. He admits it hasn't helped his 21 golf handicap, however. "Hope you drop in." Thanks J.P. and Dinny for your card and news.

Peggy and Louie Wienecke not only sent a card and letter at Christmas but also called us on the phone. The letter included an article about their daughter, Gretchen Wyler, and all the T.V. shows she would be in. We did see her in the Mary Tyler Moore show. The Wienecks live in Bartlesville, OK. Thanks for your invitation, folks. Norm Thorn and "Lo" were glad our letter didn't bring any bad news; they have had enough. Norm jogs two miles each day and his weight is within 5 lbs. of his Andover weight when he played football for Fred Daly; Johnny Phillips says he never knows where the Larsens are. We are in Newton, MA, from June to November and Green Valley from December to May, John. How about you and Peggy coming out and meeting all your Dartmouth alumni? Sorry to hear from Irma that Dike Bliss was in a nursing home. I'm sure, however, Dike can still give me advice on things electrical when I need it. Bill Jones missed us at Thanksgiving this year. We all ate turkey together last year in Biloxi, MS. How are all those cute blonde waitresses, Bill? Fred Beck says "looks as if I'll make 80" as all goes well with us. Dr. Fred and Anne live in Ithaca, NY. Dick Hocking up in Madison, NH, enjoyed our 60th reunion and wished he could have spent more time at it. Said it gave him "a joyous lift!" And further north in VT, Don Ballou mentioned that the Larsens must be in good shape to do 700 miles in one day.

What a great card from Terry Keep and Renata — "keep" sending those sentiments, Terry, it makes our day! Gardie Brown and Betty will be in Santa Barbara again this winter and we'll probably get together in February. We were glad to hear from Pris and George Mansfield with news of the Lock Allens who also live in Canton, MA. "Red" thinks 700 miles a day is too much as they only do 500 on the way to Florida.

Maggie Block reports her oldest grandson is a junior at Yale and the youngest a junior at Andover — she is delighted and knows Phil would have been too. We know how you feel, Maggie, as we have a senior granddaughter at PA. Jan, Louie Rugee's widow, will be in Sun City, AZ in March and may see us. She spent part of October in France touring the Chateau country. I spent the summer of 1922 in Voltaire's Chateau as a companion to four French kids and would love to see them again.

Have received many letters from the Jack Barsses and Mary Dake, Rocky's widow, is another prolific correspondent. We also hear from the Len Jameses each Christmas. Len headed up the History Department after our time. Also received a card from Sue Lloyd. Sue and Bob were formerly Cluster Deans of the Pine Knoll Cluster and lived in our 1924 House. She reported about the music tour to Spain where they gave six concerts. Seventy-seven students were on the tour.

If you did not receive the 1924 Newsletter and desire one, please write to your Secretary.

Laura Scudder Williamson enjoys her daughter and children on weekends at Mat-tapoiset, Mass. Weekdays she resumes her work at the International Institute teaching English as a Second Language to Cambodians, Vietnamese, and Central Americans. Privileged to have been trained by the Institute, she enjoys mixing at lovely parties for the students who get government aid until they get settled and can hold jobs. In January Laura "Amtracked" to Atlanta stopping overnight with friends in NYC and Washington. Son Stuart surprised her on Christmas eve, appearing from California. We hear that Dorothy Converse is probably a natural for teaching foreign born if only she lived near the International Institute. She reads in German, French, Italian and Spanish almost daily. Her Abbot French was gladly accepted by our embassy as qualification for a job she held for four years. To live in Boca Raton involves for Madelyn Shepard Curry not only a wonderful Senior's program, but also the excitement provided by hurricane alerts for which she has learned to stock up on Sterno and bottled water. "Tommy" Thompson English, we hear, is still a lovely and beautiful woman, wintering in Pebble Beach near her sister Chub and summering in Pawling, NY, and golfing in both places. Her two sons and daughters-in-law are "wonderful."

A family celebration for Ruth Larter Eveleth on her 80th included grandsons from Kenyon and Columbia colleges and great-grandsons Todd, Clarke and Patricia. Ruth loves reading to five-year-olds weekly, a joy to her for three years now. Jane Allen Kilby saw the MFA Renoir exhibit, and for 10 days is visiting her grandson in his flat in London. We hope she will bring pictures to the "Mini" at the Pillar House the first week of May. Betty Bragg King cruised with both sons, wives, two grandsons and two granddaughters. She also recommends the Ashland, Oregon, Summer Shakespeare Festival — two outdoor plays a day. Victoria Warner Knox's address is her late grandfather's 165-acre farm in Stamford, NY (Odel Lake Rd.). The Allan Knoxes live in the farm house built in 1794 in winter, and enjoy summers in Rockport, Maine.

Although Susanna Smith Lockhart had a rough year, her son, now living in Rome, NY "makes up for it all." Barbara A. Loomer of Andover holds a good job with the Red Cross and enjoys being able to travel easily. Pris Draper and husband spend winters in Florida and hope to see AA '24 there soon. She recently had a visit from three granddaughters who are 13, 15, and 16. As always, Kay Hart Mitchell is busy driving friends here and there and has had a chance to visit Army friends in Germany. We hope to see photos and here about this adventure in May at the Pillar House. During the winter you might see Elizabeth Wilson Naetzker in Florida. After 60 happy years of marriage she lost her husband a few months ago. We share her sad loss. She feels lucky to have a number of grandchildren and greats too. Ruth Beach Newsom has perhaps our first retired daughter at 55! Her grandchildren, greats, and two daughters live near. She hopes a great-granddaughter will win the Abbot prize map. Laura Williamson was mighty surprised to have Ruth Kelly Perry ask her if she had forgotten to ask for a contribution! She replied, "I forget quite often." No problem, Ruth, wait patiently. Frances Platt has spent 40 pleasant years serving as school librarian in Ashland, NH. She says she finds working with the young permits her to feel more like a "spinster" than an "old maid." Now that her open heart surgery is over, Caroline Strachley Reeder attends football games "all over the country" with four great-grands. And she hopes to come to Andover to see a game there too. Olive Mitchell Roberts says her five children have given her 20 grandchildren and 15 greats. One son studies law in Oregon and another raises flowers in Bogota, Columbia, for the Boston market. Her first granddaughter will compete for the prize Abbot map to be awarded at the Mini Reunion. Full of chuckles on the phone, Genevra Rumford says her memory is "pretty good" (she is a charming storyteller), so she still keeps up with the S.P.C.A.

Sybil Bottomley Talman is seeing better with her first cornea transplant and is looking forward to the second after which she will resume driving. We hope Connie Twitchell has recovered from a broken rib plus a cold which interfered with talking during the phonathon. You'll get a "comp time" at the Pillar House in May! Marion Shryock Wagner held a family reunion for 25 which was attended by family members from Colorado to Kansas City, MO. Marion has a great-granddaughter of five, also an Abbot map hopeful. Marion, in style with double cornea transplants, rejoices to see well now. At the famous Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, Mass., Peg Colby Williamson and Robert put on a family festival for 12 offspring. One son came from Oklahoma and the only missing young man had gone to Vienna to study art.

Please, has anyone any news of Elsie Phillips Marsahll of Southwest Harbor, Maine?

My apology to Ralph D. Paine, Jr. and his family for a most unfortunate inaccuracy in my Class Notes of the last issue of the Bulletin, when your scribe reported his demise. Thanks to George Sawyer '19, I've learned that Del is very much alive and subsequently I had a letter from Del himself, confirming this and taking the goof with good humor, although it shocked quite a few people. He states that his health is excellent and that he was divorced 12 years ago. He travels a lot and can be reached at an office he maintains at 57 West Street, Danbury, CT 06810. Welcome back to the land of the living, Del!

Christmas greetings from Hugh McCandless, Charlie Arnt, Cy Toolan, Clare Barnes and Al Keedy. Charlie still runs his Driftwood Ranch. Is up at 5:30 a.m. to do chores and give loving care to his prize Charolais cattle. Last October he was invited to participate in a forum under the aegis of Princeton Alumni College on "Looking at the Cinema: Visual Literacy in the 20th Century," held at Universal City, Calif. Charlie spoke on the early days of the cinema as a veteran actor of about 250 stage, film and TV productions. Al Keedy tells that they're spending the winter in their snug cottage on Cape Cod. Their big event in '85 was the marriage of their son John in mid-June. Clare Barnes continues to flourish in the Big Apple.

Bill Curtis and Janet took an unusual Saguenay River Cruise, leaving from Warren, R.I. via L.I. Sound for the Hudson River to Waterford, N.Y. and the Erie Canal to Lake Ontario. Thence on the St. Lawrence River to Montreal and Quebec to Tadoussac where they reached the Saguenay.

Sad news about Bill Ridgway from wife Emily. Bill is blind, with no memory for the present or the past five and one-half years; is incapacitated with a bad heart and diabetes. He suffered a stroke when travelling some years ago and unfortunately never recovered. Here's hoping he'll have a better life in '86 and our heartfelt sympathy to Emily and Bill's family.

I'm grieved to report the death of John K. Beeson some two years ago; of Eugene L. Pearce, Jr. last August and Lincoln P. Holmes last November. Ken Beeson was a prominent member of the class — V.P. of the School and the Senior Council; Managing Editor of the Phillipian and held many other positions. He went to Yale and spent his business career with Gage Company of Pittsburgh, becoming its chairman and C.E.O. He leaves three children and six grandchildren. Gene Pearce went to Yale and spent 36 years with Rhodes, Inc., a retail furniture chain. Link Holmes, who died from a heart attack while playing golf with friends, went on to Yale and the Harvard Law School. He was retired from the Fall River Five Cents Savings Bank. He's survived by four children. Our class extends its deep sympathy to the families of these deceased class members.

He reports that he will be back for our 60th. Tony Eastman, who writes that "My Andover education was better and gave him more than college or graduate school," is also planning on June at Phillips.

As of the beginning of January, this is a partial list in addition to the above of those who are planning to be at Andover 13-15 June: Aldrich, Annis, Brownrigg, Ehrlich, Eiseman, Elton, Fine, Fishel, Gilbert, Huntress, Kohn, Latham, Nyce, Spinney, Tully, Weldon and Wilmot. It's not too late to pack up and come. Plans for a memorable weekend are already well along. We will also have with us as our class guest, Mrs. H. Carl (Barbara) Sandburg. She, along with Sandy did so much for the class of '26 for so many years.

Sadly, I report the death of two of our classmates — Dudley Lewis on 26 August 1985 and William Pullman on 19 September, 1985. Dud was born in Honolulu and spent most of his life there. After graduating from Harvard College and Harvard Law School, he served in the Naval Reserve during World War II, rising to the rank of commander. Following the war, he returned to the practice of law. He was a past president of the Bar Association of Hawaii, and served on the boards of directors of several companies, including Hawaiian Air Lines, and Hawaiian Electric Company. One of his great hobbies was fishing; he was a master angler and helped found the Annual Billfish Tournament in Kona, participating annually. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth; a son, Peter; a daughter Leilani Lewis, and three grandchildren. We send our condolences to Mrs. Lewis and the entire family.

Bill Pullman also practiced law after graduation from Columbia and Columbia Law School. During World War II, in the Pacific Theatre, he served in the Navy with the rank of Lt. Commander. Later he was a law partner in the firm of Davis, Auerbach and Cornell in New York City. Upon his retirement in 1973, he became a permanent resident of Shaftsbury, Vt., serving on the town finance committee and as secretary of the Shaftsbury Historical Society. His wife, Caroline, was kind enough to send a note in which she mentioned: "Bill really loved Andover." Our deep sympathy is extended to her, their son James and their two daughters, Mrs. Michael (Candice) Wheeler, and Mrs. Michael (Edith) Devens.

If you are looking for a "good read" I'd like to recommend Fuki Wooyenaka Uramatsu's translation of The Heike Story by Eiji Yoshikawa, a vivid, historical novel about life at Court in Japan in the 12th century. Tuttle has published it in quality paperback. Fuki produced this impressive tome some years ago in Japan, and she still leads a lively and interesting life. Last summer she traveled with her eldest daughter to Switzerland to visit old friends whom she had not seen in many years and soon after Christmas she flew to Japan to spend a few weeks catching up with the doings of her many friends there.

Margaret (Peg) Stirling Baer writes that she is terribly sorry that she will not be able to attend our 60th Reunion because she is now "in the wheelchair group." She hopes that we will publish a picture of the 26ers who do go, well labeled to identify us. Sibyl Kidder Paris, too, regrets that she will be unable to make it from Hawaii, but she sends fond greetings and a special "thank you" to Fonty Flagg Sanborn for letting me persuade her to take on the responsibility of the chairmanship.

We also have the sad task of announcing the death of two of our classmates. Alice Taylor died on 15 September. She is survived by two brothers, William John Taylor of Venice, Florida; and C. Fred Taylor of San Jose, California. Carlotta Sloper died in Haddam, Connecticut on 14 October. She is survived by her sister, Emily Sloper Shaler of the class of '28, also a resident of Haddam, Connecticut. The Class would like to extend its sincere sympathy to those who survive our deceased class members. I know they will be missed.

Following the "see America first" slogan, we hear from Don Alexander as follows: "I am very provincial, never having traveled outside the U.S. or Canada — with the exception of service in World War II. However, I have traveled to many out-of-the-way places in both US and Canada.

"I have stood on the top of the Grand Teton; been through the Grand Canyon on a rubber raft; walked 100 miles in the Grand Canyon; canoed in the headwaters of the Fraser River in British Columbia; visited such places as Churchill and Rankin Inlet.

"A year ago this summer I flew to Yellowstone with a friend. From there we were flown by charter flight north of the Arctic Circle and then proceeded to go down the Coppermine River to the Arctic Ocean in an oar-powered rubber raft. A wonderful time and good fishing for Arctic char, great fighters and also great eating. Many grayling and a few lake trout were also caught.

"This summer I was in western Wyoming visiting friends on a working ranch. Great country with snow in the mountains and 35 miles from the nearest town."

Walt Thomas's spouse, Jeanne, writes: "Walt and I are enjoying Royal Palm Yacht and CC in Boca Raton, FL. We spent some time last summer in Dorset, VT. Also went to a Princeton get-together while there and we were hoping to see some Andover guys, but didn't. One granddaughter at Univ. of Arizona; two sons visit us in Fla.: Walt Thomas, Jr. '63 and Roger G. Thomas '56 and their children."

Extending support to your secretary in trying to run down news, Dave Vipond advises: "I can appreciate your frustration and dilemma since I am Class Secretary for Williams '31. Rush Field is Class President and Jim Reynolds is Reunion Chairman, a sort of Andover triumvirate. I have no special news. I am fully retired, in excellent health, play tennis and golf regularly (shot my age twice recently), travel extensively, read a lot, enjoy cooking, and look forward to being at our 60th in June '87."

Regrettably, we report the death of John D. Holbrook on 25 August 1985, 12 Wellesley Avenue, Wellesley, MA 02181. He is survived by a brother, Harold A. Holbrook, PA '22.

After having been given address information on Horatio G. Vester in the last Andover Bulletin, the Boston Globe reported his death on Thanksgiving morning in Jerusalem, the city where he was born, in an op-ed article by H.D.S. Greenway, former Jerusalem correspondent of the Washington Post. "His death severed a link with eight of the most turbulent decades in modern history of the Mideast . . . His family had come from Chicago in 1881 to found what later became the American Colony — a group of Americans dedicated to good works in the Lord's name . . . In the last century Vester's family opened an inn called the American Colony outside the city's walls . . . one of the most famous hotels in the Mideast" and Horatio returned from London to manage it in 1963 with his wife. Mr. Greenway goes on to explain the many changes of government and rules during Horatio's lifetime: "The peaceful years under Turkish rule, . . . then after only 31 years and following World War II the fighting between the Arabs and the Jews began and the British pulled out leaving a divided city; then the cease-fire which began Jordanian rule; in 1967 capture by the Israelis of East Jerusalem and "Vester found himself living under his fourth flag with several more shell holes in his hotel." He is survived by his wife, whose address is the American Colony Hotel, Jerusalem — 97200, Israel, and two sons in England.

Concocted in the waning stages of 19 and 85 (in the parlance of some of the good folk hereabouts), this batch of '28 notes must perforce leave the launching pad with a covey of good wishes for 19 and 86 (likewise supra) to you and yours. What follows will, it is hoped, be informative and interesting to all '28sters. Some of it will be as painful to read as it is to chronicle.

For happy opener, Gerry Gesell reports "still active judge carrying a full load of civil and criminal federal cases, farming on the side (cattle, hay, honey, corn, etc.)." Classmates with moderately elephantine recollective capabilities may recall that in 1973 the Claude Moore Fuess Award "For Distinguished Contributions to the Public Service" was made to "Gerhard A. Gesell '28, U. S. District Judge for the District of Columbia." The 1985 Fuess Award was made to George Bundy Smith '55, Justice of the New York State Supreme Court, whose distinguished career was described in a feature article in the fall-winter Bulletin. In 1951 Judge Gesell, in avocational role as Alumni Interviewer, reported with unbridled enthusiasm on Candidate G. B. Smith, who survived the lynx-eyed scrutiny of D. of A. Adriance and his Admissions Committee in a strong breeze and wound up four years later as a senior proctor in Samaritan House, the Adriance domicile in that era. 'Tis indeed a Small World . . . In response to friendly note commenting on the possible implications of his strained expression as a three-year-old moppet in a 1913 Allen (P.K.) Keedy family group picture, Dave Keedy writes from San Antonio re. sizable group of kinfolk, "still psychiatricking 1/4x," adding that the era of testing progress in adolescent therapy by what one could say in front of one's mother is long gone . . . Roy Clark, still at the Old Englewood, N.J., homestead and on the boards of the N.Y. Assoc. for the Blind and the Spence Chapin Services to Families and Children, alludes fondly to the possibility of a move to summer residence in Woods Hole, MA, not so fondly to prospects of massive resettlement.

Harold Edwards, '28's Answer to Bernard McFadden, continues to "run" 1 1/2 miles every day; make annual climb of 9200 ft. mountain at Lake Tahoe with children and grandchildren; travel abroad (8 visits to Greece); claim grandson as PA '85 grad (3rd generation); keeps busy in community affairs; vividly recalls audible counting of shrubbery as French mentor Guy Forbush, "looking like a French diplomat," passed the open windows of Day Hall (from "1 Bush" to "4 Bush") . . . Darien-domiciled Dave Baker "semi-active in investment field as advisor and director of small N.Y. casualty insurance Co. — Dot and I also have couple of local volunteer duties — golf (piteous) and travel, winter in Sarasota — saw Bill Adams et ux in San Diego and here — age daily, but am aware of alternative." Bill A. wrote of complete recovery from heart surgery, enjoyable cruise with Elly on American Cruise Lines "Savannah," starting in New Orleans, visiting a variety of interesting coastal spots, and winding up at A.C.L. hq. in Haddam, CT. The Adamases highly recommend this exercise for those wishing to eschew foreign waters . . . In similar vein Bob Adler reported happy boating from Vancouver to Juneau and back, sighting a Mendenhall Glacier (minus Tom), approaching completion of history of Rochester clothing industry. . . . In Adriance summer meanderings we saw Bill Frank and Ruth, Bill Laundon and lovely wife (formerly Phyllis Borrowman), Jack Hawes and Nancy, and a herd of four elephants, grazing unexpectedly in a pasture in what a local native described as "downtown" Palmyra, ME. The Franks will do some wintering in Port St. Lucie, FL; the Laundons have acquired a house on Nevis; the Hawses sold their house in Weston, VT, winter in Stuart, FL, and await move to Boston area retirement community. The destination of the pachyderm foursome is unknown. . . . also seeking refuge from wintry Mich. blasts, Em Bates and Ann are back in Delray Beach, where Em, with pace-maker assist, has become a lawn-bowling champ.

In contrast to the preceding items, I must report sad news about some of the members of '28 mentioned in the last issue of the Bulletin. When Bill Laundon was in Puerto Rico last summer for a conference of medical clinicians, he phoned Hu Barton, as Hu had so generously suggested to all old PA friends, and learned from his wife, Marie, of Hu's death on 27 July. At my request she sent several editorials and tributes to Hu, extolling the magnificent, selfless contributions he made to Puerto Rico from the time of his arrival in 1951 as an economic adviser, when the island was creating its constitution and a new political status with the U.S., and began the "economic miracle" ("Operation Bootstrap") to start raising Puerto Rico from centuries of extreme poverty and social injustice. Invited to work on the Planning Board, "Barton did nothing for the next 34 years but work for Puerto Rico. He was a vital part of the history of Puerto Rico [which has] never had a person who wanted his work less recognized. That Golden Era of great creativity and integrity in service to Puerto Rico lived to the last in the life and world of Barton. And consequently it lived in the world of all of us who so admired and depended on him. Puerto Rico has lost a great Puerto Rican." And Andover has lost a son who made a truly significant "contribution to public service."

After what his wife, Peg, described as "a long bout with cancer," Curt Heath died in late September at New York's Columbia Presbyterian Hospital. A lawyer for 30 years with Milbank, Tweed, Hadley and McCloy, Curt lived in North Tarrytown and gave of himself unstintingly to the welfare of his home community. In addition to service as an elder in the Scarborough Presbyterian Church, he served as chairman of the North Tarrytown Conservation/Beautification Committee, for which he conducted a local wetlands survey, drafted the local tree ordinance and wrote the application for a grant under which North Tarrytown was named a Tree City, U.S.A. More recently he had been giving legal advice to those unable to afford it, under the Retired Citizens Volunteer Program . . . In a note to Bill Frank (as Yale '32 Class Secy), his wife, Cindy, reported the 20 July death of Warren ("Cress") Cressy after three months of cancer. A longtime resident of Falls Village, CT, Cress was also survived by two daughters and seven grandchildren. Eleven years ago he wrote proudly of the arrival of triplet grandsons in daughter Barbara's household, and indicated that he would be happy to compare notes with classmates, if any, who were the ancestors of triplets. No takers have ever checked in with this source of '28 accomplishments. In her note to Bill Frank, Cindy wrote that one eleven-year-old grandson (one of the triplets?) "now plays the mellophone Warren played in the Yale band," and she spoke of how much "those early Andover days meant to Warren." The PA Class of 1928 has lost another trio of its finest members, and will share sympathy already expressed to the families who survived them.

Our deepest sympathy also goes to Bud Bacon (a contributor to the last '28 notes), whose wife died in August. She was the former Elisabeth Osborne of the Class of 1929 at Abbot on whom Bud's formal, chaperoned "calls" led to more than one-half a century of married life. Other survivors are a son, a daughter, and four grandchildren.

A note from Carl Burnham: "I returned to Andover in September for the first time in 58 years. Unfortunately [hurricane] Gloria arrived the same day. Phil Allen and his charming wife gave us the red carpet tour. Needless to say I saw a few changes, not the least of which was the dress of the students."

Dick Davis writes, "I am proud to report that my grandson Newton Davis is a senior and his sister Amy is a freshman at Andover . . . and especially pleased to note that they both love it."

A nice letter came from Curly Marsh who, like most of us, is retired and living in Bernardsville, NJ. After graduating from Princeton, Curly went into banking and before he retired became C.E.O. and chairman of the board of the leading bank in New Jersey. He recalled to my mind that he, John Kopper, my twin brother, Art Rogers, and myself, all went to Andover together and represented half of the class of Madison Academy in Madison, NJ.

Reminding us that most of the surviving members of our class are now 75 years of age, is the list of those of our class who have died since my last report. The news of deaths is: Ed Bateman on 27 January 1985, survived by his wife, c/o Edward L. Bateman, Ltd., Johannesburg, So. Africa; Dick Chaffee on 1 October 1985, survived by his wife, R.D. #2, Burtis Point, Auburn, NJ 13021; David P. Davies, Jr. survived by his daughter, Gweyn, 1628 Park Ave., Racine, WI 53403; Bob Hayden, 14 March 1985, survived by his wife, 595 E. Ash St., Lebanon, Oregon; Jim Inglis on 21 August 1985, survived by his wife, Dorothy, 1029 W. Cactus Wren Drive, Phoenix, AZ 85021; John M. McGauley 180 Central Park So., New York, and John F. Whitehead of 34 Neck Rd., Madison, CT, survived by his wife. We are sorry to have lost these fine men and we extend the sympathy of the class to their survivors.

Dear Loyal Class of '29:

I hope you are all having a good year, full of activities and good health. My younger son, Charles, and wife Jan have just given us a second grandson. I know many of you are already great-grandmothers, but we are really enjoying our growing family.

We have some sad news. In June 1985, Katherine Blunt Polsby (Mrs. Nelson) of Indian Wells, Calif., died of cancer. Tragically, her son, Daniel, PA '56, died in August. She is survived by her husband, Nelson and a son, Richard, PA '58. In July 1985, Elizabeth Hulse Freeman of Palo Alto, Calif., died of cancer. Betty had hoped to come to our reunion in 1984, but had to have an operation. She is survived by her husband, Guastav, and by three children. Elizabeth Osborne Bacon died in Hendersonville, N.C. on 10 August 1985. She is survived by her husband, Norval (PA '28), and a son Dennison Bacon; a daughter, Anne Osborne Kellet; and four grandchildren.

This is sad news and we send our sincere sympathy to their families. I know each of us has special happy memories of these classmates and they will always be a part of ABBOT '29. Keep happy and healthy.

Belatedly, we report that our distinguished classmate/attorney John Young has become "of counsel" to the firm of Hughes, Hubbard & Reed in New York City. Barclay Morrison tells us from Hilton Head that he's maintaining his aircraft pilot's license but hasn't been doing much flying recently. However, his adventures in the last few years have included design and construction of an alcohol plant in the Mid-East; a zoological project in Kenya; an ill-fated, Yankee run for the South Carolina legislature; appointment to the local Medical Commission; and presently the Finance Committee of his church. Now he says he's slowing down, and he hopes that classmates coming through Hilton Head will be sure to look him up.

Ted Murray is heavily involved in the work of his church in Port Washington, Long Island, where he is a Senior Warden. He's also Treasurer of the Queens Historical Society headquartered in Kingsland, the old Murray family homestead in Flushing. Seems to be a flat time for Class News but you can make that up please, by sending news items to Stan Kellogg along with your Alumni Fund contributions.

First, my apology to my classmates for the absence of this column in the last Bulletin. My No. 2 daughter was very ill after surgery and all my thoughts were of her, and my other responsibilities suffered. She is well now and I am sorry for my negligence. I shall be mailing requests for news to a few of you soon. Please answer. Meanwhile, I do have a few returns from my last mailing.

Bobby Healey Holland and her husband are living in Maine on the water. I know how beautiful it is there, having spent time on an Island there in my teens. By now, I trust that her broken leg has healed. They have a son in New Hampshire and their daughter lives in Mass., so they see them and their two grands often. Another New England resident, Alma Hill, lives in Rye, N.H., only a mile from the water.

The following experience, sent in by Marianna Smith Hile, I quote, as it is too special to change a word. "I had the opportunity of being in the Gulf with 16 Pilot whales who had tried to beach themselves. . . . A once-in-a-lifetime lark for me. I wasn't a rescuer, but I stayed with them to the bitter end when they were released and joined their leader. They were all sizes, from a baby of 3-4 feet, to much larger ones. They were extremely docile and their hides felt like hard, black plastic. . . ."

I reported to you part of Grace Hadley MacMillan's Christmas letter of last year, sent to me by Donna. Here is more of it: She attended her 50th University of Wisconsin Reunion . . . "It was even more fun than anticipated, full of memories and nostalgia. Classmates whom we didn't even know on campus were all buddies after 50 years." Her husband, Dick, was in Israel at the time on a business trip that stretched from three weeks to four months. Grumman Aerospace asked him to do more work on the hydrofoil, for which he had designed micro-computers three years ago. After his return, they flew to Norway for a nephew's wedding, then Grace and Dick toured Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

I'll sign off with my usual plea. Please send me news of you and yours. (It does not have to be about world travel, you know; we aren't all that fortunate.)

This is the last reminder for our 55th Reunion 13-15 June 1986. Hope to see you there. Andover in June can be a rewarding experience.

Ledge Mitchell found this to be true when he attended his grandson's graduation last June. According to Ledge, the graduation ceremony was beautifully done and the campus looked great. Ralph Walker and Neill Raymond, roommates at Andover, had their own reunion at the Walker's in Radnor, PA last June. These old Andover buddies and their wives were on their way to 50th reunions at Brown and Princeton.

Hort Schoellkopf sent me an interesting article from the Washington Post by a writer who reminisces about Exeter as follows: "My own accomplishments there had been dubious — frivolous, really, by Exeter standards — and my vision of the campus had long been one of a place wrapped in New England snows, of dark brick buildings and drab dormitories, of white-haired Latin teachers severe and humorless in ill-fitting three piece suits."

We have just recently heard of the death of Wycliffe Bigwood, in September 1979 in Norwood, Mass. He is survived by his daughter, Kathleen Kelley of Winter Park, Fla. We also regret to report the death of Bill Stephens on 7 November 1985 at his home in Point Loma, Calif. He was a direc-

The year will be well underway when you receive this Bulletin, however, it should be a great year since this is the year for our 55th Reunion! It just doesn't seem possible. I hope a great many of you will be able to attend.

Kay Howell Whittum has been very active in the class of 1935 of Mount Holyoke college and served as Class Treasurer for several years. Ginny Lillard Collins writes that she and her husband, Van, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in June. She has lived in an academic environment most of her life, since she was born in an Andover dormitory where her father was Master at the time. By marrying Van she continued this type of life, as he was made president of a small teachers college in New York where under his fine leadership the college became the State University of New York in Albany with an enrollment of 12,000 students at the time of his retirement. Ginny found these years fascinating as she shouldered many responsibilities through these years as she worked along with him. Now they are enjoying retirement together.

Does anybody have the address of Eleanor Foreman Barber? My letter to her was returned. I would like to keep my files up-to-date so would appreciate any information anyone of you might have. Helen Richardson Coughlin is enjoying her home in the pretty little town of Wenham, Mass. Although she admits she is not a gardener by choice she worked hard last summer and fall to keep up a large garden and many shrubs and flowers. She mentioned that she was planning a trip to Bermuda with her sister.

Newly appointed Class Agent, Evelyn Folk Ramsdell writes that she will be spending February and March in Longboat Key, Florida, with her sister, Barbara Folk Howe, AA '29.

It is always with regret that I have to report the death of any of our class members, so it is with sadness I report that Katharine Brace Cummings died on 15 August 1985 at her home in Saddle River, N.J. She is survived by her husband, Bob; a son, Donald; three grandchildren and a sister. She spent many years in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, where she and her husband owned the Pelican Beach Club. Eleanor Royce Witter died on 2 November 1985 in the Princeton, NJ Medical Center. She is survived by a daughter, two sons, eight grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Our deepest sympathy to the families of these two former members.

On the down side, Steve Bixby died in the spring of 1985. And as many of you may have noted, perhaps the most colorful of our classmates, Bill Veeck died in early January. He was at Andover for only a short time and attended several other schools before exercising his talents full time in the baseball world. What a great bunch of cards in reply to my hasty plea! I really appreciate having heard from so many of you.

Among the baskers I heard from are Priscilla Donnell Anderson, Betty Holihan Giblin, Helen Allen Anderson, and from a to-be-basker in Arizona in February, Marie Holihan Foley. Priscilla's two sons and their families visited her and Austin for Thanksgiving and the following day they spent in Disney World. "What fun to see it through children's eyes — we didn't miss a thing and I thought my feet would never recover." Betty, who now has six grandchildren (some of whom she visited in England last spring) is at Longboat Key, playing golf and bridge. Helen sees Ruth Tyler Smith in Vero Beach, escaping the New England and Ohio winters. Marie says husband Tom is working part-time now and they had a great trip to Ireland in September. Clare

O'Connell Sullivan gets the prize for distance traveling this year. She's going on a cruise to get a good look at Halley's Comet. She doesn't say whether to Australia or South America, but either one is a "fer piece off." Isabel Arms is also a distance runner, so to speak. She is planning a trip to Alaska, and perhaps an Elderhostel trip before that. At home she does a little classical music programming for the local PBS station in Worcester. Kay Brigham Callanen and Cal seem to travel a good bit — a tour of Longwood Gardens; Winterthur; the Wyeth Museum and New Castle in addition to three months on Cape Cod — but she also says some of us may have heard from her in her new assignment for Andover-Abbott as Class Agent, and hopes we've read her letter of appeal on behalf of the Alumni Fund. I haven't yet, but I will, I will. Sue Johnstone Milliken and her husband are both retired, but she does tax preparation work for AARP and is a docent for the Abigail Adams Smith Museum. Her son is a reporter for a newspaper in Youngstown, and her daughter, with a new Ph.D., is an assistant professor at NYU. Gretchen Wyman Graham, who has lived in Wayland, MA, for 15 years, enjoys gardening and golf and is another Cape Codder in the summer.

Now to the most peripatetic of our class, Harriet Wright Hight. I wish I had room to quote her letter in its entirety, but a few sketchy notes on her travels will have to do: Last February — the Cayman Islands; Germany in May to visit her daughter; salmon fishing on the Mirimichi in July; most of the summer in New Hampshire (with side trips to Vermont to take part in the 80th anniversary of the Aloha Camps in August); a trip to Williamstown in October to see the foliage and the Shaker Community in Hancock, NH; Thanksgiving in Williamsburg, and Christmas in NH. There's more, but that's enough to give the idea that Harriet and Don are seldom home.

Many of us are going to our 50th college reunions, some in trepidation. Remember how we used to say, "We'll never look like that!" Well, some of us do, but it will be great, anyway.

Quandry: Do we rejoice openly at the receipt of several — repeat — several missives from PA '33 and risk complacency in the rest of you, or do we hint darkly at our methods — mention knocks on the door in the dead of night, racks, thumbscrews, bloodcurdling screams? Better write voluntarily — you could be next! But on with the intelligence our Sources have gathered.

Hugh Samson, along with ably continuing his insufficiently appreciated job as Head Agent for our class, doubles as a faithful reporter, and is hereby awarded our official reporter's battered fedora with "Press" ticket stuck in band. Hugh reports that Murray Sanders had left Martin Marietta to shift for itself while he samples the joys of retirement. Murray is shifting quite nicely, thank you, between his home in Georgetown and a country home on the West Shore of the Chesapeake. Floyd Haskell also according to this reliable source, is still in Washington. Floyd has retired from his affiliation with the law firm of Herrick &

Smith, whom he joined after completing his term in the U.S. Senate, and is currently heading a foundation which he formed to study and make recommendations for the improvement of the income tax. We may make it yet.

A most pleasant surprise, a note from McColl Pringle tells us that he retired in 1978. Mac and Lisa de Treville, also a South Carolinian, were married in August 1984, and are living in his native Charleston.

From our silver-tongued preacher, Ted Gregg, comes word that following spinal surgery in 1984 he had moved from Temple to Peterborough, NH, to a more easily maintained house and grounds. Ted also mentions attending the dedication of the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister in the Cochran Chapel last June. And a Christmas card from Hamp Wilcox and Dot, wintering in Mira Loma, CA, with those words that warm a class secretary's heart: "Looking forward to seeing you at the next reunion. . ."

George Peck writes from Brunswick, ME, where he moved with Annie five years ago on his retirement from SUNY, Purchase, N.Y., that life up there has been great fun — singing in the Bowdoin College Chorale; teaching a course in the Italian Renaissance; helping to found a Quaker Meeting in Brunswick; but the flip side — care of large house, six acres of pasture and woodland, and a large barn, just for openers, suggests re-retirement, and the Peck household is busily preparing to move lares and penates southward to the Philadelphia area, where they plan to winter at a Quaker study center (Address: Pendle Hill, Wallingford, PA 19086). Thence to Scotland for the summer — and following that we hope for an update . . . George?

George also reports having heard from his brother, Wells Peck, in good spirits and health, still at the Trapist Monastery in Azul, Argentina.

Now the part that always hurts. We have received a news clipping noting the death of Robert L. Keeney, Jr. last summer in Somersville, CT. Bob had numerous business interests, as well as a lengthy career in state government; but we shall remember him for his friendliness and his loyalty to Andover. Bob will be missed in June 1988. He is survived by six sons and two daughters, and by two brothers and two sisters.

We also have a notice of the death of Roger C. Sullivan in Scottsdale, AZ, on 27 September 1985. We had not seen Rog for many years, but we still have some bright memories of him as manager of our Roman baseball team. He is survived by his son Martin, who lives at 4800 No. 68th St., Scottsdale, AZ 85251. Lawton M. Hartman III of 1623 Third Ave., NY, died on 20 December 1985. He is survived by his wife and son William, PA '63.

We extend the sympathy of the Class of 1933 to the families of our deceased classmates. We shall miss them.

Not much news at this writing. It was a good holiday time with some of the Ohio family here warming up over Christmas. I heard that Lib Burnham Gazlay is spending some winter months with her son in California and there was a family reunion with her daughter and family there, also, over the holidays.

Betty Snyder Cady and Dick celebrated their 50th anniversary in October. As she wrote, "and we celebrated it the way we have all the others — off by ourselves. That's the way we've always wanted it." They have nine grandchildren ages 5 to 25. Betty reminded me of our days in Homestead when Molly Marshall's family sent us those wonderful, red Delicious apples. All from the well known Marshall orchards of Massachusetts. (I read about them in the Yankee magazine a couple of years ago). Any of you remember those apples?

Betty Weaver Van Wart wrote that she is keeping busy visiting her children in California and Florida. She's in touch with Carolyn Guptill Hansen in her many travels. Next week Merrill and I are off to Hawaii for a brief visit with my sister. She was a curious 12-year-old at the time of our Abbot graduation and was in awe of you "big girls" during the graduation activities. You know I'm always eager for news from you big girls — so how about it?

In a round about way the sad news of Marcia Gaylord Norman's death reached me (see obituary at beginning of the Class Notes). We are sad to learn of this, Helen Rice Wiles wrote to Alice Schultz Valkenburgh who in turn told me. I'm hoping for news from the alumni office. News of our class is even sparse from that source.

The biggest excitement of the year in this shop was our unsuccessful attempt to get Yale's Larry Kelly back on the field in Princeton for the game this fall. It was Ed McLean's brain child. Back in 1935 when Ed was on Princeton's football team, he wore Kelly's number 19 in practice when the scrubs ran Yale plays against the regulars. For the team's 50th reunion at the Y-P game this fall we connived to get an old #19 Yale jersey for Ed. The YAA agreed but later backed down. Probably just as well, maybe, for Ed is now a bit too retiring to play that game.

The brightest news for the Class is that Joe McMahon, my old grade-school buddy in Pittsfield, MA, has agreed to take on the job of filling Tom Campion's big class-agent shoes. It may be a surprise to most of the class to learn that Joe is not retired and is busier than a nesting phoebe running Korn/Ferry International, the international executive search firm. So it's true: to get something done, ask a really busy man. Come to think of it, Campion hasn't retired yet either. Makes you think.

The saddest news is that Bill Harding lost his wonderful, delightful, fun loving, warm-hearted wife, Barbara. It's not fair. I'm glad that at least we all had the chance once more to enjoy her company at our fiftieth.

Buck Dyess continues to teach "Remedies" at the South Texas College of Law in Houston. And, Classmates, wasn't it nice to have Buck and Lizzie up from Houston for our 50th?

It's been nice to hear from Frank Hurlbutt frequently, and wasn't that song he wrote for our Reunion, Spring Will Come Again a great thing? Here is a little more detail about his current activities. Hurlbutt has retired from obstetrics and gynecology after 33 years but keeps busy serving as Chairman of McPherson County's Hospice Board, as director of Lindsborg, Kansas's Volunteer Ambulance Corps, as a member of the town's Art Council and Tourism Board, and as a guest lecturer at Bethany College. Three nights a week he plays the piano at a local supper club.

Stew Leonard, our Class Agent for the past five years, is resigning from this position. We and the Academy owe him much for his efforts. Many, many thanks, Stew. Classmates, I hope that you will write and thank him. His address is 61 Greenfield Court, Cypresswood, Winter Haven, FL 33880.

Hugh Smith and his wife Marianne became grandparents by courtesy of the Scott Hoval Smiths. Young Michael is as much at home in Chevy Chase as Hugh is.

Your Class Secretary talked with Fred Griffin a few months ago. He reported that the temperature in Franconia, NH was 4 degrees below zero and that he was about to go skiing. What a hearty and healthy member of our class he is! In retirement Fred manages to keep quite busy with such things as raising money for the Audubon Society of New Hampshire and is Chairman of the Northern New Hampshire Foundation.

Norm Cross and his wife, Sally, will spend several months this winter in Plantation, Fla., and then in April they will take off on a Mediterranean Golf Club Tour. Norm reports also that Bob Cushman and his wife, Polly, will spend three months this winter in Naples, Fla., not too far from the Crosses.

And, finally, I am pleased to tell you that Norm Cross is our new Class Agent succeeding Stew Leonard. Do let's give Norm our full support and those of you who would like to help him either write him at 38 Dusty Miller Road, Falmouth, MA 02540 or drop me a line.

And speaking of dropping me a line. Classmates, please do so and tell me about yourselves and other 35sters. You will notice that this column is short this time. I'm suffering from a lack of news!

Helen Tower Stritmatter, whose broken ankle we trust long since has mended, writes of her fine experiences at Pendle Hill, a Quaker retreat and study center near Philadelphia. ". . . I felt the need to take time to study and figure out for myself just what is happening to produce an injured planet, injustice, violent struggles among people . . . I looked also at the many, many individuals and groups working to create solutions and found this to be encouraging." Helen is writing a report of her Pendle Hill studies which she hopes to publish shortly.

It is very good news that Betsy Arming-ton Arms seems to have made an excellent recovery from last winter's illnesses and was about to have an active, vigorous summer on the Cape hiking, sailing, even coping with the vicissitudes of a mast broken at sea.

Carol Prudden Dinkel, who, like Betsy, wanted to be with us at reunion and could not, has been kept busy with her work at the local historical society, in the garden and in daughter Martha's shop with the delightful name of The Mouse Hole.

Barbara Symonds Day and husband Web were planning a trip to Scotland and Norway for September. Their daughter who teaches high school English in Auburn, ME, has two daughters of her own. Their son Bob, a pilot, is commander of a squadron attached to the carrier Saratoga and the father of two children.

As you read this, final plans are being made for our 50th Reunion 13-15 June. As Woody Allen put it "life is 95% just showing up" so do your part and show up. A lot of warm, good friends and old, pleasant memories will be looking for you.

A random review of the class directory questionnaires submitted last December demonstrates that PA '36 at the time of its 50th has some very interesting classmates. Here is only a sample.

Danny Coursen has joined a Washington, D.C. crusade for the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse among juveniles. Lloyd Blanchard is a museum president in Westford, Mass. Ted Day is "paying back years of public electoral support by serving on charitable boards in upstate New York." Cleve Gray, Cornwall Bridge, CT., exhibits in one man shows and public collections from the East Coast to Caracas, Rome, Honolulu, Milan, and Toronto.

Rog Hegeman is a member of the American Institute of Architects, the Water Color Society of Houston, The English Speaking Union, among others. Roy Finch, Hunter College, NYC, will have a book published this fall on contemporary religious thinkers. Spike Knapp "is building an airplane" in Shaftsbury, VT. Don Kirkpatrick house swaps with families in Vienna, London and Paris. Cleve Cory has moved to a condominium in Portland, Oregon, where he has "no legal or gardening responsibilities." Sam Lacy has professionally traveled to the USSR and China. He's a psychiatrist at Kansas State University. Lew Lambert now in the beautiful Pacific Northwest spent four of the past ten years in Saudi Arabia. Hugh Maclean was named Distinguished Teaching Professor at the State University of New York at Albany. One of his published books (on Ben Johnson) was "adopted" by the French Ministry of Education. John McLaughry is a professional artist after retiring from Brown as Director of Summer and Special Programs.

Carl MacCracken Englewood, N.J., is author of "A Handbook for Inventors" (Scribners 1983). Carl himself holds 81 U.S. patents. Ted Mann is an Aerospace Consultant after 40 years with LTV, retiring as Senior V.P. Bob Wilson is combining business with pleasure as Chairman of The Vineyard Inc., "the leading wine specialty store in the Rocky Mountain area."

Quotable quotes: "As for Andover, well, my thoughts always return to the Hill and 'blue wave rolling.'" —Ned Brightwell. "I hold great admiration and affection for Andover. PA was the most informative, influential experience in my life." —Parke Masters. "These past ten years have been good to me in terms of achievements and pleasures." —Chan Young. "Think I can still handle you and Hart but time will tell." —Schuyler Van Ingen. "After 23 consecutive years of having children in college we watched the last graduate in '85." —Bill Trafton. "Ellen and I have become addicted to cruising under sail (bare boating, which has nothing to do with attire)." —Jack Swarts. Peter Stericker promises he will cross the Atlantic to be with us. All of the above can be kept in perspective with the last two quotes: Dave Wilde reports he "vegetates; day/manual laboring: repairs, clean-up, rock wall buildings, log-splitting; reading, bridge, TV." Jerry Bradford writes that what he has been doing for the past 10 years is "confidential."

Our heartfelt sympathies go to the families of three members of the class who have died: Nathan F. Banfield III died on 6 June 1985. A son, Michael, may be addressed at Box 318C Kula, Maui, Hawaii 96790; and Stephen P. Moorhead. Steve's widow, Pamela, lives in Brevard, NC 28712, P.O. Box 1156. Not previously reported is the death of Lt. Col. Guysbert B. Vroom in 1977. The class remembers these deceased members and mourns their passing.

Don't forget to "show up" 13 June and to contribute to our reunion gift to Andover. Every bit helps doubly, as there are additional pledges waiting "to be triggered" when the total reaches certain levels.

On 18 November Lucy Hawkes Winship and I drove down to Massachusetts to have lunch at Mary Dooley Bragg's home in Wellesley Hills with other members of the Steering Committee for that upcoming 50th Reunion of ours. The others who enjoyed Mary's delightful lunch were Mary Trafton Simonds, Polly Spear Chapin, Elizabeth Sargent Crandell, and Helen O'Brien Olcott. It was an exciting preview of what's ahead for thirty-sixers next 13-15 June.

A Christmas note from Sarge told about her barge trip through the Lorie Valley in France, the high point of which seems to have been voyaging in a hot air balloon. At the luncheon she didn't have much chance to tell me about it because I was monopolizing the conversation telling her about my four weeks in England last spring.

And now I am busy sharpening pencils so I will be well supplied in June to take notes on what all of you have been up to these past fifty years! BE THERE!

Space limitations made it impossible for me to have included all your summer notes in the fall issue of the Bulletin. Your understanding of these problems and your willingness in sharing news with classmates is most appreciated. And so I continue:

Russ Cornell writes from Dallas: "I retired from Mobil Oil about a year ago — after 35 years in the geophysical exploration end of the business. Most of the time I've been in the Texas office — visited occasionally with Jack MacDonald while in Houston. My daughter and her family are living in Missouri and presented us with our first grandson about a year and a-half ago." Russ writes of his watercolor painting hobby and reminisced about his work with the Oceanographic Institute and U.S. Geologic Survey people in Woods Hole.

Also involved in the marine world is Howard Blanding who writes: "I am still active in the marine industry [according to our records Blanding's profession is that of surveyor for the American Bureau of Shipping] in spite of its present sorry state, and hope to continue so for a few more years. All five children have dispersed to various parts of the country so Grace and I rattle around in our 5-bedroom house. I have mostly given up sailing in favor of running and do 6 mile (10K) races during the season.

And we learn from Lydia in Menomonee Fall, WI, that our Lacrosse Capt., Pete Craft, "has been retired for some time." And this idyllic note from Wayne Anderson who writes from Glen Arbor, Mich.: "Chrysanthemums are blooming early this year. Record salmon are being caught in Sleeping Bear Bay a half-mile from here. The house rings with the happy shouts of grandchildren, all too soon gone for another year. Time to start thinking about the ski season ahead, to get the shop addition under roof, and to put up that woodshed which has been faithfully promised but undelivered, year after year. Life in the seventh decade is bliss!"

George Snell writes: "I recently retired early from my position as V.P. of the Memorial Hospital in Pawtucket, R.I. The last few years my oldest daughter kept trying to get us to move here (Beaufort, S.C.). Finally, we realized that all of our family in N.E. had died or moved away, so what was to keep us in Bristol, R.I.? It is real busy with two grandchildren, a fifteen-year-old and a six-year-old, across and down the street a little way." Bring the grandchildren to our 50th, George!

Here are two briefs forwarded from the Alumni Office: Bill Scheft writes: "Returned to active schedule in May 1985. Enjoying industrial and commercial appraisal assignments to keep my golf activity limited to five days a week. Son Bill, Jr. just returned from six weeks of stand-up comedy in Sydney, Australia as a featured performer.

Horace Poynter: "I have enjoyed my first year of retirement from G.E. Aircraft Engine Group, Lynn, MA. Betty took our granddaughter Betsy Sandberg on a grand tour of Europe in June while I stayed home to take care of my 91-year-old mother-in-law and sailed my son-in-law's 36' yawl out of Great Bay, NH.

Jack Ware's Oct. 85 letter (his 10th) launched the 1985-86 Annual Giving Campaign. Our Agent attributes the success of the 1984-85 campaign to the co-agents — 89 donors (53.6%) gave $12,900. This year he is hoping for 100 donors (60%) to give $16,000. Jack's concern as expressed to me is "the occasional confusion of late givers — who think you're hitting 'em twice in one year.' Calendar year and fund-year differ, as we know."

I am saddened to report three deaths: George Schreiber lost his dear, wonderful wife Adrienne. She died 5 December 1985 after a prolonged illness. A trustee of the Saddle River Country Day School, she devoted herself to the educational needs of the children in the Borough. Her untiring work in the community, in the local hospital and in so many other ways earned for her the respect and love of all fortunate enough to have known and worked with her. She was an inspiration to all with whom she came in contact. The Class of '37 extends its heartfelt sympathy to George who lives in Saddle River, NJ, 07458, Box 363, and their three daughters, Susan Schreiber, Laura Washburn, Katherine Schreiber, and son, Ford.

Ed Macomber died on 20 November 1985. Best remembered by his classmates as that tall, lanky kid with a long reach, he became our star pole vaulter and captain of the fencing team in 1937. He joined that large contingent that went to New Haven and received his law degree from Cornell. Ed was a senior partner in the Rochester (N.Y.) law firm of Harris, Beach, Wilcox, Rubin, and Levy where he specialized in trial law.

A veteran of WW II, Ed served four years in Brazil as a naval observer and also on convoy duty aboard a destroyer escort stationed in the North Atlantic. Later in civilian life he was an able and avid boat man and a member of the Nantucket Yacht Club.

Ed was an active member of the Genesee Hospital's Board of Governors; he also served on the board of directors of the Convalescent Hospital for Children. And last year served Andover as one of the Class of '37's co-agents.

The Class of 1937 extends its deepest sympathy to his wife, Louise Dell Macomber, 3535 Elmwood Ave., Rochester, NY 14610; a son Edward Macomber, Jr. of Hawaii; a daughter Mary Barton of Ontario, Canada; a brother Alan and two sisters, Ruth Connor of Rochester and Dorothy Hetzel of Boynton Beach, FL; and three grandchildren.

Harry Hornblower died on 20 October 1985. We have a memorial to Harry in this issue written by his close friend Gus Thorndike. I know I speak for the whole class in extending sympathy to his widow Malabar, and other members of his family.

Mary Emily Pettengill Smith-Patersen wrote from sunny Naples, FL, that she traveled to Australia in January 1986. Kay Forbush Bass reports from Hilton Head that her granddaughter is attending Harvard University and continues her interest in hockey. Jeannette Partridge Harrison and her husband, Syd, visited the Besses at their place in Booth Bay Harbor, Maine, last September. The Harrisons live in Pebble Beach, Calif. Mary Evelyn Perrott Whitehill is beginning a new career in Newburgh, N.Y., as a professional artist in watercolors. Elizabeth Joost Todd would love to see former Abbot Classmates who are traveling in the area of Monkton, Maryland. Betty breeds horses on her farm there and is expecting a few new foals this spring.

Pri Wonson Hahn and her husband, Cliff, are retiring in January '86. They have sold their house in Lynnfield, Mass., and have bought a new town house at The Greens at the Thomson Club in North Reading, Mass. They are situated on a hill overlooking the 14th fairway and have a lovely view. Cynthia Holbrook Sumner and Warren flew from Sacramento, Calif. to Newburyport, Mass., for her brother-in-law's funeral in November. They also visited son Steve and family in Ohio where little granddaughter, Elizabeth, is an adorable 27-months-old. Betty Inman Kirkpatrick was in and out of the Mass. General Hospital from Sept. '84 to April '85 with lung cancer. After seven months of chemotherapy, she is now well again. Betty's daughter Jean recently moved to Roscoe, Ill. and has three children. Her son, Murray, is head of a Research Center in Milton, Nova Scotia and "doing wonders." Another son and his family live in Williamsburg, Va. Betty and Kirk became grandparents again on Christmas day, making a total of ten "grands!"

Bar Randolph Bowman and her husband, Gus, spent Christmas with their son Roy and his family in Austin, Texas, where Roy has a wonderful house on six acres. They also visited Georgetown, Texas, where Gus lived until he was twelve years old in his grandparents' lovely old house. Gus is officially retired but has a part-time position to keep him busy and active.

Regretfully, I have learned of the deaths of two classmates. Elizabeth McArdle McDermott died on 23 September 1985 at her home, 89 Knox Street, Lawrence, Mass., where she had been a lifelong resident. Liz graduated from Trinity College in Washington, D.C. She is survived by her husband, Dr. John R. McDermott; two daughters, Jane McDermott of Lawrence, and Anne McDermott Higgins (AA '65) of Newton, Mass. Nancy Burns McArdle was her sister-in-law and classmate. Ruth Rose Stothoff died 5 December 1985 in Tryon, N.C. Ruth was a graduate of Vassar and she and her husband had moved to North Carolina from Connecticut about five years ago. She is survived by her husband, George S. Stothoff, Route #1, Box 3K, Tryon, NC 28782. The class extends its deepest sympathy to the families of Liz and Ruth. They will be missed.

Among the many good results of Fred Kent's pushing of reunion matters is a plethora of letters and info from classmates, thus easing the "burden" of note-writing.

Andy Palmer had been to New Zealand and even thought of moving there until he learned of the tax structure. We didn't make it, Andy: one of our traveling companions became ill and Barbara and I went to Switzerland, southern France and Paris—a thoroughly acceptable substitute. The Palmers really enjoy retirement what with visits from a now-British daughter, travel, and long, leisurely breakfasts . . . Out of the past, via Kent, came Charlie Stoddart: He spends eight months in Spain at both summer and winter residences; Charlie had recently been in the states, and in Canada saw such real-life as a male strip show! He hopes to be at PA in '88 with his Spanish wife; and Charlie, tell señora S. to get herself and you there. The Henry Steinhardts spent six weeks in Japan last fall; visited Jules Gregory's widow, Nancy, in New Jersey, and the Yardleys on Cape Cod. He says Ted "isn't any more retired than I am and works hard." Add to all this three long backpacking trips. Henry says I can sniff class news from the Hong Kong phone-book. Henry, Schmaltz sent me Moscow's and New Delhi's, a fund of information.

Bob Wigley's note will please the economy-minded Bulletin editor: "Still residing in Dallas. Still Vice Chairman of E.F. Hutton & Co., Inc., still getting older." Lloyd Peelle is in the vineyard consulting business but tells me the market is depressed (which surprises me). He is an active Rotarian and wonders if any classmates might be attending the National Convention in Las Vegas in June. He'll be there. He's adapting to the Nevada summer climate with a week in Aruba in December . . . Bill McConnell, another of Kent's team of hustlers, held a PA '38 meeting in December at the Breaker's Hotel, Palm Beach, with Curtis Horwitz, Richard and Dave Williams. Fleming and Marston couldn't make it. This all had to do with #50, and now Bill is organizing an all-Florida '38 dinner at an as yet unspecified time and place. I gather from Gene Curtis that he will get some help, Gene having seen Kent in Dorset, VT.

The National Parks and Conservation Association sponsored its fourth annual art exhibit in Washington, DC, featuring the black and white park photography of Henry Steinhardt, which I think must have been excellent as I saw a bit of this when Henry visited us about five years ago. This is an avocation that goes back to at least 1937. I still have a photo, taken by him, of Bill Viator and Ed Robie (both '37) beating me (handily) to the tape in the 220, happily, with three Exonians bringing up the rear. Among my calls re. the 50th: Jack Furman and Norm Wiss with little to report; George Horwitz and Joan—a catch-up after many years—both promising to be with us in '88; and George's plan was to have seen McConnell on 9 December. Ted Harrison's book Athletics for All is worth your effort to get and read. Of additional significance is the fact that once a minimum sale has been achieved, Ted has assigned his royalties to our 50th Fund. This history of PA athletics has a lot of nostalgia for everyone, but for us, 1934-1938, especially.

Monti Reyonlds took early retirement from his U. of California professorship and is up to his ears in working for The Overseas Blind Foundation and Americans for the Universality of UNESCO. He is also actively involved in recruiting for PA, in his words "the finest school on earth."

Led ("goaded!") by Kent, the steering committee met at the Harrison's on 4 January; Davis, S. Smith, Adams Harrison, Kent, and Murphy up-dating what is real progress on the whole program. One of Fred's telling points is evidenced by the committee meetings, keeping up the personal contacts, and, indeed, the camaraderie. Connie Pike drove all the way from Old Lyme to Westport and back and added so much to our friendly group and participating wives. John Rothery retired from Arthur D. Little Co., lives in Stuart, Florida, and got there from Marblehead via the inter-coastal waterway. He and Cathryn will take their boat to the Bahamas this spring. Their daughters, like ours, live far from them. Don Friedkin sent a long and amusing letter: he has two in college, Mt. Holyoke and Lehigh; a third in high school and a stepdaughter who is an electrical contractor in New Jersey. Don's business, Radix Organization, in NYC, does industrial development and freight forwarding/customs brokering for an area in France. This required some schooling on Don's part, to qualify; and the consequent risk that had he failed (he obviously didn't) his kids would have snorted at his efforts to get them to study — "what are you yelling at us for? You just flunked an exam yourself."

Jack Kimball died 23 August 1985 in Buffalo, NY. I had not seen nor heard from Jack since I saw him at Cornell Law School c. 1948. We are sorry to have lost Jack and I extend, for the class, my sympathy to his wife, Nancy.

I recommend for your reading pleasure John Blum's new book, Public Philosopher: Selected Letters of Walter Lippmann. Lippmann's observations about the people and events of our times are always fascinating and not infrequently surprising. John sets the stage with a brilliant introductory essay that presents the sources and nature of Lippmann's thought, and throughout the book the reader has the benefit of John's incisive commentaries explaining the people and events that are referred to in the letters. Tuck's a great competitor and carried me handily. Great fun. Gene Schnell is champing at the bit to get started on our 50th Reunion but is being deterred by red tape in the administration. I see Gene fairly regularly. He could still play a whole half of Lacrosse if he had to, but probably is glad he doesn't have to. He and Ina had a fascinating trip to China in September. I had lunch with Ted Walen in July and enjoyed catching up on his entrepreneurial work in the medical equipment field.

Bob Anderson has retired from the State Dept. but will continue to live in Washington where he and Elli are very much at home. He's interested in developing business with France. Bill Macomber will retire in June from the Metropolitan Museum of Art presidency. He's done a fabulous job. Nick Greene was elected an honorary member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London last summer. He was similarly honored in Japan by the Society of Anesthe-

My husband, Hamp, had his 70th birthday on 9 September and was feted by his office staff. Friends and customers enjoyed cake and punch with him, and wished him well throughout the day. The following day in Memphis he had hip replacement surgery and went through the surgery and post operative period very well. At the end of six weeks at home, he went to Memphis with our son, and I took off for Natchez, Miss. for a short trip. I took another trip in early December on a charter flight to Rome for a week and had a lovely time.

Soon I will wind up my two-year term of office as Chairman of Genealogical Research Arkansas Society DAR. My next office will be State Chaplain of DAR, which surely will be an easier job. I will also be serving a one-year term as Clerk of Sessions of the First Presbyterian Church of McGehee.

Andy Warburg Kaufman is a real laid back Californian, enjoying the relaxed and comfortable life of the West. She goes on great nature trips to all corners of the earth, taking pictures. She is an avid bird watcher, and she spends two or more days weekly at the Audubon Society. She and her husband, Sidney, moved to California six or seven years ago due to his health and his work. She has a son in Calif. but the rest of her family in in N.Y. She visits at her convenience, and they visit her. She was widowed two years ago.

Marietta Meyer Ekberg sends me a wonderful newsletter each year with a recap of important events. The cable franchise was renewed at last, after nerve-racking delays. I believe Bill and Marietta have learned all they care to know about being responsible public servants. They recovered from the ordeal by traveling quite a lot this year. They were rewarded for past achievement when they received the North Dakota Pioneer Broadcaster Award. In addition, Marietta was honored by election as a Fellow in the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy at the national meeting in NY. Their numerous children and grandchildren give them great pleasure. The Ekbergs have a new hobby of making miniature scale furniture. We expect to hear more about that later.

Mary Howard Nutting wrote that her older son Stephen was married to Lois LeBlanc 15 September. They live in Brownfield, ME, where he has just built a new woodworking shop and studio. Philip, younger, and wife Cheryl, are remodeling an old house in Rockport, MA. Mary is still Coordinator of Alumni Presidents Council of Independent Secondary Schools, but plans to retire in May '86 and go on to other interests.

Joan Carlson Hutchison's older daughter Jacqui married Dr. Mark Seager 14 April in Santa Barbara. She owns a business and designs clothes in Santa Barbara, but now lives in Livermore, CA. She and Joan see each other when Jacqui is tending to business. Joan visits on the Cape each summer and may make reunion one day. How about our 50th?

Anne Rivinius Wild has her own real estate company in Winchester, MA. She is delighted with her new granddaughter, the first girl in two generations. I am sad to tell you Anne's middle son, Richard, died 16 July, three days before his 36th birthday. Anne's new address is 15 Winthrop St. Winchester, MA 01890. Most of us have children this age and can identify with her dreadful loss.

45th! REUNION

Thomas B. Hartmann
178 Moore St.
Princeton, N.J. 08540

The target date is Saturday 14 June 1986, and our 45th reunion will be in full sway. Many classmates are planning to be there. Sid Overall telephoned from St. Simon's Island, Georgia, requesting a list for him to call. I need a few other volunteers to join Sid so that all of our undecideds will get at least one call. Buck Bradley wrote that he will combine a visit to his daughter in Duxbury, Mass., with an appearance at the reunion. Buck is still with E. I. Lilly in Indianapolis. Dick Gelb sent a note with a similar message under his Bristol Myers letterhead. Just today Ernie Stockwell wrote from Dover, Mass., stating that he and his wife will attend. The Abbott class of 1941 will join us for a splendid banquet on the above date. Please make every effort to return.

Bob Stevens wrote a long and informative letter from his home in Pittsford, N.Y. Bob has been working for the last 15 years as a business consultant, but that work appears to be coming in second to his passion for genealogy. This serious avocation began 10 years ago when Bob uncovered family papers, some of which dated back to the late 18th century. He has written three books; a fourth is nearly ready for publication, and he has plans for two additional books. He received an important honor when he was elected to the board of trustees last April of the New England Historic Genealogical Society. Both Bob and his wife, Jane (a sister of our classmate, Bill Knauss), are active in community affairs. Bob's main involvement is with the Community Partners for Youth which provides volunteers to work one-on-one with young people in trouble with the law. Jane is a key figure in local and county Republican affairs. As for children, William, PA '73, is a farmer in Vermont; one daughter is a retired nurse entering the computer field in Dallas; a second daughter is a professor of photography at the University of Cincinnati; a third daughter is a film historian. Bob has been a loyal supporter of our school, and the news from him is most welcome.

On a sad note, Bucky King, widow of Wib King, has written to Judge Claude Davis and me about Wib and their life together on their ranch in Wyoming where they have raised red Angus cattle for the past 15 years. Recently they began to breed polo ponies. America's only 10-goal player now uses some of their ponies. Wib died in October of a heart attack. The class extends its sincere sympathy to Bucky and her family.

Joe Vaamonde has provided me with much information about other classmates. He sees Fred Crane regularly in Dalton, Mass., where Fred is about to retire as VP for Research and Development of Crane and Co., papermakers. Fred will remain affiliated with the company on a special projects basis, but he will now expand his interests in skiing and sailing. In fact, he is planning a 1987 voyage from Maine to Scotland. Fred will be at the reunion so perhaps all serious sailors will have a chance to apply for a berth on his boat. Joe also reports that Roy Jimeron has retired from IBM and has moved to Sarasota from Washington. Spencer Flournoy lives in an equally desirable habitat, Santa Rosa in Marin County, California. I hope that both will return for the reunion so that we can hear firsthand reports about those lovely places.

Bill Cooke and Dottie continue to enjoy active lives spent in places other than Newark, Delaware. They spent seven weeks last summer in many parts of Brazil. They visited with their daughter, Susan, and her family in Seattle for Christmas.

Serving as Class Secretary has many pleasant moments, but I do receive the notices of deaths from the Alumni Office. Gentlemen, we are at the age when we too frequently lose classmates. Besides Wib King, John Crawford passed away in Denver in October. John graduated from the Colorado School of Mines in 1948 when he joined Standard Oil of Calif. as a field geologist, six years later he went to work for Argo Oil Co. in Denver as chief geologist for the Rocky Mountain States. He went into independent exploration in 1960. John and his wife, developer Dana Crawford, created Larimer Square, one of the nation's first commercial rehabilitation projects in downtown Denver. John and his wife and 12 friends put up $400,000 to save the historic block in 1965. Surviving in addition to his wife are four sons, Jack, Tom, Peter, and Duke all of Denver. Contributions were asked to be donated in his name to Phillips Academy.

And very recently Mel Ireland died in Illinois. Mel is survived by his wife Jean; two children and brother R.L. Ireland III '38 Trustee and Alumni Council member of Phillips Academy. We extend our sympathy to the families of these deceased classmates. Without being maudlin, reunions do serve many purposes. Renewing friendships is one of those purposes.

sub-zero weather and enough snow to keep ski operators quite happy.

Lindsay Hanna informs us that he and Becky retired last year to their Carmel, CA, vacation home from Hartford, CT, after 37 years with Connecticut General Insurance Co. They have a small abode near the ocean with a fine garden to keep Lindsay busy. Hiking in the coastal mountains adds to their new and pleasurable life. Two of their daughters are married and living in Hartford; the third daughter is in Seattle.

He mentions seeing Hank See last year in Monterey at the U.S. Seniors golf tourney at Cypress Point, and his PA roommate, Doug Dunlap in 1982 on a visit to the Knoxville World's Fair. "Neither of us has attended a PA '42 reunion but we promised ourselves to do so in 1987." Well said, Lindsay. Robert G. Furse, our erstwhile football quarterback, retired 1 July 1985 after 25 years with Texas Gas Exploration Corp. as VP of International Exploration. Merle and Bob plan to remain in Houston where their two children, Robert A. Furse, M.D. '69 and Claire F. Coots both reside. Best wishes to you both for a long and active new life.

A note sent to the Alumni Office informs us that Bill Markey continues his eleven-year career at the University of Mass. library in Amherst, where he is in the Collection Development Dept. and is responsible for all the humanities. He has recently earned a degree in fine arts and teaches some French and Italian. He maintains a weekend home in West Boyford, MA. A welcome note from Albert Stone informs us that he is still teaching at the University of Iowa, chairing the American Studies Program, along with some research. This year he and his wife, Grace, look forward to a visiting term at a French University, then a term leave for research and writing. They enjoy their Iowa farm as home and their summer cottage on the Kennebec River in Maine. Their son is a soil geologist and their daughter a doctoral candidate in art history at Yale.

Joe Leiper writes in a warm letter that he and Janet are still living in Blauvelt, N.Y., and he is back working at the Port Authority of N.Y. and New N.J. doing long-range planning. They enjoy a summer home in Southampton and son Joe, Jr. is in free lance writing after graduating from Vassar several years ago. Joe recalls sharing joys at our 40th reunion and is looking forward to our 45th in '87!

It is my sad duty and honor to report the death of our classmate William K. Saunders, on 22 September 1985. Bill was born in Brattleboro, VT and graduated from Yale (with a naval ensign's rank) in 1945. He was recalled to the Navy during the Korean War. His entire career was spent with the J.P. Stevens textile company in N.Y. City where he was a senior vice president at the time of his death. For most of his married life his home was Darien, Conn., where he and his wife, Marsie, raised a fine family of four daughters and two sons which have now grown to six grandchildren as well. Bill made his mark early as an outstanding hockey and tennis player. He captained the Yale hockey team, and tennis was a lifelong avocation until nine years ago when he suffered the first of a series of heart attacks. Since then he had to cut back on his intense physical activity but continued to enjoy his work and his ever growing family.

A memorial service, attended by over 600 people, was held in the Noroton, CT Presbyterian Church. This indicated the measure of the esteem in which Bill was held by his friends and neighbors in Darien, his fellow workers at J.P. Stevens and all others whose lives Bill had touched so positively along the way. Bill also leaves a younger brother, John Saunders and a younger sister, Carolyn S. Quarles, my dear wife. Bill was the one who first introduced us almost forty years ago. Can you understand why your scribe has difficulty trying to write with some objectivity about this most wonderful human being and dear friend? The sympathy of all the class goes out to Marsie Saunders and her family on their great loss.

Thanks to all those who have written me or the Alumni Office. Please keep your pens active and send your reports my way. Best wishes to you all for a fine spring and summer.

Maybe some of you can remember back to a cowboy movie star named Slim Pickens. Well, this column is being written by him.

A nice note from Don Earnshaw now living in Greenwich after a stay in Washington while with the Department of Commerce. Don is President of an International Consulting firm which also does a bit of Government relations consulting.

Cliff Wright was in my hometown this September, but unfortunately we did not get together. Cliff did, however, have lunch with Dave Anderson, a member of the State Legislature from Norwich.

Finally, from the West Coast a note from Jack Lemmon's faithful secretary saying that Jack will be appearing in O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night on the stage in New York, beginning late this spring.

Now installed in a new home on a great sweep of Georgia sea marsh; great blues (birds, not Elis) flapping by, kingfishers doing their Stuka bit; cormorants and mergansers diving for shrimp on the incoming tide . . . those of you who work as hard as Les Grant writes that he does, give yourself a break and come to the Low Country.

Les is now president of Safari Club International, a grouping of some 20,000 souls dedicated to stemming illegal trade in animals, or more properly, pieces of animals like elephant tusks or pangolin skins, which is causing decimation of many species. HRH Prince Philip is a close associate in this worthy, very difficult battle. Les remains active with his real estate development firm, Pilgrim Mangement.

The persisting, sometimes unexplored, talent of our class never ceases to amaze. The creative capacities of such as Bergheim, Deming, Farrar, Schuster, Simons, Sterling, to name a few, boggles the mind. Now comes Peter Baker, a poet, no less, as evidenced in his November appeal, we think is a very able guy at proving that a good cause inevitably attracts wider support. Mort

Dunn: do your laurels sit easy? By the bye, beyond the fact that the Alumni Fund deserves support from each of us, dallying in our response may lead Peter to write a second poem.

Of hard workers: Roger Strong writes that he is still busily managing money for Shearson/Lehman in Manhattan, sees Dick Abrons often, Elmer Ward occasionally, and has Whit Stevens as a near neighbor; finds time to travel to Alaska, Israel, France; has a vacation spot in Scottsdale. We do not envy the money manager's lot in 1986.

Roger sent a clip from the WSJ noting the publication by William Morrow of a book on entrepreneurial life by Vic Kiam entitled Going For it! Maybe inappropriate to say you should get lathered up about it, but, there again, '44s creativity.

From our other recent publishee, Bill Boyd, still chairman of Boyd Steamship in Panama, comes news that The Gentle Infantryman (St. Martin's Press) is selling well and he's starting on a second novel. Bill is spending more time now at his Lyford Cay house in the Bahamas, which makes it reasonable to expect him to join us on the Hill in June of '89.

Jerry O'Brien writes from Moscow, second time around: stores a bit better stocked; Porsche now designing the Lada; heavy jamming of VOA; but a requiem mass in Latin at the conservatory; embassy abuzz with the attempt to launch Detante II (or maybe III); Anne joining him in January from their new condo on Narragansett Bay. We challenge any classmate to prove he's as widely traveled or as passionate an observer of the diverse human race as the Big O.

'44's record in Good Causes is probably impressive, but we don't know enough. We have Pete Stevens at the Public Interest Law Center in Philadelphia and doubtless many others directing/redirecting their talents to repairing man's damage of man. It's inspiring to hear about, so tell us.

A different kind of good cause is Hey Is-ham's work as director of the State Department's Office of Combating Terrorism. Behind the awful headlines is the encouraging news of the increase in thwarted terrorist attacks. Like to hear more on this, but suspect it's one thing Hey can't talk about. Wish him success in the busy year planned for us by the allahu akbar set.

Another creative type, Dick Bull and his company, Bradner Central, were written up recently in the trade press. The century-plus-old firm always was and is highly regarded in fine paper merchandising, but had one foot in school notebooks; said foot got P & L gout. Dick was complimented for returning Bradner to solid profitability.

Friend Bull had heard from Bob Williamson, rapturing of a trip to England. He noted also '44's affinity for the paper business in the persons of Baker, Bull, and John Bolton's machinery, plus industry alumni Vint Cartmell, Bill Rich (and even your friendly amanuensis). He further had word that Burch Ault still thrives at St. John's College in Santa Fe.

Back to Baker: Living now in NH just north of that other school, Peter put in two hitches, some 21 years, with Arthur D. Little. In between were executive positions in the aluminum foil business. Since last departing ADL, Peter bought some adhesives businesses from Dennison, ran them until Ludlow made an offer to take them over, and is now husbanding the results of that while being an industrial rep for Ludlow. Very neat maneuver.

Peter mentions that another world traveler, Bill Graham, is a movie director in Malibu. Also in the Far West, Woody Stockwell running his San Francisco architecture business.

We will expect scores of letters adding to, correcting, or condemning all the above, and next time, we may be able to report a tantalizing scheme that Rockwell, Roome, and Bidgood have on the boards.

Charles M. Gearing II
500 Oak Ridge Dr.
Cheshire, CT 06410

It is extremely cold, this January morning and I'm getting the Caribbean itch in a very bad way; a couple of more mornings like this one and the First Mrs. Gearing and I are gone!

I have a very unusual happening to report: I have received two pieces of correspondence from afar, one from a classmate and one from an old friend in the class of 1943, Nick Taintor. Nick wrote me a charming letter on the letterhead of The Cedar Hill Cemetery Association. His penmanship is about as good as mine (we both should have been doctors) and I was about to give it the deep six thinking it was an unwanted solicitation of my patronage when I deciphered the magic phrase "Koch of Pittsburgh." I then discovered an enclosure which turned out to be a certificate of election signed by every dignitary imaginable confirming that John L. Koch, Jr. is the newly elected Mayor of Ben Avon, Pa.! I know this was not a gag because I had the pleasure of having lunch with Creep and Nick (on Nick) at Mory's shortly before the day of balloting. John has retired from business and, I guess, was looking for something to keep him out of mischief. Congratulations. 1942 has Bush, we've got Koch!

The other piece of mail was from old faithful, Tom Hopkinson. Tom was notable by his absence at the 45th, but wrote to explain that certain excesses at the Yale 35th the week before had rendered him hors d'combat. He said that he had seen Beach, McCracken, Burns and Herman at the Yale shindig. Tom, my boy, all four of the aforementioned were at PA in fine fettle!

One September evening we were afforded the pleasant surprise of running into Jack Lee and Rosalie at the Goodspeed Opera house in Haddam, Ct. As reported in this column some years ago, Jack is heavily involved in the Engineering efforts of Hamilton Standard division of United Technologies, and acts as their TV spokesman when "something goes wrong." Jack didn't say so, but I gathered others are available when things go o.k. Both Jack and Rosalie look like they did when they stepped off the Hill 40 years ago. We had some fun reminiscing about Porky and some of the hi-jinx at his Salem Street dorm.

We attended the Y-P game at P with Bergie and that nameless classmate from N.J. who has threatened me with bodily harm if I use his name. It was a disaster. It featured a chilling rain, and a P team that beat the hell out of the Ys. I spent the entire game in nameless's station wagon with a jug of wine and sandwiches listening to the game on the unbiased P radio station. The following weekend was much better, as the same cast of characters plus Ann Allen journeyed to the Bowl for THE GAME. The Ys turned in a great upset and made the year.

I sure would feel better about this job, if I heard from you characters out there. It's tough enough without having to rely on the class of '43 for 50% of the correspondence! How about sitting down right now and dropping me a note? I'd love to hear from the wives of those of you who are unlettered.

Do you send a "Christmas letter" to friends? One fast and easy way to keep your struggling reporter informed is to send a copy to me, annotated or deleted as you wish. This brilliant idea was just used by Betty Graves Brigham. Our erstwhile "Gravy," now known as "Buff," certainly confounds my recollections! She's spent 28 years teaching; the last 18 as professor of French and Literature at Auraria in Denver. She holds an MA from Denver U. and is (was? it's not clear) a Ph.D. candidate there.

Spouse Herb is in management at Gates Rubber Co. There are three boys: Lonny is in an Army M.A.S.H. unit in Honduras; he's married and there are two Brigham grandsons; John, a research assistant at Johns-Manville, and his wife, also have two sons; Art married recently — an Australian lady whose 7-year-old is the first granddaughter. Buff skis and plays club team tennis. She lists Abaco, Morocco, East and West Germany and Grand Cayman on her 1985 itinerary, and says "Welcome any Abbot Rabbits who head our way." Should you be so lucky as to catch her home.

Miriam Dearborn Dunn (no longer Mrs. Vincent Dunn, she says) is President of Capitol Eye of New Hampshire, Inc. It's a service which provides computerized reports on New Hampshire legislation to law firms, trade associations, businesses and information-processing houses. Mim travels, plays tennis, and has three grown sons . . . and like everybody, she says Hilary Paterson Cleveland's "recent 1945 column was terrific!"

Suzanne Leland Lefebvre, calling herself "Noonie" now, writes from her home in Milwaukee. Three of her children are married, providing four grandchildren, 2 months to 6 years, and they all live in the area. The fourth child, the bachelor, is heading for San Francisco as I write. Noonie and husband Johnny are looking forward to retiring — from what, she doesn't say, to what is quite clear: in addition to the Milwaukee homestead, there's a small home in Egg Harbor, Wisconsin, and a condominium in Stuart, Florida, and "boating, tennis and cross-country skiing, and the joy of family nearby."

Joan Holdsworth Maxwell says, "Sorry I missed our 40th reunion! Sounded like fun." She continues work for a local Hospice in Encinitas, California, and is enjoying her only grandchild, two-year-old Rachel. "Would love to see any Abbot gals who are near the San Diego area."

The class will be saddened to learn that Marjorie Milne Winston's sister Madeline, whom some of us knew, died in September after a lengthy illness. I know I speak for all of us in extending heartfelt sympathy.

I do hope this Bulletin reaches you in time to finalize plans to attend your 40th Reunion. Get on the horn to Phelps, Hudner, Begien, Wexler, etc., to reserve space post haste.

These guys have performed wonders. Did you read that list of intending returnees? Vail, Tavares, Friday, OJ, Morse . . . over 50, as of 14 January. Incredible! I've spoken with Charlie Vail on the phone re fund-raising over the years, but I've never seen him. Charlie was the oldest, toughest guy in the ninth grade, ever. I did think of him last January when I read an obit in the Times of the passing of Sir Henry Tucker of Bermuda, Father of Henry Tucker III. You four-year guys will remember Henry Tucker, who died several years ago in an auto accident. Henry and Charlie had a little set-to on the soccer field one afternoon that was a real beaut. Henry, by the way, was one of the few fellows in our junior year who won a varsity letter. His was in soccer, of course. Others included Smith (hockey) and Hudner (lacrosse).

I reported Jim Morse's marriage two or three times already; combined, they have nine adult children living in six states. Jim "returned to the groves of academe last summer to pursue studies for a master's degree in Human Services at Keene State College." Isn't that a gas? Richard R. Myers started Advance Stainless Mfg. in Elkhorn, Wis. last May to produce stainless steel fittings, valves and special fabrications for dairy, food, beverage and pharmaceutical plants. He is President and Treasurer and finds it an exciting challenge.

Ran into P.K. Fisher the Grand Banker (Maine not Morgan) in the east fifties. P.K. was heading for Bloominies for a particular perfume unavailable in the most sophisticated of the Bangor boutiques. Cy Heard phoned us over Christmas. He has, at long last, closed down the Sewickley segment of the Four Cyrus Saga and is moving East in the fall. We'll miss him at the 40th; Yale 35th will claim those lads who took a PG after PA.

Had drinks with Roger "Zoot" Neuhooff in January at his Rep party at Charlie Os. Old "R.A.S." Company, Eastern Broadcasting, specializes in Hemorrhaged Buyouts of bleeding Radio/TV properties. Look out ABC. Note from Duer led to a nice lunch in January. His boys are at Georgetown and UVM doing well. Mac is with Merrill Lynch. When I rang up Hudner for the "latest" on the reunion he did mention that some of our old faculty members still living in the Andover area have been invited to have dinner with us. They include Sanborn, Sorota, Dr. Barss, Flop, Deke, and Hart Leavitt, still making Le Jazz Hot at the local parties.

A lot of you fellows haven't been back in years, and some never at all. How about that Papon, Flues, Hardwick, O'Connor, Black, Moses, Gifford, Gruner, Budge, Kerrigan, Higbie, West, Algrant, Thaw, Sharpe, Chandler, Maxwell? You guys . . . come on back. . .

I hope Sue and Jack Lynch come back. Son Jake graduates in June, the last offspring of the class of '46 to attend PA. A tradition passes. Now come the grandchildren. Can you stand it?

The 40th is a perfect time for a change. The writer of this column would like to retire. He's been at it far too long and the creative juices are getting mighty thin. So volunteers come forward at the Reunion or otherwise. See you in June. Happy springtime.

Brook has promised he will twist Aunt Barbara's arm to come to Reunion in June. Now, let's all get arm twisting and get each other to come. Call your Abbot roommate of long ago. You'll be receiving Reunion information soon.

A note from Jen Copeland Dufford of Grand Junction, Colo., saying she is "more than interested" in attending Reunion after enjoying her college reunion at Wells last summer. Sorry that I left Sally Power Hansman's nice letter at home in Chicago. You will be up-dated on her when I return. Mary Howe Brumback is well and busy in Chicago. She does volunteer work at the Rehabilitation Institute and is on the go as the wife of Charlie, Chicago Tribune president. Mary and Charlie have four children (and a couple of grandchildren), three of whom live in the South. Daughter Ellen graduated from Dennison and is now working in Chicago.

Our Chicago/Abbot-Andover group had a nice dinner in November with headmaster Don McNemar and wife Britta (among others). Such a delightful, outstanding couple, and we had the pleasure of meeting and hearing Andover's new Director of Admissions, Jeannie Disette, who is impressive and will continue the excellent performance of that office for Andover. I hope that you women who are nearer the larger cities attend these Abbot-Andover gatherings. They are friendly, fun and informative.

You'll hear from me again about Reunion plans. Those of you who have to fly, get your tickets "on the cheap" while the price war is on. What a chance! Love, Luty.

I received a card bearing Christmas greetings from Warren Brown and Ann showing the Browns among the barren rocks of King George Island accompanied only by a flock of penguins observing them from on high. King George is part of the South Shetland Islands which form the northern most protrusion of Antarctica immediately below South America. This was a major stop on a sailing adventure during which they took Palawan around Cape Horn, across the Drake Passage to that continent of ice covering the south pole.

Speaking of adventure, Skip Mott is embarking on a new one which I think he understates when he advises Andover to change his address as he has retired from Dow Chemical and is heading for the University of Minnesota to get a Ph.D. in zoology.

Another marvel of understatement was a comment in a Christmas note from Bill Kelly . . . another unexciting year at Car-bide." An article in the October 14th issue of Fortune entitled "Lawyers for Companies in Deep Trouble" refers to Peter Fleming as a formidable prosecutor while serving the government in the 1960's, and now in private practice an equally formidable defender of corporations and business people charged with serious civil violations or crimes.

Next year is our fortieth reunion. There was a time (it seems not long ago) that I thought nobody could be that old! But now it seems not so much older, just so much better. It may seem premature to start planning now for 1987, but I plan to be there and I hope you will too.

Art Contas continues his work at the Boston Consulting Group. He is now Director of Analog Devices in Norwood, Mass., and is currently a Governor Dukakis appointee of the Mass. Council for the Arts and Humanities. He is still very active as an overseer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and continues when possible to spend Easters in Greece.

Phil Aronson continues his busy, full-service brokerage career at Drexel Brunham Lambert in Boston. His wife, Carol, is flourishing in the residential real estate business and one of his boys is continuing the business tradition at Northwestern University's Business School.

Lyle Hall, currently sporting a scholarly and patriarchal beard does triple duty, probably winning the class prize for eclecticism, as Chairman of the Board of the Stackpole Corporation in Boston, Rector of Saint Dunstan's Episcopal Church in Dover, Mass., and running Charka Farm in Dover which specializes in fine wool and quality lamb. He gets professional assistance from the farm from one of his children who is an agricultural school graduate.

I'm sorry to have to report the death of George Bingham in November of 1985 who died of cancer after a brief illness. George was an insurance broker in Palo Alto. Every time I douse myself with Blue Grass cologne I feel slightly guilty. Not for any havoc I might create but because my hostess present from Mary Farrar Bonotto is so ill-gotten. Mary and I were to attend the Andover Leaders Weekend together the end of September. I did call her home in New Jersey and left a message on her recording machine, warning her of the approach of Hurricane Gloria, but it was too late. Mary arrived at my house just as the forecasters were predicting the worst, and stayed only long enough to leave her present. I had already decided to stay in Worcester to defend the homestead so I waved Mary off into the night. The program for the weekend was cancelled but Mary had a fine time visiting Andover. If you haven't heard already, Mary is now one of our class agents.

"Mo" Jones sent a little packet of news. Her Jeremy is in the seventh grade and enjoys scouting and tennis. I hope he remembers that he is the official class Sherpa, responsible for getting us through all our reunions. "Mo" reports that "Bean" Young has been appointed editor-in-chief of the Literary Guild and that Lee Booth Witwer has five granddaughters and two grandsons. Lee and Mo plan to get together this spring in the Florida Keys.

Nancy Richmond Hammer was moved by my rantings to write a nice, informative letter. She has her own public relations business in Pittsburgh — Nancy Hammer Associates. Previously she had worked in PR for Chatham College. She has two children, John, a 28-year-old engineer and a graduate of Northwestern and Beth, 26, who is getting a graduate degree in exercise physiology at the University of Pittsburgh. Beth is married to Ed Ruh who works for the Mellon Bank in Pittsburgh. John is currently in Asia and Nancy hopes to join him in India this winter. In September Nancy talked to Mary Rich Ohlweiler who had just taken a marketing position with a new, life-care retirement community in Jacksonville, FL.

Christmas brought a letter from Mary Marton Davenport in Ohio, summing up her busy year. She is active in scouting, singing with choral groups and in camping. She considers herself lucky to have escaped the tornadoes which hit near her home in May.

To all those deaf ears out there — give a listen this time and send me a line.

News has been scarce during 1985, so what follows is the entire year's collection, some of which may by now be a bit dated.

Mac Beatty's and Greta's son Ross was married in November to Mary Beth Palmer in Portland, Ore., where Mac and his family reside and where he has built a thriving travel agency.

Dana Bullen continues as Executive Director of The World Press Freedom Committee, headquartered in Washington, D.C. Mal Gambill has become president and chief operating officer of Harsco Corporation, based near Harrisburg, Pa. Jerry Karst finds life congenial, residing within commuting distance of the Atlantic Ocean and the beach at Ponte Verde from his home, located between St. Augustine and Jacksonville, Fla. He notes that the Tournament Players Championship Golf Tournament is played each year at the nearby Sawgrass course, which suggests he should contact Larry Kurzman, who since 1982 has been president of Golf and Tennis Specialty Centers, with three stores in Atlanta, Georgia and two in Houston, Texas.

After selling his discount brokerage business to Fidelity Brokerage Services and remaining with the latter for eighteen months, Larry Kelly formed Houston-based Texas First Brokerage Services, which recently purchased Texas discounteer Anderson, Tallman & King. Larry's company also operates Texas Clearing Corp., which specializes in bank clearing, and a full-service brokerage operation under the name of The Sage Group.

Dave Kopko and Anne Cottrell Cuff were married in September. They and five children, two children-in-law, and two grandchildren live in or near Chatham, N.J., where Dave heads David Kopko & Associates, Executive Search Consultants. After having masterminded our 35th Reunion, Jim Messing took on the job of class Agent with gusto. I am confident you will reward his dedication and energy with generosity to Andover. Meanwhile, should you have an interest in Andover's Planned Giving Program, I would be delighted to furnish details.

Carl Shaifer has been elected chairman of Winchell Co. of Philadelphia, a printing and communications company. Classmates Art Doran and Dee Penwell joined me at Si Spengler's fourth (and final) Yale Class of 1953 pre H-Y game party in Armonk, N.Y. Si and Sandy are moving to Bronxville, N.Y., in February. Don Sutherland has been elected President of the Board of Directors of the Foundation for the Joffrey Ballet. Don is also, among other things, president of Sans Pour Corporation; the general partner of Quincy Partners, headquartered in New York City; and president of the boards of directors of Will & Baumer, Inc.; Publix Shirt Corporation and Ohio Locomotive Crane Co., and a director of Quincy Spring Group, Inc., all being Quincy Partners investments. He is also a director of Mark Controls Corporation and Profit Systems, Inc. and a Trustee of the Cancer Research Institute. Bill Waskowitz continues to flourish in New Britain, Conn., where he has been appointed chief of Orthopaedic Surgery at New Britain General Hospital and elected president of The Yale Club of Greater New Britain.

Late News: Paul Cleveland has been appointed Ambassador of New Zealand.

I am sorry to have to report that Sandy Bowers died of cancer on 12 October 1985. At the time of his death he resided in Earlsyville, VA, where he was owner of Hickory Ridge Farm, a driving and training center. Sandy was also president of Stewart Capital Corp., a New York-based venture capital firm. He is survived by his widow, Philippa, four children and two grandchildren. I know I speak for the whole class in extending sympathy to his widow and family.

Janie Gaffill Towner writes of a trip she recently took to the Soviet Union: "This past October I experienced 'Soviet Autumn' with Smith College through its travel program. It was an experience never to be forgotten. Our accommodations were the best to be had, food, ditto. But the wonders of all were the freedoms we had to explore history (the trade routes in Central Asia) and the present day situations. An inspiring outing in so many ways."

PHILLIPS

E. Osborne Ayscue, Jr.
P.O. Box 31247
Charlotte, NC 28231

Sorry about our omission from the September Bulletin. Apparently the deadline notice disappeared down the black hole the United States Post Office maintains for important mail.

Bea Weicker, whose note requesting information about her father was included in the September Bulletin, has responded to those of you who wrote to her with information as follows: "My most sincere thanks to the thoughtful members of the Class of '51 who responded to my note in the last Bulletin regarding information about my late father, Fred Weicker. Your generosity has been very moving and is much appreciated. Bea Welch Weicker, Yale School of Organization & Management, Box 1A, New Haven, CT 06520." I have sent Bea an invitation to be our guest at our 35th reunion.

Carolina Ann Manuele and Winthrop Ross Adkins were married on 26 October in Greenwich. Their address is 79 Fairfield Rd., Greenwich, CT 06830. No 35th reunion would be complete without at least one new bride! Dan Miller's daughter graduated from Franklin & Marshall in May; his son, Dan, PA '83, is an undergraduate at the Wharton School. Dan has been keeping busy building a new home, practicing law and chairing the board of a local hospital.

Tony Quainton reports that he has completed his first year in Kuwait, where he is the US Ambassador. Bombings, assassination attempts and the nearby Iran-Iraq war ensure that he never has a dull day. After 2½ years in Nicaragua, he reports that the Middle East is a change, although at times he seems to have gotten out of the frying pan and into the fire. Tony expects to be at our reunion. (I am not sure that he has ever missed one. It is probably the quietest time he spends.)

David Richards has just finished a 3-year tour as Executive Assistant Attorney General of Texas, supervising the state's litigation and 220 or so lawyers. He was planning to return to private practice towards the end of the year. Bill Lee is looking forward to the next reunion and working on Al Moe and Tony du Pont to get them to come with him. Billy has been designing a 360-room Sheraton Hotel for his architectural firm. Jerry Lasley, who landed in a second career via a golden parachute when his employer was subjected to a successful takeover, has his own business consulting firm in East Norwalk. He professes to be having a ball.

Packie Maxwell spent four weeks in France and England in the early summer, and in the late summer, took his first look at Alaska, where his son is living. He plans to attend our 35th after a 25-year absence. Mark Candee and his wife, Midge, have established a non-profit corporation, On A High Mountain Ministries. He has a radio program that has been broadcast over Voice of Hope Radio into Israel and the Middle East for three years. He spent the summer in New England and co-hosted a tour of Israel in the early fall.

A nostalgic note from Joan Walsh about the death of Alice Hirst on 2 June. Alice retired in 1978 after many years as supervisor of nursing at Isham Infirmary. Joan and Alice always considered us as "their class." (You may remember that they were our guests at our 30th.) Alice, who did not want anyone to know that she was ill, was stricken with cancer in September 1984 and underwent major surgery in December. She did fairly well until May and died peacefully in June.

I wrapped up a year as President of the North Carolina Bar Association in June just in time to go to work helping put together a merger that resulted, as of 1 January, in a statewide law firm, the second largest in North Carolina, Smith Helms, Mullis & Moore.

Jim Pates, reunion chairman, is rolling after a minor setback when Hurricane Gloria blew out Andover Leaders Weekend.

If Packie Maxwell can get to our reunion from Hawaii and Tony Quainton from Kuwait, the rest of you ought to be there too! We will look forward to seeing you, and Nat Reed and Tony Thompson will look forward to receiving your reunion year pledge card in the interim. We ought to be able to produce out of our class at least one Non Sibi Associate ($1000) for each of the thirty-five years we've been out. Dig it out and mail it today.

I am sorry to have to report the death of Selden W. (Mike) Clark who died in January 1985 in San Francisco. He leaves a wife Carol Clark, and two sons. The class extends its sympathy to his widow.

Penny Whittall Hoadley lives in Gillette, N.J. and she has been a star of the local theatre for many years. Polly Paradise Russell lives in Wayland, Mass. and has been deep into local transportation issues. I also heard that Rosamond Reifsnnyder Peck now lives in Wayland, Pa., and gardens par excellence; follows closely her oarswomen daughters, (Abbie was chosen for Olympic four with cox). Roz's mother died early last June. I send sympathy to you, Roz, from our class.

Dino Colburn Rice lives in W. Shrewsbury, Vt., and makes partial living by playing a great deal of small ensemble harpsichord music. She and David have a working farm in the beautiful rolling hills. Barbara Gibson Roth lives on Beacon St., Natick, Mass., and she, too, is a musician. She accompanies as well as teaches organ and piano. Susan Kimball Wheelock was married 15 June to Peter Charles Sugar at Susan's home, Todd Pond Road, Lincoln, Mass. Peter is Hungarian born; was educated at the University of London as an architect; is much travelled, multi-lingual, and a bridge player. Susan works at Temple, Barker & Sloane, a consultant firm in Lexington, Mass. as a researcher/secretary; sings with Boston Pro Musica; plays lots of mixed doubles; gardens and reads. We wish you a happy marriage, Susan.

In attendance at Susan's wedding were Lydia Eccles Page who lives in Washington, D.C. She volunteers for Hospice; plays the piano beautifully and uses this talent often by giving wonderful musicales at her home. She is also a Cordon Bleu cook and a noisy hellion on the tennis court (one person's opinion). Connie Hall Strohecker lives in Marblehead, Mass., and has been working for the Episcopal Diocese of Mass. The years have treated all of the above well. Lydia said all looked terrific, and Connie is truly beautiful (but she always was).

Back in Time magazine's 15 July '85 issue there was an article entitled "Treasures from the Jungle" in the Arts section. It had to do with the lost masterworks of the Mayan civilization. It mentioned Clemency Chase Coggins, who set out three years ago to organize the traveling exhibition. How impressed I was to read this. It was a lovely article, Zizi.

I hope to see many of you at our 35th reunion 13-15 June.

My last column identified Herb Farber as an "M.D. at Brandeis Univ." — WRONG! Herb Farber lives in Carversville, PA. Harris Faigel is the "M.D. at Brandeis." For 35 years, Hubert Fortmiller has had a sub-consciousness, but often confusing, identity problem in his association with the two other "HF '52ers, and he apologizes to Herb, or Harris, or both. Nevertheless, the secretarial gaff led to a kind note from Harris, and a copy of a most interesting article, "When the Learning Disabled Go to College," which Harris wrote for the Journal of American College Health. Harris effectively argues that because 10% of the nation's population has learning disabilities, colleges must identify and assist such students, rather than ignore them and let them pursue unsuccessful academic careers.

Dick Sagebiel writes from Tiburon, CA, that his three sons are now 23, 22, and 18, and that Dick is starting a year's sabbatical (he quotes the OED: "cease tilling and release debtors and slaves!"), during which he will play "a lot of tennis (watch out, Ralph Stuart" and pursue some research and travel. Speaking of Ralph, Dick's old tennis partner and opponent, he has just become a Trustee of The Fessenden School.

An item from Tom Jensen's cheerful, annual letter to friends and this scribe tells of Tom and wife Cinda's canoe trip to the wilderness of northern Minnesota: "Without a doubt, the most memorable part of the trip was the encounter with a 300 lb. black bear the first night." The intrepid campers drove off the foraging bear, but "the bear got the last laugh by returning stealthily during the night, climbing the tree by the food cache, and carrying off one backpack filled with food. Please note: we can tell this story with many more embellishments!" Tom's daughter, Melinda, is following Dad's lead, majoring in criminal justice at the University of Delaware; daughter Holly is a Vassar sophomore.

Bill Scott, executive VP of Western Pacific Industries on Park Ave., and his son David paid me a cheerful visit as they traveled to Andover and other N.E. schools this fall.

Names from the past. Names seldom heard from. Names in the news. Names from exotic places. They're all here for your edification.

"My apologies to Joe Mesics," writes Ed Lanouette on the flap of an alumni contribution envelope. "The check was not in the mail, after all! I'd beat my bookkeeper, but she ran off to Maine with my grandson two days ago. I'll be joining them in a couple of weeks — to speak sharply to her and to teach my grandson, John Paul (alias Jack Juando) to fly kites and scramble over rocks. He'll be two in August."

A practical guide for managing the complex patient problems that typically accompany chronic illness has been edited by a number of people including Lauro S. Halstead, M.D. The book, Medical Rehabilitation contains several articles by Dr. Halstead and is published by Raven Press. Dr. Halstead also participated on ABC TV's Nightline show which aired on 12 April on a segment which dealt with post-polio syndrome. According to members of the team that researched the late effects of polio for the program, Dr. Halstead is "clearly the leading authority in this country" on that subject.

"We have now been in Thailand for 15 years," writes Hank Holmes. "My wife, Suchada, and I are partners in a tiny company which does cross-cultural training for multi-nationals here, plus occasional consulting jobs for Shell or Union Oil. Our 16-year-old daughter is at an English boarding school. Son Stacy (named after Stacy II H '56 and Stacy I H '31) is 8, and I'm grooming him to be inside left at Harvard if he starts liking math a little."

Joe Mesics has written me a short note on our classmate, Charlie Cushman: "He is single, alive and well in Japan, teaching English conversation courses at several universities in Tokyo."

Speaking several dialects of Chinese and other Oriental languages at Harvard, is Bill Joseph's son Andrew now in his freshman year. . . . I got a trans-atlantic call the other day from Sandy Speer who was looking for information on Flor Kist. It seems that Sandy is involved in real estate development concentrating on sales and rentals of villas for tourists and industry. He's based in Amsterdam. (Loyal readers of this column already know that Ambassador Kist is currently posted in The Hague.) Sandy has a son at Tufts and a daughter in Pittsburgh who's in a punk band. Just above these notes which I wrote down during our conversation, is the name Al Korschun. I pointed out that Al was also in the similar field of real estate in Florida. . . . A usually reliable source tells me that Eric Aiken is writing book reviews and living on Staten Island. . . . A card arrived the other day from David Craton, the English advertising and marketing executive. "No present plans to be in the U.S. before the next reunion," he writes. . . . Bumped into David Patterson in my Madison Avenue neighborhood and all seemed to be well with him.

The Boston Globe in its October 2nd obituary pages reported the very sad news of the death of George Southwick. He was 50 years old, a partner since 1975 in the Boston accounting firm of Arthur Young & Company. His death was attributed amyotrophic lateral sclerosis — Lou Gerhig's disease. He was an overseer of the Boys Club of Boston, and a trustee and treasurer of Beverly Hospital where he died. He was also a member of the Wenham Planning Board and a member of the Myopia Hunt Club. A graduate of Dartmouth and the Amos Tuck School, he received the Dartmouth Alumni's highest honor, the Dartmouth Alumni Award. We grieve at the loss of our classmate, and send our deepest condolences to his wife, Mary (Mimi); two sons, David and George Southwick; a daughter, Martha Southwick; a stepson, Devereux; a stepdaughter, Sara Barker; and a brother, Richard Southwick.

This column will be very short as I have had no news from any of you since the last Bulletin. Please note above, my new address where I am always anxious to receive news of any of your travels, projects, lifestyles, etc.

I visited PA for Parents' Weekend last fall and attended all of my son Daniel's classes. Dan is an Upper and loves it! His dorm is immediately adjacent to the Abbot campus, and he has many friends in Abbey. He plays football and visits friends along the maple walk. . . . His experiences in 1985-86 are basically no different than ours were from 1949 to 1953 (excepting co-education, of course) and he shall have the same joys and benefits of keeping in contact with old classmates world-wide that we now experience. All of this is vastly helped and improved by printing news of all of you in this column — so, please let's hear from more of you.

I spent a lovely night with Julie Gaines Phalen while East, and had lunch the first day of school with Connie Weldon LeMaitre whose daughter Ellen, a PA senior, has become a friend of Dan's. Small world!

Please help me lengthen this with more news.

The Christmas mail bag has given me news of a few more classmates. Chris Maynard teaches fifth grade in Andover, and reports that the town is changing constantly, becoming more and more a suburb of Boston. She particularly enjoys her summers in Wolfeboro, NH, where she works part time in a gift shop. Incidentally, my spies (a girl I coached here in softball) tells me Miss Maynard is a super teacher. Joan Lamprey Peterson writes from Calif. that she has received her official certification as a travel agent, and works part time for a local agency. She is also first vice president of the San Diego Museum of Man, director of the annual Indian Fair, for the second time, and on the board of the American Assoc. of University Women. Her two boys are now away from home, Roger in Phoenix taking an intensive course for certification as a diesel mechanic, and Richard as a freshman at UCLA. Joan says it is great to be back in the work force after 20 years of parenting.

Dee Fleming King (Seabrook, TX) writes that she is now a mother-in-law, her daughter Carolyn having married Bob Webbon in Sept. '85 ("29 years to the date of my having met her father"). Their daughter Lyz and son Brad are at Texas A&M, while their eldest son, J.C., is "our wanderer." Dee has done a lot of dog training and duck hunting, and recently entered her first competitive skeet shoot, winning the Women's Division with a perfect score. I'm impressed! When she's not involved in her myriad outdoor activities, she works with Jack in his consulting and recruiting business — and especially loves the traveling. From the other side of the Atlantic, Diane Sorota O'Dwyer sent Andover a good update of her past couple of years. She wrote that she had moved from the west coast of Norway to North London (Hampstead) in the fall of 1983. She added: "In spite of a predilection for English literature and a total of nearly six years as an expatriate, a reasonable level of cultural adjustment has yet to take place . . . an adjustment is also needed to the weather since Hawaii was our former U.S. home." Diane and Kyran have two sons, Brendan who lives in Hawaii, and Kyran who is in school in Ohio.

For those of you who remember Miss Agnete Wulff (an exchange teacher of English from England), her Christmas card reports enjoying retirement, "with much music and even dancing (!) as well as more serious occupations such as being on three school governing boards."

Finally, Andover sent me a copy of the North Bridgton (Me.) Grapevine which reported that Mary Minard was "attending a two week session of indoctrination of Russian language and culture being held at Phillips Andover Academy where she is a history teacher, as was her father before her." From the picture on page 9 of the fall Bulletin we can gather that she was definitely enjoying the subsequent trip to Russia! How about a highlight report for the next class notes, Mary?

And to all of you Abbot '55ers out there — how about some NEWS?

1985 was a good year for me with regard to Abbot friends. In October Tim and I attended a conference in California, and I took the opportunity to visit Barbara Hurd Toschi and her husband, Gene, at their farm, which is one of the most beautiful wine-producing areas of the state. I had a gorgeous time sampling Chardonnays at nearby vineyards in addition to catching up with Barbara and Gene. In mid-December I was in Washington, DC on a research trip and spent time with Mardie Roth Brown, whose Victorian row-house with cast-iron staircase I covet! Mardie continues with her work in paper conversation at the Library of Congress and gave me a fascinating tour of the splendidly equipped lab. She was also crucial in my not getting lost permanently somewhere in our national library!

Judy Warren Pitman, helped by Peggy Rothwell Klein and Gracie Callahan Hagstrom, is full of plans for our reunion the weekend of 13-15 June. Knowing the super job Judy and her committees did with past reunion festivities, I hope lots of us turn out! See you all in June.

This last Christmas found the Johnson family spread over the world with our eldest visiting mainland China with his mother during his semester break at the University of Hong Kong. Middle son, Tom, was skiing in Colorado with his friends, while number three son, Doug, went hunting with yours truly on the lowly Texas coast. And now it is tax time again. Great timing, this Holiday Season.

Had a nice but short visit with Ralph Weaver and Carol last weekend at an annual Christmas tree burning party which started out 22 years ago as an after Christmas weiner roast for families, but has carried over to the parents, now that most of our children are in college and are doing other things.

I am sorry to report to you that we have lost another classmate, Roscoe Browne, who died toward the end of last year in Australia, where he had been living for quite some time. He is survived by two brothers, Robert M. '66 and Alexander '60. The class extends its sincere sympathy to them in their loss. News is sparse from our classmates, but I did receive a wonderful card from Frankie Young Tang with a photo of her, Oscar and three of their offspring in a rice paddy in China. Inside was a picture of their oldest daughter, Tracy, looking very professional at her desk at Book of the Month Club in NYC. Daughter #2, Dana, is a junior at the University of Colorado, Boulder, majoring in Chinese and Fine Arts. Kevin is a freshman at Duke and Kristen is in the 10th grade. Oscar is still with his investment management firm (Reich & Tang, Inc.) and Frankie says she has just retired from ten years of teaching Chinese cooking but still does some catering.

Frankie reported seeing Cecile Erickson MacTaggart several times over the years skiing at Vail, at Metropolitan Museum of Art functions in New York, or at Andover. She also said Kathy Earthrowl had dinner with the Tangs when she was in NYC recently. Kathy is about to be married and has a psychotherapy center in Houston.

A nice note from Paula Slifer Zandstra informs us that she has worked as a secretary at St. Christopher's Episcopal Church in St. Paul, Minn. for the past nine years. Her oldest son, Mike, will graduate in May from the Univ. of Wisconsin with a degree in engineering. Tim is a sophomore there and the youngest, Julie, is in the 11th grade.

A note from Wiggs Carter Stanier describes building a new home in Concord, Mass. while trying to decide what her next career move will be. Scott graduated from Yale in June and Kim is a junior at Colgate planning to spend her spring semester in Madrid. Wiggs says she sees Glee Wooldredge Wieland regularly and Penny Holbrook Reid "not nearly enough."

Mimi Ganem Reeder's news requires a lot of elaboration on her part. Briefly, she has moved to Cambridge and sounds very happy to be in the city after all her years in the suburbs. She has gotten her MBA and is about to look for a job.

And finally, Dinah Hallowell Barlow sent a Christmas card picturing her two very handsome sons, Ethan and Ben, with a message announcing that Boston "is totally my cup of tea." She's a consultant for publicity and marketing to architectural firms and it sounds as if it's a lucrative business.

Not much happening in Indianapolis right now. Son Peter and I spent Christmas in Vermont with my sister, Julie Gaines Phalen '53, and her husband, Cliff, and two of their three daughters.

Best wishes to you all for a great spring and summer. Keep the news coming.

Ed Frost writes that he has moved to Eliot, Maine, where he is working in film and video productions and distribution once again. I recently heard from Marshall Cloyd who informed me that Paul Kelly has moved from Houston to London. Address: Groveneur Square, London W. 1X, 9LA, England. Marshall has been in touch with Bob Zeff who was in Houston to remove a heart which he then transplanted into a six-year-old patient back in Des Moines three hours later. Marshall sees Mac Rotan on occasion in Houston. Mac has three children and serves on the board of trustees of Episcopal High School.

In November 1985 The Wall St. Journal ran a profile on Bill Hamilton who is now living in New York and has just finished a novel, The Charlatan (Simon & Schuster). Bill's comic observations on life can be heard occasionally on "Morning Edition," PBS's morning news program.

Fund raising for Andover nets news and money. Many thanks to Carol, Jane, Vicky and Jane for sending me their notes. This column is like a trivia game. If you are a faithful reader, you'll know many answers.

Guess who was off to Bermuda, Wisconsin, Vermont, and twice to the Caribbean? Vicki Kohler. Who met Vicki skiing at Aspen? Not Ingrid Stahlbrand Kassler, but her husband, Tom. Ingrid and Tom are going to New Zealand. Son Carl attends Colorado Rocky Mt. School.

Who is creative director for Esquire? Pixie Grant Flood. She works with new ventures in books and video cassettes. Daughter Deborah is at Oberlin and Karen is at the Dalton School.

Which classmate has retired from coaching lacrosse and is getting her exercise chasing goats in Chestertown, MD? Nancy Dick. Who traded in a Canadian accent for a southern one? Nancy Stevenson Jackson. She has lived 18 years in Kentucky. Kathy recently graduated from Hollins; Bobby is at Hampton-Sydney, and Stephen is at Woodberry-Forest in Orange, VA. Who is still running AT&T Bell Labs? Anne Moulton Anderson manages technical employment. Try to recall who has four sons and travels. Nancy Russell Curran was recently in Spain and Portugal.

Try this: who teaches speech therapy and has children who went to Andover? Sandra Castle Hull. Daughter Cathy is in NYC as a paralegal and son Alfred is at Swathmore. Who has a daughter at PA now? Liz Artz Beim. Jane Christie Smith saw her at Parents' Weekend. Here's a toughie. Who is renovating a house on Long Island but is wintering in Sarasota, FL? Susan Tidd Augenthaler and Warren. They have a child at Gettysburg College and one in high school.

Another classmate seeking to avoid mid-life stress is Betsy Gardner Riley. She and Gil are sharing some NH land with resident beavers. Betsy organized a mini-reunion with Susie T.A., Jane C.S., Carol Greene Donnelly, Wynnie Pafford Delmhorst, and Phebe Sherman Elliott. They are all fine, but I am sorry to report the unexpected death of Carol's mother. Our sympathy to you, Carol.

Which one of us has bought a condo on the Boston waterfront, where her husband is able to walk to work? They have a first-grader at the Advent School and go back to Plymouth on weekends. Now you know. It's June Hamilton Withington. Many classmates have children in Boston. Claudia Sandburg Wyllie has a son at Northeastern (and a daughter at Plymouth State in NH). Marisa, daughter of Jean Reynolds Belmonte, is at Northeastern and her second, Monica, is headed for Tufts. My Andy is also at Tufts and Rob is hoping for MIT. Anne Hitchcock Shattuck has a daughter at Simmons.

Some of us have children back in the nest. Nora Colby Salaway and Phebe S.E. are buying extra groceries. Phebe's Lisa is at St. Lawrence. Two of us are construction supervisors for our homes. Rica Lindbeck Hammerstrom in Missouri and Carolyn Phillips Brown in Virginia. Carolyn has a son John at UVA and a daughter Katy at William & Mary. House projects will keep Jackie Locke Neaville from a trip East this winter. We had hoped to see her and Alan in Alexandria. They have grandchildren and a busy work and travel schedule.

How is your TQ (trivia quotient) so far? Who planned to work the phonathons but couldn't at the last minute? Cynthia Worcester Shanks. Who lives in Rio and has taken back her maiden name? Joanne Shanklin. Who works for the Uniform State Laws Commission and was attending a conference in Boston? Edie Olson Davies. Edie is the past chairman of the Conference of Commissioners. Wonder if you will be in Alexandria next week? When is Tiki Owsley Thomas going to call me when she comes to Georgetown to see Laura? Who works as a free-lance stylist for department stores in NYC? This one stumped me. Answer, Anne Nielsen Lye.

If you're tired of this game, perhaps some of you would like to send me a note with a comment to share about a good book, job, or issue? Love to all.

It was a busy fall for your class secretary. On the second anniversary of the great questionnaire of 1984, I came home to find a pale imitation beneath my door. It was not from PA, but from another of the (WASP, male, Ivy, Eastern) institutions which I (and not a few of you too, I might add) attended. Incredibly, of its fifteen pages, there were only two good questions: one asked about my "spouse or live-in-relationship" — such progressive thinking I would not have thought from such a place. (I would have thought better grammar, however, certainly FAP would not agree to share his worldly possessions with a "relationship".) The other asks how much, on a scale of 1 to 5, this august institution inspired in me "affection, pride, gratitude, obligation, nostalgia and belonging." Why such a limited list? Where is greed, success, lust, sadness? Most of the questions, sad to report, had to do with how much money I made, and how many people worked for my company. So prepare: inspired by that lack-luster, pale imitation of what a true questionnaire can be, who knows what might await us as we prepare for 1989.

But I must rush to chronicle our meanderings back and forth upon this earth, and to and fro across it. Jerry Bremer, is now US Ambassador to The Hague. Two things distinguish this: first, unlike many of his colleagues these days, he got there the hard way, he earned it. Second, he is in one of the two places whose name is prefaced by "The," the other is The Bronx, and he wouldn't want to be US Ambassador there. . . . John Dorman, no doubt helped by his family, has just achieved one of the ultimate successes — he has finished remodelling his home. From personal experience I can tell you that remodelling is easy, finishing is damned near impossible.

Ralph Kimball was recently appointed Director of Marketing for LaVigne Press, Inc., in Worcester, MA; he also does some marketing of his own each spring, with the rest of his family, for his commercial greenhouse. Dave Lodge, another recipient of aforementioned insipid questionnaire, continues as Vice President and Treasurer at Celanese. Across the country, Jerry Secundy was on the task force that forged ARCO's recent corporate reorganization that resulted in the divestiture of its eastern gas stations and refining operations.

Back here where the nation was founded and the Constitution writ some 200 years ago, John Smith, a Philadelphia lawyer in the tradition of Andrew Hamilton, further distinguishes himself by being an avid white water canoer, by having restored a magnificent house in nearby Villanova, and most importantly by having had the good sense to convince Susan to both marry him and inspire him to do all of the above. Geoff Martin writes that he is co-chair of the Riverside Church Sanctuary Program, and that the Program has taken in a refugee family from Guatemala, who left that country when their lives were threatened. Geoff and Susan have become "stump preachers" on the subject, speaking to many groups in the New York-Westchester area.

Willie Nordhaus continues to write for the Times from time to time, lately on the ongoing drama of oil prices, the relationship between we consumers, and the various producers, OPEC, non-OPEC, and the Second World. (Ha! In all this talk about the Third World, bet you never really thought about the Second World — well, there you have it, you came face to face with it first, right here).

As for me, I'm enjoying fatherhood immensely 18 years after first enjoying it. I recommend it to all — the more you hate the idea, the more you'll like the reality.

promotions, publicity and public glory. Another way of saying it: what's going on with each of us that won't reach the papers? What do we really think? What are our lives really like now, and how have we changed since age 18? This isn't the right forum for psychological studies, but it can solicit views and personal news. We should recognize that our views and personal news are of interest to the Class. Please write. About anything. We're an eclectic, curious, frequently private group of former PA students, and we're interested.

A letter indicating some of the above, and simultaneously reflecting one of the most upbeat perspectives on the Andover experience vocalized in some time, recently arrived from Bob Leadbitter. Spurred by "the quarterly guilt attack" brought on by the arrival of this Bulletin, Bob writes, "I often wonder about those 55% of us who are not lawyers, and/or M.D.s, diplomats, CEOs, etc. There must be some percentage who have not scaled the peaks — surely I'm not the only one. . . . How can so many of our peers feel so badly about the place? My God, it seems as though they all went on to places of prominence and permanence. What more did they want?"

Bob, who currently runs a printing company in Richmond, Va., and is a PA Alumni Rep., spent seven years as a fighter "jock" in the Air Force after graduating from Lawrence University, and then another 11 years with AT&T in various positions and locations including Saudi Arabia, before settling in Richmond. He writes, "But of far more interest to my classmates is that I, be it clearly in the minority, consider my four years at PA as the most rewarding, worthwhile and pleasant period of my life. The cynicism and nihilism so often expressed leaves me wondering if I wasn't caught up in it there. I remember it all as wonderful and cherish it. My bride and I spent a weekend in Andover last September and I felt completely at home after 25 years. Sherm Drake and I talked about my total inability to comprehend algebra, Tom Regan talked of playing on the floor of his apartment in Paul Revere with his babies — now out of college; Dickie Thiras recognized me instantly, hirsute face and 40 lbs. more; and breakfast with Josh was a luxury I shall always remember. . . . I'm thrilled I got my eyes opened and blood flowing through both heart and brain while there. And I intend to return whenever possible for another fix. . . . I'd love to know if others share that and don't write or attend Reunions. It would be reassuring to know that I'm not alone. If it's time that finis origine pendet then I'm looking forward to a great finis."

Jeremy Scott Wood, a senior associate with the Architects Collaborative in Boston and one of the architects principally involved in the planning and completion of Boston's Copley Place, has been involved with the Liberty Center in Pittsburgh, a mixed-use project including office tower, retail stores and hotel, and with a number of suburban office park projects in the Cleveland and Boston areas as well as southern Connecticut. Jeremy recalls the Reunion as a pleasurable event, marred only by the absence of so many old friends including Dick Bourne, Duncan Kennedy and Laird Smith. Duncan Kennedy, continues to make news. Among other articles, Duncan was the centerpiece of a long editorial page article entitled "Radicals in the Law Schools" in a January Wall Street Jour- nal. He is a Harvard Law School professor and a founding father of Critical Legal Studies, a movement "generally concerned with the relationship of legal scholarship and practice to the struggle to create a more humane, egalitarian and democratic society."

Larry Lawrence has been and is a peripatetic and successful businessman. A December '84 prospectus of Republic Health Corporation, of which Larry is a director, lists him as a managing general partner of Lawrence, WPG Partners, L. Ed Quattlebaum and Ruth were part of the PA faculty group who visited the Soviet Union for three weeks in July. He has an article on Harvard negotiation theorist Bill Ury '70 in the last Bulletin; for Edwin's full treatment on the Russian trip, request "USSR and EQ" dated 5 August 1985.

Seriously, write. About any or all aspect(s) of your life. We're all interested.

I'm enthused about my new school librarian job which continues to delight me, I am planning my first trip abroad, and I hope to build on the Cape this summer.

I received holiday greetings from three Boston-area classmates, and each urged a mini-Reunion. Sue Brennan said I should be nominated for the honor as Best Class Rep. What a kudo. Sarah Von Der Hyde Richards is anxious for a get-together and spoke of a summer tour of England. . . . she can be my travel agent. Kathy Stevens is pushing a full-blown 30th. She has a suggestion worth receiving comment on, please. "One idea would be to bring samples of creations that are visual. What you and I would bring is a bit of a question. . . . a smiling student?" She is overjoyed, as I am, at Wendy Bolton Rowland's enthusiasm as Chair of the 30th. This was reflected in her addendum to the plea for donations that Sally Barngrove McQuilkin sent. Kathy is aware that Wendy is an accomplished sculptress with visual creations galore. Cally Sherman Williams could also offer us a visual creation or two. She is a potter in Las Cruces, N.M. She writes that her business is doing very well. She does not use any Indian methods in her work, but admits to being influenced by Southwestern art. Her daughter Wendy is college hunting. Luisa, 14, is a soccer player and she says that everyone in the family swims competitively but her. This year they have a 17-year-old Japanese boy as an exchange student with them.

Another one of us who is oozing creativity is Brenda Walker Hirsch. She has been busy and appears to lead a romantic lifestyle. She lives in New York City with her two sons, 16 and 13. I was impressed with the list of magazines she has published articles and photographs in recently, such as: The Atlantic, and Travel Weekly and many more. The topics she has covered include Spain, Maderia and watching seals on some French islands off Newfoundland. Maybe

A recurring theme of our Class, expressed frequently in letters, in calls and in various ways at the reunion last June, is the desire for communication about the aspects of our lives — all of our lives — not involved in she should be my travel agent. Her postcard also included a mild advertisement. She does weddings, dinners, benefits and meetings as a freelance photographer. She can be reached at (212)737-8072 or 400 E. 85th St., NYC 10028. It doesn't sound as though Brenda could ever suffer from "behind-the-desk office flab" that Sally Barn-grove McQuilkin claims to know. She and her husband, George, and children, Geoff, 16, and Hilary, 9, backpacked for two weeks in the Sierras following Reunion. And then she returned to the office, missing the days of great fun and exercise. Carolyn Kent has embraced a new career and passed the bar after graduation in May from Duke. She had taught for almost twenty years after earning her Ph.D. in business and Economics from Lehigh. She is now an Associate with Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Doyle in Rochester, NY, and would love to hear from Abbot alums in the area.

Just before Thanksgiving, a lovely note came from Adrienne Davis Whitehead, who lives in Stamford, CT. She is Director of Investor Relations for Singer, particularly responsible for communications with the investment community. Her son Matthew is almost 20 and a sophomore at Yale, where he is on the Varsity basketball team. She claims he studies hard in his free time. Both Carolyn and Adrienne apologized for not writing sooner and couldn't believe so much time had passed since they last touched base with fellow 1960ers via Class Notes. This is a fulfilling and frustrating job. Everyone who does write is bound to comment on how pleased they are to see notes from our class. Then they go on to write in words such as Adrienne used, "... it seems as though my classmates are as re-miss as I have been in keeping in touch." I, and obviously others, hope one of your New Year resolutions was to communicate more, whether with loved ones, associates, friends ... or me. I have been sending out reminder postcards in divisional waves, so those who have not yet heard from me, will soon, and those who have heard and have not responded, shame on you, and no Heavenly Goo for dessert for you, or ... just what were those yummy orange sherbet bars covered with chocolate called?

O.k., you guys. By now you've received at least two letters from me. You've heard from Loring Stevens, you've heard from Dennis Cross, you may have heard from Dave Hannon. Or Tom Phelps. Or Dick Glenn. Or many, many others. The point is, we all want YOU. 13-15 June is fast approaching. If you haven't made your reservations yet, please hurry. We'll miss you!

Steve Hobson has a special invitation. As you may know, there is a 5K road race held during the Reunion Weekend. Steve would like to have a special reunion, on the course, with the Class of '61 cross country team. While I didn't run cross country, I look forward to running with Pete Huvelle, Ed Cox, Pete Winship, Jim Wessner, Al Watson, Jim Durston, and Bob Diemar. If this crew could get together for a friendly romp around the campus, and if others will join us, like Toby Hay, Jim Barnes, Bernie Boone, Pete Desvastich, Dick Durrance, John Engle, Tom Evslin, and who knows who else, we'll assure ourselves of one more highlight in an already highlight-filled weekend.

We're heading for record attendance for this, our Twenty-fifth Reunion. This is the best chance you will ever have to be with the greatest number of classmates ever assembled since graduation. Imagine what you can learn! Imagine how exciting it will be to share in the many stories, glories, heartaches, joys, and adventures your friends will tell about. You are part of a community, the community of the Class of 1961, Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts. You belong to this community, it is a part of you, and you are a part of it. Your presence will add to its strength, to its bond.

Clint Kendrick is coming from England, Andy Graham from Baltimore. John Marks will be there, along with Jim Payne, Tom Pollock, Jim Sprague, Bill Stewart, Tony Vanderwarker, and many others. Don't just read about them later, be there.

As Co-Chairman of Class Reunions, I have been at the last five reunions and even when it wasn't a reunion year for my class, I still had a good time.

Loring Lowe Stevens and I have been keeping New England Telephone in business and are getting excited about the plans for our weekend when we get together to celebrate 25 Years of Life Since the Sanctuary of the Hallowed Abbot Gates.

As of January, the following people are planning to attend: Cynthia Eaton Bing, Ann Tevepaugh Mitchell, Sybil Smith, Judy Draper Cottrell, Andrea Lynch Cole, Linda Lynch Smoak, Terry Naetzer, Jane Paffard Nichols, Molly Bidwell Radley, Molly Upton, Eileen Keegan Pakstis, Sandy Nicholson Booth, Loring Lowe Stevens, and me. Jeff Stopford was prompted to write as a result of Russ Donaldson's comments as relayed in the last issue of the Bulletin. Jeff and Janie have been married 18 years and are expecting their first child in March, a boy, to be named Justin. Although Jeff and I suspect that it is not likely a younger first child will be born to one of our classmates and a first wife who is a contemporary (the terms of Russ's "challenge"), I guess only time will tell. Before Jeff's letter I figured Russ had a pretty good shot, too. The letter also contained a wealth of fascinating information on Jeff and Janie, which he confesses to be somewhat abashed about given his intention not to balance it with any negative data. He practices law in Philadelphia representing personal injury victims and does a lot of writing and lecturing about "obscure topics of interest to trial lawyers." Since law school he has been up to 210 pounds and back to 140, run in four marathons, been president of a white water paddling club, headed up three community centers in low income areas of Philadelphia, and given up drinking and smoking. Along the way he has had 24 broken bones in eight separate accidents in the past seven years (sounds like he's just trying to keep his practice active). Janie has earned her nursing degree and a master's as a nurse clinician, organized and run the graduate nursing department at Widener University, become the first certified female fire fighter in Pennsylvania, been an officer in several fire companies, taught volunteer paramedics, run in the New York Marathon, and learned golf. She's now a 3.8 Ph.D. candidate in exercise physiology at Columbia and Temple. They have three large dogs, two horses, and one pet pig. Jeff says he talks to Steve Kaufman often, who is in San Francisco with Crocker Bank and is married to his own wife of almost 18 years whom Jeff says is one of the most energetic women he has ever known. She must be if she's impressed someone with a wife like Janie! He also visits annually with Dinny Adams, who he says describes himself as the "last Renaissance lawyer in NYC" and is ranked fourth nationally among squash players over 40.

Another great letter arrived from Harry Piper, who has left his law practice of 13 years and is now a student at the University of Minnesota working on a M.A. in creative writing. His son Bobby, 16, lives with him during the school year and with Harry's former wife in the summer. He's in touch with Andy Levy occasionally, who is practicing law in Los Angeles and is married to actress Tovah Feldshuh. Harry's letter was also prompted by something he read in this column, news of Gerry McCollum's recent death. He offers the following composition:

For Gerry
Gerry at my boarding school was blind.
His room was always dark.
My fingers felt along his wall, fumbled for the light.
There he'd be, at his desk, studying.

Twenty-five years later
I can still see him striding past me on the icy campus sidewalk, cheap dark glasses crooked on his face,
no cane, no guide dog,
no one walking with him,
humming to himself to bounce his voice off obstacles and push away the night with hands of song.

Our Pulitzer-prize-winning author, Tracy Kidder, has hit the best seller lists again. House focuses on the process of building a New England residence, from initial concepts to final cups of coffee in the new breakfast room. It is superbly written and entertaining. A pleasant telephone chat with Tracy was interrupted by a radio interview (his, not mine). He recently returned from an 18-cities-in-thirteen-days promotion tour to his wife and two children in Williamstown, Massachusetts. Tracy believes that House "... is better than anything I have ever done." The New York Times noted that he "is a master at the difficult art of describing complex objects and processes."

I heard from Jackie Sutton Cleverly in September that, yes, she and her family did move to a new home just outside Montreal. Betsy Cadbury took Jackie to lunch to welcome her, and Jackie reports that Betsy is fine and still involved with the opera. Jackie's new address is 24 Elmwood Ave., Senneville, QUE H9X1T7, and she welcomes visits from us all. Jackie Van Aubel Janssens wrote to say she's started a new company called SPONSART, which sets up cultural events for companies who want to promote themselves through the arts. The company was just incorporated at the end of November, and Jackie has enjoyed meeting the various artists and people from the arts. It sounds fascinating.

I also heard from Carrie Holcombe Damp at Christmastime, who looked better than ever in the picture of herself and third grade son, Zander, in tennis togs. Morley Marshall Knoll wrote while enjoying a quiet post Christmas day in Bend, Oregon, recuperating from a big deadline at work just before the holidays, and having hosted their traditional Christmas party and Jim's mother's short holiday visit.

Sue Burton, who visited her family in Massachusetts for Christmas and Thanksgiving filled me in on several classmates. Ann Harris Furgerson is enjoying her new apartment in Santa Monica and continues her enthusiastic support of the Saturday Seminar Series, an offshoot of Est. Iris Vardavoulis Osgood is enjoying her busy life in Newtown, Conn. and her teenage daughter, Alexis, and 9½-year-old Amanda who is an accomplished pianist. Sue Archer Vollmer experienced and 85° Christmas day in El Torro, Calif. where she is loving her new hobby, teaching Italian and Mexican cooking and making preliminary plans to publish cookbook number two. Sue spent the fall making vinegars, mustards, and seasoning packets for a local craft show. She also had a memorable four-day Bahamian cruise in late November — along with hurricane Kate.

I am still waiting for an answer to my question in last year's column about why everyone seems to be working harder, which is my excuse, once again, for failing to report in the last issue. My next column will be on hobbies. You know, that line you used to put at the bottom of your resume. Those of you who are still pursuing interesting hobbies, drop me a line. Seriously.

The Class Notes highlight of the '85 summer came as I lay on a small beach at Old Black Point, Connecticut, thinking how little I had in common with the ripe bodies falling from their suits around me, and wondering how, in contrast, I would feel if some old Andover friend like Al Wofsey were there. Literally five minutes later, who should appear on this beach but John Wiles! And for those who don't believe in the paranormal, how do you explain that when I knew John, Upper year in Paul Revere, in the next room to him was Al Wofsey!

Also noteworthy was the fact that John, a dermatologist in nearby New London, was the whitest, non-towel on the beach, which made the wife and I pause to think what were we doing out in that sun, closely followed by what was a man wearing sunscreen #19, doing on a beach? Then John re-introduced me to a visitor from New York, Joan Harney, Abbot '64, whom John had met at our last reunion. Wow!

The second light was a letter from my favorite Rhode Island correspondent, modestly informing me of the 27 April nuptials of Martha Ann Reed of Colorado Springs and Winthrop Dewolf Fulton, who will reside in Bristol, RI, after a wedding trip to Mexico. Dewey and Martha met in Colorado ten years ago — a "long-time flame." Congratulations!

Word of another new venture comes from Tulsa, Oklahoman Mark Blankenship, who with five other seemingly solid citizens has formed Davis Venture Partners to invest — on behalf of those with a million dollars — in the "burgeoning Southwest (petroleum or no petroleum, still a cauldron of opportunity)."

Hardy Phippen keeps showing up with ersatz families: you perhaps caught him interrupting Monday Night Football this year, aiming a pistol for Nintendo while the announcer intoned, "Will you be the first to play Duck Hunt?" Watching Hardy's TV commercial roles gives me a good fix on what stage of my life casting directors think I should be in.

Fred Fay wrote a charming note about moving his "harem" to a new house in York, PA, one block from where he had been. Reason: "I always thought the odds were closer to 50/50, but after our third daughter, Tami Lee, was born on 13 February 1985 I began to have my doubts." Chip Nevius is beginning to think of tennis scholarships to Andover for his children Erica and Toller. At the moment he has geographical diversity on his side, as well, although he notes that the "economic and political problems have certainly reduced the quality of life as compared to two years ago when we arrived in Manila."

Bruce Edwards spent the '84-'85 sabbatical year in London, while Peter Schandorff is headed to Peru as we speak to view Halley's Comet, to be followed by trips to China in June and Europe in August.

Freelance journalist Steve Lerner went to India on assignment last year and also wrote an article on the discovery of Herman Melville letters that I discovered in Connoisseur magazine. Steve is continuing to build a backwoods home in Sandgate, VT, which may or may not qualify him for my next column.

Jeff Garten continues to write thoughtful international essays to The New York Times, from his post managing Far Eastern investment banking activities for Shearson Lehman Brothers in Tokyo. Seth Mydans had to abandon Russia but landed a suddenly plum assignment, the Philippines, whence his stories appear with increasing regularity on the front page of The New York Times.

Sam Allis, meanwhile, has been transferred by the Time-Life News Service from Washington to Rome. He arrived just after the Marshalls passed through on a September vacation but in time for the disturbing spate of terrorist stories emanating from that corner of the world.

With all these crack journalists in our class, what is this person still doing writing your class notes, you ask. It's one of the last of his hobbies, he answers.

Anne Rahilly Crawford was right when she said this job should be done by an executive with a secretary (to whom, of course, this job would fall).

I was visiting my family in our annual summer trip to Rye Beach, New Hampshire last summer and I did not arrive back home in time to make the Bulletin deadline for the fall issue. Greetings again.

Pete Franchot is Mass. Congressman Ed Markey's staff director in Washington, DC, where his wife Anne Maher (AA '66) is an attorney at the Federal Trade Commission. They have two children, Abigail, 4, and Nick who is one. Matt Schneiderman is an internist with the Southern California Permanente Group in Panorama City (L.A.). Matt and wife Janet have three children. Ken Bottonari has been appointed vice president, management information systems, for Contel Service Corporation in Atlanta. Ken and wife Mary Jane have two daughters Katy, 8, and Elizabeth, 4.

Chris Gurry has returned to the links with great success becoming the North Andover Country Club Champion as well as winning the prestigious Crane Bowl with partner Tim Taylor of the Dedham C.C. Unfortunately, my drives are shorter than Chris' and my putts are longer.

The good news is that my wife, Gina, and I had our first child, Jessica, on December 12, and we are looking forward to seeing everyone back in Andover for the 20th reunion on 13-15 June. We have a great program planned and it should be a lot of fun.

I am happy to report that I am getting some replies to my postcards. I will be sending cards to the final third of the class in the near future. Martha Church Moore and her husband, Mark, were in Japan recently, where Mark was honored as one of ten outstanding young people by the Osaka Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Pam Sevey Lawrence has an MBA and works for two accounting firms in Springfield, MA. She has a daughter Heather 10, and is studying for the CPA exam. Her sister, Linda Sevey, who taught history of art to some of us (I had to look that up in our yearbook) also has a daughter and is living in Boston.

Judy Froeber Rizzo sent a Christmas card with a picture of family. Judy is a pretty as ever and has three children: Jennifer 11, David 10, and Katie 6. Her husband, Dan, is a lawyer and Judy volunteers in the schools in special education. They are very content with life in a small town (Dunn, NC, right on 195) and would love visits from classmates.

Melinda Miller Patterson keeps busy with her boys, Luke, 1, and Timothy, 3. She writes, "I love being a full-time mom; find it far more fulfilling than past career jobs." She and her husband, John, still have wanderlust and travel with the boys whenever they can. From California comes news of Deborah Little Paris. Debbie is presently looking for a new job and has two daughters, Becky, 13, and Elizabeth, 10. She has been active in the art field since receiving her A.B. in art from Berkeley. Another Christmas photo came from Betty Barker Conkling. Betty still cooks in a restaurant part-time and has two children: Jennifer, 6, and Daniel, 1. Her sisters Janet and Diane (also Abbot students) spent the holidays with her. She may make it to reunion from Montana! Pinky Rock Noll writes that she has been married to her PA sweetie, Jon, for 15 years. They have three children: Lindsey, 10, Charlene, 5, and Daniel, 2. Pinky works full-time in Jon's law office and they both do triathlons. At the Pepsi Triathlon last June, Pinky swam 1.5 miles, biked 45 miles, and ran 10 miles without stopping. Whew! Her new address is 1912 Oak Creek Rd., Springfield, IL 62704.

Mary Livingston was promoted to associate professor at Louisiana Technical university. Laurel Hinckley Kersteen lives in Cape Elizabeth, ME with her husband Glenn and two daughters, aged 7 and 9. Glen has a CPA firm in Portland. Laurie is a volunteer with the Maine Audubon Society in their "Winter Walks" program. She and her family summer on Chepeague Island in Casco Bay.

I attended a Christmas carol service at Cochran Chapel with my sister (Kathy Weis Dietz) this past holiday season where I saw Mlle. Baratte. I told her about Bill's and my trip to France last fall. While there, we spent several days with Peigi Donaghy Huseby and her family in a Paris suburb. Peigi and Tom have two sons, Colin, 6, and Devon, 3, and two newly adopted children, Fernando, 12, and Monica, 15. We had such a good time laughing about Abbot escapades and catching up on each other's lives. Peigi is taking several courses at the Sorbonne and is probably fluent by now.

Despite being on a leave of absence from my counseling job, I am busy every minute and enjoying myself immensely. I hope to see many of you at reunion. Here are a few statistics which you may find interesting. There are 78 students in our class and an additional four who didn't stay through senior year. Since our 15th reunion, I've either seen or heard from 32 of you. I have addresses for all but six classmates, though I'm sure some of them are out of date and therefore useless. For those of you who can't make it to reunion and have not sent in your news for the last five years, get with it! We want to hear about each and every one of you!

Hi, it's me again. Just wanted all you reluctant letter-writers to know that I intended to be here every issue, with or without your help. Perhaps all that talk last installment about the Andover computer scared you off. Keep in mind that was the PA main-frame I was referring to, not the IRS Northeastern Data File down the road. Your dirty little secrets are safe with me.

Having said that, I'm embarrassed to admit that the one letter I did get got lost when I packed up and moved to my new condo (I'm also embarrassed to admit that I now live in a condo, but that's another matter entirely). The missive came from Charlie Collier, who wrote to me from his current position as Director of Planned Giving at Princeton University. Charlie was good enough to pass along information on a handful of other classmates, and if memory serves me — perhaps not well at all — these included Dick Trafton, who is an attorney in Auburn, ME, and "heavily into windsurfing" (he must own a great wet suit or travel south a lot); Ray Bird, who has left Rye Country Day School for a teaching position at the Spence School in New York City; and Tony Grafton, who is a classics professor at Princeton and the father of two children. My apologies to anyone I've libeled by act of commission or omission. I've already promised my own kid I'll never move again.

I also had a nice phone call from Chris Apitz. Chris lives in Cambridge and is working in Boston as an account manager for the Acacia Group, a multi-service financial planning/insurance/brokerage firm based in Washington, DC. His wife, Mary, is a technical editor at Digital and has two children — Jonathan, 22, and Sarah, 18 — whom Chris has helped steer into young adulthood. "We got married in the old Log Cabin out at Andover," reports Chris, "and I highly recommend it to other alumni. Rent is only $25 an hour." So, I hear, is tuition these days.

He's going to hate me for mentioning this, but I picked up the Boston Globe the other day and read an impassioned letter from Ned Atkinson about why he will never again go to Fenway Park to see the Red Sox. Ned does not have very friendly feelings toward Alma Mater, either, and has cultivated a posture of anonymity rare even for our class. Nevertheless, he and I see one another occasionally — opening day at Fenway being our one truly regular date — and at the risk of incurring his everlasting wrath, I can report that he is heavily into local real estate, owns a couple of hugely successful women's clothing stores (Amalia) with his lovely wife, Brenda Koskinen, and is the proud father of Johanna and Benjamin. In his Globe letter, Ned referred to the recent firing of black, Sox coach Tommy Harper thusly: "This mean-spirited, shameful act makes it impossible for any reasonable person to turn away from the charges of racism in the Red Sox organization, because the organization encourages racism and punishes those who decry it." Couldn't have said it better myself. To anyone who knows Ned's affections for this franchise, however, the words ring as sharp and painful as Archbishop Law breaking with the Vatican over barring women from the priesthood.

Incidentally, if you're after Ned on official PA business: Don't call him, he'll call you.

Ned has been my principal link as well to Jeff Melamed and Norman Cross. At last sighting Jeff had moved his radiology practice to Massachusetts' North Shore, and Norm was happily married and living in or near New Haven. If conscience doesn't forbid it, I hope to see either of them — or any of you — at Opening Day, and if baseball isn't your thing, I'm also open to suggestions.

Hi Folks!

Just before Christmas I vacationed in San Francisco and had the good fortune to find several classmates at home. Jim Nadel, who helped launch a pilot program in jazz at Stanford, is lecturing in music there while playing sax professionally. He has been in touch with Mark Allen, who is married and has started a video production company. Jim also noted that Andre Spears is the father of twins and living in New York (you already read that here; it's tough to beat an old news hound).

I dropped by Dick Spalding's tennis club to chat and found him doing well. (Speaking of tennis, the Devereux family was named tennis family of the year by the Florida Tennis Association, "an unexpected recognition of the fast-getting-distant past for most of us," Rick Devereux writes.) Dick, in contrast, is not playing as much tennis as he used to because of a bad back. Ah, the frailties of our gently aging bodies. Dick is doing legal work for high-tech start-ups in Silicon Valley, where he says he bumps into Frank Currie, who is making a name for himself there. Frank, I tried to reach you but had no success. Dick also reports that Brad Barber and Baxter Lanis are doing fine.

Willie Ivey was on his way to Tahoe with his family, so I didn't get to see him. But I did talk to Willie, who has been selling computers for a number of years now. He's in fine spirits as he ponders setting up his own start-up. Also on the West Coast, Neal Rendleman, who is practicing medicine in a shelter for the homeless in Portland, Oregon, says Rex Armstrong is president of the local American Civil Liberties Union branch. Rex married Leslie Roberts on a day he was front page news for defending free speech. Al Garten also is "making a name for himself as a dogged advocate," Neal writes.

In news from New York, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has appointed Andy Spindler vice president for bank analysis and banking studies. He had been at Continental Illinois since 1975 and had helped change the bank's corporate strategy after its financial crisis.

In more exotic climes, Jim Lynch says he is continuing his management and policy consulting in Central America, but wonders if there isn't a better and safer way to earn a living. He says anyone interested in forming a "veterans of the Third World support group" should contact him.

Here in Washington, George Billings, a communications consultant, set up a lunch attended by, John Buchanan, a lawyer; Dave Fleming, now an administrator at a transcendental meditation school in D.C. after stints in England and the Philippines; Scooter Libby, also a lawyer; Henry Hart, yet another lawyer; and me (I recently was promoted to news editor of Business Week's spanking new Washington bureau).

We'll be joined soon by LCDR Rusty Pickett and Dan Koch. Rusty penned his once-a-decade letter to PA to say that he has been executive officer of a nuclear sub based in San Diego for 2.5 years but will move to D.C. with his wife, Kathryn, daughter Kate, 9, and son Joshua, 4. Rusty had dinner with Tom Kidde and his wife, who are doing well in Pasadena. Rusty says Dave Johanson got married recently, but he provided no further details.

Dan and his wife, Leah Brasch, have ended a fascinating year in Korea and will be returning to D.C. in the spring. Dan might go back to the Federal Trade Commission or take a fellowship with the Council on Foreign Relations, which recently inducted Scooter as a member.

The way things are going, if you want to see classmates, you better hit Washington. If you can't do that, at least keep the mail coming.

The holiday mail gave my mailbox a boost — Julie Crane wrote that she is working as an accountant/auditor with Peat, Marwick and Mitchell in Hartford. She got in touch with Jackie Mathiot Collaso, who is teaching Spanish and French at a private school in Miami, Florida. This phone reunion was made possible through the directory that Nancy Roberts Godfrey put together for our 15th reunion. Nancy, meanwhile, gave birth to a boy. She and her husband, Michael, named him Brenton MacAllister Godfrey; from the pictures he's a cute little child. Speaking of families, Daisy Schnepel married her beloved Paul in September, I have temporarily misplaced the announcement but I wanted to make sure everyone knew. Specifics in next issue. Florence Newcomb Verrill writes, from around the corner — she lives in the Village three blocks from me — that she is the fashion coordinator for a New York buying office; a career direction she has been moving in for several years. She says that her job is doing all of her favorite things. Shop till you drop, Florence! — and get paid for it — what a deal.

It was wonderful hearing from Hollis Hebbel who lives in Alexandria, VA, and works in Washington as an Indo-China specialist. Remember, Hollis was one of the first to take Chinese at PA from Abbot. Hollis married a second time, in April 1983 to Juan Jose Perez and recently gave birth to a son, Jonathan Hebbel Perez in May 1985. Jonathan started out at 2 lbs and 9 oz. — but now is a strapping 13½ lbs. Quel fighter! She would like to see anyone who is coming through Washington. Hollis also wrote regarding Barbara Ainslie Sittembini who lives in Sicily with her husband and two children. Kathy Nelson writes from Fayetteville, NY — (where is that?) that she is a lawyer, working for a federal judge in nearby Syracuse, NY. (so that's where Fayetteville is?) The work is fascinating but the hours are ridiculous. Kathy, that's true of all the fascinating things in life . . . Anyway, Kathy also has fun hours. Spring skiing, scuba diving and sailing.

That's it for the written news — I've seen Paula Atwood who looks fabulous and sleek. Returning from her romantic trip to Ireland, with a follow-up visit from an Irishman in New York, she is now off to Ecuador, I think; I also had lunch with Helene Jenkins Tolbert (AA '69) at her lovely home on Long Island — still a lovable string bean.

I don't know if anyone showed up at Gotham, for a mini-reunion. Unfortunately, I had to go to Florida — but I sent a proxy — hope there's news to impart in next issue.

I am having a great time being a mom-on-the-loose in NYC. The girls are fine, my husband Josh is wonderful. And life is just a bowl of cherries — and sucking the seeds is even fun.

Please write or call (212) 777-4224. All the news will be reported.

Cher

P.S. more lost classmates — Carrie Payne, Ann Doty Savage, Chris Harley, Martha Shapiro Weinberg write please. FLASH!! Spoke to Jody Frost Galino the youngest person who is not a child, in Palm Beach. Will visit her there and see her two daughters and new son.

All the news from down on the farm is not bad. Fred Berns now runs his family's farm in Kansas, and he has some good news to report. Fred in no way denies the crisis facing American farmers these days, but he says that farmers — like himself — are still turning a profit if they are not overleveraged. I spoke with Fred during a recent phonathon, and his spirits sounded as strong and healthy as ever. He's married and has two little girls. It was great to talk with him.

Had the great pleasure of spending New Year's day in NYC, where transplanted Mid-Westerner Crosby Kemper and wife Kate now reside. Alex van Oss was also in the city, and the three of us visited with Crosby's in-laws. Spending time with Cros and Alex was one of those small, fine opportunities that comes along now and then. Jeez, are those guys smart! It was clear that each of them has recently read a few thousand more books than I have. As we walked through mid-town, Cros filled us in on some of the remarkable building now going on in the city. Alex entertained us with some of the latest down-home humor from the Soviet Union. We spent some time — but not too much time — talking about ye olde schoole.

Tom Church is down in West Virginia, doing some work for the electric company, and occasionally playing live fiddle (some guitar?) for West Virginia Public Radio's counterpart to "A Prairie Home Companion." Tom's married and has a wonderful daughter who, when I called during the phonathon, said, "I'm sorry, he's in the bathtub."

Tom says Chris Hardy is still working for the Forest Service out in Missoula, Montana. Send news, Chris, and the rest of you, too.

When Jeremy Bluhm visited his parents in Australia last year, he was extremely taken with the place. So much so that he's decided to try living there. As of this writing (mid-January) Jeremy is awaiting his resident visa. Looks like he'll get it and be gone in the spring. I hate to see my friend leave Boston, but at this point in life one perhaps begins to glimpse how difficult, stirring and enriching it can be to go out on a limb a little bit. As Jeremy sees it, moving back from Australia need be no more easy or difficult than moving there in the first place. I know, too, that Jeremy sees this as more than a shift in geography. Only a part of the journey is on the surface. You know what I mean.

I hope you are all travelling well.

As you all know by now, Betsy Hoover Sexton is our new fund-raising Chairman. Sara Gray Stockwell and Katrina Moulton Wollenberg are the outgoing chairmen who served our class for several years in this capacity. They greatly deserve our thanks for doing a thankless job. Congratulations and welcome to Betsy.

Betsy reports that Margaret Gay Laverder recently had a baby boy, Stephen, born in September. I know that Betsy and Margie Lord Shoemaker have been slaving together to give Margaret a handmade baby quilt. You can imagine the time that it must have taken just to agree upon the choice of fabrics for the quilt, considering that Betsy lives in Baltimore and Margie lives in Pennsylvania.

The news about Margie is that she is now on the board of the Abbot Academy Association. This body was set up to help perpetuate the spirit of Abbot Academy by bestowing grants for projects at PA which meet this criteria. From what I have read and seen about it, the AAA does have a wonderfully positive influence and its impact is felt. Congrats, Margie.

During the Christmas holiday, Bill and I decided to take the opportunity to investigate our new southern region by taking a day trip to visit Biltmore Estate in nearby Asheville, NC. It was lovely, of course, but we had a real peak experience on the way home when we stopped for dinner in Spartanburg, SC, at a local landmark called "The Beacon." Charles Kuralt featured it in one of his "Open Road" segments. This has got to be the largest short-order establishment in the SE with at least 20 or 30 cooks. There is literally one person who just toasts hamburger rolls. As we gave our order from a three-page menu, it was then yelled over the cacophony to the cook in the corner who then produced a cheeseburger on a plate laden six inches high with fries and onion rings. We are talking about VAST quantities here. It was delicious, and I only wish that I could have eaten it all. All this is meant to entice anyone who comes to this part of the South to call me up and I will take you to "The Beacon." My treat.

Finally, a poignant note came from Jackie Frazier Sornesen, who reported the sudden death of her only child, 2½ year-old Adam, of viral pneumonia. Although it's been many years since all of us have seen each other, I hope that any of you who knew Jackie will take a moment to let her know of your support at such a truly difficult time. Jackie's address is 2427 Presidio Drive, Dan Diego, CA 92103.

Notes for this issue prepared and written by Mel Brown. Among the large number of our classmates who live in or near New York City, I have kept in touch with Tarek Ashkar, who is an architect and has his own partnership, Ashkar & Paul Assocs. He designed my kitchen renovation, so I can vouch for the high quality of his work. I also saw Guy Dempsey and his wife Nancy Shaw several times this summer. Both are lawyers, and Guy has recently begun working in the legal dept. at Bankers Trust Co.

My work as a free-lance pianist occasionally gives me a few leads, too. While playing for a student show production at Trinity School here, I discovered that Mark Barr is on the faculty. He teaches American History to 11th and 12th graders and is married to Colleen Berge, who also teaches in Riverdale. After much prodding, Mark divulged the whereabouts of Luis Crouch, who had managed to vanish without a trace in the alumni records. Luis is an agronomist working at the Research Triangle in North Carolina.

I had a pleasant chat with Steve Blum, who lives nearby on the West Side. Steve is a C.P.A. and a partner at Peat, Marwick, & Mitchell. He runs the merger and acquisition group there, and also finds time to be a professional fencer. He is a member of the New York Fencers Club, the current national champions, and was an alternate for the 1984 Olympics. Steve's wife, Nancy Glynn, is also an accountant and they have a daughter, Rebecca.

Charlie Wyman and I became re-acquainted at the reunion last June. He is a conservation administrator for the town of Lexington, Mass., where he oversees 1000 acres of conservation land. His wife, Sally Cooper, is a science librarian at Brandeis University. Charlie put me in touch with Steve Samuels who is an attorney living in Washington, D.C. After spending time at the Dept. of Energy and in private practice, Steve has returned to the Justice Dept. and now works in the Land and Natural Resources Division, defending the EPA. Steve is married to Joanna Pratt and they have a son, Evan.

Steve relayed news of Jim Rogers. Jim is also a lawyer in D.C. and is married to Bonnie Harkness. They have two daughters, Katie and Elizabeth. Washington is also the home of Dan Craig, whom I got ahold of by phone. Dan is now a senior legislative assistant to Senator Inouye of Hawaii, doing bill research in foreign affairs and trade. He also is very much a father, with three kids, Casey, Simone, and Miguel.

I talk intermittently with Charlie Van Der Horst, who was my roommate at Duke University those many years ago. Charlie has returned to his alma mater, where he is an Assistant Professor at the Medical Center, doing research in virology. His wife, Laura Svetkey, is also a doctor, and they are the delighted parents of 1½-year-old, Anna.

My last bit of news comes via a long and truly uplifting letter from Rev. Steve Pieters, now living in Los Angeles. Steve is thriving in his personal and professional life despite the onslaught of AIDS. He is undergoing an experimental treatment for the disease, and is on the board of directors of the AIDS Project and the L.A. AIDS Task Force, among others. He writes: "I'm doing very well, defying all odds and the doctors' sense of doom and gloom. I also try to be a good minister to other people with AIDS. I'm doing a lot of speaking engagements and media work, and hope I'm transforming my diagnosis into an opportunity to serve. I find the more I put out, the more energy I have to fight the cancers in my body . . . Anyway, having AIDS has really opened me to 'the real end and business of living.'"

Shortly after receiving this note, I learned that Steve was the recipient of the 1986 Lazarus Award, for "leading the religious community in authentic ministry to persons with AIDS and their loved ones."

I will be happy to take news from other classmates and pass it on to Peter for the Bulletin. My address is 924 West End Ave., Apt. 94, New York, NY 10025. If you live in the area, give me a call at (212)865-6239.

Hello Classmates all,

At the 10th reunion in June it was voted that Leslie Breed and Pauline Cerf Resnick would be taking over the Class Notes column for our class. I'm afraid that there was a bit of confusion and so the last column for the fall issue was never written. The first time in ten years that we weren't in the magazine. I do want to take the opportunity to thank you all for your support for the last ten years. I appreciated all the cards at Christmas, and I got a kick out of hearing the news as it all unfolded and your lives took new and interesting turns. I hope that all goes well for each of you and I look forward to reading the Leslie/Pauline column in the issues to come. Thanks again.

I've usually avoided comment about myself in columns because I thought it would be obnoxious to be in every one — but I do have some news, so here's my contribution. Virginia Knapp was married to William B. Cargill on 30 November 1985. We are living in Westport, CT. Bill is the Director of Sales at Remington Products. Meanwhile I have left the ranks of Product Management and am now on the "service" side working at Actmedia, an in-store promotion company that puts the ads on the shopping carts and over the aisles. I am in charge of a new division that specializes in in-store events and demonstrations — the name is ACTNOW.

Two other pieces of information that I received — Andrea Ruff is living in New Orleans and is a pediatrician specializing in infectious diseases and tropical medicine. She is on the faculty of Tulane School of Medicine. She was married ten years ago to David Shapiro. David works for the local CBS affiliate as a cameraman/editor. Melaine Rosen was recently promoted to the Director of Prepress Operations at The New York Times in June. In September, she was married to Mitchell Jed Brooks, a VP at J.

Walter Thompson ad agency. They live in New York City. Stephanie Dantos was the maid of honor and Andra (DD) Rudolph and Susie Rowen were the "ladies in waiting." Congratulations, Melaine! 1985 was a big year.

Remember that your two new Class Secretaries are Leslie Breed, 229 E. 79th St., Apt 7B New York, NY 10021 and Pauline Cerf Resnick, 115 E. 67th St., Apt 5D, New York, NY 10021. Please help them out with their first column, summer issue, by writing them with your news.

That's it. Again thank you and good-bye. It's been a lot of fun. My best wishes to all of you.

Sandy and I appreciate all your letters and phone calls. We had so much news for the fall Bulletin that the editor had to cut short our submission! Sandy Rollins has a new address: 2939 Van Ness St., NW, Apt. 219, Washington, DC 20008. Please note my new address above.

Mary McCabe writes that she is leaving her Magistrate's job in the court system to go back to private practice in the Haverhill/Lawrence area. She has seen Mary Anna Sullivan who has a private psychiatric practice and two children, and also Nancy Cohen who has a new MBA and works in NYC. Joan Liversidge Drucker and husband Bob had their first baby, a boy named Eric, on 7 January 1985. Joan is the Medical Adviser for Infectious Diseases at Burroughs-Wellcome Co., a pharmaceutical company in North Carolina. Sally Browning and her husband, Rich Pellman, moved to Washington (114 32nd Ave. East, Seattle, 98112) in June and are well settled in. She has a fellowship at the Children's Orthopedic Hospital in pediatric radiology. Holly Tytell Culver is a physician at the Mid-Maine Medical Center in Waterville. She and Devore have a son, Silas. Jean Rapaport DeVincentis and Richard have two children, Julie and Laura. Barbara Friedson and Cyrus live in Miami. Barbara is the Senior VP at Windmere Corp. Debra Sammartaro-Hutchins and Robert have a child, Tynan. Cindy Lund and Jon have a daughter, Kristina. Debra Pope McCall and Robert have one child, Chasen. Debra is the owner of the Windstone Island Shop. Susan McCouch Coen and Paul (123 Church St., Groton, NY 13073) have a new baby, Amanda Silvana. Sue is working toward her Ph.D. at Cornell. They periodically visit Latin America for research and work.

Helen Lacouture Newmark and Kevin have a baby, Paul. Nancy Axelrod Panagopoulos and Demetrios have a child, Nicholas. Lisa Russem Samel and Kenneth have a boy, Benjamin. Nancy Walker Sherwin and Stan have two children, William and Kate. Brownie Richards Tully and Tim have two children. Brownie is working at Grey Advertising. Gayle Ridd Wells and Lee have two children, Amanda and Erica. Emmy Schroeder Reade and Charles own an old farmhouse which they are renovating. Emmy is a VP at Citicorp in the Private Banking Division. They have two girls, Amanda Browning, 4, and Elizabeth Kenyon, 1. Alison Galusha Squiers and Sam sail around in the Gust Buster. Alison is the manager of Manufacturing Planning and Production Control, Building Systems, at Symplex. She has been working on her MBA at Clark Univ., and teaches part-time in Worcester. Kate Owen Bunker farms on Matinicus Island, ME; she also has her pilot's license and real estate license. Laura Schultz Bower (2013-B 22nd St., Los Alamos, NM 87544) is married to Brian. Peggy Partridge Johnson and Rich have two boys, Nathaniel, 4, and Timothy, 3, and two dogs. They see Sue Dampier King and Tom in San Francisco occasionally.

Don't forget we have our 15th reunion coming up on 13-15 June. Let's all make plans to be there. In the meantime, stay in touch with Sandy Rollins or me. We look forward to hearing from you.

This column, it turns out, is cyclical. The midwinter notes, Sam's, Buzzy's and mine, are always short: We spent the previous year hoarding the little biography slips that come with the alumni gelt, and this is about the time we run out. Thanks, therefore, to Marc Chardon for a really nice letter received about a month ago. Marc reports a spectacularly peripatetic life. Seven years after college, spent in Paris, Geneva, Algiers, a decision was made that the American half of himself needed further exploring, and so a return to his current abode in Marlborough, MA. He's engaged to a woman named Sallie Shepherd; they're looking forward to a marriage in May of '86. Bob Soule got married earlier this year to Kathy Anne Dornich, in Alexandria, VA. I'm not sure how I omitted this news from earlier installments, but belated congratulations, Bob. I now owe you a present in addition to five dollars from the first of these notes.

Your attention is also called — if you missed it — to Linda's Abbot column for last issue, which contained news from Rocky Taylor, Mark Lawrence, Steve Hoch, Javier Baz, and Bijan Amini. Rocky styles himself "disenfranchised and ignored" by the Class of '72. If that's a sincere statement, I hope he'll rethink it. This column, as Buzzy, Sam and I have written it, has never been intended as a house organ for Andover morality, circa 1968-72. Those were trying years for all of us who had the odd fortune of being adolescents together: Kemper died; the country was practically psychotic; the campus was passionately pre-coeducational; the cut records disappeared; there were fires; sadists ran the drownproofing program. I hope Rocky realizes that the people Andover chose to, or happened to, come down on back then, didn't, and don't have a monopoly on alienation from Andover. And I hope he knows that bowdlerization of one's memory has never been the price of entry into this column. I have always thought that one of the good things about going to Andover during interesting times is that our experiences might keep us from degenerating into hopelessly sentimental alumni: that we'd never be able to fully transmogrify the moment when Simeon Hyde's speech blew away into the merely funny. It strikes me that it would be a sad betrayal of the validity of our lives as teenagers to forget how utterly liberating that moment was: how the sun came out, the wind came up, and all the old order that had been imposed on us for four years — back when years were long — just dissipated into stentorian incoherence. That was a good moment. It was the end of something that doesn't exist anymore. The next year there was coeducation; now there is the joy of Reaganism, and kids in designer jeans.

Rocky, this group of people still needs your disaffection. You ain't so damn unique. Hope to see you at a reunion sometime.

"Happiest time of my life!" scribbled Lucy Flint at the end of her note. While that news will be nearly a year out of date by the time you read this column we can speculate that perhaps it's been a bellringer year for Lucy. A full-fledged art historian, Lucy spent five years working at the Guggenheim Museum in New York City, moving last spring to Minneapolis where she is writing a catalogue of the Walker Art Center collection. On 29 June 1985 she was married to photographer Frank Gohlke. Another spring '85 marriage, briefly mentioned in the last column, was that of Sarah Pendleton to fellow New Hampshire Joe Gill. Joe does trail work for the U.S. Forest Service and is on the ski patrol, while Sarah works at the Hurricane Island Outward Bound School in Greenville, Maine. During the winter she also coaches alpine skiing. The two have settled near Jackson, NH 03846. Write to them care of Box X.

Amy Broadus Emerson, who wed Steve, a Harvard hematologist, in 1981, was scheduled to give birth to their first child during the summer of 1985. Amy has been a nurse for the past six years, most recently working in a pediatric, surgical intensive care unit at Children's Hospital in Boston. However, she writes her focus has shifted more toward the psyche and she was in the process of making plans for graduate school in psychology with the goal of becoming a therapist. The Emerson family lives in Newton, Mass.

Moving westward — Sheila Dean is working on a Ph.D. in fish biology in Tucson, Arizona. She's studying the endangered desert species, the Gila Topminnow. To supplement her income she has also set up a small writing/editing business. (aha — perhaps when I retire from class column writing my replacement is in sight.)

Rosalind (Lindy) Munro is now a Registered Geologist and a certified Engineering Geologist for the state of California having passed her exams at the first go-round. Rumor has it that only 15 to 25 percent of all those tested pass the first time. Engineering Geology is Lindy's specialty. She attended an earthquake conference in November; it was of particular interest in the aftermath of the Mexico City disaster. Miss Munro was planning to spend the Christmas holidays with her family in Aspen, Colorado; add a little dancing, a little tennis, a new Mustang GT convertible and there you have an update on one R. Munro. If you're ever in Orange County, Southern California, Lindy says to look her up in the Corona del Mar phone book.

Megan Schutte, our class San Franciscan, visited with David and Sandy Reynolds Wasco in Los Angeles in August. Sandy and David are working on movies from the production (set design) vantage as is Megan's brother Will, PA '73. Megan also saw Missy Baird in '85 as Missy passed through town enroute to China. Miss Schutte is working for a venture capital firm that is headquartered in Princeton, NJ, with offices in San Francisco. Coincidentally, she writes she was hired by and works with an Andover alumnae from the class of '79. Megan also notes that Lawson Fisher '73 and Christine have a little boy named William Bennet Fisher after Lawson's great-grandfather. She wondered whether Libby Pennick Maze had a baby yet, recalling a phone call in which she thought Libby said she was pregnant. Well, Libby? How are things in Seattle?

Back on the East Coast Elly Mish has moved away from the salt water suburbia of Cos Cob, CT, to Jackson Heights, Queens, to be closer to her work as Registrar of the American Museum of the Moving Image, which is in Astoria, NY. She expressed an interest in joining Joy Beane Briant and me in our ice hockey pursuits.

It's rather a sight to behold — this lady hockey player, belly grown big with six months of growing baby, heavily padded and looking more like Tweedledum on ice rather than Guy LeFleur; Joy, on the other hand, has cast away most of her hand-me-down garb for new equipment and is playing in not one but two leagues as well as a few pickup pond hockey games. You might think we've become fanatics.

But what better way to release the frustrations of being a litigator and a marketing consultant. My husband and I are also coaching a Mites hockey team on which our five-year-old daughter, Anna plays. I have taken an increasingly active role in environmental and open space planning in the region and was recently elected as a Director of the N.Y. State Association of Conservation Commissions. Joy is wallowing in legal briefs (in between hockey games).

A sad note to close. Angie Deitrick Wesel's husband, Ken, died of a sudden heart attack this past fall leaving Angie and her two sons, Kenny, 6, and Christopher, 1. Angie sold their Dorchester, Mass., house and has temporarily relocated to Laconia, New Hampshire. We offer her the classes' sympathy and wish her the best of luck in her "new" life.

Janet Boeschstein, wife of, mother to the son of, administrative assistant, treasurer and corresponding secretary to Bill Boeschstein, wrote me a letter last 17 May which somehow wound up in my "IRS '85" file. I am just now opening the file (not the letter) with great fear and loathing.

She says Boesch wants to drill for oil on Cape Cod, an idea which I abhor. She says he's working as "Executive Assistant to the group Vice-President for International Petroleum Products" at Conoco, which does not fit on a business card. She says he was bumming around Europe some time ago and saw Phil Kemp and his wife in London. Meanwhile, she boasts, Billy III is a howling success (quite literally) and Boesch IV is on the way (by reading time, several months old). I don't know whether to take Janet seriously when she writes that Boesch feeds his boy T-bone steaks for breakfast. Enclosed was a photo of this huge baby that looked like a cross between Boesch and the Raiders' defensive end, Howie Long. Kid's on steroids, I swear.

Finally, the following comings and goings are reported: Dave Chase and family to Carrollton, TX (Dallas area); Alan Senior and family to Wilmington, Delaware. As usual, real estate tycoon Dave Harsch has reported sightings and hearings of a few '73 bums: Ted Pease has passed the bar in Ohio after teaching English for awhile at U. Dayton. Al Cregg, my good ol' defense partner, graduated from Suffolk Law last year and passed the Mass. Bar; and Scott Clemson is reported to be teaching classics at the Tower School on the North Shore of suburban Boston. The Party of the Year went by unreported in the last Bulletin. Seems a bunch of old Paul Revere cronies used John Rogerson's wedding in Keyuka Lake, N.Y. to disturb the peace for an entire weekend. No arrests were made, but attendees were reported to be: Brooks Roscoe, Dave Donahue, Dave Swanson (fresh from the Chumalee Motel), Steve Rooney, John MacDonald and Walter Bukawyn. Can't understand why there were no arrests.

Here's what these mugs are up to: Brooks hatches advertising ideas for Quinn & Johnson Advertising in Boston. He won a Hatch Award for T.V. advertising, is up for a national "Cleo" award for creative T.V. advertising and presently dates a girl named "Doodle." Donahue and wife sold their urban condo and moved to suburban Walpole to start a family. Mac had second child, Ted; still lives in Milton and continues to pursue investment successes. Boris is a landlord/lawyer in Jackson Heights, NY. Roge is moving back to Florida with his new wife to finish law school in Jacksonville. Rooney is still a big time lawyer in NYC.

Some other quickies: Trip Gabriel recently moved from Santa Fe to NYC, married June '85 to Alice Elizabeth Simon (both Middlebury '77) and has been freelancing for the likes of Life, Sports Illustrated, Rolling Stone, N. Y. Times.

Bill Kaplan played squash once again for the U.S. team in the 12th World Maccabiah Games in Israel last July. He earned silver medals in the 1977 and 1981 games. On top of this, he manages to develop and manage real estate in Cambridge.

Jim Hackett left Gilbane Co. last November to start his own Crossland Properties, developers of major commercial real estate in Providence.

Betsy continues to thrive at Cape Cod Life magazine, and I continue to try to juggle being a lawyer and a defender of the taxpayer at the same time. It's a tough life. Come down and see.

It has been a slow quarter for news, send some or I will just have to make it up (a deed some of you have discovered I am quite capable of). I did get a thick packet of somewhat bizarre "important information" from Dave Leonard about a pipe smoking deity named "Bob." The material is absolutely hilarious, and unprintable in this family publication. Best invitation this time comes from Gary Lee. Having left Time magazine to become Washington Post bureau chief in Moscow, he invites us all over for vodka. Chris White's article on fresh water turtles appeared in the January issue of National Geographic. He poses with one of his subjects on the title page. Chris is Executive Director of the Mare Nostrum Foundation, and he is based in Annapolis, MD. Sara Nelson has also sought out a naval location for writing. She is in Key West "for another month or so," working on a book whose subject can't be revealed in these pages. However, rumor has it that a celebrity biography is in the works.

Laura Richards MacWilliams has "eloped" with her junior high school sweetheart who is in the real estate business. She says she "has finally left Harvard Square" for downtown Boston and is administrating a law firm, negotiating with insurance adjusters and the like. Out of the insurance business and happily so is Deanna Thering Heikkinen. She writes: "I am currently unemployed and have been for two years. I'm staying home with my little girl Baile and expecting another baby in September." Deanna informs us that Hillary Large Cochard has had her third child, a boy, Patrick. She and husband Frederic also have two young daughters. The five of them live in Alexandria, Virginia. Further, Deanna writes that Patricia Finn Landback has moved from Buffalo to Tampa. Finally, Deanna says that Nancy Griffin is in Peoria, and traveling often. Howard Carter is the purveyor of Raspberry Jam to Bloomington. He owns and manages a farm in southern New Jersey.

Will Noel's wife, Barbara, bore their third daughter, Sharon, on 31 August. Will is practicing law with Houston's Andrews and Kurth. He encourages those of us passing through town to give him a call so he might "ease our visit." Hoyt Connell and Eleanor have a two-year-old son, William. Hoyt, a sales manager for Johnston Lemon, maintains that he will remove Tom Mitchell's wallet at golf during the latter's next visit to DC. Betty Symington is also in the Washington area. After completing her masters in Public Policy at the University of Michigan she has accepted a position at the Pentagon. Apparently, Matt Mangan is in the same line of business; he is said to be traveling in Central America as a military advisor. Chris Gannon reports that Mike Savit is working for the International Management Group in the sports industry. According to Chris, a local newspaper gave Mike full credit for saving the Longwood U.S. Pro Tennis Championship. Kevin Rettelle finished twenty-fifth in the Boston Marathon, last April, completing the course in under two and a-half hours. Congratulations, Kevin!

Roemer McPhee has finally found a place that is "crazy enough" for him. He works on Morgan Stanley's trading floor. Meanwhile, Alex Stille is dating Roemer's cousin. Alex lives in New York and works for the National Law Journal. He spotted Betsy Gootrad at a party. She trades equities at E. F. Hutton. Another equity trader, Hope Woodhouse, signed me up for a pledge at the Andover phonathon. I only wish I'd had a chance to speak with her. Doug Greeff, still with Ernst and Whinney, was seen having big fun at a New York night spot. Walter Granruth is busy with another kind of chaotic activity; he's with Prudential-Bache's Mergers and Acquisitions Group. I ran into Ted Maynard looking great and enjoying his work as an associate at the law firm of Paul, Weiss in midtown Manhattan.

Can you guess which bachelor bon-vivant is getting married? The answer next issue with a complete report from a spy on the scene.

Two letters from Andover classmates reached me in December, each one complaining that most class secretaries write only about their friends. I can spot a trend (I read People magazine), so this column will begin with news about people I don't know, then segue (I read Variety, too) to some fabulous fabrications about people I'm in touch with more regularly.

John Lenz writes that he is currently studying ancient history at Columbia University after spending the summer digging on the Greek island of Paros. He adds that Kimberley Patton is pursuing an advanced degree in Classics at Harvard; Paul Penniman is chairman of the math department at the private Edmund Burke School in Washington, D.C.; and Sagar Parikh is a doctor in "far northern" Manitoba.

While at Columbia Business School, Steve Sun was Lenz' neighbor; Steve has parlayed his MBA into a job at Merrill Lynch. Paul Eldrenkamp received a Master's degree in Medieval History from Harvard; according to Lenz, Paul is now a carpenter.

In a pre-Christmas note from her home in Saugus, MA, Marianne Daniels Guarino sent news to the "person or two interested in what I've been doing for the last 10 years." Marianne has two sons, 2-year-old Benjamin and 7½-month-old Jeremy, and runs a family day-care center. Previously, she was a teacher in public schools and private institutions, working with people ranging from 2-year-old pre-schoolers and emotionally disturbed adolescents to mildly retarded and severely handicapped adults. Marianne sends greeting to Paula Mackor and Debbie Stahl.

Congratulations are in order for Lisa Doyle, whose engagement to Peter Gardiner was announced in the New York Times in December. Lisa's an associate product manager for the Gillette Co., in Boston; her future husband is president of Allegheny Hydropower Inc., an energy development company, also in the Hub. The wedding is planned for May. Also in a matrimonial way: Bill Snedeker, an attorney at Shea & Gould in New York, plans to marry Linda Benven in May. Sned's bachelor party is scheduled for spring and is not to be missed; his favorite new wave group, The Flying Phlegm, will make a featured appearance.

Media Notes From All Over: Jon Alter is fast-tracking his way up the masthead at Newsweek magazine, where he very capably handles the media beat as a general editor.

... Lauri Trustman, a former lawyer in Washington, D.C., has changed careers; she's now at the Washington Post, as assistant to Tom Shales, the paper's TV writer. Her byline is "Trustman Senger," a combination of her maiden and married names. "Everyone at Andover called her by her last name, anyway," Alter explains. ... Peter Sellars lent substance to NBC's stylish "Miami Vice" this past fall with a guest appearance as a doctor knowledgeable about voodoo medicine. ... Mike Spound is a regular on ABC's Thursday night series "Hotel," featured as the porter.

Geoff Richards is busy living life like a beer commercial and working for Salomon Brothers in the Big Apple, where he helps finance the firm's positions (or does he position the firm's finances?). Now that he's learned how to type "Wall Street Week" on his new VCR, Geoff divides his non-working hours between his new co-op in Brooklyn Heights and a ski house in Vermont, organized by Phil Hueber. Phil and his wife Judy continue to promote the suburban lifestyle in Connecticut, where they are reported to be "turning over real estate the way short-order cooks flip pancakes." Tom Meredith is said to be big in real estate, too, in the central Florida area.

Matt Finnie toils "on the street," also for Salomon, where he claims to be doing "systems and lunch." Sounds like a good job — it's indoor work, with no heavy lifting. The recently domesticated Finnie received his MBA from NYU last summer and now lives in Jersey City, N.J. Michael Boldt finished law school at Rutgers last June, passed the New Jersey bar exam, and clerks for an appellate judge in that state's court system. After several years on the Northern N.J. residential circuit, with stops in exciting Englewood, gorgeous Glen Ridge, and wonderful West Orange, Mike has settled in nifty Nutley, although a move to worldly Weehawken may be ahead.

Palmer Y. (Rocky) Epler III is living in New Haven, lawyering for a firm in Madison, Conn., and sailing early and often. Fellow New Haven resident and attorney Joan Bozek attended Rocky's Harvard-Yale football party in November. Other legal types include Roger Kohn in Seattle, John Buttrick in New York, and Charlie Clark and Evans Huber in D.C.

The nation's capital boasts several more classmates: John nee Chip Campbell, an investment counselor to the rich and famous; Richard Hersh, a med-school student; Chris Finn, a "very Capitol Hill" aid to Congressman Jim Jones, D-Okla.; and former Phillipian topper Bob Winer, at IBM following graduation from business school at the University of Texas.

I'm still working in New York for feevee service Home Box Office — "Nobody brings it home like HBO." Any news for the next issue of class notes should be sent to Mari Wellin King at 3042 N.W. 73rd St., Seattle, WA 98117.

10th! REUNION

76

Timothy Dempsey
Phillips Academy
Andover, MA 01810

"Bells, bells, bells," my father used to say, or something like it. With reunion celebrations upon us, allow me to celebrate other big events: weddings, weddings, weddings. Andree Isbrandtsen married last June, to one Robert Phillip Pruett, Jr. — or so says the Nutmegger, that naughty Greenwich tabloid. Hitched, too, is John Trafton, to Sherrye Lynn Johnson. John and Sherrye are living in — hold on to your hat — Vincennes, Indiana. I hope both couples make it this June — preparations are well under way for an outstanding event.

Thanks so much for your generous and inspiring responses to reunion mail. Paul Weber writes from Newport (not the site of the 1987 America's Cup), that he'll be there, though he won't sleep on his "beach blanket behind the gym, only to be awakened by Jack Richards and his tour of 1926ers," as he fondly recalls of the 5th. I don't know yet if Barry Rolett will be there, though his father reports that Barry is in New Haven approaching his Ph.D. in archaeology. He's been in the South Pacific — "mainly on the island of Tahuata, Marquesas Islands, French Polynesia, conducting an excavation of an early settlement site. . . . Before leaving for the South Seas, Barry curated an exhibit of Yale's collection of Polynesian artifacts, now on exhibit at Yale's Peabody Museum.

Anita Thomas Koolen (that's right — Mark Koolen of biology department fame) has had a baby — young Samantha Elizabeth Koolen. I expect all three will be available for comment and inspection at the 10th. Deb Rosen is still acting up a storm — and writes of seeing Hart Leavitt in the Apple, of warming Ellen Greenfield's apartment with Lisa Barlow and the ever-elusive Dan Algrant. Deb also mentions noticing Jill Shaffer in the audience of one of Deb's performances of The Misanthrope. I hope I get to see Jill for the first time since 1978 this June.

Bobby Fowkes wrote from South Boston to let us know he'll be here for the reunion, I guess he'll wait till then to let us know what he has been up to. And of course Dave Kirby will attend — he now lives in Boulder.

At long last word arrives from Sandra Vreeland, nee Isham, who describes her fate as "pregnant and married and living in NYC." More about that I've got to know. See her in June.

Rob McCabe is now engineering in New York State, but not to busy to have forgotten about upcoming Andover events. He's threatened to support a reunion event at or near his house in Ipswich — more as those plans solidify.

Finally, a wonderful letter from Tim Draper. He too is recently married — to Milissa Parker — a long-time sweetheart. They have "one and a half children, Jessica and?" Tim's in venture capital, and "hopes to be able to fund some of [his] old classmates' new ventures." He mentions seeing Jason Fish, (who didn't have the time to call his old roommate to tell him about the move) now a VP for Shearson Lehman/American Express in San Francisco. Tim also transmitted a National Enquirer piece about Bob Merrill — more than that I perhaps should not report in this space. John Sweeney is working for DEC, and by now and old-timer, having been married for years. John Grinder, Tim writes, is in Arizona at law school; Greg Davis about to get out of the service; Dave Gilmour at The Business School. Again, Tim, thanks for the great note.

Rockwell will be our headquarters, Borden Gym our Saturday night hotspot. I have obtained sound equipment for '76ers who would like to improvise — and I encourage those with musical inclinations to join back up with old cronies and let me know about any special needs you might have. John Crichton, still playing the sax? Bob Merrill, the horn? Any and all — come and make music. Look forward to seeing you all there.

Susanna A. Jones

Much news this time from the old Stearns gang. Christopher Randolph has arrived in NYC, graduate degree in hand, to pursue his acting career. He's already in possession of an agent, and, from the sounds of his voice, considerable good humor. Hopefully we'll be able to see him on stage soon. Columbia has drawn Bill Cohan back, this time for an MBA. Although it was a little difficult initially, Bill seems to have settled in as the business school's gadfly and claims he's learning a great deal. Far from the big city, in West Glover, VT, Ned Andrews married Darlene Young on 7 Sept. 1985. Congratulations and warm wishes to Ned and Darlene as well as Elizabeth Siderides and Stelios Theofanidis who were married on 12 October. Rob Canning and I did some Greek dancing at the reception. Rob seems to be surviving his first year as a surgery resident at Montefiore Hospital in the Bronx. Elizabeth, who with Rob graduated from Columbia's School of Physicians and Surgeons in June, is now doing an internship at Roosevelt-St. Luke's Hospital and next year will begin her residency in ophthalmology at New York University Hospital; her husband is a pediatrician.

Merry Raymond McInerney is also married and living in New York where her husband, Jay, has achieved literary success with two best selling novels. The Big Apple has also reclaimed Paige Sutherland who is putting her Harvard MBA to work in real estate. Will Iselin, having decided that neither law nor Wall Street harbored his true calling, has been making a name for himself in the art world. He reports that "after almost two years of being an 'expert' in the field of American furniture, I have moved to do general business development in Christie's Estates Department." Keep him in mind when you're ready to begin your art collection.

Outside New York, Jay McOsker is studying hard at Suffolk Law School and plans to stay in Boston when he graduates. Nearby, David McLeod works for a marketing support group at Wang. Poly Hoppin, after working for four years for the Clean Water Action Project, has turned her zeal and talents to a new field, public health, which she is studying with enthusiasm at Johns Hopkins.

The prize for the most impressive news goes to Kimberly Smith who writes that she is "President of Intercon, Ltd., an export, trading, and consulting firm headquartered in Washington, DC doing business in Latin America, Africa, and the Far East."

Congratulations to Susan Jameson, Pam Scott, and Michael Solovay and everyone else who passed bar exams this fall.

Nicholas Stoneman

Charlie Schueler has agreed to fill in writing class notes for this issue. I will return next time — Nick Stoneman

I was delighted when Nick asked me to try my hand as class scribe for an issue. What follows is a somewhat accurate, current inventory of a group rapidly approaching Big Chill age. Because there was little time to check with factual verification, I apologize for any misinformation contained herein. I am sure that you understand the complexity of tracking a group that has scattered widely since that day nearly eight years ago when Class President Julian Chang's memorable words sent us our separate ways.

First the movie stars: I have seen lots of Jimmy Spader who is happily living a reclusive existence on the upper east side of Manhattan. While looking for George Hicks, Jimmy has strung together an impressive list of credits through the eighties, the latest of which is titled Pretty in Pink. When in Los Angeles he sees his celluloid buddy Matt Salinger (married) of Malibu. Neither Jimmy nor Matt do commercials, but both do lunch.

Also in the West, Shelly Guyer has left the Environmental Defense Fund in Berkeley to travel the world for most of '86. Reports indicate there is more schooling ahead. Rich Ward, who possesses a battery of Stanford letters after his name, recently toured Greece with his brothers. Several suits are still pending. And Doug Batt was most recently selling wine for a couple of guys named Ernest and Julio, some of it reportedly well before its time.

Back East, there are those among us who remember prep school days so fondly that they would try to recreate dorm life. Matt Palmiere, Josh McCall, and Lee Appar now live together in a Greenwich cottage. Startled neighbor Rich McInerney reports extensive disregard for parietals regulations and Jack Richards, armed with sign-in sheets, has been dispatched to investigate.

Where are Jeff Reuben, Lydia Hatten and Elba Luis?

Mike Cannell and Lucy Schulte both live in New York and leave their answering machines on while at home. These new bohemians often bump into Peter Tobeason, Jessie Drury, and Patty Buchman at gallery openings and poetry reading on the avant-garde Lower East Side.

Further East, Joe Tatelbaum has spent the last three years creating an import-export concern in China. He frequently visits Hong Kong where he thinks he has convinced the locals that the suit fits nice. Watch out for Joe. I also understand that John Starosta is in some exotic place working for a good cause and presumably laying down a superb tan.

I was happy to run into Ed Hill '79 for several days in Washington D.C. last summer. He has since left the United States and currently resides in Bangkok where he teaches English to unsuspecting natives and partakes of many local customs. I know that Jeff Strong was living in Brookline and may still be there. I think I saw Larry Baisden, and hope Shady and Duke come to visit soon. Bobo Clark is still at Town and Country in New York, where he was when Sloane Condren called to tell me she planned to wed. That was four years ago.

Carolyn Sheahan now lives in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, and Lisa Johnson is married and living in Brooklyn. To find either, contact John Higgins at U. Penn's Wharton School of Business. And I hope he has the good sense to put these classmates in touch with Jenny Bensley.

October of '85 found Josh Truhart, Colin Baxter, and Greg Burke among others at a gathering of aging hippies in Worcester, Mass. Josh is a grad student at M.I.T., Colin works for the Canadian government, and Greg has abandoned his career as a petroleum transfer engineer for greener pastures. No, he is not a farmer, and neither is Winston Wyckoff.

Where are Corky, Lefty and Snoz?

Who are Corky, Lefty and Snoz?

Jenny Christian spent a couple of months in Boston's North End last year. At this writing she is in the NYC vicinity and pondering med school. Sasha Chermayeff, an artist, is probably involved. Speaking of med school, quick math tells me that Jimmy Demetroulakos should already be a doctor. Whether or not he is still selling hacky sacks is unclear. His former roommate Pange is finishing his last year of law school in Boston. I wonder if either he or prospective esquires Savit, Amster, or Fraser have contacted any of Jimmy D's patients?

One sad note: Judy Morton will be married in Andover this June. Seems like yesterday she was running around with a lacrosse stick in her hands. As for me, I am back in Boston after an extended visit to the San Francisco area, and I'm still standin' ... yeah, yeah, yeah.

For openers let me first direct you to those of us still pursuing academics.

Through her brother Mark '81 I learned that Susan Canning "studies day and night in her second year at Harvard-MIT Medical School. She is also a dorm counselor who rules over her charges with a firm hand, tempered only by justice." Also along the path of scholarly endeavor, smiling H.L. Silets is in his second year at Northwestern Law School preparing for future campaigns. In New York, Natalie Geary is at a one-year Columbia Graduate School program, conditioning for medical school. Back in Boston and armed to the teeth, Nick Mazzocco is finishing his first year at Tufts Dental School. Peter Carley writes frequently about incredible West Coast adventures, but I can only publish that he is finishing up at San Francisco State. I have run into Joe Heffernan up at Hamilton College in Clinton, N.Y., where he is completing the college chapter. Recently, I met Matt Belman's sister who reported that Matt is in his first year at Cornell Veterinarian School.

Previously, he had been working at a famous DNA clinic in Utah.

Can't forget to announce that Mark Moore and Sally Caverly are handfast now, having tied the knot on 28 December 1985. Congratulations! Last I heard, Luke Cole was working for Ralph Nader in Washington, D.C. I received an empty Christmas card from him so do not know if the above still holds true, but I do know that Luke is quite the artist/designer sending Yuletide greetings on one of his "Luke-Art" cards. Great stuff. Sarah Ehrlich continues life as the glamorous Boston PR Account Executive. In her spare time she searches for the presentable guy who'll offer her a forest-green Saab and endless vacation opportunities. Marianna Gracey phoned me for bucks this fall and seemed in great spirits. She's working in sales at TV-38 in Boston. Back here in New York, rumor has it that Eddie Garden has moved down here from Boston and is no longer with Kidder Peabody. I would also like to mention that out of Killeen, Texas, Jim Currid has strongly urged me to make a correction; he is flying helicopters and no longer leaping out of them.

In conclusion, I am very excited to say that at the end of January I will be starting a new job at Professional Sports Publications in Advertising Sales/Sales Promotion.

Best of all, keep me posted — let's get the real juice rolling!

5th! REUNION

A couple of months ago, as I was sitting in my office flipping through Seventeen magazine (I am a lifetime subscriber), I came across a familiar looking face. On the body which was attached to the face was a grey sweatshirt with "Phillips Academy" proudly printed on the front. The person's name, according to Seventeen is Willow Bay, although we would have known her as Kris Bay. No less than five pages of the magazine were devoted to Kris and her sister Kacey in an article entitled: "Meet Supermodel Willow Bay and her sister Kacey — complete opposites who happen to be the very best friends: different as day and night." Seventeen offered some keen insights into our classmate's character: "Willow is both serious and studious, introspective and intellectual. Her idea of a good time is devouring an interesting book or exploring the great outdoors."

'81ers are in print everywhere. Vivian Toy, who traveled to Hong Kong and China last summer, currently serves as a reporter for The Milwaukee Journal. And the Central Maine Morning Sentinel reported that Chris Dudley received an academic citation for drama study at Dartmouth. And the Camden Herald noted Karen Brace's graduation from Dartmouth as well.

A trio of budding film-makers in our class have already met with some success. Mark Canning has moved to L.A., optioned one screenplay, "The Winner," and is working on a spy busters story. Doug Kass's film, Tired, earned a gold medal at the Super-8 International Film Festival. And Steve Dembitzer, previously involved in film production, entered Columbia Law School and is studying entertainment law.

At a Thanksgiving micro-reunion in NYC, I garnered some interesting class info: Bill Kummel is back at Yale and hoping to graduate this spring; Jim Cleary, financial analyst at E.F. Hutton talked a lot but nobody listened; Jennifer Marron (right about now you're asking, is this a N.Y. society column or P.A. Class Notes?) is moving to Boston, preparing for employment at an environmental action group; Lin Pei toils at a medical research lab in NYC; Cristina Rubio works for Salomon, Goldman, Boston, or some such investment bank; and I read that Cathie DuPuy lives in N.Y. and is in the employ of a law firm.

An astute letter from Randy Accetta informed me that Doug Wilbourne traveled around the world; that Laura Harrison planned to study and live in Paris this year; and that Randy, himself, wants to write these notes.

The marriage bells toll yet again. I thought I might get lucky at our reunion but my chances keep getting slimmer and slimmer. Alison Beckwith married Raymond Pentrack on 12 January 1985 in St. John, Virgin Islands. Go figure! Together, they're building a house on St. John and enjoying a life of leisure in the sun. And Suzanne Hefni is now Mrs. Tragert, Georgetown law student, Potomac resident. She is curious as to the whereabouts of friends Joy Anderson and Ellen Harrington who, it seems, have fallen off the face of the earth.

Meredith Morris sent in a little note and informed me of her matriculation to graduate school at U. Kansas. Margaret Schwarzer's acceptance at Yale Divinity School and Hidi Brown's remaining semester at Brown.

The reunion countdown is well underway. Borrow the money. Mark your calendars. Get babysitters for the kids. Make your plane reservations. Plan ahead. And don't delay. The great class of 1981 will celebrate its 5th reunion on 13, 14, and 15 June. Tony Bienstock will chair the event and would appreciate any and all volunteer help.

Thank you for your letters, news and interesting lives... and your readership. Until our Reunion.

Jerome Witt, last I heard, was "working" for IBM in Fort Lauderdale. Liz McHenry spent the summer and fall working for Columbia Pictures in Paris, however, she should be back at Columbia University this spring. Vivian Bache is getting married this June. She is studying too, however, and spent the fall on a program in Leningrad. Bill Storey, Jeff Rossman's roommate at Harvard, according to Jeff, is "doing fine, and becoming, like wine, more mellow with age."

Jeff, after a productive sophomore year at Harvard, was working for Telepictures productions in L.A. last fall and planning to go to either Washington or Europe for the second half of his year off. Warren Zanes is still playing lead guitar for the Del Fuegos, who recently cut their first album and were voted last February by Rolling Stone, one of the best new rock groups.

Others are studying hard. I spoke to Matt Gilligan in December. He had me spell-bound with his descriptions of the rigors of West Point. He spent last summer as an infantry platoon leader in Hawaii, and hopes to be stationed in Europe this summer. The more glamorous side of cadet living . . . As a junior, Matt gets plenty of weekend liberty, and now that the New York drinking age is 21, he has become quite the road-tripper. He saw Dave Chen at U Penn last fall. Dave, apparently, has quite a challenging workload. Matt saw Dave Trowbridge and Chris Smith at Yale. Dave lived with Chris last summer on Martha's Vineyard, and reports the grapevine, fell in love. (These two facts are mutually exclusive.) Mikkel Herman, also at Yale, wins the fantasy summer award for teaching windsurfing in Switzerland last year.

Karen Humphries pumped me for some money over Thanksgiving, so I pumped her for gossip. She, at Wesleyan and Paul Avery at Cornell, are still seeing each other. Brian Bedell's at West Point, happy as a cadet. Jeff Curley is off from Trinity to Rome for the semester. I actually confirmed that piece of information when I saw Jeff, looking very dapper, at the Winter Ball in Boston last December. Rick Apgar is heading up social events and playing varsity soccer at Wesleyan.

Some more news from '83's jet set. Having finally recovered from the severe case of culture shock she got in France winter term senior year, Colette Devine is studying in Tokyo. Laura Culbert and Rachel Abramowitz are spending the spring in Paris on the Reid Hall program. Macky Alston is in London. I got a card from Angelo Iasiello last summer. He was visiting Italy. Alison Beaumont sailed around the world last spring on Semester at Sea. Jason Bernhard, however, is not in Australia, Indonesia, India or Paris, and plans to keep it that way for at least the next six months.

Josh Feigon and I pretended to be in the Soviet Union last summer at Norwich University's Russian School in the mountains of Vermont. His Russian is impeccable. I hope he still has a firm command of English. Cindy Reid spent the summer painting and studying art in Vermont and New York. After a rigorous fall semester at Wesleyan, she spent winter break seeing artsy movies in Boston.

Tommy Ullman is at Brown, just living to write the next class notes. Please direct all news to him.

Let's go back in time to Thanksgiving Eve and here is where I shall begin this tale. Most of you are probably aware of the significance of this date for you were solicited for a few bucks from your fellow classmates. It was the date of the second annual Thanksgiving Eve Phonathon. Our class was very successful thanks to so many of you. We raised more than any other class participating. This was a surprise considering the late arrival of Lisa Moreland, Jenni Tessier, Julie Crosson, and myself, with only one hour left to start phoning. Upon arriving, however, we were confronted with Devin Driscoll, Susan O'Brien, and Dave Charlton already hard at work. I caught Devin red-handed calling people from other classes but did not turn him in. Susan said she is very busy in New York at Barnard and often sees Alexandra Gillespie and Edna Wong. Apparently, across the way at Columbia David Little, Bill Seeley, and Willie Woo are all "wild guys" and Willie is a "cool dude with sunglasses." Julie Ongaro is also at Columbia as a freshman after a year in Paris. The phonathon gave me a chance to talk to some long-lost friends such as Paul O'Boyle, Mark Crother, Richard Lombard, Anne Stout, and Jack Whelan, all who are happy and well.

Only a month after the Phonathon, there was another reunion of many Andover grads at a dance in Boston. As I pulled up in front of the Copley Plaza Hotel, in front of me was a limo dropping off some other dance-bound students. After a short glance I recognized one of them as Paul Chesterton. Finding him in the crowd later on I learned he was with some other Andoverites. One by one I ran into them throughout the evening: Arthur Muldoon, Julie Ongaro, Susan O'Brien, Harry Elson '83, and a number of others from classes before and after us. I threatened all but death to Arthur if he didn't give me a little help. Soon after I received a dandy letter from which I have extracted the following: "My life centers around Trinity College where the 84 club includes: Ian Loring one of my frat brothers, Matt Bergeron, who is playing baseball; Doug Bradley, who is weight lifting and about 40 lbs heavier than the last time anyone saw him; Ted Curtin, one of Doug's roommates; Julia Calhoun, a student government jock; Susan Deer, who is swimming; Matt Donahue, who is still running track, and John Lew, who is doing well in school.

"My crew escapades have brought me in touch with others — Sturgis Woodbury who rowed frosh heavies at Dartmouth along with Steve Hochman and Scott Bertetti who rowed lightweights. Scott Smith was on Williams frosh crew. Sean Doyle lost 20 lbs in order to cox Georgetown frosh heavies over the summer but was forced to remove himself from competition this fall due to a back injury."

This past summer Elizabeth Hood was chosen the recipient of the 1984-85 Van Duzer Harvard-Andover prize, awarded on the basis of outstanding scholarship at PA and Harvard. Congratulations, Liz.

Anna Kent wrote last fall confirming her existence. She is considering a major in philosophy at Bryn Mawr though she says she'd prefer something like "Clear thinking in the New World" or "Feminism and Human Nature." She has moved from Andover to Brookline, MA, so those in search of her can write to me or the Alumni Office for her address.

I'm afraid this will have to do for this issue. Although I've got more news I have no more space. I'll try my best to get to those of you who were good enough to write, in the summer issue.

Love, Betsy

Spike Adriance, reporting from Chapel Hill, NC, says that he and Ninny are expecting a visit from Jack Lemmon who will be appearing in Long Day's Journey into Night in the spring in New York. Spike is still busy at the local hospital where he's a volunteer and member of the Volunteer Association's Board.

Bill Brown has his hands full as President of the Advisory Council of the Foster Grandparents of Maine, a federally funded enterprise being clipped by Gramm-Rudman. Bill and Lee are enjoying life in Bath.

Visitors to Alston Chase's home in Berwick, ME, will be delighted to find a warm, tail-wagging welcome from his new canine companion, Rocky. An article in the Coast Pilot of 3 July 1985 informs us that "Alston Hurd Chase is the seventh generation to live on the Hurd farm in Berwick . . ." and describes the conversion of the property into a tree farm. He is quoted as follows: "It seems ironic that my ancestors should work so hard to make and maintain these fields and that I should be planting them back into forests . . . This is my gift to posterity."

Ted Harrison and Marge are happily settled in Westport, MA. Ted is doing consulting work for Devine, Baldwin and Peters, a Boston executive talent search outfit. In addition, he is advising George Andrews '62, Headmaster of St. George's School, on the construction of that institution's new athletic facility. Marge reports that they have three hockey-playing grandsons! Daughter Beth is now an attorney in the Connecticut Attorney General's Office.

It's a pleasure to note that Abby Kemper, back in high gear, spent the New Year's holiday with George and Izzie Sawyer in Durham, NH.

Fred Peterson and Betsy are living on Temple Street, back of the State House on Beacon Hill, Boston. Betsy is a lawyer and on the legal staff of Houghton-Mifflin specializing in "electronic publications." Among Fred's titles are: Director of Yale Club of Boston; President of the Thompson Lake Environmental Association, Oxford, Maine; Regatta Chairman of the Thompson Lake Sailing Club; Editor of the "New England Day Sailers News Letter." He and Betsy not only compete in sailing events but are both ardent scullers on the Charles. Son Rob is an electronics engineer, and daughter Nancy Lee is in the export business, dealing particularly in exotic foods esteemed by Caribbean gourmets, and son John has just been awarded his wings as a Navy pilot.

Al Stevens and Marie are restoring a colonial farm house in Cornish, NH, and enjoying the rural life in their spare time. Marie is still associated with the PA Music Department on a part-time basis and Al has made an enthusiastic return to teaching as he develops a Russian program in grades 7 through 12 in Vermont's Green Mountain Union High School. Son Al has developed a highly successful water analysis business employing sister Catherine as a chemist. Daughter Ruth Ann travels to Europe and South America pursuing her career in fashion design and marketing, and son Jeff, after world-wide travels, has ethnology and anthropology as his primary interests.

We sadly report the death in November 1985 of former Mathematics Instructor Otis Severance at the age of 87, and that of retired Medical Director Frank Soule on 2 January 1986, and extend our sympathy to their families.
